PREFACE

The Mississippi Code of 1972, which became effective on November 1, 1973, is the culmination of nearly four years of effort on the part of the legislature, the attorney general's office and the publishers, which brings together provisions of general statutory law having a common subject matter into a more orderly and logical framework of code titles and chapters, and employing a modern and effective section numbering system. A major by-product of the code revision will be the state-owned magnetic computer tape containing the Mississippi Code of 1972, which will be of invaluable assistance to the legislature and to the state.

The enabling act for the code was a recommendation of the Mississippi State Bar, which resulted in the consideration and passage of Senate Bill 1964, Chapter 465, Laws of 1970, signed into law by Governor John Bell Williams.

The Code Committee provided for in that act was comprised of A. F. Summer, Attorney General, Heber Ladner, Secretary of State, Representative Edgar J. Stephens, Jr., Chairman, House Appropriations Committee, Senator William G. Burgin, Jr., Chairman, Senate Appropriations Committee, Representative H. L. Meredith, Jr., Chairman, House Judiciary "A" and Judiciary en banc Committees, Senator E. K. Collins, Chairman, Senate Judiciary "A" and Judiciary en banc Committees, Representative Ney McKinley Gore, Jr., Chairman, House Judiciary "B" Committee, and Senator William E. Alexander, Chairman, Senate Judiciary "B" Committee. In 1972, Representative Marby Robert Penton and Senator Herman B. Decell, Chairman of House and Senate Judiciary "B" Committees, respectively, became members of the Committee, replacing Representative Gore and Senator Collins, Senator Alexander having been appointed Chairman of Senate Judiciary "A" and Judiciary en banc Committees. The Deputy Attorney General, Delos H. Burks, served the Code Committee as Secretary. Special Assistant Attorney General Fred J. Lotterhos, under the supervision of the Attorney General, was assigned the principal responsibility for the supervision of the recodification, including the consideration and treatment of some 16,000 sections of code manuscript.

Final legislative approval was given to the Mississippi Code of 1972 by passage of Senate Bill 2034, Laws of 1972, which was signed by Governor William L. Waller on April 26, 1972. A copy of that act is set out in Volume 1, following the Publisher's Foreword.

The Code Committee is of the opinion that the recodification has been thoroughly and well accomplished, and will result in a greatly improved repository of the general statutory law of the state.

PUBLISHER'S FOREWORD

This 2002 Replacement Volume 11 of the Mississippi Code of 1972 Annotated represents material appearing in both the original 1973 bound volume and the 1993 Replacement Volume 11, as well as reflecting amendments, repeals, and new Code provisions enacted by the Mississippi Legislature through the 2002 Regular and 1st Extraordinary Legislative Sessions.

This volume contains the text of Title 75, of the Mississippi Code of 1972 Annotated, as amended through the 2002 Regular and 1st Extraordinary Legislative Sessions.

Case annotations are included based on decisions of the State and federal courts in cases arising in Mississippi. Many of these cases were decided under the former statutes in effect prior to the enactment of the Code of 1972. These earlier cases have been moved to pertinent sections of the Code where they may be useful in interpreting the current statutes. Annotations to collateral research references are also included.

To better serve our customers by making our annotations more current, LexisNexis has changed the sources that are read to create annotations for this publication. Rather than waiting for cases to appear in printed reporters, we now read court decisions as they are released by the courts. A consequence of this more current reading of cases, as they are posted online on LexisNexis, is that the most recent cases annotated may not yet have print reporter citations. These will be provided, as they become available, through later publications.

This publication contains annotations taken from decisions of the Mississippi Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals with decision dates up to April 30, 2002, and decisions of the appropriate federal courts with decision dates up to March 10, 2002. These cases will be printed in the following reporters:

Southern Reporter, 2nd Series
United States Supreme Court Reports
Supreme Court Reporter
United States Supreme Court Reports, Lawyers' Edition, 2nd Series
Federal Reporter, 3rd Series
Federal Supplement, 2nd Series
Federal Rules Decisions
Bankruptcy Reporter

Additionally, annotations have been taken from the following sources:

American Law Reports, 5th Series: through 97 A.L.R.5th
American Law Reports, Federal Series: through 177 A.L.R.Fed
Mississippi College Law Review: through Volume 20, No. 1, p. 211
Mississippi Law Journal: through Volume 70, No. 2, p. 851

Finally, published Opinions of the Attorney General and opinions of the Ethics Commission have been examined for annotations.

ADVANCE CODE SERVICE

Three times a year, at roughly quarterly intervals between delivery of Code supplement pocket parts, we publish the Mississippi Advance Code Service pamphlets. These pamphlets contain updated statutory material and annotations to Attorney General opinions, research and practice references, and recent court decisions construing the Code. Each pamphlet is cumulative, so that each is a "one-stop" source of case notes updating those in your Code bound volumes and pocket parts.

ADVANCE SHEETS

The Advance Sheets consist of a series of pamphlets issued in the spring. The series reproduces the acts passed by the Mississippi Legislature and approved by the Governor during the legislative session. Features include tables showing the impact of legislation on sections of the Mississippi Code of 1972 Annotated, as well as a cumulative index. These pamphlets enable the user to receive a preview of approved legislation prior to supplement availability, and serve as an excellent source of legislative history.

AMENDMENT NOTES

Every time a Code provision is amended, we prepare a note describing the effect of the amendment. By reading the note, you can ascertain the impact of the change without having to check the former statute itself.

Amendment notes are retained in the Supplement until the bound volume is replaced, at which time notes from all but the last two years are deleted.

ANALYSES

Each title, chapter, and article appearing in a bound volume or supplement is preceded by an analysis. The analysis details the scope of the title, chapter, and article and enables you to see at a glance the content of the title, chapter, and article without resorting to a page-by-page examination in the bound volume or supplement.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

Opinions of the attorney general for the state of Mississippi have been read for constructions of Mississippi law. Notes describing the subject matter of the opinions have been placed under relevant code provisions under the heading "Attorney General Opinions." The citation at the end of each note refers to the person requesting the opinion, the date of the opinion, and the opinion number.

CODE STATUS

The Mississippi Code of 1972 Annotated is Mississippi's official code and is considered evidence of the statute law of the state of Mississippi (see § 1-1-8). The Code was enacted by Chapter 394 of the Laws of 1972, which was signed by the Governor on April 26, 1972.

The text of Chapter 394 is printed in Volume 1, on the pages following the Publisher's Foreword. In addition, Title 1, Chapters 1 through 5 of the Code contain statutes governing the status and construction of the Code.

COMPARABLE LEGISLATION FROM OTHER STATES

Notes to comparable legislation from other states appear for uniform laws, interstate compacts, statutory provisions pertaining to reciprocity and cooperation with other states, and various important statutes of general interest. Other states' statutes that are similar in subject matter and scope to those of Mississippi are cited, generally, under the first section of the chapter or article to which they pertain. Occasionally, comparable legislation pertains to only one section, in which case it is cited under that section rather than at the chapter or article level.

USER'S GUIDE

See also Federal Aspects.

COURT RULES

The Mississippi Court Rules are published separately by LexisNexis in a fully-annotated softcover volume, which is replaced annually and supplemented semi-annually.

The Court Rules volume contains statewide rules of procedure of the state courts, the local rules of the United States district courts and bankruptcy courts for Mississippi, and the rules of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Rules are received from the courts and are edited only for stylistic consistency. For further information, see the Preface to the Mississippi Court Rules volume.

CROSS REFERENCES

Cross references refer you to notes under other Code sections, which may affect a law or place it in context. Cross references also are used under repealed provisions to refer you to an existing law on a similar subject. Cross references do not cite all related statutes, however, since these can be identified by using the General Index.

See also Comparable Legislation from other States and Federal Aspects.

EDITOR'S NOTES

Editor's notes are notes prepared by the Publisher that contain information about important or unusual features of a law, or special circumstances surrounding passage of the law, that are not apparent from the law's text.

See also Effective Dates.

EFFECTIVE DATES

Absent a specific effective date provision within an act, Mississippi laws generally take effect upon approval date, which is the date the act is signed into law by the Governor. Acts affecting voting rights and procedures take effect on the date the United States Attorney General interposes no objection under § 5 of the Voting Right Act of 1965.

FEDERAL ASPECTS

Notes to federal legislation that is similar in subject matter and scope to the laws of Mississippi are referenced throughout the Code. In addition, the

USER'S GUIDE

Code contains the United States Code Service citation for any federal law that is referred to in a Mississippi statute by its popular name or by its session law designation.

See also Comparable Legislation from other States.

INDEX

The Code is completely indexed in two softcover Index volumes, which are updated and replaced annually. In addition, each volume of the Code is followed by its own index. As accurate and thorough as the Index is, your best defense against index wild goose chases is familiarity with indexing techniques. To that end, an explanatory Foreword to the Index appears in the first Index volume.

JOINT LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE NOTES

Joint Legislative Committee notes are included in the Code to describe codification decisions made by the Mississippi Joint Legislative Committee on Compilation, Revision and Publication of Legislation. Examples of Committee actions that warrant the inclusion of a note are the integration of multiple amendments to a single Code section during the same legislative session, and the correction of typographical errors appearing in the Code.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Every reported case from the Supreme Court of Mississippi, the Court of Appeals of Mississippi, federal district courts for Mississippi, the federal Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court has been read for constructions of Mississippi law. These constructions are noted under pertinent sections of the statutes or Mississippi Constitution provisions, under the heading "Judicial Decisions." Where a decision has been reviewed by a higher court, subsequent judicial history and disposition is noted in the case note if such disposition has any bearing on the annotated material. Where two or more decisions state the same rule of law, the case citations are cumulated under one case note.

Case notes are grouped together under headings called "catchlines." The catchlines identify the basic subject matter of the case notes and assist the user in locating pertinent notes. Catchlines are numbered and arranged thematically, with "In general" first. Where there are two or more catchlines, an analysis, listing all the catchlines, precedes the annotations.

Frequently, statutes carry notes to cases that arose under earlier laws on the same subject. Case notes are retained so long as the editor believes the note will have some relevance under current law, though of course the relevance may be diminished by later changes in the law. These case notes appear under the heading "Decisions under former law."

ORGANIZATION AND NUMBERING SYSTEM

The Code is organized by titles, chapters, articles, subarticles, undesignated centered headings and sections. Analyses at the beginning of each title, chapter, article, and subarticle help you understand the internal arrangement of each Code unit (see Analyses).

Odd numbers are generally used for the numbering of titles, chapters and sections. Even numbers have been used for some chapters and sections so that a particular new chapter or section might be logically placed with other chapters and sections dealing with the same or similar subject matter. Similarly, the use of numbers with decimal points has been used for some sections in order that they may be inserted among other sections pertaining to the same subject.

The title, chapter, and section for each Code section is revealed by its section number. Thus, in the designation “§ 1-3-65,” the first digit (“1”) means the provision is in Title 1 (“Laws and Statutes”); the second (“3”) indicates Chapter 3 (“Construction of Statutes”); and the last two digits (“65”) mean the 65th section in that chapter (“Construction of terms generally”).

Articles and subarticles are not reflected by section number designations.

Within sections, subsections and paragraphs usually are designated following this pattern: (1)(a)(i)1. or (1)(a)(i)A. A distinctive indentation scheme is applied to suggest the relative value of each unit within this hierarchy.

PLACEMENT OF NOTES

Where a note pertains to a single statute section, it will of course be set out following that section. In many instances, however, a note applies equally to several statute section or to an entire chapter or article. If the pertinent sections are scattered, or few in number, the note will be duplicated for each section. But where the note applies to all or most of the sections in a chapter or article, we prevent the space-consuming repetition of notes by placing the note at the very beginning of the chapter or article. Look for these unit-wide notes between the title, chapter, or article analysis and the first section in that unit.

REPLACEMENT VOLUMES

The Code is periodically updated and streamlined by the replacement of volumes. Although a current set of the Code contains all currently applicable statutes, we encourage you to retain replaced volumes and their supplement pockets parts for historical reference.

RESEARCH AND PRACTICE REFERENCES

Citations to references in American Jurisprudence, American Jurisprudence Pleading and Practice, American Jurisprudence Proof of Facts, American Jurisprudence Trials, American Law Reports, First through Fifth Series, ALR Federal, Corpus Juris Secundum, various other treatises and practice guides, and Mississippi law journals are given under this heading, wherever the references appear to discuss the statute under which the citation appears, or a topic related to the statute. These citations are intended only to give you a starting point for your library research. The Mississippi law journals include Mississippi Law Journal and Mississippi College Law Review.

USER'S GUIDE

SOURCE NOTES

Each section of the code is followed by a brief note showing the acts of the legislature on which it is based, including the act that originally enacted the section and any subsequent amendments.

The source note follows the section text, preceding any other annotations for the section. Information in the source note is listed in chronological order, with the most recent information listed last. If a section has been renumbered, the former number will appear in the source note. References to comparable provisions in statutes also are listed.

The tables volume should also be consulted when researching the history of a statutory section, since it contains cross reference tables that provide a statutory citation for each section of the session laws and the date each act went into effect.

STATUTE HEADINGS

Headings or "catchlines" for Code sections and subsections are generally created and maintained by the publisher. They are mere catchwords and are not to be deemed or taken as the official title of a section or as a part of the section. Your suggestions for the improvement of particular catchlines are invited.

TABLES

The Mississippi Code of 1972 Annotated contains several tables that can assist you in your research. These are published in the Statutory Tables volume of the Code, and include the following:

- Sections of the Code of 1930 carried into the Code of 1942.
- Sections of the Code of 1942 carried into the Code of 1972.
- Allocation of Acts of Legislature, 1931 — 1972.
- Allocation of Acts of Legislature, 1972 — present.
- Consolidated Tables of amendments and repeals of 1942 Code sections.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

The sales provision of the Code will be applied to situations involving other commercial contracts because although not controlled by the Code "the Code is persuasive here because it embodies the foremost modern legal thought concerning commercial transactions". Vitex Mfg. Corp. v. Caribtex Corp., 377 F.2d 795 (3d Cir. V.I. 1967).

Reference has been made to the Code in interpreting the effect of an "as is" sale of real estate, the court recognizing that the Code would not apply but pointing out that cases thereunder "by the process of reasoning by analogy are appropriate precedents to apply in an interpretation of the contract provision." Tibbitts v. Openshaw, 18 Utah 2d 442, 425 P.2d 160 (1967).

Because of the provision of UCC § 1-102(2) decisions in other states "are more than mere persuasive authority." A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

The court should seek to follow interpretations of the Code made in other states. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

The UCC is inapplicable to commercial events which took place before it became effective. Streeter v. Middlemas, 240 Md. 169, 213 A.2d 471 (1965); Peachtree News Co. v. Macmillan Co., 112 Ga. App. 556, 145 S.E.2d 666, 3 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 244 (1965).

A lease of standing timber for the purpose of producing turpentine therefrom is a lease of an interest in land to which the Uniform Commercial Code has no application. Newton v. Allen, 220 Ga. 681, 141 S.E.2d 417, 2 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 770 (1965).

Moreover, notwithstanding that a transaction relating to the sale of goods was entered into after the enactment of the Uniform Commercial Code, the prior Uniform Sales Act governs where the transaction took place before the effective date of the Uniform Commercial Code. Paramount Paper Prods. Co. v. Lynch, 182 Pa. Super. 504, 128 A.2d 157 (1956).

An indictment made under a section of the Sales Act, which was repealed by the Uniform Commercial Code is valid where violation of a similar provision of the Uniform Commercial Code is punishable, since the legislature did not intend by the repeal of the Sales Act to grant a pardon to those committing offenses under it. Commonwealth v. Davis, 4 Pa. D. & C.2d 182 (1954).

The Uniform Commercial Code, as specifically provided therein, is inapplicable to transaction arising prior to its effective date. Thomas v. First Nat'l Bank, 376 Pa. 181, 101 A.2d 910 (1954); Roller v. Jaffe, 387 Pa. 501, 128 A.2d 355 (1957); Hahn v. Andrews, 182 Pa. Super. 338, 126 A.2d 519 (1956); GFC Corp. v. Antrim, 2 Pa. D. & C.2d 377 (1953); In re Consorto Constr. Co., 212 F.2d 676 (3d Cir. Pa. 1954), cert. denied, 348 U.S. 833, 75 S. Ct. 57, 99 L. Ed. 657 (1954); Gould v. City Bank & Trust Co., 213 F.2d 314 (4th Cir. Md.

1954); First Trust & Sav. Bank v. Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co., 214 F.2d 320, 50 A.L.R.2d 1218 (3d Cir. Pa. 1954), cert denied, 348 U.S. 856, 75 S. Ct. 81, 99 L. Ed. 674 (1954); Durkin v. Siegel, 340 Mass. 445, 165 N.E.2d 81 (1960); A. Belanger & Sons v. United States, 275

F.2d 372, 39 CCH Lab. Cas. P 66294 (1st Cir. Mass. 1960); United States ex rel. National U.S. Radiator Corp. v. D.C. Loveys Co., 174 F. Supp. 44, 37 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P 65620 (D. Mass. 1958), aff'd, 275 F.2d 372, 39 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P 66294 (1st Cir. Mass. 1960).

§ 75-1-102. Purposes; rules of construction; variation by agreement.

(1) This code shall be liberally construed and applied to promote its underlying purposes and policies.

(2) Underlying purposes and policies of this code are

(a) to simplify, clarify and modernize the law governing commercial transactions;

(b) to permit the continued expansion of commercial practices through custom, usage and agreement of the parties;

(c) to make uniform the law among the various jurisdictions.

(3) The effect of provisions of this code may be varied by agreement, except as otherwise provided in this code and except that the obligations of good faith, diligence, reasonableness and care prescribed by this code may not be disclaimed by agreement but the parties may by agreement determine the standards by which the performance of such obligations is to be measured if such standards are not manifestly unreasonable.

(4) The presence in certain provisions of this code of the words "unless otherwise agreed" or words of similar import does not imply that the effect of other provisions may not be varied by agreement under subsection (3).

(5) In this code unless the context otherwise requires

(a) words in the singular number include the plural, and in the plural include the singular;

(b) words of the masculine gender include the feminine and the neuter, and when the sense so indicates words of the neuter gender may refer to any gender.

5. Policy of uniformity.
6. Effect of agreements.
7. —Particular agreements.

1. In general.

In action by insurer as subrogee of subcontractor for indemnification of claims settled by insurer, which claims arose out of fire in municipal filtration plant which started when spark from welding torch landed on defective plastic equipment supplied by defendant company to subcontractor for installation in plant, defense contention that policy of UCC § 1-102(2)(b) to permit continued expansion of commercial practices through custom, usage, and agreement of parties demonstrated legislative intent to allow “commercial-industrial specialists,” such as subcontractor and defendant in present case, to regulate relationships among themselves and determine liability for defective products by agreement, had no merit because party injured by defective product was remote user thereof. Potsdam Welding & Mach. Co. v. Neptune Microfloc, Inc., 57 A.D.2d 993 (3d Dep’t 1977).

In action pursuant to UCC § 3-419 by co-payee of check for conversion of check by bank which cashed check with co-payee’s endorsement forged by other payee, co-payee, which was not a “customer” of bank within meaning of UCC §§ 4-104 and 4-406, was not equitably estopped by policy of commercial reasonableness under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-203, notwithstanding that co-payee waited 10 months after it learned of forgery to inform bank, where (1) check, which was issued to co-payee “and” other payee, was properly payable under UCC § 3-116 only if it contained endorsement of both payees; (2) unauthorized endorsement was, in absence of ratification under UCC § 3-404, no endorsement under UCC §§ 3-202 and 3-404; (3) co-payee did not ratify unauthorized endorsement; and (4) bank’s failure to ascertain whether co-payee’s signature was authorized was not in accord with reasonable commercial standards of banking business under UCC § 3-419. Atlas Bldg. Supply Co. v. First Indep. Bank, 15 Wash. App. 367, 550 P.2d 26 (1976).

Notwithstanding that agents of owner of counterfeit United States treasury bill inquired at bank as to genuineness of bill, such inquiry did not constitute notice under UCC § 1-201 (25, 26, 27) that bill was not genuine and bank, which took bill as negotiable instrument in bearer form under UCC § 8-105 as bona fide purchaser, was entitled under UCC § 8-306 to rely on owner’s warranties as principal that bill was genuine and was not materially altered, but recovery by bank under unjust enrichment was not permitted, since, under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-103, specific warranties of UCC displaced remedy of unjust enrichment in regard to negotiation of securities in this case. Brannon v. First Nat’l Bank, 137 Ga. App. 275, 223 S.E.2d 473 (1976).

2. Nature and purpose.

While the effort was not totally successful, one of the purposes of the draftsmen of the Uniform Commercial Code was to eliminate resort to the concept of title in resolving controversies arising out of commercial transactions. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Provisions of Uniform Commercial Code could not be resorted to by students to support contention that university and its officers were bound by a standard of reasonableness in determining future tuition rates (see UCC § 1-102(2)). Eisele v. Ayers, 63 Ill. App. 3d 1039, 381 N.E.2d 21, 99 A.L.R.3d 876 (1st Dist. 1978).

UCC was designed to regulate commercial transactions, and legislature did not intend through Code to create contractual cause of action for wrongful death arising from breach of warranty. Geohagan v. GMC, 291 Ala. 167, 279 So. 2d 436 (Ala. 1973).

Taking note of the Uniform Commercial Code’s purpose to “make uniform the law among the various jurisdictions”, an Indiana Appeals Court held that electricity qualified as "goods" under the Code, relying upon the authority of a Pennsylvania case holding that natural gas was "goods" within the Code. Helvey v. Wabash County REMC, 151 Ind. App. 176, 278 N.E.2d 608, 48 A.L.R.3d 1055 (1972).

In matter of first impression in state, where there is authority in other jurisdictions, court will look to comments and examples of drafters of legislation as guide to "promote its underlying purposes and policies". In re Rivet, 299 F. Supp. 374 (E.D. Mich. 1969).

The purpose of this act, to be liberally construed, is specified as the stipulation, clarification and modernization of the law governing commercial transactions to permit the continued expansion of commercial practices through custom, usage and agreement of the parties; and the statute mandates a liberal administration to the end that an aggrieved party may be put in as good a position as if the other party had fully performed without consequential, special, or penal damages unless specifically provided for. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Sharp, 56 Misc. 2d 261 (1968).

The UCC was designed to bring the body of commercial law into the contemporary world of business. In re United Thrift Stores, Inc., 363 F.2d 11 (3d Cir. N.J. 1966).

The Massachusetts court regards the Uniform Commercial Code less as a novel enactment than as largely a restatement and clarification of existing law which has the approval of American scholars. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., 161 F. Supp. 790 (D. Mass. 1958).

The Pennsylvania Uniform Commercial Code was enacted to codify all existing laws on commercial transactions. Girard Trust Corn Exch. Bank v. Warren Lepley Ford, Inc., 13 Pa. D. & C.2d 119 (1957).

3. Construction.

Exculpatory provision of assignment that conditional sale contract and judgment note assignor warranted compliance with all filing and recording requirements, agreeing that any filing or recording or renewals thereof which the assignee might undertake at assignor's request, or otherwise, should be at assignor's expense and without responsibility whatsoever on assignee's part for any omission or invalid accomplishment thereof, whether through assignee's failure, neglect, or for any other reason, and that such omission or invalid accomplishment should not relieve assignor of any responsibility to assignee, was void under UCC § 1-102(3). Congress Fin. Corp. v. Sterling-Coin Op Mach. Corp., 456 F.2d 451 (3d Cir. Pa. 1972).

The Article on letters of credit is to be liberally interpreted. The requirement of rigid adherence to material matters must strike a balance with the concept of reasonable flexibility as to minor matters in order to facilitate trade. Banco Espanol de Credito v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 385 F.2d 230 (1st Cir. Mass. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 1013, 88 S. Ct. 1263, 20 L. Ed. 2d 163 (1968).

A court should not seek to restrict the Code by interpretations which preserve former inconsistent rules or law. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Sharp, 56 Misc. 2d 261 (1968).

Where repurchase agreement executed by automobile dealer failed to establish the time for performance, evidence of custom and usage showing that bank must repossess and return car for purchase within 90 days after default was admissible to establish what was a reasonable time, and bank's undue delay in repossession and demand precluded it from recovering from automobile dealer the amount due from the buyer under the contract less the amount received at the execution sale. Valley Nat'l Bank v. Babylon Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 53 Misc. 2d 1029 (1967), aff'd, 28 A.D.2d 1092, 284 N.Y.S.2d 849 (2d Dep't 1967).

A liberal construction is to be placed upon the Commercial Code even to the extent of ignoring the requirement of § 9-402 that a financing statement is to be signed by the debtor, at least during the period of transition between the application of former statutes and the present Code. Alloway v. Stuart, 385 S.W.2d 41 (Ky. 1964).

The Code is to be liberally construed to promote its purposes and policies. National Shawmut Bank v. Vera, 352 Mass. 11, 223 N.E.2d 515, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1 (1967); Annawan Mills, Inc. v. Northeast- ern Fibers Co., 26 Mass. App. Dec. 115, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 787 (1963).

A liberal construction must be given to the Uniform Commercial Code so as to secure a reasonable meaning and to effectuate the intention of its framers and make it workable and serviceable to the important business to which it relates. Universal Lightning Rod, Inc. v. Rischall Elec. Co., 1 Conn. Cir. Ct. 623, 192 A.2d 50 (1963).

The Uniform Commercial Code is an attempt to codify all existing law governing commercial transactions and reference should not be made to one section alone. The Code must be considered as a whole, and each section should be read in conjunction with others in order to ascertain the intent of the legislature. Girard Trust Corn Exch. Bank v. Warren Lopley Ford, Inc., 12 Pa. D. & C.2d 351 (1957).

4. —Reference to official comments.

Where jury could reasonably have concluded that buyer's revocation of acceptance of new 1970 Lincoln Continental automobile was timely and justifiable, buyer under UCC § 2-711(1) was entitled to recover amount of purchase price that he had already paid. Moreover, such recovery was not limited by warranty provision, incorporated in sales contract, that buyer was entitled only to repair and replacement of defective parts. The Uniform Commercial Code expressly declares in UCC § 1-102(1) that it is to be liberally construed, and it also recognizes in Official Comment 1 to UCC § 2-719 that the very essence of a sales contract is that minimum adequate remedies at least be available. In present case, however, limited remedy of warranty in sales contract failed to achieve its essential purpose, since even after numerous attempts at repairs, vehicle purchased by buyer did not operate as new automobile should operate. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Official Comment in connection with UCC § 1-102(3) regarding variance by agreement notes the purpose to preserve freedom of contract and allow for the evolutionary growth of commercial practices; but it also notes that whether such variance by agreement may affect third parties depends on more specific provisions of

UCC. Herington Livestock Auction Co. v. Verschoor, 179 N.W.2d 491 (Iowa 1970).

Because Code is becoming truly national law of commerce and therefore appropriate source of federal law, "official comments", although not binding on federal court, are powerful dicta. In re Yale Express Sys., 370 F.2d 433, 3 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1007 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1966), appeal after remand, 384 F.2d 990 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1967), (superseded by statute as stated in United Sav. Ass'n v. Timbers of Inwood Forest Assocs., 793 F.2d 1380 (5th Cir. Tex. 1986).

The official comments to the Code may be examined to determine the intent of the Code, but in case of conflict with the provisions of the Code, the latter prevails. Bafle v. Remchow & Ford Motor Co., 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 108 (Pa. 1962).

5. Policy of uniformity.

Virginia case law holding that extrinsic evidence may not be received to explain or supplement a written contract unless the court finds the writing is ambiguous has been changed by the UCC provision that the Code shall be liberally construed and applied to promote its underlying purposes and policies which include the continued expansion of commercial practices through custom, usage and agreement of the parties, and a finding of ambiguity is not necessary for the admission of extrinsic evidence about the usages of the trade and the parties' course of dealing. Columbia Nitrogen Corp. v. Royster Co., 451 F.2d 3 (4th Cir. Va. 1971).

Policy of uniformity utilized by court in adhering to Pennsylvania statute of limitations construction in Ohio case of first impression. Val Decker Packing Co. v. Corn Prods. Sales Co., 23 Ohio Misc. 162, 411 F.2d 850 (6th Cir. Ohio 1969).

In matter of first impression in state, where there is authority in other jurisdictions, court will look to comments and examples of drafters of legislation as guide to "promote its underlying purposes and policies". In re Rivet, 299 F. Supp. 374 (E.D. Mich. 1969).

In Franklin Nat. Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp. (1969) 60 Misc 2d 499, 301 NYS2d 845, 6 UCCRS 634, directive of Code that it be liberally construed to promote its purposes and policies, one of which is "to make uniform the law among the various jurisdictions", was utilized by court in relying on cases from other jurisdictions holding that one who is not holder in due course but takes accommodation paper for value before it is due may enforce it against the accommodation maker, and that want of consideration is no defense to accommodation maker. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

Because policy of Code is uniformity, sister-state interpretations are more than mere persuasive authority. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

6. Effect of agreements.

Warranties of §§ 75-3-414, 4-207 may be modified or waived by agreement of parties in accordance with §§ 75-1-102, 75-4-103; nothing in Uniform Commercial Code suggests that warranties may be waived or lost by violation of duties imposed under §§ 75-4-202, 75-4-204. White v. Hancock Bank, 477 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1985).

Portions of Uniform Commercial Code relating to course of dealings or trade usage were not intended to be applied in manner to defeat Code's statute of frauds requirements and, at best, evidence of custom or usage in trade could be used to explain ambiguous portions of an agreement; thus, potato farmer could not introduce evidence of usage or course of dealings within trade to substantiate oral agreement with potato buyer. Dangerfield v. Markel, 222 N.W.2d 373 (N.D. 1974).

Obligations of reasonableness and care may not be disclaimed by agreement, but the parties may agree to the standards to be applied if they are not manifestly unreasonable. Steelman v. Associates Dist. Corp., 121 Ga. App. 649, 175 S.E.2d 62 (1970).

7. —Particular agreements.

Both UCC § 1-102(3) and § 4-103(a) prevented a bank from contracting away its obligation to use ordinary care in the handling of depositors' funds. Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

Bank's conduct in blindly treating commercial paper made payable to its order as bearer paper, for sole reason that both drawer and bearer were known to bank, was manifestly unreasonable, and bank could not establish reasonableness of its conduct on any theory of implied contract in light of UCC § 1-102(3) and § 4-103(a), which prevent banks from contracting away their obligation to use ordinary care in handling depositors' funds. Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

An agreement between an equipment manufacturer and a finance company to the effect that the finance company was under no responsibility to record or file security paper was deemed waived by the finance company's retention of, and inaction upon, a letter from the manufacturer accompanying its transmittal of a conditional sales contract and judgment note requesting the finance company to record the paper, and the finance company's failure to comply with the statute placed the burden of loss from the dissipation of the security upon its shoulders. Congress Fin. Corp. v. Sterling-Coin Op Mach. Corp., 456 F.2d 451 (3d Cir. Pa. 1972).

Provisions of Act may be varied by agreement only when it is not otherwise expressly provided in Act; and any agreement concerning passage of title, whether oral or written, is subject to provision in § 2-401 limiting retention of title by seller in goods delivered to buyer to reservation of security interest. First Nat'l Bank v. Smoker, 153 Ind. App. 71, 286 N.E.2d 203, 287 N.E.2d 788 (3d Dist. 1972).

The UCC recognizes that there may be times when parties to an instrument may choose to alter the general provisions of the UCC to meet their particular purposes. Etelson v. Suburban Trust Co., 263 Md. 376, 283 A.2d 408, 9 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1371 (1971) (further holding that individual indorsers on a corporate note who consented to any modification of the terms of the note or the release or exchange of any collateral without notice by the lenders, limited the protection to which they might have otherwise been entitled under the UCC.)

§ 75-1-103. Supplementary general principles of law applicable.

Unless displaced by the particular provisions of this code, the principles of law and equity, including the law merchant and the law relative to capacity to contract, principal and agent, estoppel, fraud, misrepresentation, duress, coercion, mistake, bankruptcy, or other validating or invalidating cause shall supplement its provisions.

1. In general.

Under principle that pre-UCC law is applicable unless displaced by particular provisions of Code, UCC statute of frauds, rather than general statute of frauds, applies to alleged oral agreement and subsequent confirmatory letter, where general statute of frauds and UCC provision are in conflict and mandate different results. H & W Indus., Inc. v. Formosa Plastics Corp., USA, 860 F.2d 172 (5th Cir. 1988), reh'g denied, 863 F.2d 882 (5th Cir. 1988).

Finding no UCC Article 2 guidance to determining lessor's measure of recovery for lessee's continued use of leased copier after revocation, court would turn to doctrine of quantum meruit, which was not replaced by UCC. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Nowhere does the Uniform Commercial Code state in so many words that a bank, whether a collecting bank or payor bank, is liable for negligently paying an item. Hints, however abound in the Code. They start with § 1-103, providing that common-law rules of negligence still apply. Section 3-419(3) limits recovery against collecting banks for conversion only if they acted in good faith and followed "reasonable commercial standards." Section 3-406 precludes assertion of a material alteration or unauthorized signature against the party whose negligence substantially contributed to the wrongdoing, but only if the payor is a holder in due course or paid "in good faith and in accordance with the reasonable commercial standards of the drawee's or payor's business." A bank is prohibited from disclaiming "responsibility for its own lack of good faith or failure to exercise ordinary care" under § 4-103(1), apparently on the assumption that such duties exist. Finally, a bank's lack of care shifts the burden for paying over a forged signature or a materially altered item from its customer, who was negligent in discovering the wrongdoing, back to the bank under § 4-406(3). Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

Since the Uniform Commercial Code does not deal with the attributes of ownership of a joint tenant in investment securities, the court under UCC § 1-103 may apply the applicable common-law principles that govern joint tenancies. Ogilvie v. Idaho Bank & Trust Co., 99 Idaho 361, 582 P.2d 215 (1978).

Under UCC § 1-103, the provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code do not totally preempt the fields of law in which they speak. Rather, they are supplemented by all principles of law and equity that they do not specifically displace. S.S. Kresge Co. v. Port of Longview, 18 Wash. App. 805, 573 P.2d 1336 (1977), review granted, 90 Wash. 2d 1004 (1978).

UCC § 1-103 is to be viewed as a general adoption of commonlaw principles to commercial transactions, where the Code provisions do not apply to replace them. Gorge Lumber Co. v. Brazier Lumber Co., 6 Wash. App. 327, 493 P.2d 782 (1972).

UCC § 1-103 explicitly provides that previously recognized principles of law and equity should supplement statute in those areas where Code is silent. Muir v. Jefferson Credit Corp., 108 N.J. Super. 586, 262 A.2d 33 (L. Div. 1970).

The instant section affords a basis for regarding the Code as being supplemented by existing law outside the Code unless displaced by provisions of the Code itself. National Shawmut Bank v. Vera, 352 Mass. 11, 223 N.E.2d 515 (1967).

The provisions of this section superimpose a general requirement of fundamental integrity on commercial transactions regulated by the Uniform Commercial Code. Skeels v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 335 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1964).

2. Agency.

Although written notice of termination of authority to execute instruments would be desirable and even though checking account agreement between corporation and bank required revocation of signatory authority to be in form of written corporate resolution, controverted question of fact as to whether bank received oral notice of withdrawal of signatory authorization presented material issue of fact which would ordinarily preclude summary judgment, since under UCC § 4-103, no agreement can disclaim bank's responsibility for its own lack of good faith or failure to exercise ordinary care, and since, under UCC § 1-103, general rule of principal and agent that notice of termination of agent's authority can be given orally was applicable in absence of specific UCC provision on point. First Piedmont Bank & Trust Co. v. Doyle, 97 Idaho 700, 551 P.2d 1336 (1976), overruled on other grounds, 101 Idaho 852, 623 P.2d 464 (1980).

Case law rule that, if bank knows that deposits by debtor in his own name are in fact held by him in fiduciary capacity, then bank may not apply such funds to individual indebtedness of debtor, was not nullified by adoption of Uniform Commercial Code. South Cent. Livestock Dealers, Inc. v. Security State Bank, 551 F.2d 1346 (5th Cir. Tex. 1977).

The rules of law governing the ratification of the acts of an agent are not altered by the Code. In re Eton Furn. Co., 286 F.2d 93 (3d Cir. Pa. 1961).

Whether a person is the agent of the seller so that he has authority to bind the seller by a warranty, charge the seller with notice of a particular purpose for which the goods are desired by the buyer, or charge the seller with notice of non-conformity of the goods, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury when the evidence is conflicting. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

3. Contracts.

In an action arising out of an accommodation endorsement by a decedent on a negotiable instrument which represented a consolidation and renewal of two outstanding notes owed by his son, the finding of the chancellor that the decedent, although in poor health and suffering from very poor vision, had been competent when he endorsed the note two weeks before his death was supported by the evidence and was free from manifest error. Wilson v. Planters Bank, 383 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1980).

An infant may not disaffirm a contract for necessities (UCC § 1-103, successor provision to Pers Prop L § 83). Even here, the phrase "necessaries" does not possess a fixed interpretation, but must be measured against both the infant's standard of living and the ability and willingness of his guardian, if he has one, to supply the needed services or articles. Fisher v. Cattani, 53 Misc. 2d 221 (1966).

A person is bound by a contract which he signs without reading it when there is no evidence that he could not have done so had he chosen. Garner v. Tomcavage, 34 Northumb. Legal J. 18 (Pa. 1962).

The Code does not change the fundamental principle of contract law that where the parties have merely made a tentative agreement and in fact have not agreed upon any contract there is no binding obligation which the court can enforce. Arcuri v. Weiss, 198 Pa. Super. 506, 184 A.2d 24 (1962).

4. —Parol evidence rule.

Since it was well established prior to enactment of Uniform Commercial Code that if fraud were alleged with respect to formation of written contract, parol evidence rule did not bar consideration of contemporaneous oral agreement, and since UCC § 1-103 expressly provides that common-law principles of fraud and misrepresentation supplement Uniform Commercial Code's provisions, courts have continued to recognize pre-UCC fraud exception to parol evidence rule after adoption of parol evidence rule set forth in UCC § 2-202. Thus, in action by buyer of front-end loader to recover damages caused by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's employee, chancellor was required to consider testimony by buyer-even though parties' written contract specifically declared that it was complete and exclusive statement of terms of their agreement (see UCC § 2-202(b))—that loader, although represented as being 1973 model, was in fact manufactured in 1968. Franklin v. Lovitt Equip. Co., 420 So. 2d 1370 (Miss. 1982).

Under Pennsylvania law where parties, without any fraud or mistake, have deliberately put their engagements in writing, the writing is not only the best, but the only, evidence of their agreement. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

As provided in § 1-103, it was settled law in Pennsylvania prior to enactment of the Uniform Commercial Code that where fraud, accident, or mistake are alleged with respect to the execution of a written contract, prior oral agreements between the parties are admissible. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

In action to determine priority of security interests of bank and seller of hardware store, where evidence showed that seller's security interest in purchaser's collateral was perfected by filing on July 20, 1972, and that bank's interest in same collateral was perfected by filing on November 2, 1972; that bank, by subordination agreement entered into on July 12, 1972, had subordinated its claim against purchaser to claim of seller; and that on December 11, 1973, rider to subordination agreement executed by bank, seller, and purchaser provided that agreement should apply only to first $15,000 of purchaser's indebtedness to seller and that priority of claims concerning remainder of such indebtedness should be determined in accordance with UCC Article 9, (1) provisions of UCC Article 1 applied to case, since subordination agreement and rider related to transactions covered by Uniform Commercial Code and rider specifically referred to Article 9; (2) under UCC § 1-103, dealing with application of supplementary principles of law and equity, non-UCC parol evidence rule applied to case; (3) under UCC § 1-205(4), non-UCC parol evidence rule barred parol evidence by bank that rider was intended to grant bank priority as to claims in excess of first $15,000 of purchaser's indebtedness to seller, since such evidence was totally inconsistent with unambiguous terms of rider which were controlling; and (4) even if seller's security interest should fail to meet test for special priority under UCC § 9-312(3), seller's interest would still prevail under first-to-file rule of UCC § 9-312(5). Peoples Bank & Trust v. Reiff, 256 N.W.2d 336 (N.D. 1977).

5. Contribution and indemnity.

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell and install at buyer's lumber plant two "super drying kilns" and two lumber-handling systems, where (1) contract contained performance guarantee that super kilns would reduce drying schedules for buyer's lumber by 50 per cent and that if they did not do so, seller would provide adequate production capacity equal to that of four conventional dry kilns at no additional cost to buyer, (2) buyer paid down payment of $24,000, which was accepted by seller, (3) seller repudiated contract because it could not comply with performance guarantee, and (4) buyer thereafter purchased four conventional dry kilns and also a lumber "stacker-unstacker" from another seller, court held (1) that contract's performance guarantee was sufficiently definite and certain, (2) that because contract was breached by seller before installation of super kilns, liquidated damages provision of performance guarantee was inapplicable to measure buyer's damages and district court should have measured such damages under UCC §§ 2-712 and 2-713, (3) that regardless of whether district court, on remand of case, should apply cover provisions of UCC § 2-712 or contract-market price damages rule of UCC § 2-713 to case, court should base either cost of cover or market price of dry kilns on installed cost of conventional dry kilns with holding capacity twice that of the super kilns contracted for, since parties intended, by their performance guarantee, that super kilns' productivity was to be equivalent of conventional dry kilns with twice the holding capacity of such kilns, (4) that under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was entitled to recover its down payment, (5) that since the Uniform Commercial Code did not provide remedy for seller's recovery of value of equipment shipped by seller to buyer before seller's breach of contract, UCC § 1-103 was applicable and seller, under common-law and equitable principles, was entitled to recover value of equipment still in buyer's possession, together with fair value of equipment that buyer had disposed of, and (6) that district court should compute under UCC § 2-713 damages caused buyer by seller's failure to deliver and install the lumber-handling systems. Mann & Parker Lumber Co. v. Wel-Dri, 579 F.2d 973 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1978).

Under UCC § 1-103, general law on contribution and indemnity continues to supplement provisions of UCC and was applicable in truck owner's action for breach of warranty against dealer and manufacturer of truck to recover amount paid out in settlement of lawsuits arising out of collision between automobile and truck. Dodge Trucks, Inc. v. Wilson, 140 Ga. App. 743, 231 S.E.2d 818 (1976), aff'd, 238 Ga. 636, 235 S.E.2d 142 (1977).

By its terms, UCC § 1-103 permits reference to general equity principles only if they are not "displaced by the particular provisions of this Act;" the "Act" is the entire Code. Bowling Green, Inc. v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 307 F. Supp. 648 (D. Mass. 1969), aff'd, 425 F.2d 81 (1st Cir. Mass. 1970), but see, Maine Family Fed. Credit Union v. Sun Life Assurance Co., 727 A.2d 335 (Me. 1999).

6. Equity.

Notwithstanding Idaho statutory and common-law principles concerning gifts and the creation of joint tenancies, transfers of investment securities are governed by Article 8 of the Idaho Uniform Commercial Code (UCC §§ 8-101 et seq.). However, where Article 8 is silent as to the applicable law, the Idaho court's disposition of a transfer of such securities, under Idaho UCC § 1-103, is governed by principles of law and equity that supplement the provisions of the Idaho Uniform Commercial Code. Ogilvie v. Idaho Bank & Trust Co., 99 Idaho 361, 582 P.2d 215 (1978).

Equitable principles continued to apply to permit a seller to recover from a third party the sales price of automobiles as represented by checks issued by the purchaser with every intention that they would be paid upon presentment, and this despite the seller's loss of the right of rescission, where it was the act of the third party which rendered the purchaser's checks worthless to that party's financial advantage. Greater Louisville Auto Auction, Inc. v. Ogle Buick, Inc., 387 S.W.2d 17 (Ky. 1965).

7. —Constructive trust.

Where (1) plaintiff and his wife purchased used mobile home, (2) plaintiff's father-in-law cosigned security agreement and note as accommodation maker, (3) plaintiff defaulted on payments, (4) plaintiff's father-in-law, with secured party's consent, obtained possession of home, paid off balance due on note, and made repairs on home, (5) secured party obtained repossession title in its name, released security agreement, and transferred repossession title to plaintiff's father-in-law without notifying plaintiff, who was in jail, of either the account delinquency or the subsequent transfer of title, and (6) after plaintiff's release from jail, plaintiff's father-in-law sold home with plaintiff's consent, but did not give accounting of sale or proceeds therefrom to plaintiff, court held (1) that plaintiff did not waive right to notice of disposition of home under UCC § 9-504(3), since UCC § 9-501(3)(b) specifically states that such right cannot be waived; (2) plaintiff's father-in-law, as accommodation maker of note, did not fall within scope of UCC § 9-504(5), dealing with transfers of collateral that are not sales and thus do not require notice to debtor; (3) UCC § 9-504(5) did not contemplate complete extinguishment of plaintiff's right to home, as was done in present case by secured party's transfer of repossession title to plaintiff's father-in-law; and (4) under UCC § 9-507(1) and UCC § 1-103, plaintiff was entitled to damages for conversion of home on basis of benefit to defendant wrongdoers, rather than on basis of allowing full value of home as enhanced by wrongdoers. Western Nat'l Bank v. Harrison, 577 P.2d 635, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1383 (Wyo. 1978) (stating, alternatively, that once plaintiff had established conversion of home and consequential right to nominal damages therefor, he became eligible for rule-of-thumb damages allowed by UCC § 9-507(1)).

8. —Estoppel and waiver.

Failure of customer to give prior consent, as required by Florida UCC § 5-106(2), to extension of irrevocable letter of credit did not invalidate such extension where customer acquiesced in extended letter after its issuance. In such case customer, under general principles of equity incorporated into Florida Uniform Commercial Code by Florida UCC § 1-103, was estopped from denying that it was bound by the extended letter. Lewis State Bank v. Advance Mtg. Corp., 362 So. 2d 406, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 245 (Fla. App. 1978) (holding that letter of credit in suit remained irrevocable and unconditional within meaning of Florida UCC § 5-103(1)(a)).

Under Illinois law some "title" or "right" can be created by estoppel. Avco Delta Corp. Canada v. United States, 459 F.2d 436 (7th Cir. Ill. 1972).

An agreement between an equipment manufacturer and a finance company to the effect that the finance company was under no responsibility to record or file security paper was deemed waived by the finance company's retention of, and inaction upon, a letter from the manufacturer accompanying its transmittal of a conditional sales contract and judgment note requesting the finance company to record the paper, and the finance company's failure to comply with the statute placed the burden of loss from the dissipation of the security upon its shoulders. Congress Fin.

Corp. v. Sterling-Coin Op Mach. Corp., 456 F.2d 451 (3d Cir. Pa. 1972).

Defense of estoppel to ameliorate what would otherwise be an equitable result, a doctrine adopted and applied under New York decisional law, was properly raised as an affirmative defense in accordance with the Federal Rules, because of the directive of UCC § 1-103 for the preservation of principles of law and equity. Congress Factors v. Malden Mills, Inc., 332 F. Supp. 1384 (D.N.J. 1971).

Although UCC § 1-103 allows principle of estoppel to supplement UCC provisions, grain farmer was not estopped from asserting statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201, as defense to alleged oral contract for sale of 40,000 bushels of grain where there was no evidence of fraud, positive misrepresentation or unconscionable conduct akin to fraud chargeable to farmer. Farmers Coop. Ass'n v. Cole, 239 N.W.2d 808 (N.D. 1976).

In action by buyer against seller arising out of nondelivery of wheat under oral sales contract, original oral contract was not rendered unenforceable by UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds, where seller admitted existence of contract. Nor was oral modification of contract as to delivery date due to unavailability of elevator space rendered unenforceable by statute of frauds requirement under UCC §§ 2-209 and 2-201 where pursuant to UCC § 1-103 and 2-209, seller waived statute of frauds defense through his course of performance under UCC § 2-208 and 1-205 in delivering 36 truckloads of wheat well after original delivery date without making timely objection. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Anderson, 170 Mont. 175, 552 P.2d 63 (1976).

In action by buyer to enforce oral contract for sale of 20,000 bushels of corn at $1.22 per bushel for future delivery, seller was barred from raising defense of statute of fraud, UCC § 2-201(1) by doctrine of equitable estoppel where buyer substantially changed its position in reliance on oral contract by selling 18,000 bushels of corn to two third parties in accordance with buyer's general business practice, and where seller knew or should have known that buyer would rely on contract and would resell corn. Farmers Elevator

Co. v. Lyle, 90 S.D. 86, 238 N.W.2d 290 (1976).

Bank's action in converting a transaction which clearly contemplated insurance, into an assignment which would have the effect of depriving the buyer of the waiver of subrogation provision, was not "good faith" as defined by UCC. Integrity Ins. Co. v. Davis, 116 N.J. Super. 417, 282 A.2d 452 (1971).

No particular provision of Code displacing law of waiver, supplementary general principles of law were applicable in this regard under Code § 1-103. Clovis Nat'l Bank v. Thomas, 77 N.M. 554, 425 P.2d 726, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 137 (1967) (premise of no Code displacement of law of waiver expressly disagreed with by United States v. Greenwich Mill & Elevator Co. (1968, ND Ohio) 291 F Supp 609, 17 Ohio Misc 71, 46 Ohio Ops 2d 102, 5 UCCRS 965 (applying Ohio law) and holding that Code § 9-306(2) codified doctrine of waiver).

When one of two innocent persons must suffer through the fraud of a third person the one who made it possible for the fraud to be perpetrated must bear the loss. GMAC v. Manheim Auto Auction, 25 Pa. D. & C.2d 179 (1961).

9. —Subrogation.

Surety's right of subrogation is not displaced by Article 9 of Code. National Shawmut Bank v. New Amsterdam Cas. Co., 411 F.2d 843 (1st Cir. Mass. 1969).

Where (1) purchaser of truck, who was in default on loan made by first secured creditor, borrowed money from second secured creditor to pay off first creditor's loan, (2) first creditor's lien on truck was then discharged of record, (3) second creditor, although it obtained note and security agreement covering truck, which instruments were executed on behalf of corporation of which debtor was officer, neglected (a) to effect transfer of truck's title to debtor's corporation, (b) to perfect security interest in truck by recording its lien on vehicle's title document, and (c) to record such title document with Director of Motor Vehicles, (4) debtor's corporation became insolvent, and receiver was appointed therefor, and (5) truck was sold at judicial sale, and receiver claimed that his interest in sale proceeds had priority over second secured creditor's lien on truck, court held (1) that under UCC § 9-301(1)(b) and (3), providing that unperfected security interest is subordinate to rights of one who becomes "lien creditor" without knowledge of such security interest and before it is perfected, receiver of debtor's corporation had apparent priority as a "lien creditor" because second creditor's unperfected lien on truck would yield to receiver's priority as "lien creditor" who had no knowledge of second creditor's lien, in absence of any evidence that creditors represented by receiver had any such knowledge themselves, (2) that despite receiver's apparent priority, the Uniform Commercial Code, under UCC § 1-103, is supplemented by principles of law and equity unless such principles are displaced by any provision of the code, (3) that no particular provision of UCC Article 9 had displaced the doctrine of equitable subrogation where such doctrine was properly invocable as a matter of substantive law, and (4) that under all circumstances of case, second creditor's contention that it was entitled to be subrogated to first creditor's recorded lien before such lien was discharged, on the ground that second creditor's money was used to pay off such prior lien, should be sustained. Kaplan v. Walker, 164 N.J. Super. 130, 395 A.2d 897 (App. Div. 1978).

Terms of Uniform Commercial Code do not abrogate, modify, affect or abridge performing surety's rights under equitable doctrine of subrogation, and subrogation claim thereunder does not lose its priority rank when it is not filed pursuant to requirements of Code. Mid-Continent Cas. Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 531 P.2d 1370 (Okla. 1975).

Doctrine of equitable subrogation in suretyship cases has not been affected by adoption of Uniform Commercial Code. In re J.V. Gleason Co., 452 F.2d 1219 (8th Cir. Minn. 1971).

Silence of Uniform Commercial Code on subject of subrogation and equitable liens created thereby indicates an intentional recognition of and a desire to preserve the doctrine of equitable subrogation. In re J.V. Gleason Co., 452 F.2d 1219 (8th Cir. Minn. 1971).

Where there are two security interests in the same collateral and a third person pays the debt of the debtor to the holder of the prior interest, the third person, despite the fact that he did not take an assignment of the prior interest would, on principles of subrogation, succeed to the rights or the holder of the prior interest provided that the interest of the intervening lienor was not prejudicially affected. This principle of subrogation is not superseded by the Uniform Commercial Code which provides in the instant section that unless displaced by the particular provisions of the Code, the principles of law and equity "shall supplement its provisions" because no provision of the Code purports to affect the fundamental doctrine of subrogation. French Lumber Co. v. Commercial Realty & Fin. Co., 346 Mass. 716, 195 N.E.2d 507 (1964).

10. —Unjust enrichment.

Notwithstanding that agents of owner of counterfeit United States treasury bill inquired at bank as to genuineness of bill, such inquiry did not constitute notice under UCC § 1-201 (25, 26, 27) that bill was not genuine and bank, which took bill as negotiable instrument in bearer form under UCC § 8-105 as bona fide purchaser, was entitled under UCC § 8-306 to rely on owner's warranties as principal that bill was genuine and was not materially altered, but recovery by bank under unjust enrichment was not permitted, since, under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-103, specific warranties of UCC displaced remedy of unjust enrichment in regard to negotiation of securities in this case. Brannon v. First Nat'l Bank, 137 Ga. App. 275, 223 S.E.2d 473 (1976).

Equitable principles, which supplement Code's provisions, demand that buyer seeking cancellation on grounds of misrepresentation should return what he has received. Melms v. Mitchell, 266 Or. 208, 512 P.2d 1336, 65 A.L.R.3d 376 (1973).

11. Law merchant; commercial paper.

Where third person purchased money order for $286 from defendant bank, gave it to plaintiff to obtain release of automobile on which plaintiff had lien for towing and storage charges, immediately returned to defendant bank and ordered that payment be stopped on such money order, and was refunded purchase price thereof, bank in action by plaintiff was liable for face amount of such order, even though money orders are not specifically provided for in the Uniform Commercial Code. Under UCC § 1-103, court would apply law-merchant principle concerning money orders and enforce meaning given by merchants to such orders when issued by bank that person who purchases money order is authorized to bind bank's credit to limit stated in order, and in present case money order issued by defendant stated that it was "not valid over $1,000." Mirabile v. Udoh, 92 Misc. 2d 168, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 101 (1977) (stating that phrase "not valid over $1,000" was concession by bank that purchaser of money order had authority to bind bank's credit to that amount).

Pre-Code rule that one who receives before maturity note signed by maker for accommodation of another is not affected by mere fact that it was made without consideration, continues under Code. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

A provision in commercial paper for costs and expenses if "legal proceedings be instituted," is to be interpreted according to the general contract law principles as there is nothing in the Code which displaces such principles. Bryant v. Bowles, 108 N.H. 315, 234 A.2d 534 (1967).

Whether a note is usurious is determined by general principles and statutes and not by the Code. Cooper v. Cherokee Village Dev. Co., 236 Ark. 37, 364 S.W.2d 158, 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 440 (1963); Pioneer Credit Corp. v. Radding, 149 Conn. 157, 176 A.2d 560 (1961).

12. —Sales.

In action for breach of warranty and fraud on part of sellers in sale of bull, buyer's remedies were not limited under UCC § 719(1)(b) by paragraph in sales agreement which provided for buyers' remedy in event bull died, since (1) there was no provision that paragraph provided exclusive remedy and (2) contract clause limiting liability would not be applied in fraud action. Lamb v. Bangart, 525 P.2d 602 (Utah 1974).

No particular provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code displaced statute [Massachusetts G.L. c. 259, § 6] making void certain sales of stock not owned by sellers. Colt v. Fradkin, 361 Mass. 447, 281 N.E.2d 213 (1972).

The Uniform Commercial Code does not change the rule that a vendor cannot rescind and reclaim the goods as against an attachment or execution on a debt contracted subsequent to the alleged voidable sale. In re Kravitz, 278 F.2d 820 (3d Cir. Pa. 1960).

13. —Secured transactions.

Although principles of estoppel and good faith underlie entire UCC, including provisions of Article 9, and lack of good faith on part of secured creditor may alter priorities which would otherwise be determined by Article 9 provisions, mere fact that secured party stood to gain from debtors' wrongful conduct did not in and of itself show lack of good faith and fact that secured party authorized debtors to purchase grain on credit from third party did not constitute evidence of fraudulent scheme or conspiracy. Central Soya Co. v. Bundrick, 137 Ga. App. 63, 222 S.E.2d 852 (1975).

Where defendant bank made loan to debtor under name "Lee Anderson," took security agreement on new automobile which was properly filed in county clerk's office and indexed under name of "Lee Anderson," but did not examine manufacturer's statement of origin, issued earlier to James Anderson, and took no steps to assure itself that car's title papers would be issued in name of Lee Anderson, where debtor applied for and received certificate of title in name of "James L. Anderson," and where plaintiff bank also made loan to debtor, as "James L. Anderson," taking and filing security agreement covering same automobile after checking with county clerk's office and determining that no prior liens on automobile had been filed against James L. Anderson, defendant bank's failure to file its lien in name shown on certificate of title was responsible for plaintiff bank's later determination, justified by lien records of county clerk, that there was no prior lien on record against automobile owned by James L. Anderson, and thus plaintiff bank's lien was entitled to priority over defendant bank's lien, although defendant bank was guilty of no intentional wrong and did all that was required by applicable provisions of UCC in taking and filing its security agreement. Central Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Community Bank & Trust Co., 528 P.2d 710 (1974).

Since Kentucky Commercial Code did not contain any provision defining the relative priorities of a creditor as against a reclaiming seller, the court would turn to relevant common law of Kentucky for the needed answer. In re Mel Golde Shoes, Inc., 403 F.2d 658 (6th Cir. Ky. 1968).

The principle that a reclamation seller's interest is subordinate to that of a lien creditor who extended credit subsequent to the sale is not displaced by the particular provisions of § 2-702. In re Kravitz, 278 F.2d 820 (3d Cir. Pa. 1960).

14. Statute of limitations.

Since there is no special statute of limitations set forth in Commercial Code, three-year statute of limitations in Code of Civil Procedure was applicable to action for alleged conversion of negotiable instrument. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank, 23 Cal. App. 3d 638 (5th Dist. 1972).

15. Torts.

Bank is not liable for dishonored check, under either common law negligence theory or common law negligent misrepresentation theory, where check is presented to bank customer by buyer of customer's business, during closing held on premises of bank, bank officer present at closing asks customer to step outside room for moment, asks customer what he thinks about check, customer responds that he knows nothing about check, banker states that check looks all right, and customer does not ask banker to have check verified nor does banker volunteer to do so. White v. Hancock Bank, 477 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1985).

Liability of port as bailee for common-law negligence, as codified by UCC § 7-204(1), for damage to bailor's goods caused by collapse of roof of port's warehouse was supplemented, under UCC § 1-103, by doctrine of strict vicarious liability in tort only to extent that port would be liable for acts of independent contractor over whom port had right of control. S.S. Kresge Co. v. Port of Longview, 18 Wash. App. 805, 573 P.2d 1336 (1977), review granted, 90 Wash. 2d 1004 (1978).

(1) Except as provided hereafter in this section, when a transaction bears a reasonable relation to this state and also to another state or nation the parties may agree that the law either of this state or of such other state or nation shall govern their rights and duties. Failing such agreement, this code applies to transactions bearing an appropriate relation to this state. Provided, however, the law of the State of Mississippi shall always govern the rights and duties of the parties in regard to disclaimers of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness, limitations of remedies for breaches of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness, or the necessity for privity of contract to maintain a civil action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness notwithstanding any agreement by the parties that the laws of some other state or nation shall govern the rights and duties of the parties.

(2) Where one of the following provisions of this code specifies the applicable law, that provision governs and a contrary agreement is effective only to the extent permitted by the law (including the conflict of laws rules) so specified:

Rights of creditors against sold goods (Section 75-2-402).

Applicability of the Article on Leases (Sections 75-2A-105 and 75-2A-106).

Applicability of the Article on Bank Deposits and Collections (Section 75-4-102).

Governing law in the Article on Funds Transfers (Section 75-4A-507).

Letters of credit (Section 75-5-116).

Applicability of the Article on Investment Securities (Section 75-8-110).

Law governing perfection, the effect of perfection or nonperfection, and the priority of security interests and agricultural liens (Sections 75-9-301 through 75-9-307).

Editor's Note — Laws, 1996, ch. 460, §§ 28, 29, provide as follows:

"SECTION 28. Applicability. The provisions of this act apply to a letter of credit that is issued on or after the effective date of this act. This act does not apply to a transaction, event, obligation, or duty arising out of or associated with a letter of credit that was issued before the effective date of this act.

"SECTION 29. Savings clause. A transaction arising out of or associated with a letter of credit that was issued before the effective date of this act and the rights, obligations, and interests flowing from that transaction are governed by any statute or other law amended or repealed by this act as if repeal or amendment had not occurred and may be terminated, completed, consummated, or enforced under that statute or other law."

Laws, 1996, ch. 468, § 72, provides as follows:

"SECTION 72. (a) This act does not affect an action or proceeding commenced before this act takes effect.

"(b) If a security interest in a security is perfected at the date this act takes effect, and the action by which the security interest was perfected would suffice to perfect a security interest under this act, no further action is required to continue perfection. If a security interest in a security is perfected at the date this act takes effect but the action by which the security interest was perfected would not suffice to perfect a security interest under this act, the security interest remains perfected for a period of four (4) months after the effective date and continues perfected thereafter if appropriate action to perfect under this act is taken within that period. If a security interest is perfected at the date this act takes effect and the security interest can be perfected by filing under this act, a financing statement signed by the secured party instead of the debtor may be filed within that period to continue perfection or thereafter to perfect."

Amendment Notes — The 2001 amendment, effective January 1, 2002, deleted the former last two paragraphs; added the present last paragraph; and substituted "Article" for "Chapter" throughout the section.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Choice of applicable law by agreement.
3. —Reasonable relation.
4. Choice of applicable law in absence of agreement.
5. —Appropriate relation.

1. In general.

In suit by hospital cashier who was injured while operating cash register manufactured by defendant manufacturer-seller after it had been delivered by buyer to hospital, court held, with respect to plaintiff's breach-of-implied-warranty claims, (1) that under Mississippi UCC

§ 1-105(1), which sets forth specific conflict-of-laws rule for warranty claims, Mississippi law governed the rights and duties of parties with regard to (a) disclaimers of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness, (b) limitation of remedies for breach of such warranties, and (c) necessity of privity of contract to maintain action for breach of warranty; (2) that rule of Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), as expressly stated therein, applied notwithstanding agreement by parties that laws of another state or of foreign nation governed parties' rights and duties; (3) that under Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), application of Mississippi substantive law on privity of contract, warranty disclaimers, and limitation of remedies in warranty action was authorized only if transaction that gave rise to warranty claim bore some reasonable and appropriate relation to Mississippi; (4) that facts of case showed that transactions that gave rise to plaintiff's warranty claim did not bear any relation to Mississippi and did not warrant application of Mississippi substantive law; (5) that under conflict-of-law "center-of-gravity" doctrine, Alabama had most significant relation to transactions in suit; (6) that since Alabama's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Alabama UCC § 2-725(1) and (2)) would be regarded as procedural, Mississippi's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1) and (2)) governed case; and (7) that under Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1) and (2), plaintiff's warranty claim was barred because tender of delivery of cash register that caused plaintiff's injuries had occurred more than six years before accrual of plaintiff's cause of action. Jackson v. National Semi-Conductor Data Checker/DTS, Inc., 660 F. Supp. 65 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

In action by buyer of computer system for damages for system's failure to function properly, court held (1) that parties' designation under UCC § 1-105(1) of Massachusetts law to govern any claims of breach of their sales contract was immaterial, since such claims were governed by limitation period contained in UCC § 2-725(1), which was adopted by both New York and Massachusetts; (2) that contract in suit was not one for performance of services, as alleged by the buyer, but was one for purchase of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); (3) that action for breach of contract was not timely commenced by buyer, since breach occurred in January, 1971, and buyer did not commence suit until August 14, 1975, which was more than four years after cause of action accrued; (4) that action for fraud in the inducement was timely commenced, since the applicable statute of limitations under New York law for such action is either six years from commission of the fraud, or two years from discovery; (5) that UCC § 2-725(2), which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance and provides that discovery of breach must await such performance, did not apply, since warranty under UCC § 2-725(2) must expressly refer to the future and implied warranty alleged by buyer, by its very nature, did not do so; and (6) that seller's attempts to repair computer system did not toll running of statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In action by buyer of computer system for damages for system's failure to function properly, court held (1) that parties' designation under UCC § 1-105(1) of Massachusetts law to govern their sales contract was immaterial, since buyer's breach-of-contract claims were governed by limitation period contained in UCC § 2-725(1), which had been adopted by both New York and Massachusetts; (2) that contract in suit was not one for performance of services, as alleged by buyer, but was one for purchase of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); (3) that action was not timely commenced by buyer, since breach had occurred in January, 1971 and buyer did not commence suit until August 14, 1975, which was more than four years after cause of action accrued; (4) that UCC § 2-725(2), which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance and provides that discovery of breach must await such performance, did not apply, since warranty under UCC § 2-725(2) must expressly refer to the future and implied warranty alleged by buyer, by its very nature, did not do so; and (5) that seller's attempts to repair computer system did not toll running of statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In debtor's action to enjoin creditor from enforcing two security agreements against collateral therefor, where evidence showed (1) that debtor and creditor had entered into such security agreements and that one of them had been perfected in several states, including New Jersey, (2) that second security agreement had in no way diminished validity of first security agreement, (3) that debtor's reason for seeking injunction against enforcement of such security agreements was creditor's alleged oral agreement to refrain from foreclosing on any debts due it in order to allow debtor to attain a healthy operating condition, (4) that creditor, after concluding that debtor could not attain a healthy operating condition, formally declared debtor to be in default under such security agreements and to owe creditor over $27 million in principal debts and (5) that creditor had then accelerated maturity of all of debtor's term obligations and demanded payment of all principal and interest on debtor's demand obligations, court held (1) that debtor's claim of alleged oral agreement to refrain from foreclosure was unsupported by the evidence, (2) that under (a) UCC § 1-105(1), dealing with power of parties to choose law applicable to their transactions, (b) UCC § 9-102(1), which intends that substantive law of place where collateral is located governs without regard to possible contracts in other jurisdictions, and (c) UCC § 9-103, which lays down numerous choice-of-law rules regarding creation, perfection, and priorities in multistate security-agreement transactions, law of New Jersey governed security agreements in suit, (3) that security interests created by security agreements in suit were valid, (4) that debtor had failed to show any reason for granting injunctive relief against their enforcement and (5) that on debtor's default, creditor under UCC § 9-501(1), as adopted in New Jersey, had right to reduce its claim to judgment and to foreclose on the collateral. Doyle v. Northrop Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1318 (D.N.J. 1978).

Under UCC § 1-105(1), the parties are free to choose the law that they wish to govern the transaction. However, the provisions of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code contain several conflict-of-law rules. Among these rules are transactions to which UCC §§ 9-102(1) and 9-103 apply. In these circumstances, regardless of UCC § 1-105(1), the law governing the transaction will be the mandatory provisions that are stated in UCC §§ 9-102(1) and 9-103. Doyle v. Northrop Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1318 (D.N.J. 1978).

As to sale made in Pennsylvania, Pennsylvania law is controlling as to whether there is a warranty. Duckworth v. Ford Motor Co., 211 F. Supp. 888 (E.D. Pa. 1962), rev'd on other grounds, 320 F.2d 130, 97 A.L.R.2d 806 (3d Cir. Pa. 1963).

The Uniform Commercial Code does not determine what law governs a claim for damages for tort. Folk v. York-Shipley, Inc., 239 A.2d 236 (Del. 1968).

UCC Sec 1-105 has been cited as illustrative of the modern flexible approach to the selection of the applicable law where the question was whether the law of the state where the tort was committed should govern. Casey v. Manson Constr. & Eng'g Co., 247 Or. 274, 428 P.2d 898 (1967).

2. Choice of applicable law by agreement.

The court enforced a forum-selection clause in a contract that called for the application of Louisiana law, notwithstanding the contention that the enforcement of the forum-selection clause would violate the public policy of Mississippi because it would violate the statute, as the Mississippi party to the contract assented to and agreed to sign a form contract printed by the Louisiana party to the contract and made no objections to the contract. Tel-Com Mgt., Inc. v. Waveland Resort Inns, Inc., 782 So. 2d 149 (Miss. 2001).

Under Uniform Commercial Code, parties' contractual choice of law will be upheld unless transaction lacks normal connection with state whose law was selected; thus, only when it is shown that contact did not occur in normal course of transaction, but was contrived to validate parties' choice of law, will relationship be held unreasonable. IHP Indus., Inc. v. PermAlert, Esp., 947 F. Supp. 257 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

It is established principle under UCC § 1-105, that parties to contract may consent, in absence of strong countervailing public policy of state, to law to be applied with respect to contract. Nederlandse Draadindustrie NDI B.V. v. Grand Pre-Stressed Corp., 466 F. Supp. 846 (E.D.N.Y.

1979), aff'd, 614 F.2d 1289 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Under UCC § 1-105(1), the parties are free to choose the law that they wish to govern the transaction. However, the provisions of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code contain several conflict-of-law rules. Among these rules are transactions to which UCC §§ 9-102(1) and 9-103 apply. In these circumstances, regardless of UCC § 1-105(1), the law governing the transaction will be the mandatory provisions that are stated in UCC §§ 9-102(1) and 9-103. Doyle v. Northrop Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1318 (D.N.J. 1978).

UCC § 1-105(1) affirmatively states the right of the parties to a multistate transaction, or a transaction involving foreign trade, to choose their own law. This right is subject to the firm rules stated in the six UCC sections referred to in UCC § 1-105(2) and is limited to jurisdictions to which the transaction bears a "reasonable relation." Under the test of what is a "reasonable relation," the law chosen is generally that of a jurisdiction wherein a sufficiently significant part of the making or performance of the contract occurred or will occur. However, an agreement as to choice of law will sometimes take effect as a shorthand expression of the intent of the parties concerning matters governed by their agreement, even though the transaction has no significant contact with the jurisdiction chosen. National Equip. Rental, Ltd. v. Taylor, 225 Kan. 58, 587 P.2d 870 (1978).

Where (1) Navajo Indian purchased pick-up truck from Arizona seller whose place of business was located outside boundaries of Navajo Reservation, (2) purchase price of truck was financed by installment-sale security agreement which provided that validity and construction of agreement would be governed by Arizona law and that secured party should have all rights and remedies for default provided by Arizona Uniform Commercial Code, and (3) seller, on buyer's default in making payments, effected self-help repossession of truck pursuant to UCC § 9-503 within boundaries of Navajo Reservation and without breach of the peace, under UCC § 1-105(1) parties by their contractual choice of Arizona law to govern transaction excluded any possibility that transaction would be affected by provisions of Navajo Tribal Code which prescribed civil penalty for repossessing personal property of Navajo Indians on land subject to jurisdiction of Navajo Tribe where such repossession was not effected with written consent of purchaser at time of repossession. Brown v. Babbitt Ford, Inc., 117 Ariz. 192, 571 P.2d 689, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 266 (Ct. App. 1977) (holding that since seller had right under Arizona law to do exactly what it did in effecting repossession, no liability therefor attached to seller).

Under Georgia UCC § 1-105(1), Georgia allows contracting parties to make their own choice of the applicable state law. Crompton-Richmond Co. v. Briggs, 560 F.2d 1195 (5th Cir. Ga. 1977).

Paragraph of contract for sale of computer core memories which provided that agreement would be construed under laws of California was valid under UCC § 1-105. Three-Seventy Leasing Corp. v. Ampex Corp., 528 F.2d 993 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976).

In action by corporation headquartered in Pennsylvania, as lessee of Swiss hotel, seeking to enjoin Pennsylvania bank from honoring lessor's draft under letter of credit issued pursuant to lease agreement, Pennsylvania Uniform Commercial Code was applicable law, although each of the three parties had, by agreement, assumed obligations to the others, and each agreement specified different controlling law (i.e. lease agreement provided it would be governed by law of Switzerland, letter of credit agreement specified it would be construed in accordance with Pennsylvania law, and letter of credit itself stated that its engagement was subject to Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits), since it was clear that law of Switzerland did not apply to question whether bank should be enjoined from honoring draft and since Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits did not purport to offer rules governing issuance of injunction against honor of draft. Intraworld Indus., Inc. v. Girard Trust Bank, 461 Pa. 343, 336 A.2d 316 (1975).

Member of Navaho Nation residing on Navaho Reservation in New Mexico who purchased pickup truck in New Mexico and finance company that financed purchase were free under UCC § 1-105 to choose whether law of state of New Mexico or that of Navaho Tribe was applicable to transaction. Jim v. CIT Fin. Servs. Corp., 87 N.M. 362, 533 P.2d 751 (1975).

Where contract between two Delaware corporations for design and construction of tanker contained provision that contract should be governed by laws of United States and State of New York, court would recognize this choice of law provision. Falcon Tankers, Inc. v. Litton Sys., 300 A.2d 231 (Del. Super. 1972).

While as between themselves the parties to a security interest transaction may lawfully agree as to the governing law, where the rights of third party creditors in the property of one of the parties are in question, the law of the state of the domicile or place of business of the contracting party in question is controlling. Industrial Packaging Prods. Co. v. Fort Pitt Packaging Int'l, Inc., 399 Pa. 643, 161 A.2d 19 (1960).

3. —Reasonable relation.

Contract between Illinois pipe seller and Missouri buyer, which was qualified to do business in Mississippi, bore reasonable relation to Mississippi and therefore Mississippi's conflict of law rule for warranty claims applied, requiring application of Mississippi's substantive law to implied warranty claims, notwithstanding any choice of law provision to the contrary; seller entered into contract to be performed in Mississippi, seller shipped its product to Mississippi, and seller sent field technician to aid in installation of pipes in Mississippi. IHP Indus., Inc. v. PermAlert, Esp., 947 F. Supp. 257 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

UCC § 1-105(1) expressly provides that "the parties may agree that the law of either this state or of such other state or nation shall govern their rights and duties." The one requirement, however, is that the law of the state which the parties have chosen must bear a "reasonable relation" to the transaction involved. Doyle v. Northrop Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1318 (D.N.J. 1978).

UCC § 1-105(1) requires a reasonable relation between the transaction and the state whose law is chosen to apply to it. U.S. Manganese Corp. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 576 F.2d 153 (8th Cir. Ark. 1978).

In action by English pipe manufacturer against American corporations for breach of contract for sale and distribution of plaintiff's pipes in United States, applicable law was that of England where contract contained explicit choice-of-law clause specifying that contract would be covered by English law; defendants' purchase in England of plaintiff's pipes provided "reasonable relation" between transaction and England, thus validating clause under UCC § 1-105(1). L. Orlik Ltd. v. Helme Prods. Inc., 427 F. Supp. 771 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

Reasonable relationship test was met where whiskey distributorship contracts between English exporters and New York importers provided that they were to be governed by English law and where contracts were executed in United Kingdom, exporters were incorporated in United Kingdom, performance by exporters occurred in United Kingdom, and payment was made and title to goods passed in United Kingdom. Fleischmann Distilling Corp. v. Distillers Co., 395 F. Supp. 221 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Corporate notes issued by Delaware corporation which stated that they would be governed by and construed in accordance with law of New York, but which bore no reasonable relationship to New York, bore reasonable relationship to Delaware, and its law controlled whether holder was owner of negotiable instrument. Where corporate note stated that it had been made and delivered in California and would be governed by laws of California, issuance of note to holders bore reasonable relationship to California and issue of negotiability of instrument would be determined by California law. Third corporate note which was issued and paid for in New York and which incorporated agreement making note subject to laws of state of New York bore reasonable relationship to New York so as to make its laws determinative of its negotiability. Baker v. Gotz, 387 F. Supp. 1381 (D. Del. 1975), aff'd, 523 F.2d 1050 (3d Cir. Del. 1975).

Choice of law provision in brokerage agreement was valid and Usury Law of New York would be applied, where brokerage arrangements between parties bore "reasonable relationship" to New York, and "significant enough portion" of performance occurred there. Mell v. Goodbody & Co., 10 Ill. App. 3d 809, 295 N.E.2d 97, 63 A.L.R.3d 335 (1st Dist. 1973).

In a diversity action concerning, among other issues, "transactions in goods" within the scope of the U.C.C.'s article on sales, which were purchased by plaintiff, a New York corporation, from defendant, an Ohio corporation, the court, pursuant to the conflict of law rules of New York, the forum state, held that since New York was "appropriately related" to the transaction herein involved and Ohio was "reasonably related" to the "transaction," Ohio law governed insofar as the parties had agreed to let the law of Ohio govern the validity, interpretation and performance of the contract. County Asphalt, Inc. v. Lewis Welding & Eng'g Corp., 444 F.2d 372 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1971), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 939, 92 S. Ct. 272, 30 L. Ed. 2d 252 (1971).

Subsection (1) of this section constitutes legislative recognition of the wisdom of permitting parties to give added certainty to a contract by expressly stipulating reasonably the governing law. Maxwell Shapiro Woolen Co. v. Amerotron Corp., 339 Mass. 252, 158 N.E.2d 875 (1959).

4. Choice of applicable law in absence of agreement.

Section 75-1-105 authorizes application of Mississippi substantive law on privity, disclaimers and limitations of remedies in warranty action only when transaction giving rise to warranty claim bears some reasonable and appropriate relationship to Mississippi, and in absence of such relation, application of Mississippi substantive warranty law violates constitutional guarantees. Price v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 651 F. Supp. 706 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

In debtor's action to enjoin creditor from enforcing two security agreements against collateral therefor, where evidence showed (1) that debtor and creditor had entered into such security agreements and that one of them had been perfected in several states, including New Jersey, (2) that second security agreement had in no way diminished validity of first security agreement, (3) that debtor's reason for seeking injunction against enforcement of such security agreements was creditor's alleged oral agreement to refrain from foreclosing on any debts due it in order to allow debtor to attain a healthy operating condition, (4) that creditor, after concluding that debtor could not attain a healthy operating condition, formally declared debtor to be in default under such security agreements and to owe creditor over $27 million in principal debt, and (5) that creditor had then accelerated maturity of all of debtor's term obligations and demanded payment of all principal and interest on debtor's demand obligations, court held (1) that debtor's claim of alleged oral agreement to refrain from foreclosure was unsupported by the evidence, (2) that under (a) UCC § 1-105(1), dealing with power of parties to choose law applicable to their transactions, (b) UCC § 9-102(1), which intends that substantive law of place where collateral is located governs without regard to possible contracts in other jurisdictions, and (c) UCC § 9-103, which lays down numerous choice-of-law rules regarding creation, perfection, and priorities in multistate security-agreement transactions, law of New Jersey governed security agreements in suit, (3) that security interests created by security agreements in suit were valid, (4) that debtor had failed to show any reason for granting injunctive relief against their enforcement, and (5) that on debtor's default, creditor under UCC § 9-501(1), as adopted in New Jersey, had right to reduce its claim to judgment and to foreclose on the collateral. Doyle v. Northrop Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1318 (D.N.J. 1978).

In action by Rhode Island bank to recover on 2 checks drawn on Massachusetts bank by Massachusetts corporation which had stopped payment, Massachusetts law applied, absent any evidence that parties agreed that a particular state's law would apply. Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

In determining what law governs, traditional contract conflict rules must give way to the requirements of the UCC, as interpreted, though by way of dictum by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court as adopting the "grouping of contacts" rule. Tucker v. Capitol Mach., Inc., 307 F. Supp. 291 (M.D. Pa. 1969).

Where contract for construction of a boat was made in New York, and payment and delivery were to be made in that state, the New York version of the UCC was applicable to the transaction. Silver v. Sloop Silver Cloud, 259 F. Supp. 187 (S.D.N.Y. 1966).

Diversity action based on breach of warranty brought against grenade manufacturer by army enlisted man; enlisted man was Georgia citizen, was injured in Georgia, brought suit in Georgia federal district court against defendants alleged to be doing business in Georgia pursuant to Georgia statute concerning jurisdiction over non-residents; held, Georgia law applies to warranty question according to conflicts rule stated in UCC § 1-105. Whitaker v. Harvell-Kilgore Corp., 418 F.2d 1010, 38 A.L.R.3d 1229 (5th Cir. Ga. 1969), reh'g denied, 424 F.2d 549, 38 A.L.R.3d 1244 (5th Cir. Ga. 1970).

Arkansas law governs the enforcement of a conditional sales contract executed in that state in connection with the purchase of an automobile there, where the contract provides that the seller's Arkansas office is the only designated place of payment; and the fact that at the time of the contract's execution the vendee was a resident of Tennessee and the contract was assigned to a Tennessee bank is immaterial in the absence of an agreement between the parties that Tennessee law would govern. Lyles v. Union Planters Nat'l Bank, 239 Ark. 738, 393 S.W.2d 867 (1965).

The fact that a buyer went to another state merely to take possession of a truck was only incidental to the transaction involving the vehicle's sale and purchase where both buyer and seller were residents of Wyoming and the truck was brought there by the purchaser, and Wyoming law applied to the transaction between the parties. Park County Implement Co. v. Craig, 397 P.2d 800 (Wyo. 1964).

Where contracts for the sublease of lands and the conditional sale of a roadside diner located in New Hampshire were entered into in Massachusetts by residents of that state, they are to be interpreted and enforced in accordance with Massachusetts law. Conte v. Styli, 26 Mass. App. Dec. 73 (1963).

The application of Pennsylvania law was warranted where Delaware residents purchased a boat in Delaware, agreeing to pay the remainder of the purchase price in monthly instalments, and gave what amounted to a purchase money security interest to a Pennsylvania company, the assignee of an agreement executed by the buyers and sellers, called a Pennsylvania equipment lease, and agreement was not filed anywhere and did not contain a provision as to the application of the law of any specific state, but called for performance in Pennsylvania, and after repossession in Delaware, the boat was brought to Pennsylvania and sold. Atlas Credit Corp. v. Dolbow, 193 Pa. Super. 649, 165 A.2d 704 (1960).

5. —Appropriate relation.

Where no appropriate relation to Mississippi exists in case, center of gravity doctrine applies, and § 75-1-105 requires application of significant contacts analysis, and 1978 amendment to § 75-1-105 did not abrogate this requirement. Price v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 651 F. Supp. 706 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

In wrongful death action involving claims based on breach of both express warranties and implied warranty of merchantability attaching to defendant's sale of radial tires to plaintiff and her deceased husband, court held (1) that under UCC § 1-105(1), since significant part of transaction, including sale, service, and use of the tires, had occurred in Florida, plaintiff's cause of action arose in Florida and was guaranteed by Florida Wrongful Death Act, (2) that plaintiffs' theory of recovery was governed by Florida's interpretation of Florida Uniform Commercial Code provisions governing actions for breach of express and implied warranties, and (3) that under Florida law, contributory negligence, assumption of the risk, and misuse were available defenses to action for breach of warranty. Westerman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 577 F.2d 873 (5th Cir. Fla. 1978).

In action by employees under third-party-beneficiary-of-warranty provisions in Alabama version of UCC § 2-318 for breach of warranties made in connection with sale of sandblasting hoods and respirators, evidence that such items were sold to Alabama company for resale in Alabama, that items were to be used in Alabama, and that warranties made in connection with items were to be performed in Alabama was sufficient to establish appropriate relationship necessary under UCC § 1-105(1) to apply Alabama law to controversy. Simmons v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 433 F. Supp. 747 (S.D. Ala. 1976), aff'd sub nom. Love v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 560 F.2d 1021 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977), aff'd, 560 F.2d 1022 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977).

In diversity action in which damages were sought for destruction of logging machine on theory of breach of implied warranties that machine was safe and proper for intended use and was of good and merchantable quality, where plaintiff was Pennsylvania corporation that purchased machine from Georgia distributor, delivery was made in Georgia, warranty repairs and servicing were performed in Georgia, and machine was used solely in Georgia by one of plaintiff's corporate divisions until it was destroyed by fire caused by defect in machine, (1) since entire transaction was centered in Georgia and did not bear sufficiently appropriate relation to Pennsylvania within meaning of Pennsylvania UCC § 1-105(1), Georgia law would be applied to case and not law of Pennsylvania; and (2) under Georgia law, in absence of privity, consumer could not recover from manufacturer for breach of implied warranty if consumer had not purchased goods directly from manufacturer. Armstrong Cork Co. v. Drott Mfg. Co., 433 F. Supp. 413 (E.D. Pa. 1977).

Under UCC § 1-105(1) providing that law of forum (i.e., Texas) should govern cause of action based on breach of contract and warranty if disputed transaction bore "appropriate relation to this state," Oklahoma, and not Texas, law would be applied where contracts for sale of railroad tank cars were executed in Oklahoma, cars were manufactured in Ohio, and delivered in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Texas, where at time of performance under contract neither party had its principal place of business in Texas, and where only other link between forum state and transactions was that portion of repairs to tank cars occurred in Texas. Continental Oil Co. v. General Am. Transp. Corp., 409 F. Supp. 288 (S.D. Tex. 1976).

In action by manufacturer to recover termination charges on valves which were either completed or partially completed pursuant to two purchase orders placed by buyer, under UCC § 1-105 transaction bore appropriate relation to forum state where buyer was forum state corporation located within forum. Crane Co. v. Roberts Supply Co., 196 Neb. 67, 241 N.W.2d 516 (1976).

In diversity action by Florida carpet dealer against Pennsylvania manufacturer for damages arising out of manufacturer's alleged breach of express and implied warranties in connection with sale of defective carpet, federal district court correctly applied Florida law; transaction had "appropriate relation" to Florida under UCC § 1-105(1) where, inter alia, manufacturer and dealer both knew that carpet was to be installed in Florida and where alleged injury occurred solely in Florida. Aldon Indus., Inc. v. Don Myers & Assocs., 517 F.2d 188 (5th Cir. Fla. 1975).

Where contract for sale of used automobile was formed in Florida and was to be performed in Ohio, where there was no specific agreement between parties respecting which state's law should govern transaction, but contract of sale noted, "Not tax, out of state," and where, furthermore, automobile and certificate of title were to be delivered in Ohio and automobile was to be driven, serviced and maintained in Ohio, transaction bore "an appropriate relation" to Ohio, and therefore Ohio law was applicable with respect to buyer's action against seller for rescission of contract. Lloyd v. Classic Motor Coaches, Inc., 74 Ohio Op. 2d 493, 388 F. Supp. 785 (N.D. Ohio 1974).

Fact that injury occurred in New Hampshire gives that state appropriate and significant relationship to transaction so that, in absence of express declaration of applicable choice of law, New Hampshire law was applicable. Stephan v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 110 N.H. 248, 266 A.2d 855 (1970).

Oklahoma Code Comment to UCC § 1-105 indicates that Code provision providing that UCC applies to transactions bearing an "appropriate relation" to Oklahoma is new, and probably changes law in Oklahoma. Williams v. Texas Kenworth Co., 307 F. Supp. 748 (W.D. Okla. 1969).

"Appropriate relation" means same thing as more common phrase "significant contacts"; where dump trucks in question were located in Colorado at time of transaction, where seller's place of business was in Colorado and sales agreement was reached there, and where only payment by mail and later delivery of trucks took place in Oregon, under Oregon decisions, Colorado law must be applied. GECC v. R.A. Heintz Constr. Co., 302 F. Supp. 958 (D. Or. 1969).

The concept of appropriate relationship should be applied even before the effective date of the Code as that rule is more flexible and better adapted to deal with modern problems. Baffin Land Corp. v. Monticello Motor Inn, Inc., 70 Wash. 2d 893, 425 P.2d 623 (1967).

In a case involving the automobile guest statute and a question of conflict of laws the Wisconsin court observed that this section recognizes an "appropriate relations" test for determining applicable law and that the official comments on the UCC refer to a transaction's "significant context" as being factors in the choice of applicable law. Wilcox v. Wilcox, 26 Wis. 2d 617, 133 N.W.2d 408 (1965).

In a case where the issue was as to whether plaintiff had been guilty of a breach of contract in making instalment payments on the purchase of an airplane so as to give the seller a right to repossess the plane, the question as to whether Massachusetts law applied to the transaction was to be determined under subsection (1) of § 1-105 of the instant chapter, and not under subsection (2) of said section and the reference therein to §§ 9-102 and 9-103 applicable to secured transactions because the issues in such case involved the duties of the parties under the primary obligation, and because the validity of perfection of the security interest was not involved. Skinner v. Tober Foreign Motors, Inc., 345 Mass. 429, 187 N.E.2d 669 (1963).

Where a written agreement bore an appropriate relation to Massachusetts so as to be governed by Massachusetts law, under the instant section, an oral modification of such contract would similarly be governed by Massachusetts law in the absence of proof as to where the oral modification was made and in the absence of proof that the oral modification did not bear an appropriate relation to Massachusetts. Skinner v. Tober Foreign Motors, Inc., 345 Mass. 429, 187 N.E.2d 669 (1963).

Where a contract for the purchase of an airplane was executed in Massachusetts between a Connecticut individual and a Massachusetts corporation having a principal place of business in Massachusetts, and the plane was delivered in Massachusetts, the transaction bore an appropriate relation to Massachusetts within the meaning of the instant section, and in the absence of an agreement of the parties that Connecticut law should apply, the law of Massachusetts would govern the transaction. Skinner v. Tober Foreign Motors, Inc., 345 Mass. 429, 187 N.E.2d 669 (1963).

§ 75-1-106. Remedies to be liberally administered.

(1) The remedies provided by this code shall be liberally administered to the end that the aggrieved party may be put in as good a position as if the other party had fully performed but neither consequential or special nor penal damages may be had except as specifically provided in this code or by other rule of law.

(2) Any right or obligation declared by this code is enforceable by action unless the provision declaring it specifies a different and limited effect.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Goal of cover remedy is to place buyer only in as good a position as he would have occupied had seller performed. Terex Corp. v. Ingalls Shipbuilding, Inc., 671 So. 2d 1316 (Miss. 1996).

The breach of a contract governed by the UCC, just as the breach of any other contract, in rare instances, may be attended by such conduct as to authorize the awarding an aggrieved party punitive damages in addition to damages for the contract's breach; however, facts in present case did not justify punitive damage award. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

In suit by buyer, who had purchased two irrevocable letters of credit from bank in favor of seller, to enjoin bank from paying any further drafts that seller might present against such letters and to recover damages for drafts that bank had wrongfully paid to seller, buyer did not establish right to injunctive relief by showing lack of adequate remedy at law. Although UCC Article 5 does not expressly provide measure of damages for wrongful honor of draft presented against letter of credit, UCC § 1-106(1) states that remedies provided by UCC shall be liberally administered to end that aggrieved party may be put in as good a position as if other party had fully performed. UCC § 1-106(1) is a general restatement of the common-law theory of contract damages. In present case, buyer's damages for bank's wrongful honoring of seller's prior drafts would be amount of money that would put buyer in as good a position as if bank had fully performed or, in other words, the total of the two debits made against buyer's account as a result of the two drafts that seller had presented to bank and bank had wrongfully paid. Interco, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 560 F.2d 480, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 472 (1st Cir. Mass. 1977) (construing Massachusetts law, but refusing to be definitive as to exact measure of buyer's damages).

Although UCC does not explicitly allow punitive damages for commercially unreasonable sale, if that right exists outside Code, it is retained or permitted through UCC § 1-106, and since UCC permits recovery of damages in action for conversion of repossessed property, punitive damages are recoverable in such action where secured party's acts are wanton, malicious, and intentional; thus, evidence that secured party permitted third person to borrow collateral belonging to debtor prior to default in order that third party could open competing business, that bank did not give proper notice of sale and on sale date did not even attempt sale, that secured party retained collateral after default for several months without crediting it against debtor's note, and that final sale was made to third person for price less than one fourth of stipulated value of property at time of sale, was sufficient to support award of punitive damages. Davidson v. First Bank & Trust Co., 609 P.2d 1259 (Okla. 1976).

In action by purchaser of new automobile against dealer seeking revocation of acceptance and damages, contract provision between dealer and purchaser to effect that there were no warranties express or implied made by either dealer or manufacturer, other than manufacturer's warranty against defective materials, although sufficient to exclude all warranties by dealer except implied warranty of merchantability, did not eliminate implied warranty of merchantability in manner required by UCC § 2-316, and evidence that automobile battery was defective as result of poor materials or poor workmanship was sufficient to establish breach of warranty of merchantability; however, there was no evidence that such nonconformity substantially impaired value of car to purchaser as required by UCC § 2-608 before he could revoke his acceptance of automobile and recover price paid; thus, purchaser's remedy was action for damages and, since purchaser failed to present evidence to support award based on proper measure of damages, i.e., value of automobile in its non-conforming condition at time and place of acceptance, purchaser was not entitled to recover damages. Bill McDavid Oldsmobile, Inc. v. Mulcahy, 533 S.W.2d 160 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

That, absent contractual or statutory exclusion, manufacturer of defective product might properly be held accountable for any damages to buyer which flowed naturally from manufacturer's breach of warranty comported fully with purposes of UCC to put aggrieved party in as good position as if other party had fully performed. Council Bros. v. Ray Burner Co., 473 F.2d 400 (5th Cir. Fla. 1973).

Under UCC buyer cannot claim punitive damages on account of alleged fraud pertaining to sale of chattels. Waters v. Trenckmann, 503 P.2d 1187 (Wyo. 1972).

Party aggrieved by breach of contract is entitled to be put in as good position as if other party had fully performed, and this includes right to recover for loss of prospective profits resulting from breach, which profits may be determined on basis of combination of past earnings records and expert testimony of president of aggrieved party. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am. v. Sonus Corp., 362 Mass. 246, 284 N.E.2d 880 (1972).

Attorneys' fees incurred in action to recover loss of profits and incidental damages upon buyer's repudiation of contract are not in nature of protective expenses contemplated by Code. Neri v. Retail Marine Corp., 30 N.Y.2d 393, 285 N.E.2d 311 (1972).

The purpose of this act, to be liberally construed, is specified as the stipulation, clarification and modernization of the law governing commercial transactions to permit the continued expansion of commercial practices through custom, usage and agreement of the parties; and the statute mandates a liberal administration to the end that an aggrieved party may be put in as good a position as if the other party had fully performed without consequential, special, or penal damages unless specifically provided for. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Sharp, 56 Misc. 2d 261 (1968).

The instant section merely restates the doctrine that damages are limited to just compensation for the loss sustained by reason of the breach. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action for breach of contract to construct mechanical loading platforms for use in distribution center building, letter sent to defendant after it became clear that defendant would not perform which cancelled contract "without charge" could not as matter of law amount to waiver or renunciation of claim arising out of breach under UCC §§ 1-107 and 2-720; under UCC § 1-205, meaning to be given phrase

"without charge" would require consideration of any course of dealing between parties and any applicable trade usage. NCR v. UNARCO Indus., Inc., 490 F.2d 285 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

Where there was no written waiver, there was consequently no basis for discharge of breached contracts under UCC § 1-107. Gorge Lumber Co. v. Brazier Lumber Co., 6 Wash. App. 327, 493 P.2d 782 (1972).

GENERAL DEFINITIONS AND PRINCIPLES OF INTERPRETATION.

- | | |
|-----------|--|
| 75-1-201. | General definitions. |
| 75-1-202. | Prima facie evidence by third party documents. |
| 75-1-203. | Obligation of good faith. |
| 75-1-204. | Time; reasonable time; "seasonably." |
| 75-1-205. | Course of dealing and usage of trade. |
| 75-1-206. | Statute of fraud for kinds of personal property not otherwise covered. |
| 75-1-207. | Performance or acceptance under reservation of rights. |
| 75-1-208. | Option to accelerate at will. |

§ 75-1-201. General definitions.

Subject to additional definitions contained in the subsequent chapters of this code which are applicable to specific chapters or parts thereof, and unless the context otherwise requires, in this code:

(1) "Action" in the sense of a judicial proceeding includes recoupment, counterclaim, set-off, suit in equity and any other proceedings in which rights are determined.

(2) "Aggrieved party" means a party entitled to resort to a remedy.

(3) "Agreement" means the bargain of the parties in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance as provided in this code (Sections 75-1-205 and 75-2-208). Whether an agreement has legal consequences is determined by the provisions of this code, if applicable; otherwise by the law of contracts (Section 75-1-103). (Compare "Contract.")

(4) "Bank" means any person engaged in the business of banking.

(5) "Bearer" means the person in possession of an instrument, document of title, or certificated security payable to bearer or indorsed in blank.

(6) "Bill of lading" means a document evidencing the receipt of goods for shipment issued by a person engaged in the business of transporting or forwarding goods, and includes an airbill. "Airbill" means a document serving for air transportation as a bill of lading does for marine or rail transportation, and includes an air consignment note or air waybill.

(7) "Branch" includes a separately incorporated foreign branch of a bank.

(8) "Burden of establishing" a fact means the burden of persuading the triers of fact that the existence of the fact is more probable than its nonexistence.

(10) "Conspicuous": A term or clause is conspicuous when it is so written that a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to have noticed it. A printed heading in capitals (as: NONNEGOTIABLE BILL OF LADING) is conspicuous. Language in the body of a form is "conspicuous" if it is in larger or other contrasting type or color. But in a telegram any stated term is "conspicuous." Whether a term or clause is "conspicuous" or not is for decision by the court.

(11) "Contract" means the total legal obligation which results from the parties' agreement as affected by this code and any other applicable rules of law. (Compare "Agreement.")

(12) "Creditor" includes a general creditor, a secured creditor, a lien creditor and any representative of creditors, including an assignee for the benefit of creditors, a trustee in bankruptcy, a receiver in equity and an executor or administrator of an insolvent debtor's or assignor's estate.

(13) "Defendant" includes a person in the position of defendant in a cross-action or counterclaim.

(14) "Delivery" with respect to instruments, documents of title, chattel paper, or certificated securities means voluntary transfer of possession.

(15) "Document of title" includes bill of lading, dock warrant, dock receipt, warehouse receipt or order for the delivery of goods, and also any other document which in the regular course of business or financing is treated as adequately evidencing that the person in possession of it is entitled to receive, hold and dispose of the document and the goods it covers. To be a document of title a document must purport to be issued by or addressed to a bailee and purport to cover goods in the bailee's possession which are either identified or are fungible portions of an identified mass.

(16) "Fault" means wrongful act, omission or breach.

(17) "Fungible" with respect to goods or securities means goods or securities of which any unit is, by nature or usage of trade, the equivalent of any other like unit. Goods which are not fungible shall be deemed fungible for the purposes of this code to the extent that under a particular agreement or document unlike units are treated as equivalents.

(18) "Genuine" means free of forgery or counterfeiting.

(19) "Good faith" means honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned.

(20) "Holder," with respect to a negotiable instrument, means the person in possession if the instrument is payable to bearer or, in the case of an instrument payable to an identified person, if the identified person is in possession. "Holder," with respect to a document of title, means the person in possession if the goods are deliverable to bearer or to the order of the person in possession.

(21) To "honor" is to pay or to accept and pay, or where a credit so engages to purchase or discount a draft complying with the terms of the credit.

(22) "Insolvency proceedings" includes any assignment for the benefit of creditors or other proceedings intended to liquidate or rehabilitate the estate of the person involved.

(23) A person is "insolvent" who either has ceased to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business or cannot pay his debts as they become due or is insolvent within the meaning of the federal bankruptcy law.

(24) "Money" means a medium of exchange authorized or adopted by a domestic or foreign government and includes a monetary unit of account established by an intergovernmental organization or by agreement between two (2) or more nations.

(25) A person has "notice" of a fact when

(a) He has actual knowledge of it; or

(b) He has received a notice or notification of it; or

(c) From all the facts and circumstances known to him at the time in question he has reason to know that it exists.

A person "knows" or has "knowledge" of a fact when he has actual knowledge of it. "Discover" or "learn" or a word or phrase of similar import refers to knowledge rather than to reason to know. The time and circumstances under which a notice or notification may cease to be effective are not determined by this code.

(26) A person "notifies" or "gives" a notice or notification to another by taking such steps as may be reasonably required to inform the other in ordinary course whether or not such other actually comes to know of it. A person "receives" a notice or notification when:

(a) It comes to his attention; or

(b) It is duly delivered at the place of business through which the contract was made or at any other place held out by him as the place for receipt of such communications.

(27) Notice, knowledge or a notice or notification received by an organization is effective for a particular transaction from the time when it is brought to the attention of the individual conducting that transaction, and in any event from the time when it would have been brought to his attention if the organization had exercised due diligence. An organization exercises due diligence if it maintains reasonable routines for communicating significant information to the person conducting the transaction and there is reasonable compliance with the routines. Due diligence does not require an individual acting for the organization to communicate information unless such communication is part of his regular duties or unless he has reason to know of the transaction and that the transaction would be materially affected by the information.

(28) "Organization" includes a corporation, government or governmental subdivision or agency, business trust, estate, trust, partnership or association, two (2) or more persons having a joint or common interest, or any other legal or commercial entity.

(29) "Party," as distinct from "third party," means a person who has engaged in a transaction or made an agreement within this code.

(30) "Person" includes an individual or an organization (see Section 75-1-102).

(31) "Presumption" or "presumed" means that the trier of fact must find the existence of the fact presumed unless and until evidence is introduced which would support a finding of its nonexistence.

(32) "Purchase" includes taking by sale, discount, negotiation, mortgage, pledge, lien, security interest, issue or reissue, gift or any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in property.

(33) "Purchaser" means a person who takes by purchase.

(34) "Remedy" means any remedial right to which an aggrieved party is entitled with or without resort to a tribunal.

(35) "Representative" includes an agent, an officer of a corporation or association, and a trustee, executor or administrator of an estate, or any other person empowered to act for another.

(36) "Rights" includes remedies.

(37) “Security interest” means an interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation.

(a) The term also includes any interest of a consignor and a buyer of accounts, chattel paper, a payment intangible, or a promissory note in a transaction that is subject to Article 9. The special property interest of a buyer of goods on identification of such goods to a contract for sale under Section 75-2-401 is not a “security interest,” but a buyer may also acquire “security interest,” by complying with Article 9. Except as otherwise provided in Section 75-2-505, the right of a seller or lessor of goods under Article 2 or 2A to retain or acquire possession of the goods is not a “security interest,” but a seller or lessor may also acquire a “security interest” by complying with Article 9. The retention or reservation of title by a seller of goods notwithstanding shipment or delivery to the buyer (Section 75-2-401) is limited in effect to a reservation of a security interest.

(b) Whether a transaction creates a lease or security interest is determined by the facts of each case; however, a transaction creates a security interest if the consideration the lessee is to pay the lessor for the right to possession and use of the goods is an obligation for the term of the lease not subject to termination by the lessee, and

(i) The original term of the lease is equal to or greater than the remaining economic life of the goods,

(ii) The lessee is bound to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods or is bound to become the owner of the goods,

(iii) The lessee has an option to renew the lease for the remaining economic life of the goods for no additional consideration or nominal additional consideration upon compliance with the lease agreement, or

(iv) The lessee has an option to become the owner of the goods for no additional consideration or nominal additional consideration upon compliance with the lease agreement.

(c) A transaction does not create a security interest merely because it provides that:

(i) The present value of the consideration the lessee is obligated to pay the lessor for the right to possession and use of the goods is substantially equal to or is greater than the fair market value of the goods at the time the lease is entered into,

(ii) The lessee assumes risk of loss of the goods, or agrees to pay taxes, insurance, filing, recording, or registration fees, or service or maintenance costs with respect to the goods,

(iii) The lessee has an option to renew the lease or to become the owner of the goods,

(iv) The lessee has an option to renew the lease for a fixed rent that is equal to or greater than the reasonably predictable fair market rent for the use of the goods for the term of the renewal at the time the option is to be performed, or

(v) The lessee has an option to become the owner of the goods for a fixed price that is equal to or greater than the reasonably predictable fair market value of the goods at the time the option is to be performed.

(d) For purposes of this subsection (37):

(i) Additional consideration is not nominal if

1. When the option to renew the lease is granted to the lessee the rent is stated to be the fair market rent for the use of the goods for the term of the renewal determined at the time the option is to be performed, or

2. When the option to become the owner of the goods is granted to the lessee the price is stated to be the fair market value of the goods determined at the time the option is to be performed. Additional consideration is nominal if it is less than the lessee's reasonably predictable cost of performing under the lease agreement if the option is not exercised;

(ii) "Reasonably predictable" and "remaining economic life of the goods" are to be determined with reference to the fact and circumstances at the time the transaction is entered into; and

(iii) "Present value" means the amount as of a date certain of one or more sums payable in the future, discounted to the date certain. The discount is determined by the interest rate specified by the parties if the rate is not manifestly unreasonable at the time the transaction is entered into; otherwise, the discount is determined by a commercially reasonable rate that takes into account the facts and circumstances of each case at the time the transaction was entered into.

(38) "Send" in connection with any writing or notice means to deposit in the mail or deliver for transmission by any other usual means of communication with postage or cost of transmission provided for and properly addressed and in the case of an instrument to an address specified thereon or otherwise agreed, or if there be none to any address reasonable under the circumstances. The receipt of any writing or notice within the time at which it would have arrived if properly sent has the effect of a proper sending.

(39) "Signed" includes any symbol executed or adopted by a party with present intention to authenticate a writing.

(40) "Surety" includes guarantor.

(41) "Telegram" includes a message transmitted by radio, teletype, cable, any mechanical method of transmission, or the like.

(42) "Term" means that portion of an agreement which relates to a particular matter.

(43) "Unauthorized" signature means one made without actual, implied or apparent authority and includes a forgery.

(44) "Value," except as otherwise provided with respect to negotiable instruments and bank collections (Sections 75-3-303, 75-4-208 and 75-4-209), a person gives "value" for rights if he acquires them:

(a) In return for a binding commitment to extend credit or for the extension of immediately available credit whether or not drawn upon and whether or not a charge-back is provided for in the event of difficulties in collection; or

(b) As security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a preexisting claim; or

(c) By accepting delivery pursuant to a preexisting contract for purchase; or

(d) Generally, in return for any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract.

(45) “Warehouse receipt” means a receipt issued by a person engaged in the business of storing goods for hire.

(46) “Written” or “writing” includes printing, typewriting, or any other intentional reduction to tangible form.

not "true lease," but "lease intended for security," where terms of agreement provided for repurchase of equipment at nominal sum, and where the debtor was required to acquire replacement equipment upon the condition of obsolescence or nonusefulness of original equipment. American Gen. Aircraft Corp. v. Washington County Economic Dev. Dist., 190 B.R. 275 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1995).

A lease agreement which provides the lessee, upon compliance with the terms of the lease, with an option to purchase the entire leased premises for a nominal consideration makes the lease one intended for security; in order to perfect a security interest in such an arrangement, appropriate financing statements must be filed. Peoples Bank & Trust Co. v. Applewhite (In re 20th Century Enters., Inc.), 152 B.R. 119 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1992).

Agreement between debtor and supplier of gasoline dispensing equipment and fuel was true consignment agreement, rather than security agreement, since supplier retained sole control over setting retail prices, debtor received commission rather than profit, and debtor was obligated to pay for gasoline when it was sold rather than when it was delivered. In re Sullivan, 103 B.R. 792 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1989).

Transaction involving truck was a true lease and not a sale in which "lease" was intended as security, where lease contained no language which would extend in any way possessory rights of lessee beyond stated term of lease. Equilease Corp. v. Loague, 25 B.R. 940 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1982).

Where depositor allegedly entered into oral agreement with bank concerning certain restrictions on his accounts and, pursuant to such agreement, sent letter to bank directing it not to pay any instruments drawn on his accounts unless instruments were on "printed checks of the bank", and where bank merely acknowledged "receipt" of customer's letter, such "receipt" could not be legally interpreted as general, unlimited lifetime "agreement," but at best was receipt of notice of stop payment and, in accord with UCC § 4-403(b) unless renewed in writing, was effective for only six months; stop payment order was not extended beyond statutory limitation by virtue of alleged "oral agreement" simultaneously made with written stop payment order. Dinerman v. National Bank of N. Am., 89 Misc. 2d 164 (1977).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, practical business people are not expected to govern their actions with reference to nice legal formalisms. Thus, when there is a basic agreement, however manifested and whether or not precise moment of such agreement can be determined, failure of parties to articulate agreement in precise legal language, with every difficulty and contingency considered and resolved, will not prevent formation of contract. However, if there is no basic agreement, the code will not imply one. And without an agreement, there can be no contract and without a contract, there can be no breach. This principle is explicitly recognized by UCC § 1-201(3) and (11), and UCC § 2-204(1) and (2). Kleinschmidt Div. of SCM Corp. v. Futuronics Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 972, 363 N.E.2d 701 (1977).

Plaintiffs who had deposited one million dollars in United States treasury bills with clerk of tax court in order to stay assessment and collection of tax deficiency were not entitled to damages or interest on bills after they remained interest-free in treasury for one year following their maturity on theory that implied security agreement existed between parties under UCC § 1-201(3) and (37) and that federal government thus had duty to reinvest bills after their maturity or to notify plaintiffs of such maturity. Even assuming existence of implied security agreement between parties, duty of holder under UCC § 9-207(1) to preserve collateral does not include duty to make collateral produce income, and no decrease in bills' value was even remotely possible. Cleveland Chair Co. v. United States, 557 F.2d 244 (Ct. Cl. 1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-204(1) and 1-201(3), buyer was not justified in terminating orders of submarine valves for alleged failure to meet delivery dates specified in contracts, notwithstanding alleged promise by seller to meet or improve upon delivery dates originally requested by buyer, where buyer requested certain delivery dates when it placed orders, seller clearly and unequivocally rejected buyer's requested dates and promised delivery at later dates, buyer merely appealed to seller to conform to requested dates and later appealed to seller to expedite one shipment, and buyer gave no notice to seller that seller breached contract by failing to meet required delivery dates. Crane Co. v. Roberts Supply Co., 196 Neb. 67, 241 N.W.2d 516 (1976).

Where letter sent by creditor to debtor set forth terms of loan agreement and letter was signed "agreed" by debtor, letter was "agreement" for repayment of the loan as the term "agreement" is defined in this section. In re Carmichael Enters., Inc., 334 F. Supp. 94 (N.D. Ga. 1971), aff'd, 460 F.2d 1405 (5th Cir. Ga. 1972).

Prior course of dealing between bank and decedent's son, including decedent's signing of hypothecation agreement from containing language to effect that securities in question would be collateral for present or future advances, provided ample evidence of agreement that stock which decedent had pledged to bank would serve as collateral for continuing advances by bank to decedent's son. Beyer's Estate v. Bank of Pa., 449 Pa. 24, 295 A.2d 280 (1972).

3. Burden of establishing.

In adopting UCC § 1-201(8), Florida legislature apparently intended to establish burden of ultimate persuasion by preponderance of evidence. Transammonia Export Corp. v. Conserv, Inc., 554 F.2d 719 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

A defendant does not meet the burden of establishing that a note signed by him in blank was completed improperly as to amount when other documents relevant to the same transaction show that the amount was authorized. Century Appliance Co. v. Groff, 56 Lanc. L. Rev. 67A (Pa) (loan note left blank so that interest charge could be computed; application for loan showed principal and borrower's coupon book which was accepted by borrower showed debt of amount of note).

4. Buyer in ordinary course of business.

Where automobile dealer financed his used car inventory through floor plan arrangement with finance company and, under side arrangement with second automobile dealer, satisfied his obligations to finance company by assigning used cars to second dealer, who would then issue its note to finance company in release of first dealer's note, but such cars were frequently left on first dealer's lot and sold by him on commission basis, and where first automobile dealer then entered into agreement with credit corporation to finance his new car inventory and executed security agreement in favor of credit corporation covering his inventory, including, inter alia, his used car inventory: (1) Credit corporation acquired perfected security interest in first dealer's used car inventory; (2) security interest was not waived by clause in security agreement providing that private sale of chattel to dealer in such types of chattels for amount originally paid by dealer for such chattel or at lesser fair price would be "commercially reasonable disposition thereof," nor was it waived by fact that credit corporation treated dealer's used car business as completely separate from his new car business which credit corporation was financing; (3) sales of used cars to second dealer, made at arm's length, without fraud and at fair price, were sales in ordinary course of business, and, hence, second dealer acquired title to such cars free of security interest. Weidinger Chevrolet, Inc. v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 501 F.2d 459 (8th Cir. Mo. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1033, 95 S. Ct. 516, 42 L. Ed. 2d 309 (1974).

Buyer who purchased three mobile homes from mobile home dealer was not buyer in "the ordinary course of business" and was not acting "in good faith and without knowledge" when he purchased mobile homes where buyer was fully aware that secured party had floor planned and financed homes and held security interest in each home and where buyer bought three homes from dealer because he had ascertained by his own investigation that he was buying them at unusually low price. Rex Fin. Corp. v. Marshall, 406 F. Supp. 567 (W.D. Ark. 1976).

Transaction on auction lot of third party in state in which neither buyer nor seller was doing business cannot be held to be transaction in "ordinary course of business." Rhode Island Hosp. Trust Co. v. Leo's Used Car Exch., Inc., 314 F. Supp. 254 (D. Mass. 1970).

One who qualifies as "buyer in ordinary course" must so qualify as to entire transaction; transaction cannot be "fractionalized" so as to make it part good and part bad. GECC v. R.A. Heintz Constr. Co., 302 F. Supp. 958 (D. Or. 1969).

In marital property-division proceeding, trial court had authority under UCC § 9-311, providing that debtor's rights in collateral may be voluntarily or involuntarily transferred by judicial process, to direct husband to transfer title to bonds, which had been pledged as security for loan, to wife. However, any title that was involuntarily transferred by judicial order would be subject, under UCC § 9-306(2), to security interest created by the pledge, since wife, as party to suit in which such transfer was made, was not buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC §§ 1-201(9) and 9-307(1) who could take collateral (bonds) free of pledgee's security interest therein. Goetz v. Goetz, 567 S.W.2d 892 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

A buyer takes free of a security interest in goods created by a seller who is in the business of selling goods of that kind, even if the interest is perfected, if the buyer merely knows that there is a security interest which covers the goods, but takes subject to the interest if he knows, in addition, that the sale is in violation of some term in the security agreement not waived by the words or conduct of the secured party (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-201(9); § 9-307(1)), although it is not incumbent upon the buyer to make a search for any possible security interests; and, a buyer who takes free of a perfected security interest takes free of an unperfected one as well. European-American Bank & Trust Co. v. Sheriff of the County of Nassau, 97 Misc. 2d 549 (1978).

In replevin action, where (1) plaintiff truck dealer "dropshipped" two of its trucks to another dealer for purpose of resale, (2) second dealer sold trucks to defendant cartage company but failed to give defendant full set of title papers, and (3) second dealer thereafter went out of business without paying plaintiff for trucks, plaintiff was not entitled to replevy trucks from defendant, who was buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9) and § 2-403(2), since it was plaintiff which placed trucks into stream of commerce, being well aware that second dealer intended to sell them, and waited two and a half months before attempting to collect payment from second dealer. Coffman Truck Sales v. Sackley Cartage Co., 58 Ill. App. 3d 68, 373 N.E.2d 1026, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1160 (2d Dist. 1978) (holding that under circumstances of case, defendant consumer should not bear loss, even though defendant was commercial corporation).

Under UCC § 9-307(1) and § 1-201(9), buyer of collateral in ordinary course of business took free of security interest therein where secured party did not know that debtor was in business of selling goods of that kind, even though security interest was perfected by proper execution and filing of financing statement. Antigo Co-op Credit Union v. Miller, 86 Wis. 2d 90, 271 N.W.2d 642, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 326 (1978) (holding that secured party could not obtain possession of collateral from buyer in replevin action).

Where savings and loan association entered into floor-plan agreement with mobile-home dealer under which association would pay manufacturer for each home delivered to dealer, retain invoice and certificate of origin of each delivered unit, and dealer would execute demand note and security interest in delivered unit to association which it would hold until it received payment from dealer; where buyers of mobile home from dealer subsequently executed installment contract reciting payment of specified down payment, delivery and acceptance of home, and granting by buyers of security interest therein; and where dealer assigned such contract to corporation that assigned it to defendant bank, and money paid for contract by defendant bank was transmitted to dealer who breached his obligation to savings and loan association and absconded, in action by subrogee of rights of savings and loan association against defendant bank to determine priority of security interests in such home,

(1) buyers of home were good-faith purchasers in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9) who took home under UCC § 9-307(1) free of subrogee's security interest therein; (2) defendant bank's security interest in home therefore had priority over subrogee's security interest; and (3) subrogee's security interest attached to proceeds of sale in hands of absconding dealer. Integrity Ins. Co. v. Marine Midland Bank-Western, 90 Misc. 2d 868 (1977).

In bank's suit to have security interest in used-car dealer's inventory declared to be first and prior security interest as against interests of three persons to whom such inventory was transferred, where evidence showed that bank's security interest was perfected by filing, covered future advances, and gave bank security interest in all present and after-acquired property and proceeds; that one transferee took trust receipts and titles to specific vehicles to secure loans made to dealer and entered into security agreement granting security interest in vehicles identified in trust receipts, which agreement was filed after filing of bank's security agreement; that second transferee took trust receipts as security for loans made to dealer, but did not enter into security agreement with dealer; and that third transferee's purchase for resale of over half of dealer's inventory may have been financed by first transferee, (1) under UCC § 9-110, description of collateral in bank's security agreement included all of dealer's inventory and proceeds therefrom; (2) under UCC § 9-205, alleged failure of bank to supervise dealer's inventory properly could not constitute basis for denying equitable relief to bank; (3) security interest of first transferee was junior to bank's security interest because it was perfected after perfection of bank's interest; (4) security interest of second transferee was junior to bank's security interest because it was never perfected; and (5) security interest of third transferee was also subject to bank's security interest because such transferee was bulk purchaser under UCC § 1-201(9) and not buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 9-307(1). Community Bank v. Jones, 278 Or. 647, 566 P.2d 470 (1977).

Where buyers purchased automobiles in good faith, without knowledge that sale was in violation of secured party's security interest in automobile dealer's inventory, from dealer who was in business of selling automobiles, for present value, i.e., cash or present exchange of other property, under UCC § 9-307(1) such buyers took free of secured party's security interest. Cunningham v. Camelot Motors, Inc., 138 N.J. Super. 489, 351 A.2d 402 (1975).

First buyer of wrecker truck entrusted truck to dealer under UCC § 2-403 so as to allow dealer to pass title to second buyer who was a "buyer in ordinary course of business" under UCC § 1-201 and who took possession of truck and extracted from dealer a transfer of registration and warranty of title, where first buyer left truck with dealer or dealer's apparent agent after paying for it without taking possession. Simson v. Moon, 137 Ga. App. 82, 222 S.E.2d 873 (1975), cause dismissed, 236 Ga. 786, 225 S.E.2d 314 (1976).

In action by bank against purchaser of sail boat for conversion of bank's security interest in boat, evidence was sufficient to support finding that seller was dealer in boats where loan application showed that seller used business name, seller's wife said he was in business of selling boats using that name, bank knew he had boats at another location, seller held himself out to general public as dealer at boat show and represented to witness that he was dealer, seller received proceeds in checks made out to business name, order form of boat manufacturer showed seller's business as salesman, and manufacturer honored sale of boat by performing warranty work for purchaser; thus, purchaser was buyer in ordinary course of business pursuant to UCC § 1-201(9) and was entitled to protection of UCC § 9-307(1), which defeated bank's claim. Kaw Valley State Bank v. Stanley, 514 S.W.2d 42, 73 A.L.R.3d 333 (App. 1974).

Buyer of tractors was not entitled to protection from manufacturer's security interest in equipment under UCC § 9-307, where buyer, who was experienced tractor dealer with knowledge of manufacturer's practice of "floor-planning" its equipment and who purchased equipment for considerably less than its value, made no investigation of prior security interest, acquiesced in falsification of retail order form, and misrepresented particulars of transaction, did not qualify as good faith buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC §§ 1-201(9) and 1-201(19). International Harvester Co. v. Glendenning, 505 S.W.2d 320, 87 A.L.R.3d 1 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Where mobile home buyers signed agreement to purchase mobile home from dealer, but dealer, unable to deliver specified mobile home because it was damaged by rain, delivered substitute mobile home, which was subject to security interest held by corporation that financed dealer's inventory, buyers were buyers of substituted mobile home in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9) and were protected under UCC § 9-307(1) against enforcement of corporation's security interest. Black v. Schenectady Dist. Corp., 31 Conn. Supp. 521, 324 A.2d 921 (1974).

Where automobile dealer, who was indebted to purchaser for $10,000, gave purchaser check for $5,000 in partial satisfaction of such debt, and purchaser indorsed check back to dealer in payment for automobile, when dealer executed and delivered check to purchaser, it did not alter fact that dealer was still indebted to purchaser for $10,000 and when purchaser indorsed check back to dealer in payment for automobile, transaction constituted transfer of automobile for or in partial satisfaction of money debt and purchaser was not, therefore, "buyer in ordinary course of business" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(9), whether or not he acted in good faith and whether or not at time he received check he intended to exchange it for automobile. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Malone, 502 S.W.2d 910 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Evidence supported finding that automobile leasing company was in business of selling used automobiles and that defendant, who had purchased 10 automobiles from leasing company over period of years, was buyer in ordinary course of business who was entitled to take automobile free of security interest created by leasing company. American Nat'l Bank &

Trust Co. v. Mar-K-Z Motors & Leasing Co., 11 Ill. App. 3d 1046, 298 N.E.2d 209 (1st Dist. 1973), aff'd, 57 Ill. 2d 29, 309 N.E.2d 567 (1974).

Where president and principal shareholder of automobile dealership purchases car from his own company, that sale will be considered to be sale "in ordinary course of business" if it is similar in all material respects to sale to any other retail customer; and where that is the case, lien held by bank which has security agreement covering dealership's inventory is released by sale, and purchase money security interest prevails. Crystal State Bank v. Columbia Heights State Bank, 295 Minn. 181, 203 N.W.2d 389 (1973).

Pawnbroker could not have been buyer in ordinary course of business as defined in UCC § 1-201(9) where pledgor who pledged property to it was not "person in business of selling goods of that kind." Kimbrell's Furn. Co. v. Friedman, 261 S.C. 172, 198 S.E.2d 803 (1973).

Judgment creditor who bid in at farm auction sale conducted with consent of secured party, debtors, and judgment creditor was not buyer in "ordinary course of business." South Omaha Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Tyson's, Inc., 189 Neb. 702, 204 N.W.2d 806 (1973).

Where vendee testified that at time he agreed to purchase automobile from vendor he knew vendor had obtained vehicle from another dealer, but had no knowledge vendor had not made payment therefor, and vendor testified that vendee did not know of agreed arrangement between vendor and other dealer that title papers to vehicle would accompany draft issued in payment therefor, vendee had no knowledge of arrangement between vendor and other dealer concerning payment for automobile such as would destroy his buyer in ordinary course of business status. Couch v. Cockroft, 490 S.W.2d 713 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

Failure of purchaser of automobile to obtain from seller certificate of title or other instrument showing compliance with Motor Vehicle Title and Registration laws does not in and of itself deny the purchaser status of buyer in ordinary course of business. Couch v. Cockroft, 490 S.W.2d 713 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

Where plaintiff sold two television sets and purchaser quickly resold them to defendant pawnshop and retail business, and any security interest in sets retained by plaintiff was never recorded and defendant had no knowledge of such interest, defendant, as transferee of goods in which plaintiff had security interest, could find no protection in UCC from plaintiff's claim for conversion under UCC § 9-307, notwithstanding that subsection (a) of that section provides that a buyer in ordinary course of business takes free of a security interest, since UCC § 1-201(9) in defining "buyer in ordinary course of business" specifically excludes pawnbrokers from that class, and moreover requires that the transferor must be "in the business of selling" consumer goods such as those in question, and the record failed to sustain the conclusion that the purchaser was in the business of selling television sets. White-Sellie's Jewelry Co. v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 477 S.W.2d 658 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

Where creditor received only a security interest for money debt, it was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business. International Harvester Credit Corp. v. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp., 125 Ga. App. 477, 188 S.E.2d 110 (1972).

One who buys boat from seller who is not in boat-selling business cannot qualify as "buyer in ordinary course of business". Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Goodman, 24 Cal. App. 3d 131 (2d Dist. 1972).

A buyer in the ordinary course of business who takes free of a known and perfected security interest under UCC § 9-307(1) may be defined as one who purchases merchandise in the ordinary course of affairs from a merchant in the business of vending items of that nature within UCC § 1-201(9). Newton-Waltham Bank & Trust Co. v. Bergen Motors, Inc., 68 Misc. 2d 228 (1971), aff'd, 75 Misc. 2d 103, 347 N.Y.S.2d 568 (1972).

Where automobile dealer sold two used cars to used car dealer but instructed him not to dispose of them until latter's check cleared the bank, which transaction constituted an entrustment, and second dealer violated instructions and conveyed the cars to a third dealer in a transaction wherein the value of the cars was applied in partial satisfaction of second dealer's pre-existing and running account, third dealer was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business within the code definition of the term which excludes a transaction by which payment is credited in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt and thus he did not take free of the instruction not to sell. Sherman v. Roger Kresge, Inc., 67 Misc. 2d 178 (1971), aff'd, 40 A.D.2d 766, 336 N.Y.S.2d 1015 (3d Dep't 1972).

Creditor to whom used car is sold to satisfy antecedent indebtedness is not "buyer in ordinary course of business." Osborn v. First Nat'l Bank, 472 P.2d 440 (Okla. 1970).

Auto wholesaler who purchases used autos from auto leasing or rental company does not qualify as "buyer in ordinary course of business." Hempstead Bank v. Andy's Car Rental Sys., 35 A.D.2d 35 (2d Dep't 1970).

One who bought used car from one in business of selling used cars was "buyer in ordinary course of business." Godfrey v. Gilsdorf, 86 Nev. 714, 476 P.2d 3 (1970).

Where person purchases automobile in good faith and without knowledge of any title defect or security interest of third party from used car dealer who has been entrusted with its possession, he is "buyer in the ordinary course of business," even though sale was made without transfer of certificate of title. Medico Leasing Co. v. Smith, 457 P.2d 548 (Okla. 1969), but see, Mitchell Coach Mfg. Co. v. Stephens, 19 F. Supp. 2d 1227 (N.D. Okla. 1998).

Sale of Studebaker automobile by automobile repair business was not in ordinary course of business within Code § 1-201(9) where seller was not Studebaker dealer, did not have car dealers' license, and had never before sold Studebaker cars. National Bank of Commerce v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 446 P.2d 277, 30 A.L.R.3d 1 (Okla. 1968).

In selling automobiles for another, auctioneer was simply acting as vendor's agent and was not buyer in ordinary course under Code § 1-201(9). Commercial Credit Corp. v. Joplin Auto. Auction Co., 430 S.W.2d 440 (Mo. Ct. App. 1968).

Where plaintiff bought truck from a merchant in the ordinary course of business, without knowledge of a security agreement entered into by the seller and later assigned to a bank, in repossessing the truck after the sale, bank was liable for conversion and damages. Makransky v. Long Island Reo Truck Co., 58 Misc. 2d 338 (1968).

The fact that title has not yet been transferred as between the dealer and the consumer does not prevent the latter from being regarded as a buyer in the ordinary course of business, insofar as the secured creditor of the dealer is concerned, where the transaction between the dealer and the consumer is ordinary or typical in the trade. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Sharp, 56 Misc. 2d 261 (1968).

An automobile buyer who makes a purchase on a printed form contract, knowingly signs a retail payment obligation, and trades in an old car must be deemed a buyer in the ordinary course of business without regard to the technicalities of when title is to pass pursuant to a collateral oral agreement. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Sharp, 56 Misc. 2d 261 (1968).

A licensed automobile wrecker and junk dealer who purchased a two-year-old station wagon from a thief for $900 by placing $300 down, and who sold the vehicle for $1200 that same day, although he never obtained a bill of sale or registration certificate, was liable to the two owners, since the car had not been entrusted to a merchant who dealt in used cars and the defendant had not demonstrated that he was a "buyer in ordinary course of business" or that he was a "good faith purchaser for value". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

One who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him was in violation of the security interest of another bought an automobile from a person in the business of selling automobiles was a "buyer in the ordinary course of business." National Shawmut Bank v. Jones, 108 N.H. 386, 236 A.2d 484 (1967).

One who purchases an automobile from a person who is not engaged in the business of selling automobiles cannot be a buyer in the ordinary course. First Nat'l Bank v. Stamper, 93 N.J. Super. 150, 225 A.2d 162 (1966).

Whether a buyer buys in the ordinary course of business is determined by the circumstances as of the date of the purchase and the buyer's subsequent conduct does not effect his status if in fact he acted in good faith and without knowledge of an outstanding interest. C. Jon Dev. Corp. v. Pand-Rorsche Corp., 69 Ill. App. 2d 469, 217 N.E.2d 416 (1st Dist. 1966).

One who conducts an automobile auction and trading business and purchases a substantially new car for resale many miles away from the place of business of the sellers and who has had experience with foreign security interests in automobiles, and makes such a purchase without any inquiry as to the possible existence of a security interest, cannot be regarded as a buyer in the ordinary course of business. Al Maroone Ford, Inc. v. Manheim Auto Auction, Inc., 205 Pa. Super. 154, 208 A.2d 290 (1965).

A discount house which purchased garden supplies from a dealer with knowledge of the provision in a trust receipt retained by the manufacturer that the goods were only to be resold to ultimate consumers was not a "buyer in ordinary course of business." O.M. Scott Credit Corp. v. Apex Inc., 97 R.I. 442, 198 A.2d 673 (1964).

One who purchased a used truck from a person in the business of selling used cars and trucks is a "buyer in the ordinary course of business" within the meaning of this section of the Pennsylvania Uniform Commercial Code, where the truck in question was entrusted to the possession of the seller by a third person for the purpose of selling it without any restrictions upon its sale that were evident to the buyer. Gricar v. Bairhalter, 11 Pa. D. & C.2d 723 (1958).

5. Conspicuous.

The disclaimer of warranty on the label of a can of highly volatile wall tile adhesive, written in small print, in lower case except for the word "WARRANTY", , and without a border, is ineffective and does not constitute an affirmative defense to an action based on a fire in plaintiffs' home allegedly caused by the adhesive since such disclaimer is not so "conspicuous" that "a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to have noticed it" (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316, subd [2]; § 1-201, subd [10]); capital letters, large print, contrasting type or color and black borders are proper methods of making a message "conspicuous" in a form or label. Victor v. Mammana, 101 Misc. 2d 954 (1979).

The decision on whether a disclaimer of warranty is sufficiently "conspicuous" (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316, subd [2]) is to be made by the court (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-201, subd [10]) and is not a question of fact for the jury at the time of trial and the court on a motion for summary judgment may, therefore, properly determine that the disclaimer of warranty on a can of highly volatile wall tile adhesive is an insufficient affirmative defense as a matter of law in an action based upon a fire in plaintiffs' home allegedly caused by the adhesive; in addition, even if the disclaimer is deemed "conspicuous", it is nonetheless an insufficient affirmative defense since a disclaimer is not effective against strangers to the contract who never saw it and defendant manufacturer failed to come forward with any evidence to rebut plaintiffs' assertions that they were unfamiliar with the can of adhesive left in their home and had never read the label. Victor v. Mammana, 101 Misc. 2d 954 (1979).

Where a seller of goods purports to exclude warranties by way of a writing, the disclaimer must be conspicuous (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316(2)), that is, the disclaimer must be so written that it calls the buyer's attention to the exclusion (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-201(10); § 2-316(3), par [a]); language in the body of a form is conspicuous if it is in larger or contrasting type or color; the issue of conspicuousness is to be determined by the court. Basic Adhesives, Inc. v. Robert Matzkin Co., 101 Misc. 2d 283 (1979), aff'd as modified.

Requirement of UCC § 2-316(2) and § 1-201(10) that language in warranty disclaimer be conspicuous was not satisfied where provisions of disclaimer were printed in type which was no larger than any other type on the entire page and actually was smaller than some of such other type. Nassau Suffolk White Trucks, Inc. v. Twin County Transit Mix Corp., 62 A.D.2d 982 (2d Dep't 1978).

Where (1) disclaimer of both express warranties and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, which was inserted in lease of electronic equipment, called lessee's attention, on face of lease immediately above lessee's signature, to fact that reverse side of lease contained additional terms, (2) reverse side of lease contained such disclaimer, which was printed in capital letters, and (3) remainder of text on reverse side of lease did not contain another sentence in capital letters, court held (1) that under express terms of UCC § 1-201(10), determination of whether disclaimer was conspicuous or not was to be made by trial court and not jury, (2) that disclaimer was conspicuous, within meaning of UCC § 1-201(10), because it written so that reasonable person against whom it was to operate should have noticed its provisions, and (3) that as a result, disclaimer complied with UCC § 2-316(2) and effectively prevented implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose from attaching to leased equipment. Todd Equip. Leasing Co. v. Milligan, 395 A.2d 818 (Me. 1978).

Disclaimer in seller's acknowledgment of buyer's purchase order was "conspicuous" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(10) where (1) it was on front side of acknowledgment, (2) was in large and readable type, (3) contained simple, direct, and easily understood language, (4) was typed in capital letters, (5) specifically mentioned "merchantability," and (6) person against whom disclaimer operated was a sophisticated business entity. Gilbert & Bennett Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 445 F. Supp. 537 (D. Mass. 1977).

Disclaimer of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness contained in seller's offer satisfied requirements of UCC § 2-316(2) and therefore was effective according to its terms, notwithstanding exclusionary provision was in standard print without indented margins, contrast print or other conspicuous aspect, where buyer was sophisticated business buyer experienced in commercial dealings, where buyer attached seller's offer, including the exclusionary provision, to its purchase order separately initialed by buyer, along with rider stating additional terms and changing or deleting certain provisions which had been unacceptable to buyer, which were actions of buyer in equal bargaining position with seller and raised inference that change in specific terms resulted from detailed review of "terms and conditions" of seller's offer, where buyer stated that he knew of warranty paragraphs, had read them, and was familiar with what they contained, and where provision in question was one of only 14 separate sections on single page, was only section dealing with warranty obligations, and was bold titled "WARRANTY OF MATERIAL AND WORKMANSHIP." Fargo Mach. & Tool Co. v. Kearney & Trecker Corp., 428 F. Supp. 364 (E.D. Mich. 1977).

Question whether provision purporting to disclaim implied warranty of merchantability was "conspicuous" within meaning of UCC § 2-316(2) and UCC § 1-201(10) is question of law for court, and if purported disclaimer is part of record on appeal, appellate court is in as good position as trial court to determine such question. Pearson v. Franklin Lab., Inc., 254 N.W.2d 133 (S.D. 1977).

In action for damages by cattle ranchers against manufacturer of cattle vaccine for breach of implied warranty of fitness of vaccine for purpose for which it was to be used, purported disclaimer of liability that appeared on last page of pamphlet accompanying each bottle of such vaccine in which defendant stated that since it had no control over conditions under which vaccine was used, it could not accept responsibility for results following its use was not "conspicuous" within meaning of UCC § 2-316(2) and § 1-201(10), where such disclaimer was printed in same size of type, and on same page, as other language in pamphlet that extolled vaccine's effectiveness. Such disclaimer was also ineffective under UCC § 2-316(3)(a) because of ambiguity, since it could be interpreted as disclaiming liability for (1) failure of vaccine to prevent disease it was intended to prevent, (2) illnesses caused by vaccine itself, or (3) both such possibilities. Pearson v. Franklin Lab., Inc., 254 N.W.2d 133 (S.D. 1977).

Provision on face of one page contract for sale of cabbage seed disclaiming warranties, express or implied, of merchantability and fitness for purpose and limiting seller's liability for breach of warranty or contract to purchase price of seeds, which was set off from other provisions on form and appeared in boldface print, was conspicuous within meaning of UCC § 1-201(10) and was effective to disclaim implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-316(2). Billings v. Joseph Harris Co., 27 N.C. App. 689, 220 S.E.2d 361 (1975), review allowed, 289 N.C. 296, 222 S.E.2d 695 (1976), aff'd, 290 N.C. 502, 226 S.E.2d 321 (1976).

Attempted disclaimer of implied warranties was inoperative under UCC § 2-316(2) where purported disclaimer was not "conspicuous," as defined in UCC § 1-201(10); conditional sales contract in question was seven legal-sized, double-spaced, typed pages in length and attempted disclaimer was buried in text of lengthy paragraph and was not "in larger or other contrasting type or color." Cooley v. Salopian Indus., Ltd., 383 F. Supp. 1114 (D.C.S.C. 1974).

In action by buyers of mobile home against seller to recover damages for breach of warranties, trial court erred in granting seller's motion for summary judgment, notwithstanding contract of sale contained disclaimer provision which stated "buyer is buying the trailer 'as is' and no representations or statements have been made by seller except as herein stated, so that no warranty, express or implied, arises apart from this writing," where purported disclaimer provision was written in same size and color type as balance of contract and was not otherwise distinguishable from balance of contract: (1) purported disclaimer was not "conspicuous" as defined in UCC § 1-201(10); (2) although subsection (3)(a) of UCC § 2-316, which specifies that words such as "as is" and "with all faults" can be used to exclude implied warranties, contains no requirement that such disclaimer be set forth in conspicuous manner, UCC contemplates that seller can disclaim implied warranties only if buyer reasonably understands this is being done and, in order for unsophisticated buyer to be forewarned, drafters of code intended disclaimer, however written, to be set forth in conspicuous manner, and, thus, "conspicuous" requirement of subsection (2) was applicable to "as is" disclaimer prescribed by subsection (3)(a) of UCC § 2-316. Osborne v. Genevie, 289 So. 2d 21 (Fla. App. 1974).

To be effective, clause limiting remedies pursuant to UCC § 2-719 must be "by a writing and conspicuous;" however, language in contract between buyer and seller of turbine generator was sufficiently conspicuous to bind buyer (and to exclude implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for purpose) where (1) limiting language was located on first page of contractual document titled "General Conditions"; (2) all of the type indicating such contractual conditions was large and readable (there was no fine print); (3) limiting language was simple, direct, and easily understood; (4) there was printed heading in capital letters which read: "Limitation of Liability"; (5) "person" against whom limiting language was to operate was prominent, sophisticated corporate entity. Avenell v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 41 Ohio App. 2d 150, 324 N.E.2d 583 (1974).

In action against car dealer and manufacturer brought by buyer when engine failed to perform properly, statement by manufacturer warranting car to be free from defects in material and workmanship under normal use and service constituted express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and exclusion of, inter alia, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose was ineffective where exclusions were not at any time called to buyer's attention and were not sufficiently conspicuous under UCC § 1-201(10); while implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 may both attend sale of automobile, where neither dealer nor manufacturer knew that buyer intended to use car for occasional drag racing prior to or at time of original sale, no issue was created as to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, either in connection with original car purchase or subsequent motor replacement. Jacobson v. Benson Motors, Inc., 216 N.W.2d 396 (Iowa 1974).

Summary judgment was granted to seller for entire amount due in payment for certain air conditioning/heating units which allegedly did not comply with express warranties contained in advertising brochure, where front page of sales contract contained boldface disclaimer "Of Warranties, Express or Implied, of Merchantability or Fitness" not discussed by said contract, and where same page contained large bold print warning buyer to read contract. Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Secord Bros., 73 Misc. 2d 1031 (1973), aff'd, 44 A.D.2d 906, 357 N.Y.S.2d 702 (4th Dep't 1974).

Printed portion of retail instalment contract purporting to exclude warranties specifically mentioned "merchantability," was of contrasting type and plainly visible, and was thus "conspicuous" within meaning of UCC, so that instrument contained valid exclusion of implied warranties of merchantability and of fitness. Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Secord Bros., 73 Misc. 2d 1031 (1973), aff'd, 44 A.D.2d 906, 357 N.Y.S.2d 702 (4th Dep't 1974).

Where both front and back page of lease agreement contained statement in bold capitalized lettering, "LESSOR MAKES NO EXPRESS OR IMPLIED WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS WITH RESPECT TO SUCH LEASED PROPERTY AND HEREBY DISCLAIMS THE SAME," which appeared not more than two inches above signature of officer who signed lease on behalf of defendant, disclaimer was sufficiently conspicuous, as defined in UCC § 1-201(10), and was properly worded so as to effectively exclude such warranties under UCC § 2-316. Quality Acceptance Corp. v. Million & Albers, Inc., 367 F. Supp. 771 (D. Wyo. 1973).

Seller of fabric was liable to buyer for breach of express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, notwithstanding seller's invoice contained statement "No refunds after 5 days. Check goods before cutting," where buyer's purchase order stated that fabric was to be used for swimwear and that all "colors, prints and bonding processes must meet swimwear specifications," where buyer's order was based on sample supplied by seller and, although another fabric was substituted for sample fabric, such modification was initiated by seller, where seller's salesman assured buyer that substituted fabric would meet swimwear specifications, where fabric supplied and subsequently manufactured into swimsuits was defective and failed to meet minimum performance standards for colorfastness, and where buyer notified seller within 12 to 20 days after receipt of fabric that it had received substantial number of complaints with respect to colorfastness: (1) seller's invoice and shipment of goods did not constitute both acceptance and counteroffer under UCC § 2-207, binding buyer to terms of invoice, since language used did not clearly condition acceptance on additional terms nor were such terms conspicuous as defined by UCC § 1-201(10); (2) express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose were established under UCC § 2-313 based on buyer's order form, representations of seller's salesman and samples supplied by seller; (3) there was no showing that warranties of merchantability and fitness had been excluded or modified under UCC § 2-316; and (4) buyer, having given reasonable notice to seller under UCC § 2-607, was entitled to damages for credits issued to customers (including profits lost and costs of production for returns and allowances) plus cost of production of unsaleable swimsuits under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, and to deduct such damages from purchase price under UCC § 2-717. Rite Fabrics, Inc. v. Stafford-Higgins Co., 366 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

Court could properly have found that purported exclusion or disclaimer of warranties which was located at extreme bottom of reverse or second page of contract, which page did not require nor contemplate signature by purchaser, was not sufficiently conspicuous to meet requirements of UCC; and, therefore, jury could have properly found that existence of implied warranty of fitness was not excluded by written contract executed by parties. Jerry Alderman Ford Sales, Inc. v. Bailey, 154 Ind. App. 657, 294 N.E.2d 617 (1973).

Line of print on face of stock certificate referring to transfer restrictions described on reverse side of certificate did not stand out and could not be considered conspicuous. Ling & Co. v. Trinity Sav. & Loan

Disclaimer of express or implied warranties was not conspicuous where paragraph containing disclaimer was on reverse side of the sales contract, the paragraph was the tenth paragraph of twelve paragraphs single spaced on the reverse side of the contract, it was almost at the bottom of the page, the print was only slightly larger than the other print on the page, had only a slight slant when compared to the other print on the page, and was of the same color, though perhaps a shade darker. Salov v. Don Allen Chevrolet Co., 55 Pa. D. & C.2d 180 (1971).

Where exclusionary language was not in "larger or other contrasting type or color" and was on back of instrument with nothing on front, except some words in ordinary type, to direct attention to it, exclusion was not "conspicuous" even though heading "warranty and agreement" was in large bold-face type. Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Utley, 439 S.W.2d 57 (Ky. 1969).

Exclusion of warranty of fitness, appearing in only print in paragraph form just before space for writing order, met Code "conspicuousness" requirement. Zicari v. Joseph Harris Co., 33 A.D.2d 17 (4th Dep't 1969), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 610 (1970).

An attempted disclaimer is ineffective as a matter of law and fails of its purpose when it is in the body of an instrument and in type of the same size and color as other provisions. Mack Trucks of Ark., Inc. v. Jet Asphalt & Rock Co., 246 Ark. 101, 437 S.W.2d 459 (1969), but see, Cavette v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 260 Ark. 874, 545 S.W.2d 612 (1977).

Whether a warranty is conspicuous is for decision by the court. Marion Power Shovel Co. v. Huntsman, 246 Ark. 152, 437 S.W.2d 784 (1969).

Where a contract was in the form of a purchase order which was on a pad of paper containing several copies separated by carbon paper, and the front of the order called attention in boldface printing to terms and conditions "stated in this order" but did not point out that there were terms and conditions set forth on the reverse side of the order, an exclusion of warranties on the reverse side of the order, although printed in an adequate size and type, were not conspicuous, within the meaning of § 2-316(2) read with § 1-201(10) so as to make the exclusion effective, because of the failure of the provisions on the front of the order to make adequate reference to the provisions on the back thereof. Hunt v. Perkins Mach. Co., 352 Mass. 535, 226 N.E.2d 228 (1967).

Section 2-316(2) relative to the exclusion of warranties by a conspicuous writing must be read with § 1-201(10) which sets forth the test of what is conspicuous as being whether "a reasonable person against whom...[the disclaimer] is to operate ought to have noticed it". Hunt v. Perkins Mach. Co., 352 Mass. 535, 226 N.E.2d 228 (1967).

Under § 2-316(2) when read with the last sentence of § 1-201(10), it is a question of law for the court whether a provision excluding warranties is conspicuous. Hunt v. Perkins Mach. Co., 352 Mass. 535, 226 N.E.2d 228 (1967).

Words in the same color and size as the other type of a contract are not conspicuous. S.F.C. Acceptance Corp. v. Ferree, 39 Pa. D. & C.2d 225 (1966).

A disclaimer of warranties set out in the body of a sales contract in type no larger than that in which the remainder of the instrument is printed is not "conspicuous" within the meaning of subsec (10) of this section and will not serve to exclude the implied warranty of merchantability of the equipment sold, particularly where the disclaimer failed to mention merchantability. S.F.C. Acceptance Corp. v. Ferree, 39 Pa. D. & C.2d 225 (1966).

The test of conspicuousness is whether attention can reasonably be expected to be called to it. Sarnecki v. Al Johns Pontiac, 56 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 293 (Pa. 1966).

A new car warranty appearing on page 3 of the "owner's booklet" which limited seller's liability to replacement of defective parts, and was expressly stated to be in lieu of all other warranties, was not so conspicuous as to exclude an implied warranty of merchantability or fitness, even though it was printed in type which contrasted slightly with that used in the remainder of the booklet. Sarnecki v. Al Johns Pontiac, 56 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 293 (Pa. 1966).

Where the provisions of a contract relied on as disclaiming implied warranties were in the same color and size of type as that used for other provisions of the contract, such provisions were not conspicuous and failed in its purpose as a disclaimer. Boeing Airplane Co. v. O'Malley, 329 F.2d 585 (8th Cir. Minn. 1964).

6. Contract.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, practical business people are not expected to govern their actions with reference to nice legal formalisms. Thus, when there is a basic agreement, however manifested and whether or not precise moment of such agreement can be determined, failure of parties to articulate agreement in precise legal language, with every difficulty and contingency considered and resolved, will not prevent formation of contract. However, if there is no basic agreement, the code will not imply one. And without an agreement, there can be no contract and without a contract, there can be no breach. This principle is explicitly recognized by UCC § 1-201(3) and (11), and UCC § 2-204(1) and (2). Kleinschmidt Div. of SCM Corp. v. Futuronic Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 972, 363 N.E.2d 701 (1977).

Under the objective theory of mutual assent followed in all jurisdictions, a contracting party is bound by the apparent intention he outwardly manifests to the other contracting party, and to the extent that his real, secret intention differs therefrom, it is entirely immaterial, and thus where the express language of a contract for the sale of a boat, failed to manifest an intention to make the sale conditioned on a survey of the boat, and the buyer failed to present evidence that the condition of a survey was implied under any section of the UCC or in the general law of contracts, an agreement between the parties was exclusive of a condition precedent for a survey of the boat. Cohn v. Fisher, 118 N.J. Super. 286, 287 A.2d 222 (L. Div. 1972).

"Contract" as defined in UCC § 1-201(11) results when parol evidence of parties is considered as to one remaining term in dispute. Kohlmeyer & Co. v. Bowen, 126 Ga. App. 700, 192 S.E.2d 400 (1972).

Even in the absence of a written agreement with respect to every term of a contract, great weight attaches to the course of dealing of the parties, and where it appears from the conduct of the parties that their mode of calculating price, although not accepted formally by signature of a written instrument, was adhered to by both parties during an extensive course of dealing, during which the purchaser received, accepted, and paid for over $800,000 worth of merchandise, this course of dealing must be held applicable and governing with respect to remaining merchandise which was received, accepted, but not paid for. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 236 F. Supp. 879 (W.D. Pa. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

In a case where the issue is as to whether a buyer was in default under a contract of sale so as to give the seller a right to repossess the article sold, such issue involved the duties of the parties under the primary obligation and neither the validity nor the perfection of a security interest, as defined in the instant section, is involved. Skinner v. Tober Foreign Motors, Inc., 345 Mass. 429, 187 N.E.2d 669 (1963).

7. Creditor.

Purpose of Florida UCC bulk-transfer statutes (Florida UCC §§ 6-101 et seq.) is to protect ordinary trade creditors who have right to expect that their bills will be paid from assets of an ongoing business. Thus, although definition of creditor in Florida UCC § 1-201(12) is broad, legislature did not intend to include within protection of bulk-transfer statutes stockholder who dissented to bulk sale of his corporation's assets. Furthermore, since under Florida UCC § 6-109, only creditors holding claims based on transactions occurring before a bulk transfer occurs are protected, stockholder who objected to bulk sale of his corporation's assets occupied status of stockholder, and not creditor, until such sale was closed and therefore could not be a bulk-transfer creditor.

Brown v. Superior Pontiac-GMC, Inc., 352 So. 2d 576 (Fla. App. 1977).

UCC § 1-201(12) defines creditor as including general as well as secured creditor and this definition is controlling as to Art 2 provision relating to consignment sales and rights of creditors. American Nat'l Bank v. First Nat'l Bank, 28 Colo. App. 486, 476 P.2d 304 (1970).

Creditor as defined by Code § 1-201(12) means "an unsecured creditor" thus referring to persons holding liquidated claims rather than to assertions of potential liability for breach of contract. Aluminum Shapes, Inc. v. K-A-Liquidating Co., 290 F. Supp. 356 (W.D. Pa. 1968).

Paragraph (12) of the instant section was referred to in a case involving the rights of creditors of a person to whom goods were delivered on sale or return under § 2-326, in connection with the proposition that it was conceded that if the creditors had rights under § 2-326, the assignee for the benefit of the person's creditors could establish the claims. GE Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co., 347 Mass. 631, 199 N.E.2d 326 (1964).

8. Delivery.

Where holder of promissory notes delivers such notes to bank with instructions that bank sell interests therein and issue certificates of participation in notes, there has been constructive delivery of such notes with bank acting as agent of original holder and making constructive delivery to purchasers to extent of their interests in notes. Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F. Supp. 1108 (S.D.N.Y. 1978), remanded, 607 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Since UCC § 1-201(14) defines "delivery" as "voluntary transfer of possession" but does not specify whether it may be actual or constructive, court adopted former New York Negotiable Instruments Law, which defined "delivery" as "transfer of possession, actual or constructive, from one person to another," in light of general case-law agreement that because Uniform Commercial Code did not prescribe any new definition of the term, former definition of "delivery" should be deemed to continue. Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F.

Seller neither tendered delivery nor delivered concrete forms to buyer pursuant to UCC §§ 1-201(14), 2-301 and 2-503(1), and seller breached express warranties under UCC § 2-313 that forms were free from incumbrance and that seller would warrant and defend against demands of all other persons, where third party claimed storage lien on forms, refused to allow buyer to take possession, and seller was unsuccessful in securing release from third party of his claimed lien. Goosic Constr. Co. v. City Nat'l Bank, 196 Neb. 86, 241 N.W.2d 521 (1976).

Trial court erred in finding that there was no valid transfer of corporate stock from share holder to his sons where testimony at trial supported conclusion that valid transfer took place and where plaintiffs did not challenge fact that father gave sons stock certificates, but only claimed that his action did not constitute delivery; fact that father had access to vault where certificates were kept after transfer did preclude effective transfer between parties to transaction. Brener v. Industrial Steel Container Co., 303 Minn. 275, 228 N.W.2d 115 (1975).

Evidence that mortgagor, after signing mortgage documents, transferred them to her ex-husband who placed them in escrow was sufficient evidence from which jury could find "delivery" of documents to escrow agent within Code § 1-201(14). Heller v. Levine, 7 Ariz. App. 231, 437 P.2d 983 (1968).

The established definition of the term "delivery" would prevail, since the Uniform Commercial Code did not prescribe any new definition for the term. Snyder v. Town Hill Motors, Inc., 193 Pa. Super. 578, 165 A.2d 293 (1960).

9. Document of title.

Drafts marked "non-negotiable", which were issued to elevator company as seller-bailee by buyer and which evidenced sale of beans, constituted "documents of title" under UCC § 1-201(15) where drafts were addressed to bailee and purported to cover goods in bailee's possession, which were fungible portion of identifiable mass, and where such drafts were treated as "documents of title" by parties themselves and were customarily so used in bean business in general. Midland Bean Co. v. Farmers State Bank, 37 Colo. App. 452, 552 P.2d 317 (1976).

A motor vehicle certificate of title or manufacturer's or importer's certificate of origin is not "document" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(15), and security interest in motor vehicle can be perfected only by complying with procedure set forth in Certificate of Title Act. Levin v. Nielsen, 37 Ohio App. 2d 29, 306 N.E.2d 173 (1973).

Warehouse receipt is document of title. Lofton v. Mooney, 452 S.W.2d 617 (Ky. 1970).

A forged delivery order is neither a "document of title" nor a warehouse receipt under the provisions of this section because it cannot be said to have been issued in the regular course of business or financing, nor can it be treated as adequately evidencing that the person in possession of it is entitled to receive, hold, and dispose of the document and the good it covers. David Crystal, Inc. v. Cunard S.S. Co., 223 F. Supp. 273 (S.D.N.Y. 1963), aff'd, 339 F.2d 295 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1964), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 976, 85 S. Ct. 1339, 14 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1965), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 976, 85 S. Ct. 1340, 14 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1965).

10. Fault.

In a diversity action by a surety to recover funds paid out by it under a bond, it was held that the defendant employer corporation was not liable under U.C.C. where an employee, entrusted with the responsibility of handling securities, caused unauthorized issuance of corporate stock and made several unauthorized entries on defendant's transfer books for his own independent purpose and not for the benefit of the defendant. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. v. Lisky, 323 F. Supp. 103 (N.D. Ill. 1971).

11. Fungible.

Sugar in 100 pound bags fell within definition of fungible, UCC § 1-201(17); therefore, when delivery was tendered to warehousemen on behalf of buyer under UCC § 2-503(4), buyer acquired insurable interest in goods, title to goods, and at same time buyer bore risk of loss with respect to those goods, not withstanding warehousemen's failure to segregate sugar. Henry Heide, Inc. v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 80 Misc. 2d 485 (1975).

12. Genuine.

Even though stock certificates were admittedly issued without authority and were not manually signed and did not bear a transfer agent's counter signature to the facsimile signatures, the certificates were neither forged nor counterfeit and thus were genuine within the definition of Code § 1-201(18). Dempsey-Tegeler & Co. v. Otis Oil & Gas Corp., 293 F. Supp. 1383 (D. Colo. 1968).

13. Good faith.

Duty of good faith and fair dealing between bank and borrower arose from Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), which applied to note that borrower had given to bank as part of deed of trust transaction. Merchants & Planters Bank v. Williamson, 691 So. 2d 398 (Miss. 1997).

In an action by the owner of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of equitable estoppel, which provides that an owner may be estopped from setting up his own title and the lack of title in the vendor as against a bona fide purchaser for value where the owner has clothed the vendor with possession and other indicia of title, is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner and had no authority to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it pursuant to an agreement with the true owner since the owner had consigned the painting for display only and conferred no other indicia of ownership; moreover, the owner's conduct did not in any way contribute to the deception practiced on the purchaser, and the purchaser was not a purchaser in good faith since he made no inquiry or investigation as to the true ownership of the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

In an action by the owners of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of statutory estoppel (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-403, subd [2], which provides that any entrust-ing of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in the ordinary course of business) is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner of the painting and had no authority from the owner to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it, since the art dealer was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business, defined as a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-201, subd [9]), inasmuch as the person from whom the dealer bought the painting was not an art dealer and never held himself out to be one and the dealer was not a person in good faith because he made no effort to verify whether the seller was the owner or authorized by the owner to sell the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

Where there was no reason for brokerage firm to suspect that delivery agent had any interest in securities delivered for principals' accounts, brokerage firm acted honestly in fact and therefore met good faith requirement of UCC § 1-201, subd 19, in crediting shares to principals' accounts rather than making payment to agent. Colonial Sec., Inc. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., 461 F. Supp. 1159 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Where guarantor of promissory note attempts to assert defense of fraud in inducement, rights of purchasers of limited interest in note cannot be defeated on ground that they breached duty to inquire and thus failed to act in good faith because circumstances of which holders had knowledge did not rise to level indicating that failure to inquire revealed deliberate desire to evade knowledge. Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F. Supp. 1108 (S.D.N.Y. 1978), remanded, 607 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

The Uniform Commercial Code, in defining "good faith" as "honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned" (UCC § 1-201(19), adopted a subjective standard for the good-faith test in UCC Article 3, which standard was generally applicable under the former Negotiable Instruments Law. Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F. Supp. 1108 (S.D.N.Y. 1978), remanded, 607 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

"Good faith" is defined by UCC § 1-201(19) as "honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned." Thus, a determination of whether a depository bank acted in good faith in waiving its normal five-day waiting period and extending immediate credit on a check deposited with it involves a subjective inquiry as to whether the bank, at the time it extended such credit, had knowledge of facts suggesting that the check would eventually be dishonored. In such a case, however, whether or not the bank's conduct conformed to a "standard of reasonableness" is immaterial, since the drafters of the Uniform Commercial Code expressly rejected the idea of including a concept of objective commercial reasonableness in the meaning of "good faith." Frantz v. First Nat'l Bank, 584 P.2d 1125 (Alaska 1978).

In action by debtor against bank and its loan officer for conversion, trespass, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution, where evidence showed that bank, which had made loan to debtor that was secured by automobile purchased with loan's proceeds, (1) had concluded, even before due date of first installment payment on loan, that debtor had falsified loan application, (2) that as a result, bank had declared loan to be in default, accelerated the debt obligation, and entered on debtor's property to repossess automobile, all without notice to debtor, (3) that bank's loan officer had asked debtor to come to officer's office to discuss the matter, (4) that when debtor arrived at bank, he was met by two FBI agents who interviewed him, and (5) that as a result of such interview, debtor was indicted, tried, and acquitted on federal charges of supplying false information to bank to obtain loan, it was error for trial court to grant summary judgment in favor of bank and loan officer on conversion and trespass claim, since issue of fact existed as to whether bank had acted in good faith under UCC § 1-208 and § 1-201(19) in deeming itself to be insecure with regard to debtor's obligation. Ginn v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 145 Ga. App. 175, 243 S.E.2d 528 (1978).

"Good faith" under UCC § 1-201(19) requires honesty of intent in conduct or transaction concerned, rather than diligence or nonnegligence. Wendling v. Cundall, 568 P.2d 888, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 13 (Wyo. 1977) (action to recover under contract for exchange of realty in which court stated that definition of good faith in UCC § 1-201(19) applies to most commercial transactions outside the Uniform Commercial Code that are conducted by persons who owe no fiduciary or other special obligation to each other).

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of supposedly used Ferrari sports car of limited availability that seller ordered for buyer from another dealer, where car on seller's receipt thereof proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself, and where parties were shown to have modified in writing prior oral agreement trial court, in finding absence of good faith by seller, did not err in employing unconscionability concept of UCC § 2-302 in interpreting contract, since court's statement as to unconscionability was only dictum. Baker v. Ratzlaff, 1 Kan. App. 2d 285, 564 P.2d 153 (1977).

Where contract for sale of popcorn provided that buyer was to pay for shipments of popcorn when delivered and seller repudiated contract after delivering two shipments to buyer's processing plant (for which shipments seller did not demand on-the-spot payment and buyer did not offer to pay at such place, since it customarily paid its obligations from its business office in another city), seller breached his obligation of good faith under UCC § 1-203 in performance of contract, as "good faith" is defined by UCC § 1-201(19), by failing to demand payment after delivery of each shipment and by hastily reselling undelivered part of popcorn crop to another buyer at nearly twice the contract price; trial court, in finding absence of good faith by seller, did not err in employing unconscionability concept of UCC § 2-302 in interpreting contract, since court's statement as to unconscionability was only dictum. Baker v. Ratzlaff, 1 Kan. App. 2d 285, 564 P.2d 153 (1977).

Bank that took drafts drawn under letter of credit did not take drafts in good faith as defined by UCC § 1-201(19) and without notice, as defined in UCC § 1-201(25), of defenses against them, and thus bank did not qualify as holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1), where, prior to time bank took draft, attorney gave bank notice by letter that letters of credit were issued pursuant to specific terms and conditions, conditions were explained, and letter warned that conditions had not and would not be fulfilled in foreseeable future; this constituted notice that any certification by beneficiary of letters of credit that payment was due thereunder might well be fraudulent; moreover, bank, having made substantial loans to beneficiary, could not have been unaware of beneficiary's severe financial difficulties. Shaffer v. Brooklyn Park Garden Apts., 311 Minn. 452, 250 N.W.2d 172 (1977).

Although buyer agreed to purchase from seller one "used" racing automobile, and such automobile was delivered with odometer registering 427 miles, seller refused to deliver automobile on grounds that such automobile was not, in fact, "used" but could be regarded by the parties as a new car; seller's conduct in claiming that since such car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered did not meet standards of good faith imposed by UCC § 1-201(19) and UCC § 2-103(1)(b); and when car was identified to contract buyer had right of replevin under UCC § 2-716(3), since he was unable to effect cover and there was no other way for him to protect himself against loss of this deposit on car. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

"Good faith" under UCC § 1-201(19) requires honesty of intent rather than absence of circumstances that would put ordinarily prudent holder of instrument on inquiry as to defenses to instrument. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

"Honesty-in-fact" definition of good faith in UCC § 1-201(19) is to be distinguished from definition of good faith in UCC § 2-103(1)(b), since latter definition includes not only honesty in fact but also observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in trade. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; and (3) where bank indorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank and gave owner check payable to corporation for remaining proceeds which owner deposited in corporation's account, bank in accepting buyer's cashier's checks and dealing with proceeds thereof did not violate good faith requirement of UCC § 3-302(1)(b)-and thus was holder in due course as to such checks and not liable to buyer for fraud and conversion in sale transaction-because (1) checks were valid cashier's checks that showed no sign of alteration or irregularity; (2) although transaction was restructured from what buyer had expected by bank's not becoming party to sale contract, buyer accepted such risk by turning over cashier's checks to owner-seller; (3) there was nothing inherently irregular or suspicious in bank's method of handling such checks and proceeds thereof; (4) bank was not aware of understanding between buyer and owner-seller and did not sign sale contract because bank had nothing to sell; and (5) both trial court's findings and record on appeal did not support buyer's contention that bank had failed to comply with definition of good faith in UCC § 1-201(19) by not being honest in fact in its conduct in sale transaction. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

Notwithstanding subsequent purchaser did not know that intermediate seller's title was voidable due to intermediate seller's obtaining truck on basis of check which was dishonored, subsequent purchaser did not have good title against original seller by status of "good faith purchaser for value" under UCC §§ 1-201(19), 1-201(44) and 2-403, where subsequent purchaser knew that intermediate seller was sophisticated about value of automotive equipment, subsequent purchaser had just received three dishonored checks from intermediate seller, subsequent purchaser had no reason to believe that intermediate seller would give equipment worth $13,500 or more to settle debt of $9,100, and subsequent purchaser let intermediate seller retain possession of truck. Graves Motors, Inc. v. Docar Sales, Inc., 414 F. Supp. 717 (E.D. La. 1976).

In action by bank against makers of several notes pledged by third party as collateral for loan, trial court properly found that bank had taken notes in good faith and without notice of makers' alleged defenses, pursuant to UCC § 3-302(1) and definitions contained in UCC § 1-201, subsecs. (19), (25) and (27), where officers and employees of bank who handled the transaction testified that they had no knowledge or information concerning any defenses, and described in detail the investigation which they made and information which they gathered to satisfy themselves that notes were valid and that parties with whom they dealt were reliable; where trial court's findings described in some detail the investigations and inquiries made by bank; where trial court found those investigations were reasonable under the circumstances, and that the bank lacked knowledge to know or believe that alleged defenses existed; and where facts found by trial court established that the bank had no connection with transactions for which notes were given. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Chess, 58 Cal. App. 3d 555 (2d Dist. 1976).

Buyer of tractors was not entitled to protection from manufacturer's security interest in equipment under UCC § 9-307, where buyer, who was experienced tractor dealer with knowledge of manufacturer's practice of "floor-planning" its equipment and who purchased equipment for considerably less than its value, made no investigation of prior security interest, acquiesced in falsification of retail order form, and misrepresented particulars of transaction, did not qualify as good faith buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC §§ 1-201(9) and 1-201(19). International Harvester Co. v. Glendenning, 505 S.W.2d 320, 87 A.L.R.3d 1 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Test for "good faith" was not diligence or negligence and it was immaterial that defendant may have had notice of such facts as would put a reasonable prudent person on inquiry, unless defendant had actual knowledge of facts and circumstances that amounted to bad faith. Richardson Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 812 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 3, 1974).

In action by corporation against its bank, in which corporation sought to recover proceeds of series of checks drawn on corporation's checking account, each in excess of $300 and each signed by corporation president alone in violation of agreement between corporation and bank that checks in amounts in excess of $300 should bear signature of two specified signatories, one-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 4-406(4) attached to each separate check bearing unauthorized signature, and new one-year period began to run with each subsequent check at moment it was made available to customer. Neo-Tech Sys. v. Provident Bank, 43 Ohio Misc. 31, 335 N.E.2d 395 (1974).

History of Code makes it rather clear that reasonable conduct standard was intentionally omitted from good faith requirement. Von Gohren v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 8 Wash. App. 245, 505 P.2d 467 (1973).

Where record contained no evidence tending to show that collecting bank in accepting forged check for deposit and permitting withdrawal of funds from fictitious account connived with forger or had any reason to believe that check was not genuine, there was no evidence tending to establish bank's lack of good faith, even if such conduct constituted failure to exercise ordinary care or even gross negligence. Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Hampton State Bank, 497 S.W.2d 80 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 10, 1973).

Nothing in Code definition of "good faith" suggests that, in addition to being honest, holder of negotiable instrument must exercise due care to be in good faith; and bank did act in good faith, and was holder in due course, although it failed to exercise ordinary care by violating its own rule of management when its teller cashed checks in question without managerial approval. Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

Definition of "good faith" as used in § 3-302(1) does not require that, in addition to being honest, holder must exercise due care. Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

When the UCC intends to apply a concept of "good faith" beyond its definition in UCC § 1-201, subd 19 as "honesty in fact", a broader definition is provided, e.g. UCC § 2-103, subd 1(b), which adds the words "observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in the trade" to the definition of "good faith" as between merchants. Advanced Alloys, Inc. v. Sergeant Steel Corp., 72 Misc. 2d 614 (1973), rev'd on other grounds, 79 Misc. 2d 149, 360 N.Y.S.2d 142 (1973).

The phrase "in good faith", as used in UCC § 4-404 refers to the general definition of good faith contained in UCC § 1-201, subd. 19. Advanced Alloys, Inc. v. Sergeant Steel Corp., 72 Misc. 2d 614 (1973), rev'd on other grounds, 79 Misc. 2d 149, 360 N.Y.S.2d 142 (1973).

Drawee bank's payment of 14-month-old check without making inquiry of drawer was in good faith under UCC § 1-201, subd 19 and thus permissible under UCC § 4-404 where good faith of drawee bank was not disputed. Advanced Alloys, Inc. v. Sergeant Steel Corp., 72 Misc. 2d 614 (1973), rev'd on other grounds, 79 Misc. 2d 149, 360 N.Y.S.2d 142 (1973).

Code definition of "good faith" established subjective standards, that is, whether particular purchaser believed he was in good faith, not whether anyone else would have held same belief. Balon v. Cadillac Auto. Co., 113 N.H. 108, 303 A.2d 194 (1973).

Requirements for establishing one's self as "good faith" buyer vary depending on commercial status of purchaser; and individual who purchases tractor for his own personal use is not held to same degree of sophistication in ascertaining existence of security interest on that tractor as is merchant who regularly deals in business of buying and selling tractors. Swift v. J.I. Case Co., 266 So. 2d 379 (Fla. App. 1972), cert. denied, 271 So. 2d 147 (Fla. 1972).

The burden resting on a party to prove that it took a check in good faith and without notice of any defense is met if the trier of fact is persuaded that the existence of these facts is more probable than their nonexistence under UCC § 1-201(8). Oklahoma Nat'l Bank v. Equitable Credit Fin. Co., 489 P.2d 1331 (Okla. 1971).

Bank's action in converting a transaction which clearly contemplated insurance, into an assignment which would have the effect of depriving the buyer of the waiver of subrogation provision, was not "good faith" as defined by UCC. Integrity Ins. Co. v. Davis, 116 N.J. Super. 417, 282 A.2d 452 (1971).

In a change from the NIL, the UCC test of good faith and notice is whether, from all the circumstances and facts known at the time, there was actual knowledge. Suit & Wells Equip. Co. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 263 Md. 133, 282 A.2d 109 (1971).

Owner of leased equipment did not show lack of "good faith", where owner failed, before trial, to specifically claim security interest rather than proceeding under general terms of lease; held, record does not indicate that owner thus had any intention to mislead attaching creditor. Stanley v. Fabricators, Inc., 459 P.2d 467 (Alaska 1969).

To succinct Code definition of "good faith" as "honesty in fact", drafters of Code in Official Comment added that phrase "means at least what is here stated"; held, in short, "good faith" as used in Code stands for "honesty" and perhaps more. Star Credit Corp. v. Molina, 59 Misc. 2d 290 (1969).

The mere fact a holder bank permitted its depositor to draw checks against uncollected funds represented by drafts at a time when its account was otherwise low was not itself evidence that the bank had failed to act in good faith. F & M Nat'l Bank v. Boardwalk Nat'l Bank, 101 N.J. Super. 528, 245 A.2d 35 (App. Div. 1968), certification denied, 52 N.J. 492, 246 A.2d 452 (1968).

A buyer who acquires property from one who has a voidable title must show that he was a "good faith purchaser for value", which requires "honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

The holder of a forged check who took it in good faith and for value without notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it cannot be held to act in bad faith in presenting it to the drawee bank for payment. Citizens Bank v. National Bank of Commerce, 334 F.2d 257 (10th Cir. Okla. 1964).

The "good faith" concept of the Negotiable Instruments Act is not substantially changed by the Uniform Commercial Code, and, although this section of the Code defines good faith as being honesty in fact, the failure of the holder to make inquiry of the payee or the maker of a note as to the satisfactory completion of the contract giving rise to the obligation will not constitute a lack of good faith in the absence of evidence that such failure is a divergence from common banking or commercial practice. First Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 661 (1956).

Under UCC § 1-201(20), "holder" means a person who is in possession of an instrument, such as a note. Life Ins. Co. v. Gar-Dal, Inc., 570 S.W.2d 378 (Tex. 1978) (holding that affidavit that plaintiff was "sole owner and holder" of note sued on was uncontroverted and properly supported judgment on note).

In order to show right to summary judgment in suit on promissory note in which the defendant has made a general denial, the plaintiff must establish that he is the present legal owner or holder of such note. Under UCC § 1-201(20), a "holder" is the person in possession of a note drawn, issued, or indorsed to him, or to his order or to bearer, or in blank. And under UCC § 3-301, even if the holder is not the owner of the note, he may still enforce payment thereof in his own name. Taylor v. Fred Clark Felt Co., 567 S.W.2d 863 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), ref. n.r.e (Oct. 25, 1978).

Under definition of holder in UCC § 1-201(20), use of term "holder" with reference to note means "holder in possession" of such note. Lazidis v. Goidl, 564 S.W.2d 453 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978) (holding that plaintiff was holder of note in suit, although plaintiff's agent had physical possession of note).

The assignee of a collateral interest in the proceeds of promissory notes, who is in possession of the notes, which, however, were never indorsed over to its order, is not a holder of the notes and, therefore, has no status to effect an acceleration of payment under a clause therein authorizing such an acceleration at the option of the holder of the notes. Lipkowitz & Plaut v. Affrunti, 95 Misc. 2d 849 (1978).

Where (1) debtor sold corporate stock on July 25, 1974 to defendants for $180,000, and defendants executed promissory notes under pledge agreement securing payment of stock's purchase price and delivered notes to escrowee, which also received the purchased stock, (2) debtor on March 19, 1975, with knowledge and consent of defendants and escrowee, assigned notes to creditor as collateral to secure payment of prior $60,000 debt, indorsed them to creditor's order, and delivered them to creditor which retained possession of them until August 24, 1976, a date following date on which debtor had fully debt due creditor, (3) on November 5, 1975, when defendants still owed debtor $135,000 on notes and notes were still in creditor's possession as collateral for payment of $28,000 balance then owed by debtor to creditor, debtor entered into agreement with plaintiff law firm and its client under which payments on prior debt owed by debtor to such client were extended, prospective lawsuit was settled, sums thus due to client were collateralized by assignment of debtor's interest in stock-payment notes, and notes themselves and pledge agreement securing them were also assigned to plaintiff on behalf of its client, subject to prior collateral assignment in favor of debtor's first creditor, (4) first creditor on August 24, 1976 acknowledged to escrowee that debtor had fully discharged debt due it, delivered stock-payment notes in suit to plaintiff law firm, but never indorsed notes to plaintiff's order, (5) on August 25, 1976, plaintiff, defendants (purchasers of debtor's stock), debtor, and escrowee executed written acknowledgements of debtor's assignment of notes and pledge agreement to plaintiff, and plaintiff requested that it be paid next installment on notes, which was due on October 1, 1976, (5) on April 5, 1976, IRS assessed delinquent income-tax liability against debtor and filed notice of tax lien on August 4, 1976, (6) on October 1, 1976, escrowee paid installment payment due on notes to IRS, and (7) on October 5, 1976, plaintiff after due notice declared default on notes (because of failure to receive October 1, 1976 installment payment thereon) and under acceleration clause in notes demanded full payment thereof, court held (1) that plaintiff, as nominee for its client, acquired valid collateral assignment of proceeds of notes to extent that proceeds were not required to satisfy first creditor's prior security interest therein, (2) that under UCC § 3-202(3), debtor's indorsement and negotiation of notes to first creditor merely created partial assignment of notes' proceeds and did not divest debtor of ultimate right to all proceeds not required to satisfy debt owed to first creditor, (3) that debtor's remaining interest in notes' proceeds was the interest that debtor had assigned plaintiff as collateral on November 5, 1975, and that such assignment, under UCC § 9-204(1), gave plaintiff valid security interest in debtor's residuary interest in notes' proceeds, (4) that plaintiff's security interest in notes' proceeds was not perfected until August 24, 1976, when it became perfected under UCC § 9-305 by possession of notes following first creditor's delivery thereof to plaintiff, (5) that IRS tax lien was not superior to plaintiff's perfected security interest in notes, since neither plaintiff nor its client had received any notice of such lien until September 20, 1976, and (6) that neither plaintiff nor its client could accelerate unpaid balance due on notes, since plaintiff, as nominee for its client, was merely holder of security interest in notes and was not "holder" of notes within meaning of UCC § 1-201(20) because of first creditor's failure to indorse them to plaintiff's order. Lipkowitz & Plaut v. Affrunti, 95 Misc. 2d 849, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 276 (1978) (holding that plaintiff was entitled to receive, on behalf of its client, all installment payments due on notes, commencing with installment due on October 1, 1976).

The Uniform Commercial Code, under UCC § 8-105(1), treats investment securities as negotiable instruments. The code also, in UCC § 1-201(20), defines a "holder" as one who is "in possession" of an investment security that is drawn, issued, or indorsed to him or to his order, or to bearer or in blank. Under the code's definition of a holder, therefore, possession is a significant factor, and the possessor of an instrument is a "holder" without regard to the legality or propriety of his possession. Stewart Becker, Ltd. v. Horowitz, 94 Misc. 2d 766 (1978).

In action on note, plaintiff, who had merely attached photocopy of note to complaint and incorporated it therein by reference, failed to establish for summary judgment purposes that she was holder of instrument. This requirement could have been established by showing, in accordance with definition of "holder" in UCC § 1-201(20), that plaintiff was in possession of instrument and that it had been issued or indorsed to her, or to her order, or to bearer or in blank. This requirement must be satisfied to protect maker from possibility of multiple judgments against her on same instrument through no fault of her own. Liles v. Myers, 38 N.C. App. 525, 248 S.E.2d 385 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-301, "ownership" of notes is not indispensable to "holdership." In re Cooke, 37 N.C. App. 575, 246 S.E.2d 801 (1978) (holding that original payees of two notes were holders under UCC § 1-201(20) because they still had possession of notes).

Where bank prior to death of husband drew check at husband's request that was chargeable to joint account of husband and wife, made payable to another bank, and intended to be used in business transaction, and where because of husband's death check was never used in such transaction but was returned to drawer bank, indorsed "not used for the purpose intended," and placed in account of wife and wife's brother because wife had closed out joint account of husband and wife, (1) fact that check was not made payable to deceased husband or otherwise indorsed to him prevented him from qualifying as holder thereof under UCC § 1-201(20); (2) payee bank also did not qualify as holder because it never obtained possession of such check; and (3) husband's estate acquired no right to funds represented by such check because such funds never lost their character as jointly held funds of husband and wife. In re Estate of Silvian, 347 So. 2d 632 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1977).

In suit to recover on two promissory notes in plaintiff's possession, plaintiff was not "holder" of notes within meaning of UCC § 1-201(20) where notes were not drawn, issued, or indorsed to her or to her order, or to bearer or in blank, and trial court erred in according plaintiff rights of holder under UCC § 3-301. Smathers v. Smathers, 34 N.C. App. 724, 239 S.E.2d 637 (1977).

Where creditor bank, on date loan was due and after being informed by debtor that debtor would default, set off credit balances in debtor's accounts against amount of debt; where remittance check of debtor's customer, pursuant to prior agreement between debtor and bank, was taken by bank from debtor's post-office lockbox and indorsed and deposited in debtor's account; where after depositing such check, bank then exercised alleged right of setoff against it; and where customer then issued stop-payment order on check and bank sued customer for payment thereof, alleging that it had acquired holder-in-due-course status as to such check and that its right to receive payment was not affected by debtor's alleged failure to discharge contractual obligations to customer, (1) bank acted prematurely in setting off deposits in debtor's accounts on date loan was due; (2) although such premature setoff arguably became operative on following day, it did not determine issue as to whether bank was entitled to payment on check; (3) bank was mere holder of check under UCC § 1-201(20) and not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1), since it did not give value for check under UCC § 3-303(b) and UCC § 4-208(1); (4) failure to give value stemmed from fact that bank, after customer issued stop-payment order on check, reversed its provisional credit of check to debtor's account and thus reinstated that part of debtor's obligation against which such credit was set off; and (5) since bank did not give value for check and thus was not holder in due course, it could not recover on check. Marine Midland Bank-New York v. Graybar Elec. Co., 41 N.Y.2d 703, 363 N.E.2d 1139, 97 A.L.R.3d 1104 (1977).

Possessor of promissory notes, which were made payable to payee with name different from name of possessor and which were unendorsed by named payee, was entitled to recover on notes pursuant to UCC § 3-301, even though possessor was not a holder under UCC § 1-201(20), where evidence at trial established that name of payee was former name of possessor. Lawson v. Finance Am. Private Brands, Inc., 537 S.W.2d 483 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Document purporting to transfer and assign promissory note which was never attached to note did not serve as effective endorsement of note under UCC § 3-202(2); since note was not issued or endorsed to assignee, assignee was not holder of note as defined in UCC § 1-201(20) and, not being holder, assignee could not possibly be holder in due course and assignment of note was therefore subject to defense of failure of consideration. Billas v. Dwyer, 140 Ga. App. 774, 232 S.E.2d 102 (1976).

Payee had no interest in cashier's check which had been typed and signed but which was cancelled when bank learned that drawer company was being placed in bankruptcy since, under UCC § 3-409, check itself did not operate as assignment of funds and payee, who never took possession of check, could not qualify as holder under UCC § 1-201(2). Rex Smith Propane, Inc. v. National Bank of Commerce, 372 F. Supp. 499 (N.D. Tex. 1974).

Assignee of promissory note qualified as "holder" under UCC § 1-201(20), but provision that judgment could be confessed "at any time hereafter" rendered note non-negotiable under UCC § 3-112(d) and outside scope of Code. Shatz v. Dunn, 18 Ill. App. 3d 390, 309 N.E.2d 702 (5th Dist. 1974).

Plaintiff-assignee of facsimile copy of promissory note was entitled to maintain action on note against defendant-maker, although plaintiff did not have possession of note, where bank that held note returned it to maker, though it had not been paid, and then subsequently prepared facsimile and assigned it to plaintiff. Plaintiff was not holder of note under UCC § 1-201(20), since he was never in possession of note, but he was transferee of note, though bank did not deliver it to him, and, as such, he could maintain action on note since maker had possession of note and note was in evidence. Scheid v. Shields, 269 Or. 236, 524 P.2d 1209 (1974).

Where person who presented check to collecting bank did not have authority to negotiate check, collecting bank could not become holder of check based upon unauthorized endorsement, and hence could not become holder in due course. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

Presenting bank could not become holder of cashier's check based upon unauthorized indorsement of one claiming to be agent of payee. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

As a holder within the meaning of UCC § 1-201 subd 20, an escrow agent established a prima facie case on maker's dishonored check under UCC 3-307, subd 2, and it was no defense either that escrow agent could not himself sue on the check, or that the principal had failed to perform under the escrow agreement, where maker had prevented principal's performance, and where escrow agent, who had acknowledged the receipt of cash, could sue on check as trustee for principal, or as promisee of third party beneficiary contract under CPLR § 1004. Helman v. Dixon, 71 Misc. 2d 1057 (1972).

An escrow agent to whom a house buyer delivered a check to secure principal's performance of repairs to new house under escrow agreement was a "holder" under UCC § 1-201 subd 20 and entitled to sue on subsequently dishonored check under CPLR 1004 not only as the promisee of a third party beneficiary contract, but also as trustee for principal. Helman v. Dixon, 71 Misc. 2d 1057 (1972).

Draft payable to two payees was deposited by one payee without endorsement of other; held, bank did not become "holder" of draft and thus could not become holder in due course. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Marine Nat'l Bank, 431 F.2d 341 (5th Cir. Fla. 1970).

UCC § 1-201(20) codifies pre-Code law that one in possession is "holder" of check. Investment Serv. Co. v. Martin Bros. Container & Timber Prods. Corp., 255 Or. 192, 465 P.2d 868 (1970).

Plaintiff was asked by subcontractor to discount note; note was made out payable to subcontractor; plaintiff endorsed note over to plaintiff's bank and executed promissory note to order of bank to secure bank against loss; plaintiff gave subcontractor part of amount of note; held, plaintiff was "holder" of note. O.P. Ganjo, Inc. v. Tri-Urban Realty Co., 108 N.J. Super. 517, 261 A.2d 722 (L. Div. 1969).

Where, at time of transaction allegedly constituting payment of note, there had been no indorsement of note to finance company which had already taken note as collateral, finance company was not "holder" of note since note had not been "drawn, issued or indorsed to him or to his order or to bearer or in blank"; therefore finance company could not be holder in due course of note. Northside Bldg. & Inv. Co. v. Finance Co. of Am., 119 Ga. App. 131, 166 S.E.2d 608 (1969).

Where a promissory note is made payable to one named therein as attorney for plaintiffs but not endorsed to them by the attorney, plaintiffs may enforce payment as holders of the note. Bennett v. Cannon, 114 Ga. App. 479, 151 S.E.2d 828 (1966).

One who obtained possession of a negotiable bill of lading is not a holder with power to divert it in the absence of an actual endorsement of the bill to it. Koreska v. United Cargo Corp., 23 A.D.2d 37 (1st Dep't 1965).

A bank which accepts a check for collection and, for that purpose, acts as its depositor's agent is also a holder of the check, and the fact that it does not own the item is immaterial insofar as its status as a holder is concerned. Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Fort Lee Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 89 N.J. Super. 43, 213 A.2d 315 (L. Div. 1965).

Indorsee who surrendered possession of dishonored checks to his indorser cannot be regarded as a "holder" of the instruments. Dluge v. Robinson, 204 Pa. Super. 404, 204 A.2d 279 (1964).

A bank accepting a check from the payee for a deposit, crediting the amount thereof to the payee's account and permitting him to withdraw the full amount thereof prior to notice of dishonor is a holder of a check, taking for value, and entitled to recover from the drawer thereon. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

The freedom from the defense of prior equities afforded to a holder in due course is an extraordinary protection, which, although having its origin in the law of merchant, is closely akin to similar protection given in other types of cases by courts of equity; and running through all the authorities dealing with holders in due course is a principle, not always stated, that he who seeks the protection given one in that position must have dealt fairly and honestly in acquiring the instrument in controversy and in regard to the rights of all prior parties, this is, the kind of good faith which the law demands, and the principle is closely analogous to the equitable doctrine of clean hands. Norman v. World Wide Distribs., Inc., 202 Pa. Super. 53, 195 A.2d 115 (1963).

15. To honor.

"To honor," as used in UCC § 1-201(21), is a term of art and means to pay. Wiley v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., 438 F.2d 513 (5th Cir. 1971), on remand, 462 F.2d 179 (5th Cir. 1972).

16. Insolvency proceedings.

A Chapter XI proceeding is, of course, designed and intended to rehabilitate the estate of the debtor and hence clearly comes within the UCC § 1-201(22) definition of "insolvency proceedings." Morrison Steel Co. v. Gurtman, 113 N.J. Super. 474, 274 A.2d 306 (App. Div. 1971).

17. Insolvent.

Where seller sought to reclaim goods it had shipped to buyer more than ten days before buyer filed petition for bankruptcy, mere fact that buyer gave seller two checks which were returned for insufficient funds (NSF) did not make buyer "insolvent" as defined by UCC § 1-201(23) nor did the two NSF checks constitute a misrepresentation of solvency "in writing" within three months of buyer's receipt of shipment, entitling seller to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-702(2), where there was evidence to show that seller did not rely upon NSF checks as representations of solvency, but relied primarily, if not entirely, upon representation that payment for shipment would be made out of special escrow account. In re Creative Bldgs., Inc., 498 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

Where the sellers of automobiles to a buyer who disposed of them through an auction company later found the checks received by them from the buyer in payment for the cars were dishonored because of the auction company's actions in stopping payments on checks previously delivered to the buyer and by withholding from him the proceeds derived from the sales of the sellers' cars, the sellers had a right of reclamation of their property had it remained in the buyer's hands either under § 2-702 or § 2-507 since the auction company's action had in effect rendered the car buyer insolvent, and although the cars had been resold at auction the sellers' rights survived the resale and, on equitable principles, attached to the proceeds of the sales in the hands of the auction company. Greater Louisville Auto Auction, Inc. v. Ogle Buick, Inc., 387 S.W.2d 17 (Ky. 1965).

18. Money.

Federal reserve notes are money and therefore not within the scope of Article 3 of the Uniform Commercial Code. Commonwealth v. Saville, 353 Mass. 458, 233 N.E.2d 9 (1968).

United States coins having a numismatic value in excess of the value expressed on their face and pledged as collateral to secure a bank loan are to be considered as "goods" within the meaning of the UCC, and not solely as a medium of exchange. In re Midas Coin Co., 264 F.

19. Notice.

In action for alleged breach by defendant airport board of one-year written agreement under which plaintiff was to serve as "fixed-base" operator of airport in return for use of airport terminal and other facilities, where (1) prior to end of agreement's one-year term, plaintiff attended board meeting at which board approved motion not to renew parties' agreement; and (2) during plaintiff's subsequent out-of-state absence, board sent (a) certified letter containing notice of agreement's termination to plaintiff's business address, and (b) hand-delivered letter containing similar notice that was not accepted by employee at plaintiff's business office, court held, on granting board's motion for summary judgment, (1) that agreement in suit could be described as either "lease of real property" or "contract for services"; (2) that although neither type of contract was explicitly covered by Uniform Commercial Code, code nevertheless constituted persuasive authority with respect to agreements like that in suit; (3) that as a result, provisions of UCC § 75-1-201(26) and (27), which deal with giving of notice, and provisions of UCC § 75-1-201(38), which define term "send," would be applied by analogy; (4) that under such provisions, fact that plaintiff was given copy of board meeting minutes that authorized termination of his contract was sufficient to terminate such agreement, even if court should adopt "actual-delivery-to-person" test urged by plaintiff; (5) that (a) mailing of registered letter to plaintiff's business address was proper "sending" under UCC § 75-1-201(38), (b) act of mailing was "giving of notice" under UCC § 75-1-201(26), and (c) deposit of notice for delivery was proper "receipt" of notification under UCC § 75-1-201(26)(a); (6) that hand delivery of second letter containing notice of plaintiff's termination, which was left on desk of plaintiff's employee over her protest, constituted proper "giving" and "receipt" of notice under UCC § 75-1-201(26) and also proper "sending" under UCC § 75-1-201(38); and (7) that because plaintiff's termination was authorized by board and notice of termination was properly given, board was not liable for breach of contract. Logan v. Corinth-Alcorn County Joint Airport Bd., 665 F. Supp. 506 (N.D. Miss. 1987).

Account debtor did not receive sufficient notice of assignment of account and therefore was authorized to continue making payments to assignor, under § 75-9-318(3), where account debtor, who was farmer, was shown letter describing assignment while out in rice field without his reading glasses, and he signed it with understanding that it was routine account verification, where account debtor was not given copy of letter, where letter neither explicitly stated that account had been assigned nor identified which of account debtor's corporate accounts with assignor was involved, and where, over course of one year or more, account debtor's corporations paid over $50,000 to assignor by checks made payable solely to assignor, and assignee never complained during this period about way payments were made. Warrington v. Dawson, 798 F.2d 1533 (5th Cir. 1986).

Under UCC § 9-504(3), requiring that notice of intended sale of collateral must be "sent" to debtor, and § 1-201(38), defining word "send," notification of the sale must be in writing. Such written notice will be sufficient under UCC § 9-504(3) if it is either personally delivered to the debtor or sent by mail to the debtor's address. In the latter case, whether or not the debtor receives it will not defeat its sufficiency. McKee v. Mississippi Bank & Trust Co., 366 So. 2d 234 (Miss. 1979).

Under UCC §§ 8-304 and 1-201(25), either actual or constructive notice will prevent one from obtaining the status of a bona fide purchaser. Oscar Gruss & Son v. First State Bank, 582 F.2d 424 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

Absent actual knowledge or reason to know (see UCC § 1-201(25)), a depository bank has no affirmative duty to inquire whether a defense exists against a check deposited with it. Frantz v. First Nat'l Bank, 584 P.2d 1125 (Alaska 1978).

UCC § 9-401(2) requires knowledge of contents of the improperly filed financing statement-not knowledge of contents of creditor's security agreement with debtor.

Furthermore, under UCC § 1-201(25)(a), such knowledge must be actual knowledge. In re County Green Ltd. Partnership, 438 F. Supp. 693 (W.D. Va. 1977).

In action by cashing bank to recover on check on which payment was subsequently stopped, where check was made payable to named payee as payment for cattle-feeding contract between payee and drawer, another bank holding perfected security interests in all of payee's property called in secured loan to payee and directed payee to turn in all proceeds on payee's accounts receivable and not to pay any of payee's general creditors, payee cashed check in suit at still another bank and paid off certain general creditors, drawer of check stopped payment thereon at request of secured bank, and handwritten part of check stated that it was drawn for $13,430 but check imprinter inadvertently entered "$3,430" on check, cashing bank was holder in due course and entitled to recover under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) because (1) it had no notice under UCC § 1-201(25) of secured bank's claim to check's proceeds from mere publication in biweekly reporting service 17 months previously of secured bank's filing of security agreements on payee's property, even though cashing bank did subscribe to such reporting service; (2) check was negotiable on its face, since it was indorsed by payee and payee's indorsement was not restrictive; (3) statement by payee's wife to officer of cashing bank that check was being cashed to prevent secured bank from "grabbing it" occurred after check was cashed and thus was irrelevant under UCC § 3-304(6) to issue of notice; and (4) cashing bank took check in good faith under UCC § 3-302(1)(b), despite $10,000 error on face of check, since cashing bank had contacted drawee bank to ascertain correct amount of check and to discover whether sufficient funds were on deposit to cover it. McCook County Nat'l Bank v. Compton, 558 F.2d 871 (8th Cir. S.D. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 905, 98 S. Ct. 302, 54 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1977).

Letter by stockholder's attorney several months after discovery that stock was missing from safe deposit box requesting that stockholder be advised in writing whether issuer showed any change in ownership status of stock did not constitute implied notice as defined under UCC § 1-201(25) that stock had been lost, apparently destroyed or wrongfully taken; thus, stockholder was precluded from taking any action against issuer under UCC § 8-405 when issue subsequently registered transfer of stock before receiving any such notice that stock had been lost, apparently destroyed or wrongfully taken. Exxon Corp. v. Raetzer, 533 S.W.2d 842 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 9, 1976).

Subsequent creditor had actual knowledge under UCC §§ 9-401(2) and 1-201(25) of contents of improperly filed financing statement, and thus financing was effective against subsequent creditor, where subsequent creditor was aware at time that debtor came to it for loan that, except for about $13,000, all of debtor's $160,000 net worth was pledged for two prior bank loans and that pledge covered debtor's equipment. Enark Indus., Inc. v. Bush, 86 Misc. 2d 985 (1976).

Allegations that company which was transferred in exchange for note had never made profit was not sufficient to establish that transfer of note was not for value within meaning of UCC § 3-302, since no facts were alleged relating to worth of company's assets, and allegations that holder of note required payment of substantial portion of note by transferor if maker defaulted, and further required that transferor's terms of transfer be concealed from maker, were insufficient to show that holder had "notice of fraud" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(25). Ritz v. Karstenson, 39 Ill. App. 3d 877, 350 N.E.2d 870 (2d Dist. 1976).

Notwithstanding that agents of owner of counterfeit United States treasury bill inquired at bank as to genuineness of bill, such inquiry did not constitute notice under UCC § 1-201 (25, 26, 27) that bill was not genuine and bank, which took bill as negotiable instrument in bearer form under UCC § 8-105 as bona fide purchaser, was entitled under UCC § 8-306 to rely on owner's warranties as principal that bill was genuine and was not materially altered, but recovery by bank under unjust enrichment was not permitted, since, under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-103, specific warranties of UCC displaced remedy of unjust enrichment in regard to negotiation of securities in this case. Brannon v. First Nat'l Bank, 137 Ga. App. 275, 223 S.E.2d 473 (1976).

In action by bank against makers of several notes pledged by third party as collateral for loan, trial court properly found that bank had taken notes in good faith and without notice of makers' alleged defenses, pursuant to UCC § 3-302(1) and definitions contained in UCC § 1-201, subsecs. (19), (25) and (27), where officers and employee of bank who handled the transaction testified that they had no knowledge or information concerning any defenses, and described in detail the investigation which they made and information which they gathered to satisfy themselves that notes were valid and that parties with whom they dealt were reliable; where trial court's findings described in some detail the investigations and inquiries made by bank; where trial court found those investigations were reasonable under the circumstances, and that the bank lacked knowledge to know or believe that alleged defenses existed; and where facts found by trial court established that the bank had no connection with transactions for which notes were given. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Chess, 58 Cal. App. 3d 555 (2d Dist. 1976).

Government's perfected tax lien had priority over bank's security interest in funds due taxpayer on construction project where bank failed to perfect its security interest by filing financing statement with secretary of state of taxpayer's home state, as well as with county in which taxpayer had its place of business, as required by UCC § 9-401(1) and where government did not have notice or knowledge of bank's interest in property. United States v. Ed Lusk Constr. Co., 504 F.2d 328 (10th Cir. Okla. 1974).

Where trier of fact conceivable could find that purchaser of securities had constructive knowledge of adverse claim as contemplated by § 1-201(25)(c), by reason of substantial discount at which bonds were being offered, negligence of broker in failing to discover adverse claim to bonds could well be found to be proximate cause of injury to purchaser, which relied on broker's verification in deciding to purchase bonds. Miriani v. Rodman & Renshaw, Inc., 358 F. Supp. 1011 (N.D. Ill. 1973).

"Reason to know" method of notice is objective one, and would not require that taker have actual knowledge of adverse claim in order to be charged with notice of such claim, but would premise notice upon reasonable commercial standards. Von Gohren v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 8 Wash. App. 245, 505 P.2d 467 (1973).

Secured creditor with security interest in crops grown during 1971 on two tracts of land, one owned by debtor and other leased by him, took priority over purported attaching creditor, claiming under writ of attachment issued November 11, 1971, with respect to proceeds from sale of crops, notwithstanding security agreement covering both tracts of land was not filed until November 12, 1971: (1) With respect to "leased" tract, where original financing statement covering crops growing or to be grown thereon was filed on July 5, 1966, security agreement covering 1971 crops on both "leased" and "owned" tracts was executed on February 18, 1971, and continuation statement was filed on June 28, 1971, security interest was perfected by filing of continuation statement prior to issuance of attaching creditor's purported attachment and levy thereunder, and took priority over any rights acquired by attaching creditor; (2) with respect to "owned" land, although secured party's security interest was not perfected by filing as of time of levy under attaching creditor's purported attachment, evidence showed that attaching creditor either had actual notice of secured party's interest in crops or could be charged with actual knowledge or duty to secure knowledge of secured party's interest, and, thus, secured party's unperfected security interest took priority over rights of attaching creditor. Gulf Oil Co. United States v. First Nat'l Bank, 503 S.W.2d 300 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

UCC § 6-104(3) [Repealed] does not render transfer ineffective unless transferee was shown to have had actual knowledge that list of creditors was incomplete; thus, in action by transferor's customs bond surety against transferee in bulk to recover customs duties assessed against transferor and paid by surety, transferee was not personally liable, although neither surety nor United States were on list of creditors and no notice was given them, where transferee did not have actual knowledge or surety's claim; fact that transferor was partly engaged in importing and transferee had constructive knowledge that some import duty might be due to United States did not render transfer ineffective. Federal Ins. Co. v. Pipeco Steel Corp., 125 N.J. Super. 563, 312 A.2d 510 (App. Div. 1973).

In an action brought to recover for injuries sustained by plaintiff as a result of the unauthorized registration of stock owned by her in the two defendant companies, plaintiff notified each corporate issuer within a reasonable time after she had noticed that her shares had been transferred as a result of forgery as provided by UCC 8-404, where it appeared that plaintiff was a 94-year-old woman who, while a guest in a home, had allowed one of her hosts, whom she trusted, to handle her affairs over a 2 year period, and in light of plaintiff's reliance on the perpetrator of the acts which deprived her of title to her securities and in light of her own age and decrepitude, plaintiff could not be charged with unreasonable action in not checking her accounts from time to time and consequently plaintiff did not have required statutory notice of host's dishonesty until she left his residence. Weller v. AT & T, 290 A.2d 842 (Del. 1972).

Notice that is received has been "sent", even though notice is not written. Crest Inv. Trust, Inc. v. Alatzas, 264 Md. 571, 287 A.2d 261 (1972).

Intendment of UCC notice definition would seem to be an attempt to prevent those dealing in the commercial world from obtaining various rights when, from a reasonable inquiry into the true facts, that person would have discovered a fact which prevented him from obtaining the rights which he was seeking. Winter & Hirsch, Inc. v. Passarelli, 122 Ill. App. 2d 372, 259 N.E.2d 312 (1st Dist. 1970).

Common carrier who transported trailer coach sold in Virginia to Oklahoma was deemed to have notice, under Code § 1-201(25), of Virginia perfected security interest in coach, effective in Oklahoma under Code § 9-103(1). National Trailer Convoy Co. v. Mount Vernon Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 420 P.2d 889 (Okla. 1966).

The filing of a lease contract, providing for a lien upon personal property of the lessee, in the real estate records, does not constitute notice of the existence of a lien as to personal property, for actual notice is required under the Uniform Commercial Code. In re King Furn. City, Inc., 240 F. Supp. 453 (E.D. Ark. 1965).

The insertion in a conditional sales contract of the purchaser's name as "Excel Department Stores" instead of its correct corporate title of "Excel Stores, Inc." is a minor error not seriously misleading and does not affect the validity of the instrument. In re Excel Stores, Inc., 341 F.2d 961 (2d Cir. Conn. 1965).

Evidence that seller's representatives had participated in attempts to make helicopter perform in an expected manner established that the seller had notice of breach of implied warranty of fitness. Boeing Airplane Co. v. O'Malley, 329 F.2d 585 (8th Cir. Minn. 1964).

Evidence indicating that a credit equipment company financed the sale of machinery from the manufacturer to the seller, as well as the sale from the seller to the ultimate purchaser, is not sufficient to demand a finding that the credit equipment company had such a relationship with the manufacturer or seller as to impute to it knowledge of any defects or nondeliveries, and the fact that the credit equipment company was merely the financing agency which happened to have financed both transactions was not inconsistent with good faith. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. Reeves, 110 Ga. App. 701, 139 S.E.2d 784 (1964).

20. Notifying or giving notice.

In action for alleged breach by defendant airport board of one-year written agreement under which plaintiff was to serve as "fixed-base" operator of airport in return for use of airport terminal and other facilities, where (1) prior to end of agreement's one-year term, plaintiff attended board meeting at which board approved motion not to renew parties' agreement; and (2) during plaintiff's subsequent out-of-state absence, board sent (a) certified letter containing notice of agreement's termination to plaintiff's business address, and (b) hand-delivered letter containing similar notice that was not accepted by employee at plaintiff's business office, court held, on granting board's motion for summary judgment, (1) that agreement in suit could be described as either "lease of real property" or "contract for services"; (2) that although neither type of contract was explicitly covered by Uniform Commercial Code, code nevertheless constituted persuasive authority with respect to agreements like that in suit; (3) that as a result, provisions of UCC § 75-1-201(26) and (27), which deal with giving of notice, and provisions of UCC § 75-1-201(38), which define term "send," would be applied by analogy; (4) that under such provisions, fact that plaintiff was given copy of board meeting minutes that authorized termination of his contract was sufficient to terminate such agreement, even if court should adopt "actual-delivery-to-person" test urged by plaintiff; (5) that (a) mailing of registered letter to plaintiff's business address was proper "sending" under UCC § 75-1-201(38), (b) act of mailing was "giving of notice" under UCC § 75-1-201(26), and (c) deposit of notice for delivery was proper "receipt" of notification under UCC § 75-1-201(26)(a); (6) that hand delivery of second letter containing notice of plaintiff's termination, which was left on desk of plaintiff's employee over her protest, constituted proper "giving" and "receipt" of notice under UCC § 75-1-201(26) and also proper "sending" under UCC § 75-1-201(38); and (7) that because plaintiff's termination was authorized by board and notice of termination was properly given, board was not liable for breach of contract. Logan v. Corinth-Alcorn County Joint Airport Bd., 665 F. Supp. 506 (N.D. Miss. 1987).

UCC §§ 2-201(2) and 1-201(26) do not prescribe any particular method for proving the receipt of a confirmatory writing. However, to prove such receipt, the sending merchant can rely on the presumption that a correctly addressed letter, which was properly mailed and was not returned undelivered to the sender, was delivered to the addressee. Perdue Farms, Inc. v.

Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Where (1) certified letters were mailed to debtor and each guarantor advising them that collateral had been repossessed, that they had right of redemption, and that if such right were not exercised by specified date, collateral would be sold, and (2) where such letters were followed by other letters informing debtor and guarantors that collateral had been advertised for sale, court held that such notice of sale of collateral was commercially reasonable and sufficient under UCC § 9-504(3) and UCC § 1-201(26). Cessna Fin. Corp. v. Meyer, 575 P.2d 1048 (Utah 1978).

Notwithstanding that agents of owner of counterfeit United States treasury bill inquired at bank as to genuineness of bill, such inquiry did not constitute notice under UCC § 1-201 (25, 26, 27) that bill was not genuine and bank, which took bill as negotiable instrument in bearer form under UCC § 8-105 as bona fide purchaser, was entitled under UCC § 8-306 to rely on owner's warranties as principal that bill was genuine and was not materially altered, but recovery by bank under unjust enrichment was not permitted, since, under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-103, specific warranties of UCC displaced remedy of unjust enrichment in regard to negotiation of securities in this case. Brannon v. First Nat'l Bank, 137 Ga. App. 275, 223 S.E.2d 473 (1976).

Notice of assignment which was sent by registered mail and received by account debtor at its shipping dock was sufficient, although it never reached account debtor's accounting department. Ertel v. Radio Corp. of Am., 261 Ind. 573, 307 N.E.2d 471 (1974), on remand, 171 Ind. App. 51, 354 N.E.2d 783 (1976).

Where debtor assigned accounts receivable to secure payment of note at maturity, and creditor notified account debtor by letter of assignment, account debtor was under duty to pay over to secured party amount due to debtor and was liable to secured party for payments subsequently made to debtor. Moab Nat'l Bank v. Keystone-Wallace Resources, 30 Utah 2d 330, 517 P.2d 1020 (1973).

Notification by certified mail is reasonable, and actual knowledge by the person notified is unnecessary. Hudspeth Motors, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 238 Ark. 410, 382 S.W.2d 191 (1964), but see, Stimson Tractor Co. v. Heflin, 257 Ark. 263, 516 S.W.2d 379 (1974).

21. Notice received by organization.

In action for alleged breach by defendant airport board of one-year written agreement under which plaintiff was to serve as "fixed-base" operator of airport in return for use of airport terminal and other facilities, where (1) prior to end of agreement's one-year term, plaintiff attended board meeting at which board approved motion not to renew parties' agreement; and (2) during plaintiff's subsequent out-of-state absence, board sent (a) certified letter containing notice of agreement's termination to plaintiff's business address, and (b) hand-delivered letter containing similar notice that was not accepted by employee at plaintiff's business office, court held, on granting board's motion for summary judgment, (1) that agreement in suit could be described as either "lease of real property" or "contract for services"; (2) that although neither type of contract was explicitly covered by Uniform Commercial Code, code nevertheless constituted persuasive authority with respect to agreements like that in suit; (3) that as a result, provisions of UCC § 75-1-201(26) and (27), which deal with giving of notice, and provisions of UCC § 75-1-201(38), which define term "send," would be applied by analogy; (4) that under such provisions, fact that plaintiff was given copy of board meeting minutes that authorized termination of his contract was sufficient to terminate such agreement, even if court should adopt "actual-delivery-to-person" test urged by plaintiff; (5) that (a) mailing of registered letter to plaintiff's business address was proper "sending" under UCC § 75-1-201(38), (b) act of mailing was "giving of notice" under UCC § 75-1-201(26), and (c) deposit of notice for delivery was proper "receipt" of notification under UCC § 75-1-201(26)(a); (6) that hand delivery of second letter containing notice of plaintiff's termination, which was left on desk of plaintiff's employee over her protest, constituted proper "giving" and "receipt" of notice under UCC § 75-1-201(26) and also proper "sending" under UCC § 75-1-201(38); and (7) that because plaintiff's termination was authorized by board and notice of termination was properly given, board was not liable for breach of contract. Logan v. Corinth-Alcorn County Joint Airport Bd., 665 F. Supp. 506 (N.D. Miss. 1987).

Lessee under contract with county airport board received sufficient written notice of termination of the contract under standards set by Miss Code § 75-1-201(26), (27), and (38), where lessee was provided with copy of minutes authorizing termination, where registered letter was mailed to lessee, and where second letter was hand delivered to lessee's offices, in spite of fact that receipt of both letters was refused. Logan v. Corinth-Alcorn County Joint Airport Bd., 665 F. Supp. 506 (N.D. Miss. 1987).

In action by corporate depositor against drawee bank charging bank with improper disposition of money on deposit in corporation's account in that bank credited corporate checks which were made payable to bank to private accounts of corporate employee and his associate, under UCC § 1-201 (27) evidence of information possessed by individual employees of bank relating to bank's dealings with employee and his associate, tending to show that person who had knowledge of these facts would have had grounds for suspicion about financial activities of these two men, should be limited to that which jury could reasonably find would have come to attention of employees responsible for handling of these checks if bank had "exercised due diligence." Transamerica Ins. Co. v. United States Nat'l Bank, 276 Or. 945, 558 P.2d 328 (1976).

Notwithstanding that agents of owner of counterfeit United States treasury bill inquired at bank as to genuineness of bill, such inquiry did not constitute notice under UCC § 1-201 (25, 26, 27) that bill was not genuine and bank, which took bill as negotiable instrument in bearer form under UCC § 8-105 as bona fide purchaser, was entitled under UCC § 8-306 to rely on owner's warranties as principal that bill was genuine and was not materially altered, but recovery by bank under unjust enrichment was not permitted, since, under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-103, specific warranties of UCC displaced remedy of unjust enrichment in regard to negotiation of securities in this case. Brannon v. First Nat'l Bank, 137 Ga. App. 275, 223 S.E.2d 473 (1976).

In action by bank against makers of several notes pledged by third party as collateral for loan, trial court properly found that bank had taken notes in good faith and without notice of makers' alleged defenses, pursuant to UCC § 3-302(1) and definitions contained in UCC § 1-201, subsecs. (19), (25) and (27), where officers and employees of bank who handled the transaction testified that they had no knowledge or information concerning any defenses, and described in detail the investigation which they made and information which they gathered to satisfy themselves that notes were valid and that parties with whom they dealt were reliable; where trial court's findings described in some detail the investigations and inquiries made by bank; where trial court found those investigations were reasonable under the circumstances, and that the bank lacked knowledge to know or believe that alleged defenses existed; and where facts found by trial court established that the bank had no connection with transactions for which notes were given. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Chess, 58 Cal. App. 3d 555 (2d Dist. 1976).

Bank was not bona fide purchaser within meaning of UCC § 8-302 and was liable for conversion of stolen treasury bills, where owner notified bank of loss but bank did not make reasonable efforts to advise its discount and collateral department of existence of lost securities file, and where bank subsequently took bills as collateral for loans. The test of sufficiency of notice is objective one under UCC § 1-201(27) and not whether or not individuals involved were in fact aware of notice. Morgan Guar. Trust Co. v. Third Nat'l Bank, 529 F.2d 1141 (1st Cir. Mass. 1976).

Account debtor did not receive notice of assignments made by its creditor to bank where, inter alia, notice was given to employee of debtor who was not in such position that notice to him could reasonably be construed to be notice to debtor.

Bank of Salt Lake v. Corporation of President of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, 534 P.2d 887 (Utah 1975).

Notice to corporation president of private sale of repossessed equipment could not be imputed to corporate officers who were accommodation indorsers of note where president was also officer of repossessing equipment supplier, and where reposessor, although aware of this probability of conflict of interest, had not taken "such steps as may be reasonably required to inform the other party in the ordinary course". T & W Ice Cream, Inc. v. Carriage Barn, Inc., 107 N.J. Super. 328, 258 A.2d 162 (L. Div. 1969).

22. Organization.

In action to determine priority of right to farm equipment (collateral) as between bankruptcy trustee and assignee-creditor with allegedly perfected security interest, where (1) partnership-debtor bought farm equipment from seller on October 25, 1974, (2) seller filed financing statement in Tallahatchie County, Mississippi, instead of Sunflower County, Mississippi, where partnership's property was located, (3) seller subsequently assigned sale contract and security agreement to plaintiff assignee-creditor, and (4) debtor thereafter became bankrupt, court held (1) that partnership can be debtor because (1) UCC § 9-105(1)(d) defines debtor as "person" who owes payment of secured obligation, (b) "person" under UCC § 1-201(30) includes "organization," and (c) "organization" under UCC § 1-201(28) includes "partnership," (2) that debtor-partnership's residence under UCC § 9-401(6) was its place of business, which was in Sunflower County, Mississippi, and not Tallahatchie County, Mississippi, (3) that under UCC § 9-401(1)(a), plaintiff's financing statement should have been filed in county of debtor's residence (Sunflower County), and (4) that as a result, plaintiff's security interest was unperfected because it was filed in wrong county. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Weaver, 680 F.2d 451 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1982).

The UCC expressly regards a partnership as a legal entity. Loucks v. Albuquerque Nat'l Bank, 76 N.M. 735, 418 P.2d 191 (1966).

23. Party.

Neither lady acquiring full interest in mortgaged property nor her father acquiring security interest from her assumed or existing note or mortgage became guarantor on same; held, neither were “parties” to mortgage transaction and could not invoke defenses relating to impairment of collateral in foreclosure action. Lakeshore Com. Fin. Corp. v. Bradford Arms Corp., 45 Wis. 2d 313, 173 N.W.2d 165 (1970).

24. Person.

The notation “Food for Love Acc’t” does not indicate the name of a “person” as defined in UCC § 1-201, but signifies an account and suggests a direction to the drawee rather than a notice to the payee alerting it to any representational capacity in which the signature was executed. Star Dairy, Inc. v. Roberts, 37 A.D.2d 1038 (3d Dep’t 1971).

25. Presumption or presumed.

In action to enforce guarantor’s liability on promissory note, trial court did not err in instructing jury that sole question was whether or not defendant had signed guarantee agreement where, inter alia, defendant did not raise issue of effectiveness of her signature, where jury was presented with guarantee agreement which contained what appeared to be defendant’s signature, raising presumption of genuineness under UCC § 3-307, and where, under UCC § 3-416, guarantee agreement obligated defendant to repay loan, interest, and attorneys’ fees. Wolfe v. Madison Nat’l Bank, 30 Md. App. 525, 352 A.2d 914 (1976).

Blanket denials failed to overcome presumption of receipt of goods supported by receipted freight bill, check for freight charges, letter of notification, and actual delivery of merchandise. Eazor Exp., Inc. v. Lanza, 60 Misc. 2d 686 (1969).

26. Purchase.

In light of the definition of “purchase” in subsection (32), physical delivery of debentures was required in order to convert them into stock pursuant to a subscription agreement. First Southwest Corp. v. Lampton, 724 So. 2d 988 (Ct. App. 1998).

The term “purchaser of a limited interest” in UCC § 3-302(4) does not refer only to holders of security interest in negotiable property, but comprehends those who become purchasers of such property by any of the means specified in UCC § 1-201(32). Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F. Supp. 1108 (S.D.N.Y. 1978), remanded, 607 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In action for seller’s breach of warranty of good title to motor home purchased by plaintiff, where (1) original owner of home rented it for 13 days to thief who “drove off into the sunset” and was never again seen by owner, (2) thief thereafter obtained Alabama registration for home, and also Nebraska and Indiana certificates of title therefor, before trading it in to defendant dealer in Indiana as part payment for truck and trailer, (3) plaintiff purchased home from defendants, who gave plaintiff certificate of title thereto, (4) Indiana state police seized home from plaintiff and surrendered it to original owner’s insurer, (5) home’s serial number proved to have been stolen, and (6) such false identification number appeared on all documents respecting home that thief had obtained in Alabama, Nebraska, and Indiana, court held (1) that rental transaction between original owner and thief constituted a “purchase” under UCC §§ 2-403(1) and § 1-201(32), since thief had acquired possessory interest in home by renting it, (2) thief did not transfer good title to defendant, as good-faith purchaser for value, since thief’s title to home was void and not voidable under UCC § 2-403(1); (4) since defendant had no good title to convey to plaintiff, defendant breached its warranty of title under UCC § 2-312(1) and (5) evidence supported damages awarded plaintiff under UCC § 2-714(2) and (3). McDonald’s Chevrolet, Inc. v. Johnson, 176 Ind. App. 399, 376 N.E.2d 106 (1978).

Under UCC § 1-201(32), “purchase” includes any voluntary transaction that creates an interest in property and does not necessarily require transfer of title. Bradley Grain Co. v. Peterson, 267 N.W.2d 836 (S.D. 1978).

Where seller, as supplier of goods on credit, demanded return of goods from buyer within ten days upon discovery of buyer’s insolvency pursuant to UCC § 2-702 and where bank had prior perfected security interest in all of buyer's inventory, then owned or thereafter acquired, bank, under definition of UCC § 1-201(32,33) qualified as good faith purchaser making it exempt from seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702(3) and bank's perfected security interest had priority over seller as seller failed to perfect its claim by filing as required by UCC § 9-312. House of Stainless, Inc. v. Marshall & Ilsley Bank, 75 Wis. 2d 264, 249 N.W.2d 561 (1977).

Under UCC § 9-105(1)(i), a secured party under Article 9 is a "purchaser" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(33); thus, where credit corporation had prior valid security interest in automobile dealer's inventory, where automobile wholesaler sold and delivered used cars and trucks to dealer with unencumbered certificates of title, but where dealer's checks in payment for vehicles were dishonored, under UCC § 2-403, dealer could transfer good title to "good faith purchaser for value," despite fact dealer tendered, for purchase of vehicles, checks which were subsequently dishonored, and hence, credit corporation's security interest in automobiles delivered to dealer was superior to wholesaler's interest. Swets Motor Sales, Inc. v. Pruisner, 236 N.W.2d 299 (Iowa 1975).

In action to recover value of stock certificates which were stolen from broker, accepted by bank as collateral for loan, and subsequently sold to satisfy debt, testimony by bank president that, inter alia, prospective borrower offered certificates as collateral for loan, that certificates were issued to and endorsed by broker with transferee's name left blank, that borrower executed affidavit stating that he was rightful owner of certificates, that bank contacted issuing corporation and verified listing of stock in broker's name, and that bank sent certificates with borrower's name added as transferee to issuing corporation for issuance of new certificates in borrower's name, which were issued and held by bank, established prima case that bank was bona fide purchaser of stock certificates under UCC § 8-302; bank became "purchaser for value" when it accepted stock certificates as collateral. Fidelity & Cas. Co. v. Key Biscayne Bank, 501 F.2d 1322 (5th Cir.

Fla. 1974), reh'g denied, 504 F.2d 760 (5th Cir. Fla. 1974).

In action between lender who held unperfected security interest in automobiles and car dealer who sold collateral to debtor, seller's right to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-702(3), when buyer's check for purchase price was dishonored by bank, did not have priority over lender's unperfected security interest in automobiles which arose when lender, who qualified as "purchaser" under UCC § 1-201, acquired certificates of title; under UCC § 2-403(1), once certificates of title were delivered, debtor acquired voidable title and could convey enforceable right in automobiles to lender as good faith purchaser for value, even though debtor's check to seller of automobiles was later dishonored. Guy Martin Buick, Inc. v. Colorado Springs Nat'l Bank, 184 Colo. 166, 519 P.2d 354 (1974).

Agreement for rental of railroad station was clearly lease-purchase agreement intended for security, since railroad was to become owner of building at end of term of agreement for no additional consideration. In re New Hope & I.R.R., 353 F. Supp. 608 (E.D. Pa. 1973).

In action arising when vice-president of defendant bank who was authorized to sign bank's serially numbered certificate of deposit forms acquired blank certificate of deposit, inserted his name as payee, signed instrument on behalf of defendant bank with name of another employee authorized to sign certificates of deposit, and then obtained $20,000 loan from plaintiff bank with certificate of deposit given as security for loan, certificate of deposit was investment security governed by UCC § 8-102 even though it also met requirements of UCC § 3-103, where certificate was issued in registered form, was one of series, and evidenced obligation of issuer by acknowledging obligation to pay depositor specified sum of money upon presentment at maturity; under UCC §§ 1-201 and 8-205, plaintiff bank was purchaser for value without notice of certificate of deposit and unauthorized signature was effective in its favor where vice-president was employee of issuer entrusted with responsible handling of security who placed unauthorized signature on security in course of its issue. Victory Nat'l Bank v. Oklahoma State Bank, 520 P.2d 675 (Okla. 1973).

Defendant-bank was liable to plaintiff, as subrogee of true owner of federal home loan bond made payable to bearer, where bank took bond from depositor seven months after its maturity date, made immediate telephonic inquiry of Federal Reserve Bank to determine if bond could be redeemed, credited depositor's account with face value of instrument, and obtained payment on bond: (1) in dealing with bond, defendant-bank became "purchaser" as defined by UCC § 1-201, was not acting merely as agent pursuant to instructions under UCC § 8-318, and was subject to plaintiff's adverse claim unless it could show it was bona fide purchaser, i.e., purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of any adverse claim; (2) defendant-bank did not acquire rights of bona fide purchaser under "shelter" provision UCC § 8-301(1) since it failed to prove that its transferor was good faith purchaser for value; (3) and by acquiring bond after six months from its date of payment, defendant bank purchased with notice of adverse claim under UCC § 8-305 and therefore could not be bona fide purchaser, notwithstanding defendant's claim that by making immediate inquiry of Federal Reserve Bank it discharged its burden as to presumed notice of existence of adverse claim created by staleness of instrument. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. National Bank & Trust Co., 366 F. Supp. 340 (M.D. Pa. 1972), aff'd, 485 F.2d 681 (3d Cir. Pa. 1973).

Automobile dealer who obtained automobiles from seller in exchange for two uncollectible checks previously issued to dealer by seller was "purchaser for value" of automobiles. National Car Rental v. Fox, 18 Ariz. App. 160, 500 P.2d 1148 (1972).

Under the definition of purchase in subsec. 32, the transaction must be a voluntary one, and a purchase by a judgment creditor at an execution sale to enforce his judgment does not qualify as such a voluntary transaction. National Shawmut Bank v. Vera, 352 Mass. 11, 223 N.E.2d 515 (1967).

27. Purchaser.

Persons who purchase stock from corporate officer who had converted such stock are "purchasers" within meaning of UCC § 1-201. Green v. Carbaugh, 465 F. Supp. 372 (E.D. Va. 1979).

28. Representative.

In action to recover on contract of guaranty on behalf of corporation in which guarantors were officers and thus "representatives" under UCC § 1-201(35), guarantors were personally liable on contract of guaranty under UCC § 3-403, notwithstanding their claims that they signed in representative capacity and that their intention at the time of signing guaranty was not to be bound in their individual capacities, (1) where guaranty did not name any person represented and (2) where there was evidence that bank officials explained to guarantors in detail that personal guaranty would be required of them and that bank relied on their personal obligation in making loan to corporation; burden of proof was on guarantors under UCC § 3-403 to "otherwise establish" that they were not personally liable. Southern Nat'l Bank v. Pocock, 29 N.C. App. 52, 223 S.E.2d 518 (1976), cert. denied, 290 N.C. 94, 225 S.E.2d 324 (1976).

The definition of "representative" includes an officer of a corporation. Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 345 Mass. 1, 184 N.E.2d 358, 99 A.L.R.2d 628 (1962).

29. Rights.

Intendment of UCC notice definition would seem to be an attempt to prevent those dealing in the commercial world from obtaining various rights when, from a reasonable inquiry into the true facts, that person would have discovered a fact which prevented him from obtaining the rights which he was seeking. Winter & Hirsch, Inc. v. Passarelli, 122 Ill. App. 2d 372, 259 N.E.2d 312 (1st Dist. 1970).

Notice that a party intends to consider a contract at an end or terminated amounts to a revocation of acceptance, and preserved to the buyer the remedies afforded by § 2-711. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

30. Security interests.

Where terms of bareboat charter-lease agreement and guaranty were unequivocal in defining and limiting rights of parties to agreement, contained nothing to indicate that agreement was intended to be anything other than a pure lease, and granted no right or option to lessee to purchase vessel leased, transaction could not be characterized under UCC § 1-201(37) as lease for security. WPL Marine Servs., Inc. v. Woods-Tucker Aircraft & Marine Leasing Corp., 361 So. 2d 1304 (La. 1978), writ denied, 364 So. 2d 121 (La. 1978), writ denied, 364 So. 2d 122 (La. 1978).

A surety's right to earned progress payments under a construction contract that it has bonded is not an "interest in personal property" that is subject to the filing provisions of the Alaska UCC, since the surety in such a case has a right to complete the job and apply any earned funds against its costs. This right of the surety does not secure the payment or performance of an obligation as a "security interest," as that term is defined by Alaska UCC § 1-201(37). Alaska State Bank v. General Ins. Co. of Am., 579 P.2d 1362 (Alaska 1978).

Under UCC § 9-102(1)(a) and (2) and UCC § 1-201(37), contract for lease of automobile was lease intended for security and not "pure lease" where it provided, among other things, (1) that on termination of agreement prior to expiration of fixed term, lessee was to return vehicle to lessor, (2) that lessor was then obligated to accept highest available cash offer at wholesale for vehicle and to notify lessee of any "gain or loss," which was difference between wholesale price accepted for vehicle and its "termination value" as determined by formula contained in lease agreement, (3) that lessee would owe lessor "depreciation value" of vehicle, as offset by amount received from its disposition at wholesale, and would receive from lessor any "gain" over such "depreciation value," (4) that lessee would have to pay all license fees and taxes, and (5) that lessee would also have to pay amounts specifically denominated as "sales tax" and "security deposit." Bill Swad Leasing Co. v. Stikes, 571 F.2d 1361, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1335 (5th Cir. Ala. 1978) (applying Alabama and Ohio law; stating that termination formula of lease recognized lessee's equity in leased vehicle, that required security deposit of $1,000 was equivalent of down payment on vehicle, and fact that lease agreement did not contain option to purchase was not controlling).

Where (1) first corporation obtained financing from Texas bank for purchase of five airplanes, which it intended to resell, and Texas bank, in November, 1972, filed separate chattel mortgage for each plane with Federal Aviation Administration pursuant to federal law, (2) second corporation purchased the five planes from the first corporation and borrowed $18,000 from Kentucky bank on unsecured note to finance purchase, (3) second corporation, on default in payment for planes, entered into new agreement with first corporation for purchase of only one plane and return of other four, and also agreed not to file bill of sale with Federal Aviation Administration for plane purchased, (4) second corporation gave Kentucky bank, which held second corporation's unsecured note for $18,000, security agreement which secured repayment of note by encumbering single plane purchased, and bank, in exchange for such security agreement, agreed not to sue on note and filed both security agreement and bill of sale for plane with Federal Aviation Administration, (5) second corporation defaulted in making payments on plane, and first corporation foreclosed on plane and sold it at auction under authority of its November, 1972 security agreement with Texas bank, which security agreement had been assigned to first corporation on its repayment of amount that it owed Texas bank, and (6) second corporation's financier (Kentucky bank) sued first corporation for wrongful interference with its collateral by not respecting bank's lien on repossessed plane, court held (1) that Kentucky bank, under UCC § 1-201(44)(b), gave "value" when it took security interest in plane purchased by second corporation to secure bank's preexisting claim against such corporation, (2) that by virtue of UCC § 9-204(1), Uniform Commercial Code does not require that "consideration" in strict-law sense be given as prerequisite for security interest to attach to collateral, (3) that Kentucky bank's security interest attached at time it gave value and was duly and properly perfected when bank filed instruments with Federal Aviation Administration, (4) that first corporation, under UCC § 1-201(37), had no valid security interest in plane that it repossessed and sold, since first corporation, by discharge of obligation underlying its security interest, had extinguished such security interest, and (5) that first corporation's foreclosure on, and sale of, plane was wrongful and in derogation of rights of plaintiff Kentucky bank, which held valid security interest in plane. Bank of Lexington v. Jack Adams Aircraft Sales, Inc., 570 F.2d 1220 (5th Cir. 1978).

The Uniform Commercial Code has many provisions, especially in Article 9, that apply to "security interests." Therefore, "security interest" is defined in UCC § 1-201(37) for the purpose of identifying the transactions to which those provisions apply. United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Thompson & Green Mach. Co., 568 S.W.2d 821 (1978).

When the holder of promissory notes assigned his interest therein as collateral to secure payment of a prior indebtedness, a sum less than the aggregate amount of the notes, and indorsed and delivered them to that creditor, he did not irrevocably divest himself of the ultimate right to all of the proceeds of the notes, but retained ownership of those proceeds not required to satisfy that indebtedness, and, therefore, the negotiation of all of the notes operated only as a partial assignment of the proceeds of the notes; the interest retained by him was capable of being transferred and, when it was transferred by another collateral assignment, the transferee acquired a valid security interest as to his residuary interest in the notes, which security interest was perfected by a subsequent delivery of the notes to it. Lipkowitz & Plaut v. Affrunti, 95 Misc. 2d 849 (1978).

Under UCC § 1-201(37), lease under which lessee had option of purchasing leased equipment for one dollar at end of lease term could be viewed as conditional sale of the equipment. Equilease Corp. v.

D'Annolfo, 6 Mass. App. Ct. 919, 379 N.E.2d 1130 (1978).

Lease of equipment purchased for installation in lessee's motel was not true lease or bailment, but was lease intended for security purposes within meaning of UCC § 1-201(37), where (1) lessor was in finance business instead of equipment-leasing business, (2) lessee had option to purchase equipment at end of lease for its fair market value, which was estimated to be less than ten per cent of price lessor paid for equipment, (3) lease provided that lessee was liable for all taxes, fees, charges, and insurance premiums, (4) lessor was to be held harmless from all liability arising from ordering, delivery, or installation of equipment, (5) on lessee's default, all remaining "rentals" could be accelerated at lessor's option, and equipment could be repossessed at lessee's expense, and (6) equipment was leased subject to exclusion of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for intended purpose. Citizens & S. Equip. Leasing, Inc. v. Atlanta Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 144 Ga. App. 800, 243 S.E.2d 243 (1978).

Where (1) lessor of computer, after purchasing it from manufacturer, leased it to lessee for 72 months at fixed rental per month, (2) lease provided that lessee could renew lease for one year for sum that equalled amount of one monthly rent payment and that at end of such renewal, lessee would become owner of computer, (3) lessee's obligation to pay rent was absolute and unconditional, and lease was not cancellable, (4) lessor disclaimed all warranties, express or implied, including implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular use, (5) computer did not function properly, and (6) lessee defended refusal to pay further rent on ground of failure of consideration, court held (1) that under UCC § 1-201(37), lease as a matter of law was actually intended as security agreement, especially since lessee could become owner of computer by paying amount that was equivalent to only one monthly rental, (2) that since lessor was to be viewed as conditional seller of computer, UCC § 9-206(2) applied with respect to effectiveness of lessor's disclaimer of warranties, (3) that warranty disclaimer in lease clearly satisfied requirements of UCC § 2-316(2) for exclusion or modification of warranties, (4) that lessee's remedy was solely against manufacturer of computer, instead of lessor, and (5) that under UCC § 9-501(1), lessor, with respect to lessee's failure to pay rent, had rights and remedies provided in security agreement between the parties, which agreement provided that on lessee's default and demand by lessor, lessee would pay amount equal to all unpaid rentals under the lease, plus interest at specified rate. Citicorp Leasing, Inc. v. Allied Institutional Distributions, Inc., 454 F. Supp. 511 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

Under UCC § 1-201(37), whether a lease is intended as security must be determined by the facts of each case. However, if the language of the agreement is clear and unambiguous, the intention of the parties is no longer a fact question on which testimony can be received, and the parol evidence rule requires that their intentions be found from the contract itself. In such a case, the matter becomes a question of law for the trial court. Citicorp Leasing, Inc. v. Allied Institutional Distributions, Inc., 454 F. Supp. 511 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

The factors involved in determining whether a lease is intended as a security agreement or a pure lease (see UCC § 1-201(37)) are as follows: (1) the facts in each case are controlling as to the intention of the parties to create a security interest; (2) reservation of title in a lease, or in an option to purchase that is appurtenant to the lease or included therein, does not by itself make the lease a security agreement; (3) a lease which permits the lessee to become the owner of the property at the end of the term for a nominal consideration or for no additional consideration is deemed as a matter of law to be intended as a security agreement; (4) the percentage that the option-purchase price bears to the list price of the leased property, especially if it is less than 25 percent, is to be considered as showing the intent of the parties to make a lease as security; (5) where the terms of the lease and option to purchase are such that the only sensible course for the lessee to follow at the end of the term is to exercise the option and become the owner of the goods, the lease is one intended to create a security interest; and (6) the character of a transaction as a true lease is indicated by (a) a provision specifying an option-purchase price that is approximately the market value of the leased property at the time of the exercise of the option, (b) rental charges indicating an intent to compensate the lessor for loss of value of the leased property over the term of the lease due to aging, wear, and obsolescence, (c) rentals that are not excessive and an option-purchase price that is not too low, and (d) facts showing that the lessee is acquiring no equity in the leased article during the term of the lease. Citicorp Leasing, Inc. v. Allied Institutional Distributions, Inc., 454 F. Supp. 511 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

Provision in security agreement executed on purchase of new automobile which provided that until indebtedness was fully paid, "seller has and shall retain title to and a security interest in the property" did not violate federal Truth-in-Lending Act and Regulation Z, since (1) Uniform Commercial Code, in UCC § 1-201(37), now provides universal definition of term "security interest," (2) Uniform Commercial Code was designed to replace confusingly numerous security devices that prevailed under pre-Code practice, and (3) it would therefore be anomalous and counterproductive of UCC objectives to interpret Regulation Z, which requires disclosure of "type of any security interest held," as requiring lender to specify particular security device employed. In such case, it was sufficient that security agreement in issue contained reference to a "security interest" in property described in the agreement that was enforceable under the Uniform Commercial Code, and statement in the agreement that seller retained "title" to such property, although unnecessary and irrelevant in light of UCC § 9-102(1) and (2) and § 9-302(3), did not make lender's disclosure statement confusing or misleading. Drew v. Flagship First Nat'l Bank, 448 F. Supp. 434 (M.D. Fla. 1977).

Under UCC § 1-201(37), leasing agreements which provided for rental of computer equipment for specified monthly rental for first five years and for higher monthly rental for remainder of lease period, and which also gave lessee option to purchase such equipment for 2.7 per cent of equipment's total rental value, or 4 per cent of price lessor paid for equipment, were leases intended as security for payment by lessee of purchase price of equipment and thus were governed by UCC Article 9. National Equip. Rental, Ltd. v. Priority Elecs. Corp., 435 F. Supp. 236, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 280 (E.D.N.Y. 1977).

Although UCC § 1-201(37) states that effect of lease is to be determined by facts of each case, the statute also provides that if there is a purchase option for a nominal consideration, the lease is then one that is intended for security. National Equip. Rental, Ltd. v. Priority Elecs. Corp., 435 F. Supp. 236 (E.D.N.Y. 1977).

Whether a transaction is characterized as a "sale" or a "lease" is not conclusive. Instead, it is the intention of the parties that is controlling, and this intention is to be determined by the facts of each case (see UCC § 1-201(37)). Indicative factors may include (1) whether the lessee is given an option to purchase the leased equipment and, if so, whether the option price is nominal (see UCC § 1-201(37)); (2) whether the lessee can acquire any equity in the equipment; (3) whether the lessee is required to bear the entire risk of loss; (4) whether the lessee is required to pay all charges and taxes imposed on ownership; (5) whether there is a provision for acceleration of rental payments; (6) whether the equipment was purchased specifically for lease to the lessee; and (7) whether the implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose are specifically excluded by the lease agreement. Lease Fin., Inc. v. Burger, 40 Colo. App. 107, 575 P.2d 857, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1309 (1977) (holding that fact that "master lease" agreement did not grant lessee option to purchase leased equipment, plus other evidence which showed that both lessor and lessee apparently intended transaction to be lease, supported trial court's determination that agreement was lease and not conditional sales contract).

Lease arrangement, under which owner sold equipment to a company whose only business was financing and not equipment maintenance, and company advanced funds to former owner's creditors, leased equipment to former owner with an option to buy, recorded an Article 9 UCC financing statement, and assigned the agreement to a bank, constituted a secured loan arrangement. National Equip. Rental, Ltd. v. Hendrix, 565 F.2d 255 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1977).

Where (1) buyer, under oral agreement to pay cash, bought used trencher and trailer from seller and accepted machinery on its delivery by seller, (2) seller listed buyer on seller's books as debtor but did not have buyer execute any document, (3) bank made loan to buyer, and buyer executed security agreement and financing statement giving bank security interest in machinery bought from seller (4) bank perfected its security interest in machinery, (5) on buyer's default, seller reclaimed machinery with buyer's consent, but without bank's consent or knowledge, and (6) bank sued seller for possession of machinery or value thereof, trial court properly held that seller's interest in machinery was subordinate to interest of bank, since under UCC § 2-401(1) and § 1-201(37), seller's reservation of title to machinery was limited in effect to reservation of security interest, and bank had perfected its security interest by filing financing statement, but seller had not filed such a statement. Peerless Equip. Co. v. Azle State Bank, 559 S.W.2d 114 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Lease of automobile was not contract of sale with retained security interest under UCC § 1-201(37)(b), where agreement designated capital cost of vehicle as $13,000, total rental due lessor was $14,256 over period of lease, and option-to-purchase price was $2,600, since option price was additional and sufficient consideration, and not nominal sum. Rebhun v. Executive Equip. Corp., 90 Misc. 2d 576 (1977).

Under UCC § 9-102(1) and UCC § 1-201(37), Article 9 applies not only to any transaction that is intended to create security interest in chattel paper, accounts, or contract rights, but also to any sale of accounts, contract rights, or chattel paper. Ralston Purina Co. v. Detwiler, 173 Ind. App. 513, 364 N.E.2d 180 (1977).

Under UCC § 1-201(37) and UCC § 9-102(2), purported five-year "lease" of printing equipment was actually installment-sale contract which provided for an excessive rate of interest that rendered the contract void for usury where (1) lessor was finance company that was actually engaged in financing the sale of such printing equipment; (2) all risk of loss or damage to leased property was placed on lessee; (3) contract provided same remedies on lessee's default in payment of rent, even at end of first month, that would be available to a conditional seller or a mortgagee on a similar delinquency; (4) contract expressly provided that lessee, at lessor's request, would join lessor in executing financial statements pursuant to the Uniform Commercial Code; and (5) lessee, after all payments had been made under the purported "lease," could acquire title to the leased property by paying lessor nominal sum therefor. Bell v. Itek Leasing Corp., 262 Ark. 22, 555 S.W.2d 1 (1977).

Although instrument under which corporation (engaged in business of financing lease agreements) leased new office machine, purchased by corporation from machine's manufacturer, to real estate company was denominated a "lease," transaction between parties was actually secured transaction under UCC § 1-201(37)(b), where such "lease" provided that lessee could purchase machine for nominal consideration; transaction was therefore subject to secured transactions provisions of UCC Article 9, and contract would be viewed as conditional sales contract under which the "lessee" was actually a "buyer." Lectro Mgt., Inc. v. Freeman, Everett & Co., 135 Vt. 213, 373 A.2d 544 (1977).

As a result of the definition of "security interest" in UCC § 1-201(37) and the provisions of UCC § 9-102(2), only those consignments intended as security are directly subject to the provisions of UCC Art 9 concerning secured transactions, but all consignments, whether intended as security or not, are subject to the requirements of UCC § 2-326, which is in UCC Art 2 dealing with sales. GECC v. Town & Country Mobile Homes, Inc., 117 Ariz. 562, 574 P.2d 50 (Ct. App. 1977).

Equipment lease agreement that permitted purchase at end of lease for approximately 10 per cent of list price, coupled with absence of option to terminate, created a security interest in lessor under UCC § 1-201(37) and since lessor's security interest was not perfected, the lessor's interest was junior to subsequently perfected liens against equipment. Percival Constr. Co. v. Miller & Miller Auctioneers, Inc., 532 F.2d 166 (10th Cir. Okla. 1976).

Purported lease of computer equipment was intended as financing device and, thus, under UCC § 1-201(37), purported lessor's interest in computers was security interest falling squarely within Article 9 of UCC, where (1) purported lease not only included option to purchase and agreement that lessee could become owner of property at end of lease term for nominal consideration, but also provided that if lessee defaulted in its monthly payments, lessee became immediately liable, not only for total amount of unpaid rent, but also for any deficiency resulting from sale of equipment not equaling estimated market value of equipment as defined by contract; (2) purported lessor acquired security interest not only in leased computers, but also in other computer equipment in possession of lessee; and (3) moreover, concurrent with lease, purported lessor filed financing statements with secretary of state and county recorder of deeds. Computer Sciences Corp. v. Sci-Tek, Inc., 367 A.2d 658 (Del. Super. 1976).

Notwithstanding language of "lease-purchase agreement," it was clear that credit corporation and purported lessee of dump truck contemplated entering into secured transaction under UCC § 9-101 et seq. where financing statement listed credit corporation as secured party and purported lessee as debtor, and covered dump truck as secured item, where motor vehicle certificate of ownership listed purported lessee as owner and credit corporation as secured party and where purported lessee had option under "lease" to purchase truck for one dollar after making all installment payments. GECC v. Castiglione, 142 N.J. Super. 90, 360 A.2d 418 (1976).

Filing of financing statement is not itself a factor in determining whether lease is intended as security. Rollins Communications, Inc. v. Georgia Inst. of Real Estate, Inc., 140 Ga. App. 448, 231 S.E.2d 397 (1976).

Where purported lease agreement provided that lessors would turn over possession of 55 head of dairy cattle to lessees, that lessees would pay lessors $450 per month for five year term, and that at expiration of term, lessees had option to purchase cattle for $10, where market value of cattle was approximately $450 per head at time parties entered into their agreement, and where parties anticipated that market value of animals at end of five year period would be no less than $200 per head, lessees had option at expiration of "lease" term to purchase cattle for nominal consideration and, thus, under UCC § 1-201(37), agreement was one intended for security and lessors' interest in cattle was security interest. Whitworth v. Krueger, 98 Idaho 65, 558 P.2d 1026, 99 A.L.R.3d 1046 (1976).

Bankruptcy judge was justified in holding that purported lease transaction was conditional sale, that contract executed by bankrupt and typewriter dealer whereby bankrupt agreed to pay $15.00 per month for 22 month term and was given option to purchase typewriter for $6.55 at end of term was security interest required by UCC to be filed, and that, in view of absence of filing, title to machine vested in bankruptcy trustee, where it was clear that transaction was understood to be sale by both bankrupt and by typewriter dealer's employees who dealt with him; among other things, bankrupt came to dealer's place of business to buy typewriter, dealer intended to sell him typewriter, and so-called "lease-ownership" contract was used because bankrupt preferred it. In re Shell, 390 F. Supp. 273 (E.D. Ark. 1975).

Lessor's subsequent offer to sell leased beauty shop equipment to lessee did not convert lease into unperfected security interest under UCC § 1-201(37). Leaseamerica Corp. v. Kleppe, 405 F. Supp. 39 (N.D. Iowa 1975).

Purported lease of trade fixtures was not true lease, but was in fact installment loan, where, inter alia, although lease did not contain express option to purchase, renewal option was in fact purchase option, and where option price was 10 per cent of original price, or approximately 7.2 per cent of total rentals under lease, and thus appeared to be minimal. McGalliard v. Liberty Leasing Co. of Alaska, Inc., 534 P.2d 528, 94 A.L.R.3d 621 (Alaska 1975), but see, Western Enters. v. Arctic Office Machs., 667 P.2d 1232 (Alaska 1983).

Automobile "lease agreement" was, in fact, secured transaction within meaning of Article 9 of Uniform Commercial Code where agreement was of indefinite duration and, at its inception, passed all risks and indicia of ownership of vehicle to purported lessee, in that lessee not only insured against any loss to leasing company of its capitalized cost, but after 26 months was entitled to any surplus funds if and when car was sold, and where at end of 56 months, car would, at option of lessee, pass to her at no cost, since monthly installment payments would have equaled capitalized cost of vehicle. Right of debtor to receive notice of intended disposition of collateral after default may not be limited under UCC § 9-501(1) and (3)(b), and inasmuch as leasing company failed to comply with notice provision of UCC § 9-504(3) before selling repossessed vehicle, it was precluded from recovering deficiency judgment and could only recover sums owed to it prior to repossession as well as repossession charges. Avis Rent-A-Car Sys. v. Franklin, 82 Misc. 2d 66 (1975).

Equipment lease transactions were security agreements under UCC § 1-201(37), and leasing corporation was "financing agency" and not seller of equipment under UCC § 2-104(2), where persons desirous of purchasing equipment or machinery applied to corporation for purchase money loan, corporation made commitments to advance money necessary for payment to manufacturer, plus sales tax, equipment was shipped by manufacturer directly to purchaser and invoice was sent to corporation, purchaser and corporation thereupon entered into security agreements in form of equipment leases with options to purchase at nominal extra charge, UCC financing statements were thereupon executed and delivered to purchaser and filed by corporation, corporation did not select or inspect any equipment, corporation did not maintain warehouse for storage of equipment or machinery, corporation did not carry leased property as assets on books or take any depreciation deductions, and corporation never took possession of any of leased equipment at end of leased term. In re Sherwood Diversified Services, Inc., 382 F. Supp. 1359 (S.D.N.Y. 1974).

In suit by lessor against lessees and guarantor on agreement designated as lease covering certain irrigation equipment for recovery of deficiency after repossession and sale of equipment, evidence was insufficient to support implied findings and judgment based thereon that transaction was lease not subject to UCC requirements where, although lease did not contain option to purchase, letter which was sufficiently identified as being applicable to lease agreement extended option to purchase to lessee and UCC § 1-201(37) makes no requirement that option to purchase be in body of lease contract, and where no evidence was offered as to fair market value of equipment at time purchase option may be exercised nor evidence as to depreciation schedule and anticipated useful life of equipment nor evidence as to whether rental payments were indicative of customary rental rates for similar equipment or were indicative of acquisition of equity in equipment from which court could determine whether consideration for exercise of option was nominal or substantial or determine party's intention as to whether purported lease agreement was to operate as security. Davis Bros. v. Misco Leasing, Inc., 508 S.W.2d 908, 76 A.L.R.3d 1 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Lease of radio equipment for five years at agreed price, with title to property remaining in lessor and with possession of equipment to be returned to lessor at expiration of lease, did not constitute "security interest"; thus, Article 9 of Code did not apply and parties' conduct was governed by terms of lease, which did not require sale of equipment upon default, nor crediting proceeds of sale against lessee's indebtedness, but instead provided that upon default lessor could retain all payments made and recover full unpaid balance of term rental. McGuire v. Associates Capital Servs. Corp., 133 Ga. App. 408, 210 S.E.2d 862 (1974).

Financing statement containing signatures of debtor and secured party, address of secured party, and containing description of collateral: "All Olivetti Corp. of America copying machines which have been delivered but not paid in full" met sufficiency test of description of collateral under UCC § 9-110 and formal requisites of financing statement under UCC § 9-402 and description reflected security interest under UCC § 1-201(37). First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Olivetti Corp. of Am., 130 Ga. App. 896, 204 S.E.2d 781 (1974).

Lease was "one intended for security" and, hence, was security agreement as defined by UCC § 1-201(37), rather than true lease, where, inter alia, lessee had option to purchase, had right to apply 93% of rentals against purchase price of equipment, and was liable for full rental for entire minimum period though property was returned to lessor; since lessor did not file financing statement covering leased equipment, its rights were subordinate to those of creditors of lessee who obtained perfected security interest in equipment. Percival Constr. Co. v. Miller & Miller Auctioneers, Inc., 387 F. Supp. 882 (W.D. Okla. 1973), aff'd, 532 F.2d 166 (10th Cir. Okla. 1976).

Surety claiming under terms of performance bond application was not entitled to equitable lien proceeds from sale of contractor's personal property, and did not have contract right but only security interest which it was required to file and perfect. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. J.F. Brunken & Son, 357 F. Supp. 290 (D.S.D. 1973).

Lessor of citrus packing equipment was entitled to return of its property from trustee in bankruptcy for lessee, where lease agreement contained no evidence of intent to reserve security interest and contained no provisions whereby lessee was to be entitled to purchase equipment at expiration of term. DeVita Fruit Co. v. FCA Leasing Corp., 71 Ohio Op. 2d 525, 473 F.2d 585 (6th Cir. Ohio 1973).

Lease which provided defendant with option to renew for trifling yearly rental, which for all practical purposes amounted to making defendant owner of machine at end of lease for nominal consideration until total obsolescence, was intended for security within meaning of UCC § 1-210(37). Leasco Data Processing Equip. Corp. v. Starline Overseas Corp., 74 Misc. 2d 898 (1973), aff'd, 45 A.D.2d 992, 360 N.Y.S.2d 199 (1st Dep't 1974), appeal dismissed, 35 N.Y.2d 645 (1974), appeal dismissed, 35 N.Y.2d 963, 365 N.Y.S.2d 179, 324 N.E.2d 557 (1974).

Where consideration to be paid if option to purchase was exercised amounted to approximately 4 percent of total consideration payable under truck lease agreement, finding that lease was intended for security was correct. Crowder v. Allied Inv. Co., 190 Neb. 487, 209 N.W.2d 141 (1973).

Where plaintiff and defendant entered into agreement which purported to be lease of accounting machine manufactured by third party, where agreement provided that defendant would make 60 monthly payments $150.05 to plaintiff and that at end of lease period, five years, defendant would have option to purchase machine for 10 percent of its initial cost, and where defendant defaulted after making nine payments, plaintiff replevied machine, sold it at private sale, and brought action against defendant to recover balance due under lease, trial court did not err in finding that transaction was lease, not security interest, that it was not subject to UCC Article 9, and that plaintiff was entitled to deficiency judgment, notwithstanding plaintiff failed to notify defendant of sale pursuant to UCC § 9-504(3); without evidence of market value of machine at termination of lease, it could not be said that option to purchase for 10 percent of original purchase price was option to purchase for "nominal consideration" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(37). Granite Equip. Leasing Corp. v. Acme Pump Co., 165 Conn. 364, 335 A.2d 294 (1973).

Where party intended that seller's retention of title to equipment would secure buyer's payment of purchase price, retention of title was limited by Code § 2-401(1) to reservation of security interest, and contract created security interest as defined in Code § 1-201(3). Witmer v.

Kleppe, 469 F.2d 1245 (4th Cir. W. Va. 1972).

An option given to the lessee to purchase the leased property for a nominal consideration does not make the lease one intended for security. James Talcott, Inc. v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 292 Minn. 277, 194 N.W.2d 775 (1972).

Words of UCC § 1-201(37) are un-equivocal, namely that an option given to a lessee to purchase leased property for a nominal consideration does make the lease one intended for security, and hence, where options to buy construction equipment for the combined sum of $2, were nominal in amount when compared to the total rental of $73,000, security interests were created. James Talcott, Inc. v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 292 Minn. 277, 194 N.W.2d 775 (1972).

Agreement providing that for a term of 36 months, a so-called lessee was required to pay what termed rental; that the lessee could extend the term for succeeding 12 months period at annual rentals; that at the end of the term, the lessee had an option to sell the equipment with any proceeds of the sale in excess of the present value of the payments provided for for the 36 months period and remaining unpaid going to the lessee; and that in event of default by lessee, he agreed to surrender possession of equipment to the lessor who might accept the equipment in final settlement or sell it and hold lessee for any deficiency of the amount due under the 36 months rental period, was a security agreement and not a lease. John Deere Co. v. Wonderland Realty Corp., 38 Mich. App. 88, 195 N.W.2d 871 (1972).

"Equipment lease" which required so-called lessee to pay what was termed rental in quarterly or annual increments over 36 month term which lessee could extend for succeeding 12 month period at additional annual rental, and which gave lessee option to sell equipment at end of term, to receive any proceeds of sale in excess of present value of rental payments remaining unpaid, to bid as high as necessary to become successful bidder at sale without paying more than rental payments remaining unpaid, and which gave lessor upon default right to accept equipment in final settlement or sell it and hold lessee for any deficiency of amount of rental payments due was security agreement and not lease. John Deere Co. v. Wonderland Realty Corp., 38 Mich. App. 88, 195 N.W.2d 871 (1972).

Where promissory note for unpaid balance of corporate stock remained unpaid, document constituted assignment of buyer's interest in corporate stock and was security agreement within UCC § 1-201(37). Gamble v. Hinds, 10 Cal. App. 3d 1021 (2d Dist. 1970).

Security agreement describing collateral but containing no indication of obligation for which collateral was security and containing no agreement to grant a security interest could not be considered "security agreement" within UCC § 1-201(37) definition. Needle v. Lasco Indus., Inc., 10 Cal. App. 3d 1105 (2d Dist. 1970).

Where reservation of title to gasoline had no other purpose than to secure payment for gasoline delivered, such reservation of title constituted "security interest". Mann v. Clark Oil & Ref. Corp., 302 F. Supp. 1376 (E.D. Mo. 1969), aff'd, 425 F.2d 736 (8th Cir. Mo. 1970).

Although agreements were called leases, trial court was correct in finding that they were security agreements since they contained provisions conferring right to purchase equipment at any time during 60-month term of leases for some of $58,000 less 75 percent of all sums paid as rental at rate of $1,288 per month, indicating that purchase option available at end of term was for $40, which was "nominal consideration", relative to $58,000. Stanley v. Fabricators, Inc., 459 P.2d 467 (Alaska 1969).

Where inclusion of option to purchase exists in lease only to protect lessee in case lessor ceases business activities, this factor alone will not make lease security interest. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Smithloff, 119 Ga. App. 284, 167 S.E.2d 190 (1969).

A floor plan security agreement did not cover any cars owned by third persons which were merely in the temporary possession of the dealer, as an agent, for sale purposes in which the dealer's only interest was in a commission in the event that a sale was consummated. Cosgriff v. Liberty Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 58 Misc. 2d 884 (1968).

A security interest is an interest in property which secures payment for the performance of an obligation. Under Article 9 the UCC does not adopt a title or lien theory of security interests, and rights and obligations and remedies are not determined by the location or the title, but rather on function, compliance with statutory requirements, and the nature of the transaction. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Sharp, 56 Misc. 2d 261 (1968).

Where an instrument is called a lease, does not contain any option to purchase, and provides merely for an option to renew upon continuing to make substantial payments, the relationship is in fact a lease and not a security agreement. Sanders v. National Acceptance Co. of Am., 383 F.2d 606 (5th Cir. Ga. 1967).

An actual lease of personal property which does not give the lessee any right to acquire or purchase is not a security device and accordingly, the lessee's rights after the lessor's repossession upon his default are not determined by Article 9 of the Code. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Katzel, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 124 (1967, NY Sup).

A lease intended as security is one which has the ultimate intent of a sale. In re Atlanta Times, Inc., 259 F. Supp. 820 (N.D. Ga. 1966), aff'd, 383 F.2d 606 (5th Cir. Ga. 1967).

A lease of newspaper composing room equipment specifically stating it contained the entire agreement between the parties, providing that lessee acquired no interest in leased property except that of use, and giving lessor right to demand and take possession of property on termination of lease or in event of default was a bona fide lease, and lessor was not required to file a financing statement to preserve its right of possession after default. In re Atlanta Times, Inc., 259 F. Supp. 820 (N.D. Ga. 1966), aff'd, 383 F.2d 606 (5th Cir. Ga. 1967).

A financing statement executed on behalf of corporate debtor by a duly authorized officer who failed to show the capacity in which he signed, which was indexed solely in the names of the corporate creditor and debtor, substantially complied with the provisions of § 9-402. Plemens v. Didde-Glaser, Inc., 244 Md. 556, 224 A.2d 464 (1966).

A lease of a machine priced at over $8,000 which contained an option to purchase under which the lessee could apply the monthly rental payments up to 75 percent of the value of the machine against the ultimate purchase price is not a security interest because the requirement that 25 percent of the purchase price be paid in cash clearly indicated that title would not be transferred for "a nominal consideration." In re Wheatland Elec. Prods. Co., 237 F. Supp. 820 (W.D. Pa. 1964).

Since state highway department's obligation to a partner for his share of the work done by the partnership on a completed highway construction project was not a contract right but was an account, an absolute assignment of the contract right to a co-partner for the payment of a past due obligation was not a security transaction. Spurlin v. Sloan, 368 S.W.2d 314 (Ky. 1963).

A lease which provides that payments or parts of payments thereunder shall be applied to the payment of the purchase price creates a security interest since upon compliance with the terms of the lease the lessee shall become or has the option of becoming the owner of the property for no additional consideration or a nominal payment. United Rental Equip. Co. v. Potts & Callahan Contracting Co., 231 Md. 552, 191 A.2d 570 (1963).

A lease purchase agreement is a "security interest created by contract" if it specifies that a stated percentage of the rental is to be applied to the purchase price of the property. United Rental Equip. Co. v. Potts & Callahan Contracting Co., 231 Md. 552, 191 A.2d 570 (1963).

The fact that a debtor has the power to terminate the relationship by not making further payments does not preclude the relationship from being a security agreement where as long as the debtor makes the payments and otherwise complies with the terms of the agreement the relationship will continue and the debtor will ultimately obtain the title. United Rental Equip. Co. v. Potts & Callahan Contracting Co., 231 Md. 552, 191 A.2d 570 (1963).

A transaction by which the purchaser of an automobile executed a security agreement to a bank and the president of the automobile seller executed a security note to the bank (the transaction appearing to be the obligation of the president individually) could be shown to have been a "dealer" transaction where the bank customarily dealt with the seller in this way and had no transactions with the president in his individual capacity, and the bank issued its check in the transaction to the seller and not the president and gave the seller the usual dealer's discount. Provident Tradesmens Bank & Trust Co. v. Pemberton, 24 Pa. D. & C.2d 720 (1961), aff'd, 196 Pa. Super. 180, 173 A.2d 780 (1961).

An automobile manufacturer who delivered automobiles to its authorized dealer with reservation of title until actual payment therefor has the status of a holder of a security interest, and, where it failed to perfect such security interest, its interest is subordinate to the receiver of the dealer, who, as a lien creditor, is without notice of such unperfected security interest. Girard Trust Corn Exch. Bank v. Warren Lepley Ford, Inc., 12 Pa. D. & C.2d 351 (1957).

Where a bank, under its wholesale credit plan, financed the purchase of automobiles by a dealer, which for automobiles to be used in its business, executed installment sales contracts as both buyer and seller, the subsequent acceptance of an assignment of such installment sales contracts by the bank constituted a novation whereby financing under the installment contract was substituted for financing under the wholesale credit plan and the bank became the holder of a security interest in the vehicles within the meaning of § 1-201(37). Girard Trust Corn Exch. Bank v. Warren Lepley Ford, Inc., 13 Pa. D. & C.2d 119 (1957).

The clause of a real estate mortgage which extends the coverage of the mortgage to things which are used in the operation of the business on the mortgaged premises gives the mortgagee security but it is not security interest within the Code because it relates to a real estate mortgage which is expressly excluded from the Code, and it is not to be brought within the Code merely because it happens to contain provisions relating to attached personal property. In re Royer's Bakery, 55 Berks C.L.J. 164 (Pa).

A "security interest" is generally defined as "an interest in personal property or fixtures which secures payment or performance of an obligation." In re Royer's Bakery, 55 Berks C.L.J. 164 (Pa).

31. Send.

(applying New York law, and noting that fact that total rentals under one lease exceeded cost of leased equipment by approximately 46 per cent, and that total rentals under other lease exceeded cost of leased equipment by approximately 30 per cent, also indicated that both leases were intended as security only and were not true leases).

In action for alleged breach by defendant airport board of one-year written agreement under which plaintiff was to serve as "fixed-base" operator of airport in return for use of airport terminal and other facilities, where (1) prior to end of agreement's one-year term, plaintiff attended board meeting at which board approved motion not to renew parties' agreement; and (2) during plaintiff's subsequent out-of-state absence, board sent (a) certified letter containing notice of agreement's termination to plaintiff's business address, and (b) hand-delivered letter containing similar notice that was not accepted by employee at plaintiff's business office, court held, on granting board's motion for summary judgment, (1) that agreement in suit could be described as either "lease of real property" or "contract for services"; (2) that although neither type of contract was explicitly covered by Uniform Commercial Code, code nevertheless constituted persuasive authority with respect to agreements like that in suit; (3) that as a result, provisions of UCC § 1-201(26) and (27), which deal with giving of notice, and provisions of UCC § 1-201(38), which define term "send," would be applied by analogy; (4) that under such provisions, fact that plaintiff was given copy of board meeting minutes that authorized termination of his contract was sufficient to terminate such agreement, even if court should adopt "actual-delivery-to-person" test urged by plaintiff; (5) that (a) mailing of registered letter to plaintiff's business address was proper "sending" under UCC § 1-201(38), (b) act of mailing was "giving of notice" under UCC § 1-201(26), and (c) deposit of notice for delivery was proper "receipt" of notification under UCC § 1-201(26)(a); (6) that hand delivery of second letter containing notice of plaintiff's termination, which was left on desk of plaintiff's employee over her protest, constituted proper "giving" and "receipt" of notice under UCC § 1-201(26) and also proper "sending" under UCC § 1-201(38); and (7) that because plaintiff's termination was authorized by board and notice of termination was properly given, board was not liable for breach of contract. Logan v. Corinth-Alcorn County Joint Airport Bd., 665 F. Supp. 506 (N.D. Miss. 1987).

Notice that is received has been "sent", even though notice is not written. Crest Inv. Trust, Inc. v. Alatzas, 264 Md. 571, 287 A.2d 261 (1972).

32. Signature.

A purchaser's letter was a sufficient "writing in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender" within the meaning of § 75-2-201(2), in spite of the seller's assertion that a confirmatory writing must be manually signed, where the letter was on the purchaser's letterhead which bore his address, and the letter referred to and recited the contract terms, requested execution of the previously-delivered forward contract, and included the typewritten name of the sender on the line where a manual signature is usually made. Dawkins & Co. v. L & L Planting Co., 602 So. 2d 838 (Miss. 1992).

Where offer to purchase shares of stock and offeror's transmittal letter expressly and unambiguously required signing of transmittal letter in order to effectuate proper acceptance of offer, offeree's failure to sign letter resulted in nonacceptance of offer. In such case, moreover, mere presence of brokerage firm's name in blank space for registered owner (offeree) in transmittal letter did not operate as owner's signature under UCC § 1-201(39), where secretary who prepared letter testified that that was not her intent in inserting brokerage firm's name in such space. Kroeze v. Chloride Group Ltd., 572 F.2d 1099 (5th Cir. 1978).

Employee's typewritten and handwritten initials on documents contained in benefit file where employee designations of retirement plan beneficiary were contained, did not constitute signature of employee under provisions of UCC §§ 1-201(39) and 3-401(2). Mohawk Airlines v. Peach, 61 A.D.2d 346 (4th Dep't 1978), appeal denied, 44 N.Y.2d 645, 406 N.Y.S.2d 1026, 378 N.E.2d 126 (1978), appeal denied, 44 N.Y.2d 838, 406 N.Y.S.2d 758, 378 N.E.2d 121 (1978).

Where contract between supplier and contractor was orally modified and where supplier sent letter of confirmation to contractor who did not object thereto, claim for modified price of additional materials was not barred by UCC § 2-201; typewritten signature on letter of confirmation sent by supplier met definition of "signed" under UCC § 1-201(39). A & G Constr. Co. v. Reid Bros. Logging Co., 547 P.2d 1207 (Alaska 1976).

In action brought by buyer of automobile against seller auction company for breach of warranty of title to automobile, instrument revealing intention of auction company to make warranty of title was "signed" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(39) where bill of sale and warranty of title were printed with name under which sellers did business. Evans v. Moore, 131 Ga. App. 169, 205 S.E.2d 507 (1974).

Where plaintiff's office manager generally made deposits for it at bank but instead of depositing 35 checks as she had been instructed to do, she drew cash on them and did not account to the plaintiff for such money, and each of the checks had affixed thereto the blank rubber stamp indorsement of the plaintiff, such blank indorsement constituted an authorized indorsement, and when bank delivered cash to the office manager instead of depositing the proceeds from the checks to plaintiff's account, the bank was not guilty of conversion. Palmer & Ray Dental Supply of Abilene, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 477 S.W.2d 954 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

Where as confirmation statement securities dealer took standard printed form containing its company symbol, address and other information in print at top and completed various labeled blank spaces or blocks with appropriate information regarding transaction in question, and addressed and mailed completed statement to customer, finding would have been authorized, if not demanded, that dealer adopted his printed name with present intention to authenticate writing and that writing was sufficient against dealer under UCC § 8-319(a). Kohlmeyer & Co. v. Bowen, 126 Ga. App. 700, 192 S.E.2d 400 (1972).

Term "signed" as defined by UCC § 1-201(39) includes any symbol executed or adopted by party with present intention to authenticate writing; authentication may be printed, stamped or written, and may be on any part of document. Southwest Eng'g Co. v. Martin Tractor Co., 205 Kan. 684, 473 P.2d 18 (1970).

Where a creditor's assistant treasurer intended to sign a financing statement but through inadvertence filed the statement without signing it, the typed words of the creditor's name were not an intended use of a symbol as a signature and the financing statement was not "signed" within the Code § 1-201(39) definition nor within the Code § 9-402(1) requirement; even though a search of the town clerk's records would have disclosed the unsigned financing statement and the name and address of the secured party as typed in the blank space, the "unsigned" statement did not "substantially comply" with the Code requirements under § 9-402(5). Maine League Fed. Credit Union v. Atlantic Motors, 250 A.2d 497 (Me. 1969).

The act of typing the mortgagee's name in the body of the financing statement, coupled with the mortgagee's subsequent act or filing the statement, sufficiently indicated his intention to authenticate his statement and constitute a compliance with this subparagraph of the section despite the fact that the mortgagee did not subscribe the instrument. Benedict v. Lebowitz, 346 F.2d 120 (2d Cir. Conn. 1965).

33. Surety.

Parties to note become sureties by guaranteeing payment of note. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

Difference, if any, between "guaranty" and "surety" has been fused, at least for purposes of UCC, by § 1-201(40) which provides that "surety" includes "guarantor". Kennedy v. Thruway Serv. City, Inc., 133 Ga. App. 858, 212 S.E.2d 492 (1975).

Defense of usury was available to guarantor of note where execution of guarantee was not separate transaction from loan and money would not have been loaned except for guarantee by guarantor to pay payee face amount of notes. Ammerman v. Miller, 488 F.2d 1285, 159 U.S. App. D.C. 385 (1973).

34. Unauthorized signature or indorsement.

Under UCC § 1-201(43), a forged indorsement is of necessity an unauthorized indorsement. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 22 Wash. App. 46, 587 P.2d 617 (1978).

Under UCC § 8-311(a), the true owner of an investment security, with certain exceptions, may assert the ineffectiveness of an "unauthorized indorsement" that appears on pledged securities against a bona-fide purchaser, unless the bona-fide purchaser has received new, reissued, or re-registered securities from the issuer. Under UCC § 1-201(43), the "unauthorized indorsement" referred to in UCC § 8-311 "means one made without actual, implied, or apparent authority and includes a forgery." Ogilvie v. Idaho Bank & Trust Co., 99 Idaho 361, 582 P.2d 215 (1978).

There was sufficient evidence to raise question of fact as to whether endorser had actual, apparent or implied authority to endorse three checks on behalf of corporate payee where, inter alia, endorser had authority to pick up checks from various customers of payee, including customer who drew checks in question, solicit jobs and make bids on contracts, sign his own name to business letters on payee's stationary, and make deposits for payee in its bank account. W.R. Grimshaw Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 563 P.2d 117 (Okla. 1977).

Where three-man law partnership was dissolved when one partner left firm but other two partners continued practice under new partnership, where bank account of former partnership was kept open for purpose of depositing receivables of former firm, where check made payable to withdrawn partner and one of his former partners was received by new partnership, bookkeeper rubber-stamped check with indorsement of former partnership, bank deposited proceeds in former partnership account, and where new partnership subsequently withdrew money from former partnership account and withdrawn partner sued bank and former partner alleging conversion of check, judgment in favor of bank and former partner was upheld on two grounds: (1) Since indorsement may be made by agent under UCC § 3-403, and agent's authority may be actual, implied or apparent under UCC § 1-201(43), there was sufficient evidence to support conclusion that apparent authority existed for affixing rubber stamp in lieu of withdrawn partner's signature; (2) Record further supported defense by bank predicated upon UCC § 3-419(3), since there was expert testimony to effect that under circumstances handling of check was in accord with reasonable commercial standards and, although bank knew former partnership had dissolved, it was logical for its account to be kept open for purpose of depositing fees which were subsequently collected for services rendered by old firm. Keane v. Pan Am. Bank, 309 So. 2d 579 (Fla. App. 1975).

The term "unauthorized signature" includes a forgery. Gast v. American Cas. Co., 99 N.J. Super. 538, 240 A.2d 682 (App. Div. 1968).

In a case where forged indorsements were placed upon a check, it was said that the forged indorsements were wholly inoperative as the signature of the payee under §§ 3-404(1) and 1-201(43), and that this was so both as to restrictive indorsements for deposit under § 3-205(c) and as to indorsements in blank under § 3-204(2). Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 345 Mass. 1, 184 N.E.2d 358, 99 A.L.R.2d 628 (1962).

35. Value.

A lender's forbearance from bringing suit to recover for the borrower's selling of vehicles out of trust so that the borrower could remain in business and repay the money that he owed to the lender constituted the giving of "value" for the purpose of attachment of the lender's security interest. Ford Motor Credit Co. v. State Bank & Trust Co., 571 So. 2d 937 (Miss. 1990).

In action by unpaid credit seller of oil supplies to debtor against bank, which held perfected security interest in debtor's oil inventory, for lack of good faith in disposing of part of such inventory, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-702(3), plaintiff's right to reclaim oil supplies sold to debtor was subject to bank's right to dispose of such supplies, which were collateral for bank's loan to debtor, as good-faith purchaser for value under UCC § 2-403(1); (2) that under UCC § 1-201(44)(b), bank had given value for debtor's oil inventory which bank obtained under after-acquired property clause in debtor's security agreement; (3) that UCC definition of good-faith purchaser did not, expressly or impliedly, include as element of such definition lack of knowledge of third-party claims, since good faith is merely defined in UCC § 1-201(19) as "honesty in fact in transaction concerned"; and (4) that under circumstances of case, bank's knowledge that plaintiff was unpaid credit seller to debtor did not impair bank's good faith in disposing of debtor's oil inventory (collateral) to satisfy debtor's obligation to bank. Shell Oil Co. v. Mills Oil Co., 717 F.2d 208 (5th Cir. 1983).

Where (1) first corporation obtained financing from Texas bank for purchase of five airplanes, which it intended to resell, and Texas bank, in November, 1972, filed separate chattel mortgage for each plane with Federal Aviation Administration pursuant to federal law, (2) second corporation purchased the five planes from the first corporation and borrowed $18,000 from Kentucky bank on unsecured note to finance purchase, (3) second corporation, on default in payment for planes, entered into new agreement with first corporation for purchase of only one plane and return of other four, and also agreed not to file bill of sale with Federal Aviation Administration for plane purchased, (4) second corporation gave Kentucky bank, which held second corporation's unsecured note for $18,000, security agreement which secured repayment of note by encumbering single plane purchased, and bank, in exchange for such security agreement, agreed not to sue on note and filed both security agreement and bill of sale for plane with Federal Aviation Administration, (5) second corporation defaulted in making payments on plane, and first corporation foreclosed on plane and sold it at auction under authority of its November, 1972 security agreement with Texas bank, which security agreement had been assigned to first corporation on its repayment of amount that it owed Texas bank, and (6) second corporation's financier (Kentucky bank) sued first corporation for wrongful interference with its collateral by not respecting bank's lien on repossessed plane, court held (1) that Kentucky bank, under UCC § 1-201(44)(b), gave "value" when it took security interest in plane purchased by second corporation to secure bank's preexisting claim against such corporation, (2) that by virtue of UCC § 9-204(1), Uniform Commercial Code does not require that "consideration" in strict-law sense be given as prerequisite for security interest to attach to collateral, (3) that Kentucky bank's security interest attached at time it gave value and was duly and properly perfected when bank filed instruments with Federal Aviation Administration, (4) that first corporation, under UCC § 1-201(37), had no valid security interest in plane that it repossessed and sold, since first corporation, by discharge of obligation underlying its security interest, had extinguished such security interest, and (5) that first corporation's foreclosure on, and sale of, plane was wrongful and in derogation of rights of plaintiff Kentucky bank, which held valid security interest in plane. Bank of Lexington v. Jack Adams Aircraft Sales, Inc., 570 F.2d 1220 (5th Cir. 1978).

Brokerage firm which received stock for account of customer and promptly credited sales price to customer's account acquired stock in partial satisfaction of preexisting claim (UCC § 1-201, subd 44(b)), and thus for value within meaning of UCC § 8-302. Colonial Sec., Inc. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., 461 F. Supp. 1159 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

In action by finance corporation against bank involving conflicting security interests in same automobile, where (1) dealer's invoice recited sale of automobile to wife and provided that she would pay $1,400 down and finance balance with plaintiff, (2) wife and husband executed

(a) promissory note evidencing loan in amount of $2,995 from defendant, of which $1,400 was used as down payment for automobile and balance represented preexisting debt owed to defendant, and (b) security agreement which designated automobile as security for such loan, (3) husband, on giving dealer $1,400 down payment for automobile, executed installment sale contract in husband's name only in favor of dealer, which dealer assigned to plaintiff, (4) defendant on August 9, 1972 filed financing statement that designated both husband and wife as debtors, (5) plaintiff on August 10, 1972 filed financing statement that designated only husband as debtor, (6) husband defaulted on payments due plaintiff, and (7) both husband and wife defaulted on note given to defendant, court held (1) installment sale contract assigned to plaintiff served as security agreement under UCC § 9-203(1)(b) and plaintiff acquired valid security interest in automobile, (2) plaintiff's security interest in automobile validly attached under UCC § 9-204(1), since husband had "right" in automobile as matter of law and could use it for collateral, even though wife was vehicle's registered owner, (3) under UCC § 9-402(1) and § 9-105(1)(d) financing statement filed by plaintiff was defective, since it only listed husband as "debtor" and did not refer to wife who actually owned automobile, (4) defendant's security interest validly attached when both husband and wife signed security agreement granting security interest in automobile to defendant, (5) defendant's financing statement complied with UCC § 9-402(1), since it was signed by both husband and wife, and thus defendant's security interest in automobile was perfected, and (6) since defendant gave "value" under UCC § 1-201(44)(b) by taking security interest in automobile to secure defendant's preexisting claim, defendant's perfected security interest in vehicle extended to entire amount of defendant's loan to husband and wife, and such perfected security interest was superior to plaintiff's unperfected security interest. GMAC v. Washington Trust Co., 120 R.I. 197, 386 A.2d 1096, 3 A.L.R.4th 496 (1978).

Notwithstanding subsequent purchaser did not know that intermediate seller's title was voidable due to intermediate seller's obtaining truck on basis of check which was dishonored, subsequent purchaser did not have good title against original seller by status of "good faith purchaser for value" under UCC §§ 1-201(19), 1-201(44) and 2-403, where subsequent purchaser knew that intermediate seller was sophisticated about value of automotive equipment, subsequent purchaser had just received three dishonored checks from intermediate seller, subsequent purchaser had no reason to believe that intermediate seller would give equipment worth $13,500 or more to settle debt of $9,100, and subsequent purchaser let intermediate seller retain possession of truck. Graves Motors, Inc. v. Docar Sales, Inc., 414 F. Supp. 717 (E.D. La. 1976).

Where debtor delivered shares of stock to bank as security for various loans, but obtained possession of stock from bank under false pretenses and then transferred stock to his father-in-law for purpose of securing or indemnifying father-in-law against any loss which he might sustain as result of his having signed indemnity agreement on behalf of debtor: (1) under UCC § 1-201(44), value was given for transfer of stock when father-in-law accepted stock as security for preexisting claim, i. e., debtor's contingent liability to contribute if father-in-law paid more than his proportionate share of obligation under indemnity agreement; (2) father-in-law was bona fide purchaser under UCC § 8-302; and (3) under UCC § 8-301(2), he acquired stock free of bank's adverse claim. Prisbrey v. Noble, 505 F.2d 170 (10th Cir. Utah 1974).

In action to recover value of stock certificates which were stolen from broker, accepted by bank as collateral for loan, and subsequently sold to satisfy debt, testimony by bank president that, inter alia, prospective borrower offered certificates as collateral for loan, that certificates were issued to and endorsed by broker with transferee's name left blank, that borrower executed affidavit stating that he was rightful owner of certificates, that bank contacted issuing corporation and verified listing of stock in broker's name, and that bank sent certificates with borrower's name added as transferee to issuing corporation for issuance of new certificates in borrower's name, which were issued and held by bank, established prima case that bank was bona fide purchaser of stock certificates under UCC § 8-302; bank became "purchaser for value" when it accepted stock certificates as collateral. Fidelity & Cas. Co. v. Key Biscayne Bank, 501 F.2d 1322 (5th Cir. Fla. 1974), reh'g denied, 504 F.2d 760 (5th Cir. Fla. 1974).

In transaction whereby sole shareholder of small corporation sold all his shares of stock to third person and corporation participated in transaction with purchaser as comaker of promissory note and written security agreement relating to corporate shares and various physical assets of corporation, corporation's execution of promissory note and security agreement was supported by sufficient consideration since seller, as part of sale transaction, agreed to refrain from competition with corporation, granted corporation option to purchase building in which business was conducted, and promised to remain on corporation's board of directors. Miller's Shoes & Clothing v. Hawkins Furn. & Appliances, Inc., 300 Minn. 460, 221 N.W.2d 113, 71 A.L.R.3d 629 (1974).

Section 1-201(44)(b) provides that an antecedent debt is sufficient consideration for the execution and giving of a security interest. United States v. Pirnie, 339 F. Supp. 702 (D. Neb. 1972), aff'd, 472 F.2d 712 (8th Cir. Neb. 1973).

Automobile dealer who obtained automobiles from seller in exchange for two uncollectible checks previously issued to dealer by seller was "purchaser for value" of automobiles. National Car Rental v. Fox, 18 Ariz. App. 160, 500 P.2d 1148 (1972).

"Value" is given for rights if they are acquired as security for preexisting debt. United States v. Big Z Whse., 311 F. Supp. 283 (S.D. Ga. 1970).

36. Warehouse receipt.

Warehouse receipt is document of title. Lofton v. Mooney, 452 S.W.2d 617 (Ky. 1970).

A forged delivery order is neither a "document of title" nor a warehouse receipt under the provisions of this section because it cannot be said to have been issued in the regular course of business or financing, nor can it be treated as adequately evidencing that the person in possession of it is entitled to receive, hold, and dispose of the document and the good it covers. David Crystal, Inc. v. Cunard S.S. Co., 223 F. Supp. 273 (S.D.N.Y. 1963), aff'd, 339 F.2d 295 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1964), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 976, 85 S. Ct. 1339, 14 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1965), cert. denied, 380 U.S. 976, 85 S. Ct. 1340, 14 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1965).

37. Writing.

Where plaintiff entered into oral contracts with defendant cotton growers for sale of their cotton crops, each involving more than $500 worth of cotton: (1) under UCC §§ 2-105 and 2-107, sale of cotton was sale of goods and, under UCC § 1-201, was not enforceable unless there was writing sufficient to indicate contract for sale had been made, signed by party against whom enforcement was sought; (2) oral contracts between plaintiff and defendants did not come within agency or broker exception to statute of frauds where there were two separate, independent sets of contracts under which defendants agreed to sell to plaintiff, and plaintiff independently contracted to sell to mills; (3) although exception to statute of frauds exists under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) if party against whom enforcement is sought admits in his pleadings, testimony or otherwise in court that contracts for sale was made, such exception did not apply in present case since defendants denied under oath that agreement for sale was made with plaintiff and, although trial court made credibility determination adverse to defendants' testimony, such finding did not constitute finding that "admission" exception applied; (4) defendants were not estopped to assert defense of statute of frauds merely because plaintiff had acted in reliance on oral agreement. Cox v. Cox, 292 Ala. 106, 289 So. 2d 609 (1974).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action by common carrier to recover freight charges, bill of lading would have been admissible under UCC § 1-202, if it had been offered into evidence. Braswell Motor Freight Lines v. Tetens, 538 S.W.2d 224 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Original bills of lading which plaintiff sought to introduce as its exhibits to prove alleged overcharges for real transportation were not admissible under § 1-202 where they did not involve third party. Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. v. Lone Star Steel Co., 498 S.W.2d 512 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

In action by purchaser of automobiles to recover certain rebates allegedly promised it as inducement to purchase from dealer letter of correspondence between automobile manufacturer and purchaser, stating that representative of manufacturer had contacted dealer who denied contractual agreement regarding rebates, was not self-authenticating document within meaning of Code § 1-202. Thrifty Rent-A-Car Sys. v. Chuck Ruwart Chevrolet, 500 P.2d 172 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

"Clean" bill of lading showing that goods, which were wrapped entirely in burlap covering, were "in apparent good order and condition" was prima facie evidence as to external conditions only. Plastileather Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 361 Mass. 356, 280 N.E.2d 402 (1972).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Applicability to particular parties.
3. Commercial paper.
4. Letters of credit.
5. Sales.
6. Secured transactions.
7. Other commercial transactions.

1. In general.

Section 75-1-203, which provides that every contract imposes an obligation of good faith in its performance or enforcement, does not apply to employment contracts. Hartle v. Packard Elec., 626 So. 2d 106 (Miss. 1993).

The requirement of good faith of the Code is an overriding provision that applies to the termination provision. Tele-Controls, Inc. v. Ford Indus., Inc., 388 F.2d 48 (7th Cir. Ill. 1967).

The provisions of this section superimpose a general requirement of fundamental integrity on commercial transactions regulated by the Uniform Commercial Code. Skeels v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 335 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1964).

2. Applicability to particular parties.

Words "or duty" were added to section to make it clear that third parties as well as parties to a contract have an obligation of good faith. In re Davidoff, 351 F. Supp. 440 (S.D.N.Y. 1972).

3. Commercial paper.

In action pursuant to UCC § 3-419 by co-payee of check for conversion of check by bank which cashed check with co-payee's endorsement forged by other payee, co-payee, which was not a "customer" of bank within meaning of UCC §§ 4-104 and 4-406, was not equitably estopped by policy of commercial reasonableness under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-203, notwithstanding that co-payee waited 10 months after it learned of forgery to inform bank, where (1) check, which was issued to co-payee "and" other payee, was properly payable under UCC § 3-116 only if it contained endorsement of both payees; (2) unauthorized endorsement was, in absence of ratification under UCC § 3-404, no endorsement under UCC §§ 3-202 and 3-404; (3) co-payee did not ratify unauthorized endorsement; and (4) bank's failure to ascertain whether co-payee's signature was authorized was not in accord with reasonable commercial standards of banking business under UCC § 3-419. Atlas Bldg. Supply Co. v. First Indep. Bank, 15 Wash. App. 367, 550 P.2d 26 (1976).

Provision in loan agreement providing that borrower would not incur other indebtedness for borrowed money without consent of lender was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302, since this § 2-302 is applicable only to sales transactions. Nor was clause a breach of obligation of good faith imposed by UCC § 1-203 where loan agreement was negotiated at arm's length between sophisticated commercial parties. Interstate Sec. Police, Inc. v. Citizens & S. Emory Bank, 237 Ga. 37, 226 S.E.2d 583 (1976).

4. Letters of credit.

Issuer bank which refused to pay beneficiary under letter of credit because letter required delivery of goods to place other than place to which beneficiary had shipped goods, and which thereby extricated itself from precarious financial position because customer for whom letter was issued appeared incapable of reimbursing issuer, (1) was not required by good-faith obligation imposed by UCC § 1-203 to amend letter at instance of beneficiary and issuer's customer, so as to permit delivery at place to which goods were actually shipped, and (2) also was not required to amend letter by UCC § 1-205(2), dealing with issuer's obligation to act in accordance with banking custom and usage, since issuer, in issuing letters of credit, relied on written trade code entitled "Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (UCP)" to establish banking practice, and UCP expressly declared that irrevocable letter of credit could not be amended or cancelled without agreement of all parties thereto, namely, beneficiary, customer, and issuer itself. AMF Head Sports Wear, Inc. v. Ray Scott's All-American Sports Club, Inc., 448 F. Supp. 222, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 990 (D. Ariz. 1978) (construing Arizona law; holding issuer not liable for refusing payment to beneficiary).

5. Sales.

In action by seller of upholstery fabrics against buyer for balance due on unpaid invoices, in which buyer admitted ordering fabrics but alleged that seller had overshipped fabrics to buyer, that buyer had revoked acceptance of overshipped goods and returned them to seller, that seller had allowed credit for returned goods, and that buyer had then paid balance of its account, court held (1) that no overshipments had occurred; (2) that seller had agreed that buyer could return fabrics that buyer could not dispose of at reduced price; (3) that seller never notified buyer that credit memorandum for major part of returned fabrics had been erroneously sent to buyer; (4) that since disputed shipments had conformed to oral orders placed by buyer, buyer's revocation of its prior acceptance of goods under UCC § 2-608(1) was wrongful; (5) that seller was thereafter entitled to remedies provided by UCC § 2-703; (6) that seller's postbreach conduct—which consisted of allowing discount on disputed fabrics, accepting great number of pieces returned to seller, and sending buyer memorandum allowing credit for returned fabrics with no qualification as to memorandum's meaning—showed acquiescence in alleged agreement for return of goods and allowance of discount thereon; and (7) that seller, by failing to exercise diligence in enforcing its rights under the contract, had not exercised good faith required by UCC § 1-203, had seriously misled buyer, and thus was estopped to assert its abandoned rights. Castle Fabrics, Inc. v. Fortune Furn. Mfrs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 409 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

In buyer's action for seller's breach of written and oral warranties in sale of marine diesel engine, (1) where terms of sale contract were contained in seller's letter to buyer, buyer's written purchase order, and manufacturer's written warranty which accompanied sale of engine; (2) where seller also orally warranted to buyer that engine would deliver specified standard of performance, that if it did not do so it could be removed from buyer's boat at seller's expense, and that it would be delivered in time to meet requirements of builder of buyer's boat; (3) where such oral warranties were breached and buyer, within six-months period provided in written engine warranty for manufacturer's repair or replacement of defective parts, refused to allow manufacturer's mechanic to inspect defective engine; (4) where buyer, more than six months after date engine was put into operation, notified seller that he had removed engine from his boat, tendered engine back to seller, and demanded return of purchase price; and (5) where such tender and demand were refused by seller, (1) trial court properly found that all terms of sale contract had not been reduced to writing; (2) admission in evidence of oral warranties as part of sale contract did not violate parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202; (3) such oral warranties did not constitute "sale or return" provision in contract under UCC § 2-326(1)(b), but were analogous to "sale on approval" provision under UCC § 2-326(1)(a) and thus were not required by UCC § 2-326(4) to be in writing; (4) buyer's failure to allow seller to exercise right under UCC § 2-508(1) to inspect and repair engine negated warranty provisions of sale contract; (5) buyer accepted engine under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) by not seasonably notifying seller of buyer's election to return engine; and (6) buyer's delay of nearly six months in informing seller of buyer's intention to revoke acceptance of engine was insufficient compliance with buyer's good faith obligation under UCC § 1-203 and did not revoke such acceptance under UCC § 2-608. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

Where contract for sale of popcorn provided that buyer was to pay for shipments of popcorn when delivered and seller repudiated contract after delivering two shipments to buyer's processing plant (for which shipments seller did not demand on-the-spot payment and buyer did not offer to pay at such place, since it customarily paid its obligations from its business office in another city), seller breached his obligation of good faith under UCC § 1-203 in performance of contract, as "good faith" is defined by UCC § 1-201(19), by failing to demand payment after delivery of each shipment and by hastily reselling undelivered part of popcorn crop to another buyer at nearly twice the contract price; trial court, in finding absence of good faith by seller, did not err in employing unconscionability concept of UCC § 2-302 in interpreting contract, since court's statement as to unconscionability was only dictum. Baker v. Ratzlaff, 1 Kan. App. 2d 285, 564 P.2d 153 (1977).

Wholesale parts distributor was not entitled to recover damages from manufacturer resulting from termination of distributorship contract where contract provided that either party could terminate at any time on written notice of 90 days, where, although distributor was required to carry "adequate" inventory of manufacturer's parts, contract also gave manufacturer option to refuse to repurchase inventory upon termination, and where manufacturer terminated contract and refused to repurchase distributor's inventory. Distributor failed to show that repurchase provision was unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302 at time of formation of contract: there was no showing that manufacturer's reasons for reserving repurchase option in its distributorship agreements were not reasonably related to business risks involved; it was not unreasonable per se for manufacturer to reserve right to refuse to repurchase at least portions of distributor's inventory upon termination; and, although manufacturer may have had superior bargaining power, under Code, bona fide allocation of risks would not be disturbed merely because one party had superior bargaining position, particularly where both parties were sophisticated business people. Furthermore, repurchase provision was not unduly one-sided or oppressive; although provision appeared to be unqualified, on its face, any exercise of repurchase election by manufacturer was restricted by manufacturer's obligation to act in good faith pursuant to UCC § 1-203, and, although proof that manner in which repurchase election was exercised at time of termination amounted to breach of manufacturer's implied obligation of good faith and fair dealing would have been independent basis for recovery of damages, neither distributor's complaint nor theory under which case was tried supported findings for distributor based on breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. W.L. May Co. v. Philco-Ford Corp., 273 Or. 701, 543 P.2d 283 (1975).

Fact that party in default on contract for sale of wheat did not specifically disavow intention to perform obligation in default did not constitute breach of obligation of good faith imposed upon contracting parties under UCC § 1-203. Purpose of UCC § 1-205(1) was to assist court by allowing evidence as to those matters in which basic contract was lacking or as to which basic contract was ambiguous. Cargill, Inc. v. Kavanaugh, 228 N.W.2d 133 (N.D. 1975).

"Outputs" contract under which bakery agreed to sell all breadcrumbs produced by it to promisee did not carry with it implication that bakery was obligated to manufacture breadcrumbs for full term of contract; rather, good faith termination of production of breadcrumbs was permissible under contract. Thus, summary judgment could not be entered in favor of either party to suit for breach of contract where unresolved issues of fact remained as to whether bakery acted in good faith in ceasing production of crumbs because of alleged economic unfeasibility. Feld v. Henry S. Levy & Sons, 37 N.Y.2d 466, 335 N.E.2d 320 (1975).

6. Secured transactions.

In suit by debtor's receiver challenging bank's priority as perfected security interest holder and its concomitant right to take possession and dispose of secured collateral, UCC § 9-402 did not require bank to give notice to debtor's creditors that original security agreement was amended to increase amount of its loan and terms of repayment where increased loan was secured by same collateral originally described in financing statement. Heights v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 463 Pa. 48, 342 A.2d 738 (1975).

Secured party was not entitled to recover alleged deficiency due after sale of repossessed automobile since (1) three days' notice of resale was not commercially reasonable under UCC § 9-504(3); (2) sale of automobile for only $50 was not in good faith, under UCC § 1-203, or in commercially reasonable manner under UCC § 9-504(3), although automobile was inoperable, where casual inspection would have revealed that automobile was missing spark plugs, points and air cleaner, and installation of these items would have made car operative and would only have required small expenditure; and (3) presumption that collateral was worth at least amount of debt, which arose as result of secured creditor's failure to give sufficient notice of resale, was not overcome by creditor's evidence. Franklin State Bank v. Parker, 136 N.J. Super. 476, 346 A.2d 632 (1975).

Although principles of estoppel and good faith underlie entire UCC, including provisions of Article 9, and lack of good faith on part of secured creditor may alter priorities which would otherwise be determined by Article 9 provisions, mere fact that secured party stood to gain from debtors' wrongful conduct did not in and of itself show lack of good faith and fact that secured party authorized debtors to purchase grain on credit from third party did not constitute evidence of fraudulent scheme or conspiracy. Central Soya Co. v. Bundrick, 137 Ga. App. 63, 222 S.E.2d 852 (1975).

Code requirement of "good faith" prevented family corporation from enforcing security agreement as to mortgaged property of partnership, where security agreement had been granted in breach of partnership regulatory agreement provision that there would be no encumbrance of any mortgaged property without FHA approval and where both partnership and corporation were dominated by father of family. Thompson v. United States, 408 F.2d 1075 (8th Cir. Ark. 1969).

7. Other commercial transactions.

While this particular agreement relating to a license transfer does not come within the UCC, it is a commercial transaction in the broad sense and the legislature has specifically declared in UCC § 1-203 that good faith is a basic obligation in all such transactions. Hardeman v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 124 Ga. App. 710, 185 S.E.2d 789 (1971).

§ 75-1-204. Time; reasonable time; "seasonably."

(1) Whenever this code requires any action to be taken within a reasonable time, any time which is not manifestly unreasonable may be fixed by agreement.

(2) What is a reasonable time for taking any action depends on the nature, purpose and circumstances of such action.

(3) An action is taken "seasonably" when it is taken at or within the time agreed or if no time is agreed at or within a reasonable time.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Question of law or fact.
3. Express time provision.
4. —“Manifestly unreasonable”.
5. Particular acts; in general.
6. —Acceptance.
7. —Inspection.
8. —Negotiation.
9. —Rejection or revocation.
10. Particular circumstances; disability of party.

1. In general.

Reasonable time for taking any action is dependent on the nature, purpose and circumstances of the action. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

2. Question of law or fact.

Where facts are not substantially in dispute, question of what is a reasonable time to inspect and reject goods that fail to conform to contract specifications is a matter to be resolved by the court. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Whether goods were substantially impaired by nonconformity under UCC § 2-608(1) and whether buyer's revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2) was given within reasonable time are questions of fact for jury. Under UCC § 1-204(2), what is reasonable time for taking any action under the code depends on nature, purpose, and circumstances of such action. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Reasonableness is primarily a question for the fact finder. Hane v. Exten, 255 Md. 668, 259 A.2d 290 (1969).

3. Express time provision.

Where contract between manufacturer and distributor for sale of certain product was to run for “initial term,” defined to commence on date of execution and to “continue for a period of 12 months from the date of the first shipment” of specified product, and granted distributor right to renew for successive 12-month periods provided distributor maintained certain level of purchases, but where no such specified product was shipped or ordered prior to manufacturer's repudiation of contract a little more than one year after execution of contract, “initial term,” and thus contract, did not expire one year after date of execution; question as to what constituted “reasonable time” for distributor's performance under contract depended upon circumstances of transaction and course of performance and, in view of dispute which had arisen between parties, it was not unreasonable for distributor to refrain from ordering specified product until contract renegotiations were resolved. Copylease Corp. of Am. v. Memorex Corp., 403 F. Supp. 625 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Where a sales contract expressly creates an unlimited express warranty of merchantability which in a separate clause purports to indirectly modify the warranty without expressly mentioning the word merchantability, the language creating the unlimited express warranty must prevail over the time limitation insofar as the latter modifies the warranty, and the express warranty of merchantability includes latent shading defects and defendants may claim for such defects not reasonably discoverable within the time limits established by the contract if plaintiff was notified of these defects within a reasonable time after they were or should have been discovered. Wilson Trading Corp. v. David Ferguson, Ltd., 23 N.Y.2d 398, 244 N.E.2d 685 (1968).

This section permits parties to a contract of sale and purchase to fix the time within which notice of defective goods must be given by seller to purchaser so long as the time is reasonable. Q. Vandenberg & Sons v. Siter, 204 Pa. Super. 392, 204 A.2d 494 (1964).

4. —“Manifestly unreasonable”.

Notwithstanding contract specified that buyer had thirty days to inspect fabricated pipe, which constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105, trial court erred in holding buyer's performance bond liable by reason of buyer's failure to reject allegedly defective pipe within thirty days of delivery: (1) under UCC § 2-607, buyer was required to notify seller of breach of warranty within a reasonable time after actual or constructive discovery of defects; (2) UCC § 1-204 provides that whenever UCC requires action within reasonable time, any time which is not manifestly unreasonable may be fixed by agreement; (3) seller guaranteed workmanship and material in contract provided claim was made within one year from shipment; and (4) buyer made claim within one year following shipment. United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. North Am. Steel Corp., 335 So. 2d 18 (Fla. App. 1976).

A time limitation providing that a buyer unqualifiedly accepts all material and waives all claims in respect thereto unless he gives notice of a claim within 15 days after delivery is "manifestly unreasonable" and invalid when applied to latent defects not discoverable on ordinary inspection within the 15-day time limitation. Neville Chem. Co. v. Union Carbide Corp., 294 F. Supp. 649 (W.D. Pa. 1968), vacated on other grounds, 422 F.2d 1205 (3d Cir. Pa. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 826, 91 S. Ct. 51, 27 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1970).

5. Particular acts; in general.

Contract under which seller agreed to manufacture cooling systems for incorporation into electronic countermeasure (ECM) pods for United States Air Force was breached by buyer when it failed to furnish seller with source-control drawings for such systems within commercially reasonable time implied in contract by UCC § 2-309(1) and UCC § 1-204(2). Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Garrett Corp., 437 F. Supp. 1301 (D. Md. 1977), aff'd, 601 F.2d 155 (4th Cir. Md. 1979).

Where contract between manufacturer and distributor for sale of certain product was to run for "initial term," defined to commence on date of execution and to "continue for a period of 12 months from the date of the first shipment" of specified product, and granted distributor right to renew for successive 12-month periods provided distributor maintained certain level of purchases, but where no such specified product was shipped or ordered prior to manufacturer's repudiation of contract a little more than one year after execution of contract, "initial term," and thus contract, did not expire one year after date of execution; question as to what constituted "reasonable time" for distributor's performance under contract depended upon circumstances of transaction and course of performance and, in view of dispute which had arisen between parties, it was not unreasonable for distributor to refrain from ordering specified product until contract renegotiations were resolved. Copylease Corp. of Am. v. Memorex Corp., 403 F. Supp. 625 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Where default occurred in payment of an automobile retail instalment contract in August of 1965 but the security holder did not make demand upon the dealer for performance of its repurchase agreement until October of 1966, and it was the custom and usage that the lending institution is required to repossess and return the vehicle for repurchase within a reasonable time after default and that 90 days is regarded as a reasonable time, the security holder could not enforce the repurchase agreement which contained no provision inconsistent with the custom and usage. Valley Nat'l Bank v. Babylon Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 53 Misc. 2d 1029 (1967), aff'd, 28 A.D.2d 1092, 284 N.Y.S.2d 849 (2d Dep't 1967).

6. —Acceptance.

Where contract for sale of tractor was not complete until defendant accepted by picking up tractor, and defendant did not inform seller that he had picked up tractor until approximately two to four weeks after he had done so, evidence would support finding that defendant failed to give notice of his acceptance within reasonable time, permitting seller to treat offer as having lapsed under Code § 2-206(2). Petersen v. Thompson, 264 Or. 516, 506 P.2d 697 (1973).

7. —Inspection.

There is no inflexible rule that the time to inspect goods to determine their conformance with contract specifications must coincide with passage of title. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

8. —Negotiation.

Where letter of credit provided that drafts issued against it must be negotiated by specified date and that the credit was subject to the Uniform Customs And Practice for Documentary Credits (1962 revision), and where provision of Uniform Customs And Practice for Documentary Credits stated only that documents must be presented within "reasonable time" after issuance, court, in holding that timeliness of presentment of draft was issue of material fact, would take note of UCC § 1-204(2), dealing with reasonableness of time for taking any action, and UCC § 3-503(2), dealing with time for presenting commercial paper. Flagship Cruises, Ltd. v. New England Merchants Nat'l Bank, 569 F.2d 699 (1st Cir. Mass. 1978).

9. —Rejection or revocation.

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where arbitrators found that such steel was received for buyer's inspection on November 8, 1974, that buyer did not accept steel because it did not conform to contract of sale, and that buyer orally rejected steel on December 4, 1974, and gave seller written notice of such rejection on December 12, 1974, buyer's rejection was proper and seller received timely notification thereof under UCC § 2-602(1) and UCC § 1-204(2). North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

In action arising out of auction sale of mare described in sales catalog as "barren," but which subsequently "slipped" a dead foal, buyer made effective revocation within reasonable time under UCC §§ 1-204 and 2-608 where buyer wrote letters five days after mare "slipped" to seller and to sales director of organization which conducted sale indicating that the sale should be "null and void" on basis of misrepresentation of mare in sales catalog. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

Trial court properly submitted to jury issue of whether buyer revoked acceptance of cattle herd within reasonable time under UCC §§ 1-204 and 2-608 and buyer failed to persuade jury that his revocation occurred within reasonable time, notwithstanding cattle were nonconforming, value of herd was substantially impaired and buyer gave notice of nonconformity 17 days after delivery, where, prior to notice of revocation given 15 months later after failure of adjustment negotiations, herd was underfed, herd suffered weight and death loss, and introduction of bulls into herd caused pretermis- sion of registration. Sylvester v. Watkins, 538 S.W.2d 827 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.r.e. (Nov. 10, 1976).

Mere fact that because of seller's action the passing of title to stud horse was accelerated by some six months did not affect timing of obligation to inspect horse to determine its fitness for breeding purposes or decision to accept or reject the horse since, pursuant to agreement, it was only in the two-month period prior to stated date for passing of title and after end of racing season that seller was to have horse tested to determine his fitness for breeding purposes, actual inspection took place during such time and horse sustained no serious bodily injury during last months of racing; inspection and rejection in month before title would have passed absent acceleration was timely. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Whether goods were substantially impaired by nonconformity under UCC § 2-608(1) and whether buyer's revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2) was given within reasonable time are questions of fact for jury. Under UCC § 1-204(2), what is reasonable time for taking any action under the code depends on nature, purpose, and circumstances of such action. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

In action between purchaser of nonconforming mobile home and assignee of security agreement, purchaser's revocation of acceptance occurred within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-608 and 1-204(2) where purchaser relied on dealer's promises to make corrections while retaining option of cancellation; under UCC § 2-711(1) and (3) purchaser retained security interest in price paid and was allowed to recover so much of price as had been paid. Frontier Mobile Home Sales, Inc. v. Trigleth, 256 Ark. 101, 505 S.W.2d 516 (1974).

Buyers' revocation of acceptance of automobile 9 months after sale of automobile and 7 months after filing of suit for rescission of sale contract was within "reasonable time" when balanced against obligation of automobile dealer under contract. Moore v. Howard Pontiac-American, Inc., 492 S.W.2d 227 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

A reasonable time in which to make a rescission depends on the facts and circumstances of a particular case. Reece v. Yeager Ford Sales, Inc., 155 W. Va. 453, 184 S.E.2d 722 (1971).

Where goods are effectively rejected for breach of warranty, the burden of proving they conform presumably remains on the seller, whereas upon acceptance the buyer has the burden to establish any breach. Miron v. Yonkers Raceway, Inc., 400 F.2d 112 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968).

10. Particular circumstances; disability of party.

In an action brought to recover for injuries sustained by plaintiff as a result of the unauthorized registration of stock owned by her in the two defendant companies, plaintiff notified each corporate issuer within a reasonable time after she had noticed that her shares had been transferred as a result of forgery as provided by UCC 8-4-4, where it appeared that plaintiff was a 94-year-old woman who, while a guest in a home, had allowed one of her hosts, whom she trusted, to handle her affairs over a 2 year period, and in light of plaintiff's reliance on the perpetrator of the acts which deprived her of title to her securities and in light of her own age and decrepitude, plaintiff could not be charged with unreasonable action in not checking her accounts from time to time and consequently plaintiff did not have required statutory notice of host's dishonesty until she left his residence. Weller v. AT & T, 290 A.2d 842 (Del. 1972).

§ 75-1-205. Course of dealing and usage of trade.

(1) A course of dealing is a sequence of previous conduct between the parties to a particular transaction which is fairly to be regarded as establishing a common basis of understanding for interpreting their expressions and other conduct.

(2) A usage of trade is any practice or method of dealing having such regularity of observance in a place, vocation or trade as to justify an expectation that it will be observed with respect to the transaction in question. The existence and scope of such a usage are to be proved as facts. If it is established that such a usage is embodied in a written trade code or similar writing the interpretation of the writing is for the court.

(3) A course of dealing between parties and any usage of trade in the vocation or trade in which they are engaged or of which they are or should be aware give particular meaning to and supplement or qualify terms of an agreement.

(4) The express terms of an agreement and an applicable course of dealing or usage of trade shall be construed wherever reasonable as consistent with each other; but when such construction is unreasonable, express terms control both course of dealing and usage of trade and course of dealing controls usage of trade.

(5) An applicable usage of trade in the place where any part of performance is to occur shall be used in interpreting the agreement as to that part of the performance.

(6) Evidence of a relevant usage of trade offered by one party is not admissible unless and until he has given the other party such notice as the court finds sufficient to prevent unfair surprise to the latter.

1. In general.

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell investment securities that buyer had contracted to resell to third person, which breach caused buyer to make "cover" purchase of other securities to effect such resale, court held (1) that although UCC Art 8 contains no provision for buyer's remedies against seller for breach of contract to purchase securities, and although UCC § 2-105(1) expressly excludes investment securities from definition of "goods" for purposes of UCC Art 2, nevertheless, as indicated by Official Comment 1 to UCC § 2-105, buyer's remedies in Art 2 for breach of contract also apply by analogy to investment security transactions; (2) that under UCC § 2-712(2), buyer was entitled to recover as damages difference between cost of cover and contract price of securities in suit, plus incidental and consequential damages; and (3) that benefits that had accrued to buyer as result of its trading of its interest in securities in suit before seller's breach were not relevant to buyer's measure of damages for such breach. G.A. Thompson & Co. v. Wendell J. Miller Mtg. Co., 457 F. Supp. 996 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Purpose of UCC § 1-205(1) was to assist court by allowing evidence as to those matters in which basic contract was lacking or as to which basic contract was ambiguous. Cargill, Inc. v. Kavanaugh, 228 N.W.2d 133 (N.D. 1975).

2. Scope.

Since Uniform Commercial Code does not apply to contract to excavate boot-pit area for rice dryer, provisions of code did not govern admissibility of evidence of custom and usage of trade to explain basis for paying for such excavation work. Venturi, Inc. v. Adkisson, 261 Ark. 855, 552 S.W.2d 643 (1977).

Although the "course of dealing between parties" and "any usage of trade" may be competent to explain ambiguities in a contract, this does not mean that a course of dealing or trade usage may be used to make a contract between parties, and evidence of a seller's dealings with other customers, the discounts granted them, and their names and addresses was not competent in an action in which the purchaser alleged that the seller had agreed to give him a ten percent discount on the price of merchandise purchased. Martin v. Ben P. Eubank Lumber Co., 395 S.W.2d 385 (Ky. 1965).

In Carpenters & Millwrights Local Union v. Riggs-Distler & Co. (1962) 73 NJ Super 253, 179 A.2d 564, rev'd on other grounds 40 NJ 97, 190 A.2d 844, the court stated that the wider scope given to customs of trade by Code § 1-205(a) should be followed in a labor hiring controversy although "hiring labor may or may not be regarded as a commercial practice." Carpenters & Millwrights Local Union No. 2018 v. Riggs-Distler & Co., 73 N.J. Super. 253, 179 A.2d 564 (1962), rev'd on other grounds, 40 N.J. 97, 190 A.2d 844 (1963).

3. Course of dealing.

Collecting bank, which held for 52 days after presentment for payment three sight drafts drawn by bank's customer on third-party buyer of goods from bank's customer and such buyer's bank before giving customer notice of drafts' dishonor, acted "seasonably" within meaning of UCC § 4-202(2), since (1) prior course of dealing can establish seasonableness of party's action under UCC §§ 1-205(1) and 3-503; and (2) in present case, bank's collection of payment on three prior drafts of customer had been delayed for 48 days, and in seven other prior transactions, bank had experienced delays of nine to 45 days before obtaining payment of customer's drafts. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Merchants Nat'l Bank, 670 F.2d 548 (5th Cir. 1982).

In action for defendant's breach of contract to repurchase cars used in plaintiff's car-rental business, where (1) plaintiff purchased business from independent owner thereof, (2) owner of business, prior to its sale to plaintiff, had agreed with defendant that cars purchased from defendant for use in such business would be repurchased by defendant if they had not been used more than 6,000 miles, and (3) plaintiff's written contract with defendant, covering purchase and repurchase of vehicles used in plaintiff's business and executed after plaintiff had purchased business from prior owner, did not specify number of miles vehicles could be used before repurchase by defendant, but merely provided that after 9,000 miles, "time left in service" of vehicle would "be negotiated," court held (1) that evidence did not show that written contract between plaintiff and defendant had been modified, with respect to defendant's repurchase of vehicles, by prior course of dealing between same parties within meaning of UCC § 1-205(1), but showed that person involved in such prior course of dealing with defendant was seller of business to plaintiff; (2) purchaser of business does not adopt, in absence of evidence to the contrary, seller's prior course of dealing with third parties; and (3) provision in contract between plaintiff and defendant concerning "time left in service" of vehicle did not impose absolute mileage limitation, but was agreement to negotiate "continued use" of vehicle after it had been used for 9,000 miles. Budget Sys. v. Seifert Pontiac, Inc., 80 Colo. App. 406, 579 P.2d 87, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 630 (1978) (stating that on retrial of case, if evidence should establish a prior course of dealing between plaintiff and defendant that included a mileage limitation, such evidence would be admissible under UCC § 2-202(a) since it would not directly contradict terms of parties' written agreement, but would supplement it).

Where (1) buyer's purchase order to steel supplier provided that shipments of steel were to be made "as directed" by buyer, (2) buyer did not direct any steel shipments to be made until about one year after contract was entered into, (3) seller, at time of receiving such directions, informed buyer that it could no longer furnish steel at contract price, and (4) seller's officers testified that seller had expected that buyer would start to request deliveries about three months after contract was made, based on seller's performance of prior contracts with buyer, court held (1) that since such prior contracts had concerned smaller construction projects, testimony about them was not a sufficient basis to enable jury to find that parties' prior course of dealing gave to words "as directed" in parties' present contract the meaning—namely, a three-months' delivery time—that seller placed on such words, and (2) that trial court therefore had no reason under UCC § 1-205(1), dealing with effect of prior course of dealing between parties, to submit seller's interpretation of such words to jury. Capital Steel Co. v. Foster & Creighton Co., 264 Ark. 683, 574 S.W.2d 256 (1978).

The term "course of dealing" refers to previous conduct between the parties indicating a common basis for interpreting expressions used by them, and proof of such conduct is limited to objective facts as distinguished from oral statements of agreements. Eskimo Pie Corp. v. Whitelawn Dairies, Inc., 284 F. Supp. 987 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

Where a used bulldozer was sold under a written contract which made no provision for the assumption by the seller of any part of the cost of future repairs, the fact that the seller subsequently assumed 50 percent of the cost of repairs on two separate occasions was not sufficient to establish a course of dealing between the parties by which the seller was obligated to pay half the cost of any or all of the repairs thereafter made to the machine. Clyde Everett Equip. Co. v. Brockton Perforating Mach. Co., 27 Mass. App. Dec. 66 (1963).

4. —Price.

Testimony by one corporate officer as to his company's practices in pricing resin used for PVC pipes is insufficient to establish pattern or "regularity of observance" and therefore such testimony should not be admitted as evidence of course of dealing or usage of trade. H & W Indus., Inc. v. Occidental Chem. Corp., 911 F.2d 1118 (5th Cir. 1990).

Even in the absence of a written agreement with respect to every term of a contract, great weight attaches to the course of dealing of the parties, and where it appears from the conduct of the parties that their mode of calculating price, although not accepted formally by signature of a written instrument, was adhered to by both parties during an extensive course of dealing, during which the purchaser received, accepted, and paid for over $800,000 worth of merchandise, this course of dealing must be held applicable and governing with respect to remaining merchandise which was received, accepted, but not paid for. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 236 F. Supp. 879 (W.D. Pa. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

5. —Variance in quality or quantity.

Letter from seller to buyer, confirming that buyer was "committed to take" lawn mowers, established parties' intent to contract and contained all prerequisites for enforceable contract under Mississippi law, despite purported expert's opinion that trade usage definition of "committed to take" was "forecast" or "estimate"; expert's construction was unreasonable, and buyer produced no evidence that expert's definition was embodied in any written trade code or similar writing. Yazoo Mfg. Co. v. Lowe's Cos., 976 F. Supp. 430 (S.D. Miss. 1997).

Shipping instructions issued by buyer calling for delivery of 10,000 tons of fertilizer during first 25 working days of month, freight prepaid, to places other than buyer's plant, did not constitute anticipatory repudiation of contract under which seller agreed to sell and ship, and buyer agreed to buy and receive at its plant, 10,000 tons of fertilizer within eight-month period of time where (1) quantity requested in shipping instructions did not exceed quantity specified in contract; (2) evidence established that prepayment of freight and shipping to place other than buyer's plant were in accord with course of dealing between parties and, even without course of dealing, there was nothing in language of contract repugnant to place or manner of shipment specified in shipping instructions; (3) seller failed to demonstrate that buyer's demanding entire season's supply in one month was commercially unreasonable and not made in good faith as required by UCC § 2-311(1). Neal-Cooper Grain Co. v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., 508 F.2d 283 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

In action by buyer alleging that breed of turkeys delivered by seller did not conform to their agreement, evidence established that contract, whether oral or written, was reached in context of well established course of dealing and that supplying cross-breed turkeys did not constitute material change from past practice. Amerine Nat'l Corp. v. Denver Feed Co., 493 F.2d 1275 (10th Cir. Colo. 1974).

Description of cotton covered by contracts for sale of future cotton crop, i.e., purchase of cotton grown on specified approximate acreage, was not so vague as to render contracts unenforceable under Code where it appeared, by contracts in question, that each seller intended to sell his entire cotton crop for the year to buyer. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 379 F. Supp. 1075 (M.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Where writings of parties to contract for sale of sand failed to supply any definition of term "truck measure," but buyer accepted and paid for large quantity of sand at price which had been computed in accordance with seller's understanding of disputed phrase, buyer's course of performance could be viewed as complete acquiescence in seller's interpretation of phrase "truck measure." Blue Rock Indus. v.

Raymond Int'l, Inc., 325 A.2d 66 (Me. 1974).

6. Usage of trade.

Trade usages are not automatically binding on all persons. Under UCC § 1-205(3), the party sought to be bound by a trade usage will not be bound if he was not in a position where he should have been aware of the usage. United States ex rel. Union Bldg. Materials Corp. v. Haas & Haynie Corp., 577 F.2d 568 (9th Cir. Haw. 1978).

Regardless of what usage of trade might be under UCC § 1-205(2), secured party could not enforce collection of unaccrued finance charges on debtor's obligation after maturity date of such obligation had been accelerated by creditor under acceleration clause following debtor's default. Credit Alliance Corp. v. Adams Constr. Corp., 570 S.W.2d 283 (Ky. 1978).

Under UCC § 1-205(2), a custom or usage, to become binding on the parties, must have antiquity as well as uniformity and universality and must have continued for such a length of time that the parties must have contracted with respect to it. Riemer Bros. v. Marlis Constr. Co., 64 Ill. App. 3d 80, 380 N.E.2d 1160 (2d Dist. 1978).

In accordance with usage of trade, foundry was not required to deliver patterns to customer before receiving payment therefor. Cooper Alloy Corp. v. E.B.V. Sys., 111 R.I. 756, 306 A.2d 837 (1973).

The term "usage of trade" refers to evidence of generalized industry practice or similar recognized custom, as distinguished from particular conversations or correspondence between the parties with respect to the terms of the agreement. Eskimo Pie Corp. v. Whitelawn Dairies, Inc., 284 F. Supp. 987 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

Where default occurred in payment of an automobile retail instalment contract in August of 1965 but the security holder did not make demand upon the dealer for performance of its repurchase agreement until October of 1966, and it was the custom and usage that the lending institution is required to repossess and return the vehicle for repurchase within a reasonable time after default and that 90 days is regarded as a reasonable time, the security holder could not enforce the re-purchase agreement which contained no provision inconsistent with the custom and usage. Valley Nat'l Bank v. Babylon Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 53 Misc. 2d 1029 (1967), aff'd, 28 A.D.2d 1092, 284 N.Y.S.2d 849 (2d Dep't 1967).

7. —Livestock.

In action arising out of auction sale of mare described in sales catalog as "barren," but which subsequently "slipped" a dead foal, buyer who effectively revoked sale had right under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-608 to reject mare after acceptance and burden under UCC § 2-607 upon buyer to show breach did not apply. Since acceptance was revoked, burden was on seller to show mare's conformity with catalog description but seller did not meet that burden where he failed to prove that mare was either barren or that, pursuant to usage of trade under UCC § 1-205, mare pronounced in foal and later found empty without evidence of abortion could be described as barren. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

In action arising out of sale of bull, seller's answer; which alleged, inter alia, that by custom of trade in breeding animals there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose in sale of bull, was sufficient under UCC § 1-205(6) to put buyers on notice of defense of exclusion under UCC § 2-316 of implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315. Torstenson v. Melcher, 195 Neb. 764, 241 N.W.2d 103 (1976).

8. —Negotiable instruments.

Issuer bank which refused to pay beneficiary under letter of credit because letter required delivery of goods to place other than place to which beneficiary had shipped goods, and which thereby extricated itself from precarious financial position because customer for whom letter was issued appeared incapable of reimbursing issuer, (1) was not required by good-faith obligation imposed by UCC § 1-203 to amend letter at instance of beneficiary and issuer's customer, so as to permit delivery at place to which goods were actually shipped, and (2) also was not required to amend letter by UCC § 1-205(2), dealing with issuer's obligation to act in accordance with banking custom and usage, since issuer, in issuing letters of credit, relied on written trade code entitled "Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (UCP)" to establish banking practice, and UCP expressly declared that irrevocable letter of credit could not be amended or cancelled without agreement of all parties thereto, namely, beneficiary, customer, and issuer itself. AMF Head Sports Wear, Inc. v. Ray Scott's All-American Sports Club, Inc., 448 F. Supp. 222, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 990 (D. Ariz. 1978) (construing Arizona law; holding issuer not liable for refusing payment to beneficiary).

9. —Risk of loss.

In action for damages for sale of negligently manufactured film, (1) evidence was sufficient to support jury finding that at time of sale of film to plaintiff, trade usage existed, within meaning of UCC § 1-205(2), which limited commercial buyer's remedy to replacement of negligently manufactured film; (2) evidence also was sufficient to support finding that replacement of negligently manufactured film constituted plaintiff's sole remedy under UCC § 2-719(1)(b); (3) such limited remedy did not fail of its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); and (4) such limited remedy also did not operate in unconscionable manner within meaning of UCC § 2-719(3) because it was reasonably adapted to general commercial background and needs of film industry. Posttape Assocs. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 450 F. Supp. 407 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

In action by diamond wholesaler against retailer to recover price of goods shipped under "all-risk" memorandum, custom and usage of industry established liability of consignee for full memorandum price of merchandise stolen while in his possession. Lipschutz v. Gordon Jewelry Corp., 373 F. Supp. 375 (S.D. Tex. 1974).

10. —Variation in quality or quantity.

In action by purchaser of air conditioners to recover damages from manufacturer for repudiation of contract to supply airconditioners, where manufacturer had submitted bid to supply airconditioners in accord with buyer's specifications, where, although specifications provided that "[c]apacities shall not be less than indicated," airconditioners had approximate six per cent deficiency in capacity to remove heat, and where manufacturer refused to supply airconditioners in literal compliance with bid, trial court erred (1) in excluding evidence as to customs and usage in air conditioning industry to effect that reasonable variations in cooling capacity are considered to comply with specifications, and (b) in refusing to permit jury to consider such customs and usage if they would vary terms of written agreement. Modine Mfg. Co. v. North E. Indep. Sch. Dist., 503 S.W.2d 833 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e (Apr. 17, 1974).

11. Modification or waiver; express agreements.

UCC § 9-306(2) codifies the common-law waiver. However, although prior course of dealing, without more, is not sufficient to waive written agreement to the contrary in light of UCC § 1-205(4), any course of performance or other conduct subsequently to the agreement can amount to a waiver. Southwest Wash. Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 19 Wash. App. 397, 577 P.2d 589 (1978), overruled on other grounds, 92 Wash. 2d 30, 593 P.2d 167 (1979).

In action for breach of contract to construct mechanical loading platforms for use in distribution center building, letter sent to defendant after it became clear that defendant would not perform which cancelled contract "without charge" could not as matter of law amount to waiver or renunciation of claim arising out of breach under UCC §§ 1-107 and 2-720; under UCC § 1-205, meaning to be given phrase "without charge" would require consideration of any course of dealing between parties and any applicable trade usage. NCR v. UNARCO Indus., Inc., 490 F.2d 285 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

Express terms of agreement should be construed where reasonable as consistent with custom of trade or course of dealing evidenced by previous conduct of parties. Gindy Mfg. Corp. v. Cardinale Trucking Corp., 111 N.J. Super. 383, 268 A.2d 345 (1970).

When custom and usage are inconsistent with the express terms of an agreement, the agreement terms control. Valley Nat'l Bank v. Babylon Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 53 Misc. 2d 1029 (1967), aff'd, 28 A.D.2d 1092, 284 N.Y.S.2d 849 (2d Dep't 1967).

12. —Express agreement; secured transactions.

In suit by lender against auctioneer for conversion of cattle constituting lender's collateral by sales in which proceeds were remitted only to debtor, (1) provisions in security agreement specifically authorizing debtor to sell cattle and other collateral with lender's prior written consent, or with payment made jointly to debtor and lender, did not violate UCC § 1-205(4) or § 9-306(2), and did not constitute either express waiver of lender's security interest in cattle or express consent to sales complained of; (2) lender under UCC § 1-205(4) did not impliedly consent to such cattle sales, and thus impliedly waive its security interest, by its course of conduct in allowing debtor to sell other collateral in debtor's name, receive payment therefor, and remit proceeds to lender without admonishing debtor for his violation of security agreement's provisions; (3) lender's statement to debtor, however, that he could sell cattle "providing he applied the proceeds from that sale" constituted express consent to sell cattle in manner not designated in parties' security agreement; and (4) defendant auctioneer, as debtor's agent, acquired same right to sell that debtor possessed, thus rendering auctioneer not liable for conversion. North Cent. Kan. Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Washington Sales Co., 223 Kan. 689, 577 P.2d 35 (1978).

Where bank had perfected security interest in cattle under agreement which prohibited sale of collateral without bank's prior written approval and where farmer sold cattle without such approval, security interest survived sale pursuant to UCC § 9-306(2) and buyers were liable for conversion, even though in prior transactions with debtor bank had not objected to such sales of collateral, as UCC § 1-205(4) provides that course of dealings may be used to interpret terms of agreement but not to contradict them. Wabasso State Bank v. Caldwell Packing Co., 308 Minn. 349, 251 N.W.2d 321 (1976).

Although security agreement covering livestock expressly prohibited debtor from selling collateral without written consent of secured party, debtor had implied authority to sell collateral free from security interest under UCC § 9-306(2) where, from beginning of secured party's relationship with debtor, sales of livestock pledged as collateral were made to various livestock dealers, and where secured party had knowledge of this, raised no objection, accepted checks from these sales for credit to debtor's account, and clearly relied on debtor's honesty to properly account for proceeds; this established course of dealing which constituted authority to sell livestock free from security interest, notwithstanding claim that, under UCC § 1-205(4), express terms of security agreement prohibiting sale controlled. Hedrick Sav. Bank v. Myers, 229 N.W.2d 252 (Iowa 1975).

An agreement between an equipment manufacturer and a finance company to the effect that the finance company was under no responsibility to record or file security paper was deemed waived by the finance company's retention of, and inaction upon, a letter from the manufacturer accompanying its transmittal of a conditional sales contract and judgment note requesting the finance company to record the paper, and the finance company's failure to comply with the statute placed the burden of loss from the dissipation of the security upon its shoulders. Congress Fin. Corp. v. Sterling-Coin Op Mach. Corp., 456 F.2d 451 (3d Cir. Pa. 1972).

Security agreement provision that debtor would not sell or otherwise dispose of collateral without prior written consent of secured party controlled course of dealing of parties and usage of trade in determining whether sale of collateral was impliedly authorized by inclusion of proceeds as collateral. United States v. E.W. Savage & Son, 343 F. Supp. 123 (D.S.D. 1972), aff'd, 475 F.2d 305 (8th Cir. S.D. 1973).

Course of dealing or trade usage, within meaning of Code, is used as factor to determine commercial meaning of agreement which parties made, and, under facts established by pleadings, would not cause lender and holder of security agreement on corn to waive or be estopped to assert its security interest in corn purchased by grain elevator operator from borrower. Vermilion County Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Izzard, 111 Ill. App. 2d 190, 249 N.E.2d 352 (4th Dist. 1969).

Written agreements between a finance company and an automobile dealer could be explained or supplemented by a course of dealing or usage or by a course of performance. Skeels v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 222 F. Supp. 696 (W.D. Pa. 1963), vacated on other grounds, 335 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1964).

Where, according to the usage of the trade, "cotton waste" and "cotton linters" are entirely different articles, a financing statement which describes cotton waste cannot be interpreted to impose a security interest on cotton linters. Annawan Mills, Inc. v. Northeastern Fibers Co., 26 Mass. App. Dec. 115, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 787 (1963).

13. —Implied warranties.

An implied warranty may be excluded or modified by a course of dealing (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316, subd [3], par [c]; § 1-205, subd [1]); however, there is no exclusion where proof of such a course of dealing between plaintiff and third-party defendant is inconclusive and where the third-party defendant asserting the exclusion had notice and aided in the completion of a written agreement which contained an assignment of plaintiff's rights for breach of warranty against the third-party defendant. United States Leasing Corp. v. Comerale Assocs., 101 Misc. 2d 773 (1979).

Discussions between president of corporate purchaser and seller of golf carts re warranties and filing of claim thereunder constituted course of dealing under UCC § 1-205(1) and thus could be basis for limitation of implied warranties. Country Clubs, Inc. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 430 F.2d 1394 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1970).

Where buyer asserted unawareness of usage of trade as to exclusion of implied warranty of merchantability as to seeds, there was question of fact as to exclusion of warranty, precluding summary judgment for seller, even though written warranty exclusion was ineffective. Zicari v. Joseph Harris Co., 33 A.D.2d 17 (4th Dep't 1969), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 610 (1970).

14. —Statute of frauds.

In action by buyer against seller arising out of nondelivery of wheat under oral sales contract, original oral contract was not rendered unenforceable by UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds, where seller admitted existence of contract. Nor was oral modification of contract as to delivery date due to unavailability of elevator space rendered unenforceable by statute of frauds requirement under UCC §§ 2-209 and 2-201 where pursuant to UCC § 1-103 and 2-209, seller waived statute of frauds defense through his course of performance under UCC § 2-208 and 1-205 in delivering 36 truckloads of wheat well after original delivery date without making timely objection. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Anderson, 170 Mont. 175, 552 P.2d 63 (1976).

Portions of Uniform Commercial Code relating to course of dealings or trade usage were not intended to be applied in manner to defeat Code's statute of frauds requirements and, at least, evidence of custom or usage in trade could be used to explain ambiguous portions of an agreement; thus, potato farmer could not introduce evidence of usage or course of dealings within trade to substantiate oral agreement with potato buyer. Dangerfield v. Markel, 222 N.W.2d 373 (N.D. 1974).

15. Evidence and burden of proof.

Evidence of "course of dealing" can have no probative value where parties have previously entered into written agreement setting forth their respective rights and duties, but where that agreement is not produced at time of trial nor any evidence of its terms. Family Provisioners, Inc. v. Columbia Acceptance Co., 274 Or. 303, 545 P.2d 1379 (1976).

Where trade usage must be resorted to for interpretation of contract, such trade usage would have to be demonstrated by something more than oral argument. Cable-Wiedemer, Inc. v. A. Friederich & Sons Co., 71 Misc. 2d 443 (1972).

Notwithstanding that there was contradicted testimony that it was custom and usage of trade that second-hand or used airplanes were sold without warranty, where seller of aircraft failed to show scope of this custom, whether local or universal, seller failed to carry burden cast upon it on its motion for summary judgment in buyer's action on alleged implied warranty as to merchantability. Georgia Timberlands, Inc. v. Southern Airways Co., 125 Ga. App. 404, 188 S.E.2d 108 (1972).

16. —Admissibility.

In action on open account, trial court erred in excluding evidence of prior dealings between parties because such dealings, under UCC § 1-205(1), would have been probative as to whether defendant had maintained account during particular year alleged by plaintiff and for which suit was brought. Deroller v. Powell, 144 Ga. App. 585, 241 S.E.2d 469 (1978).

In action to determine priority of security interests of bank and seller of hardware store, where evidence showed that seller's security interest in purchaser's collateral was perfected by filing on July 20, 1972, and that bank's interest in same collateral was perfected by filing on November 2, 1972; that bank, by subordination agreement entered into on July 12, 1972, had subordinated its claim against purchaser to claim of seller; and that on December 11, 1973, rider to subordination agreement supplementary principles of law and equity, non-UCC parol evidence rule applied to case; (3) under UCC § 1-205(4), non-UCC parol evidence rule barred parol evidence by bank that rider was intended to grant bank priority as to claims in excess of first $15,000 of purchaser's indebtedness to seller, since such evidence was totally inconsistent with unambiguous terms of rider which were controlling; and (4) even if seller's security interest should fail to meet test for special priority under UCC § 9-312(3), executed by bank, seller, and purchaser provided that agreement should apply only to first $15,000 of purchaser's indebtedness to seller and that priority of claims concerning remainder of such indebtedness should be determined in accordance with UCC Article 9, (1) provisions of UCC Article 1 applied to case, since subordination agreement and rider related to transactions covered by Uniform Commercial Code and rider specifically referred to Article 9; (2) under UCC § 1-103, dealing with application of seller's interest would still prevail under first-to-file rule of UCC

§ 9-312(5). Peoples Bank & Trust v. Reiff, 256 N.W.2d 336 (N.D. 1977).

In action by wholesaler against retailer for recovery of purchase price of two motorcycles, under UCC §§ 1-205, 2-202 and 2-326(4) trial court properly denied admissibility to defendant's proposed parol evidence that agreement was actually consignment sale agreement under "sale or return" arrangement, where written sales agreement between parties was not ambiguous. Recreatives, Inc. v. Travel-On Motorcycles Co., 29 N.C. App. 727, 225 S.E.2d 637 (1976).

In action on contract to deliver 4,000 bushels of soybeans by buyer against farmer who as result of drought was able to deliver less than 2,000 bushels, his entire crop, rejection of buyer's evidence relating to custom and usage of soybean trade was proper under UCC § 1-205(6) where offer of evidence came late in trial and probably would have denied seller opportunity to rebut it absent continuance or other disruption of trial. Paymaster Oil Mill Co. v. Mitchell, 319 So. 2d 652 (Miss. 1975).

In action by car dealer against buyer to recover alleged unpaid balance due on sale of car, dealer was not entitled to offer parol testimony under UCC § 2-202(a) that buyer had agreed to deliver insurance check covering wrecked trade-in vehicle as part of consideration where insurance check was not mentioned in contract and contract was, by its own terms, complete and exclusive statement of terms of agreement; nor did evidence disclose course of dealing and usage of trade as defined by UCC § 2-205 or course of performance as defined by UCC § 2-208 which would permit introduction of such evidence. Noble v. Logan-Dees Chevrolet-Buick, Inc., 293 So. 2d 14 (Miss. 1974).

Portions of Uniform Commercial Code relating to course of dealings or trade usage were not intended to be applied in manner to defeat Code's statute of frauds requirements and, at best, evidence of custom or usage in trade could be used to explain ambiguous portions of an agreement; thus, potato farmer could not introduce evidence of usage or course of dealings within trade to substantiate oral agreement with potato buyer. Dangerfield v. Markel, 222 N.W.2d 373 (N.D. 1974).

When UCC § 2-202 expressly allowing evidence of course of dealing or usage of trade to explain or supplement terms intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement, is read in light of UCC § 1-205(4), it is clear that the test of admissibility is not whether the contract appears on its face to be complete in every detail, but whether the proffered evidence of course of dealing and trade usage reasonably can be construed as consistent with the express terms of the agreement. Columbia Nitrogen Corp. v. Royster Co., 451 F.2d 3 (4th Cir. Va. 1971).

Evidence of course of dealing and usage of trade is admissible under UCC § 1-205 to amplify, supplement or qualify terms of an agreement, but it does not create an agreement where none previously existed. White Lumber Sales, Inc. v. C. Brinson Lamb & Sons Lumber Co., 121 Ga. App. 702, 175 S.E.2d 81 (1970).

Taken along with other relevant sections of the Uniform Commercial Code, the provision that an agreement may be supplemented by course of dealing or usage of trade tends to allow the use of parol testimony in a proper case. Holland Furnace Co. v. Heidrich, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 204 (1955).

17. —Presumptions.

Trade usages sanctioned by passage of time are presumed to be within knowledge of parties regularly engaged in business, in present case shipment and carriage of goods by sea, and all contracts are presumed made with reference to trade usages and practice. du Pont de Nemours Int'l S.A. v. S.S. MORMACVEGA, 367 F. Supp. 793 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 493 F.2d 97 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1974).

§ 75-1-206. Statute of fraud for kinds of personal property not otherwise covered.

(1) Except in the cases described in subsection (2) of this section, a contract for the sale of personal property is not enforceable by way of action or defense beyond Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) in amount or value of remedy unless there is some writing which indicates that a contract for sale has been made between the parties at a defined or stated price, reasonably identifies the subject matter, and is signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought or by his authorized agent.

(2) Subsection (1) of this section does not apply to contracts for the sale of goods (Section 75-2-201) nor of securities (Section 75-8-113) nor to security agreements (Section 75-9-203).

Editor's Note — Laws, 1996, ch. 468, § 72, provides as follows:

"SECTION 72. (a) This act does not affect an action or proceeding commenced before this act takes effect.

"(b) If a security interest in a security is perfected at the date this act takes effect, and the action by which the security interest was perfected would suffice to perfect a security interest under this act, no further action is required to continue perfection. If a security interest in a security is perfected at the date this act takes effect but the action by which the security interest was perfected would not suffice to perfect a security interest under this act, the security interest remains perfected for a period of four (4) months after the effective date and continues perfected thereafter if appropriate action to perfect under this act is taken within that period. If a security interest is perfected at the date this act takes effect and the security interest can be perfected by filing under this act, a financing statement signed by the secured party instead of the debtor may be filed within that period to continue perfection or thereafter to perfect."

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Statute of frauds under UCC § 1-206 did not bar recovery by distributors against distiller upon oral agreement by distiller to relocate distributors with a new distributorship. Lee v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 413 F. Supp. 693 (S.D.N.Y. 1976), aff'd, 552 F.2d 447 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1977).

Enforcement of oral agreement to sell stock worth more than $5,000 is not barred by UCC § 1-206(1), since UCC § 1-206(2) specifically states that UCC § 1-206(1) does not apply to contracts for sale of securities. Burns v. Gould, 172 Conn. 210, 374 A.2d 193 (1977).

Contract for sale of cattle received by buyer was not required to be in writing under UCC § 1-206, since provision does not apply to contracts for sale of goods, nor by § 2-201, since written contract was not required with respect to goods which have been received or accepted. Clifton Cattle Co. v. Thompson, 43 Cal. App. 3d 11 (2d Dist. 1974).

An agreement for the sale of a business, evidenced only by a letter between the parties stating that a contract existed for such a sale under specified conditions, was only partially enforceable, to the extent that $5000, under the statute, providing that a contract for the sale of personal property was not enforceable beyond $5000 unless a writing existed indicating that a contract had been made and stating a price. Olympic Junior, Inc. v. David Crystal, Inc., 463 F.2d 1141 (3d Cir. N.J. 1972).

In action for alleged breach of agreement to include clothing "contractor" in contemplated sale of corporation which supplied designs and materials and promoted sale of garments tailored by contractor, only writing contained no "defined or stated price," and so Code § 1-206 would make any contract unenforceable beyond $5,000. Olympic Junior, Inc. v. David Crystal, Inc., 463 F.2d 1141 (3d Cir. N.J. 1972).

Draft of executory accord relating to settlement of litigation was sufficient to satisfy statute of frauds, where document more than adequately spelled out consideration for contract and more than reasonably identified subject matter, and was accompanied by cover letter which was signed by defendant's agent who had authority to draw up written version of settlement agreement. Pyle v. Wolf Corp., 354 F. Supp. 346 (D. Or. 1972).

Even though several letters or other writings could be resorted to for the agreed upon terms, these writings had to be connected either expressly or by the internal evidence of subject-matter and occasion. Oswald v. Allen, 417 F.2d 43 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1969).

Since a "call option" does not involve the sale of a "security," such a transaction is governed by this section rather than by § 8-319 [Repealed]. Cohn, Ivers & Co. v. Gross, 56 Misc. 2d 491 (1968).

§ 75-1-207. Performance or acceptance under reservation of rights.

(1) A party who, with explicit reservation of rights, performs or promises performance or assents to performance in a manner demanded or offered by the other party does not thereby prejudice the rights reserved. Such words as "without prejudice," "under protest" or the like are sufficient.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to an accord and satisfaction.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

A stamped notation on the backs of checks purporting to reserve the seller's rights (§ 75-1-207), which was done in the ordinary course of business, did not preclude a finding that the seller waived enforcement of the floor pricing provision of the parties' contract. Exxon Corp. v. Crosby-Mississippi Resources, Ltd., 40 F.3d 1474 (5th Cir. 1995).

Where defendant agreed to pay reasonable counsel fees rendered by plaintiff to a third party, and forwarded a check to plaintiff in an amount almost $800 less than the itemized statement and bill submitted by plaintiff, stating that the charges were excessive and that the check would be considered full payment if accepted, there was a bona fide dispute of an unliquidated claim, and the cashing of the check by plaintiff resulted in an accord and satisfaction; the fact that plaintiff informed defendant that he did not regard the check as full payment did not preclude the making of an accord and satisfaction, since Section 1-207 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which deals with the explicit reservation of rights, is not applicable to the rendition of services. Blottner, Derrico, Weiss & Hoffman, P.C. v. Fier, 101 Misc. 2d 371 (1979).

UCC § 1-207 precludes conclusion that payee of check, prior to its negotiation, must notify drawer that payee's acceptance is under protest or reservation of rights. Miller v. Jung, 361 So. 2d 788, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1085 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 1978) (stating that UCC § 1-207 minimizes impediments to flow of commercial paper while reserving rights of immediate parties thereto).

UCC § 1-207 provides machinery for the continuation of performance along the lines contemplated by the contract, despite a pending dispute, by adopting the mercantile device of going ahead with delivery, acceptance, or payment "without prejudice," "under protest," "under reserve," "with reservation of all our rights," and the like. All of these phrases completely reserve all rights within the meaning of UCC § 1-207. Miller v. Jung, 361 So. 2d 788, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1085 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 1978).

Common-law rule that accord and satisfaction results where check tendered as payment in full for disputed amount is accepted by payee has been changed by UCC § 1-207. Under such section, if party indorses final-payment check with words "without prejudice and under protest," party thus reserves right to demand balance alleged to be due, and negotiation of check does not effect an accord and satisfaction. Lange-Finn Constr. Co. v. Albany Steel & Iron Supply Co., 94 Misc. 2d 15 (1978).

Where (1) general contractor involved in payment dispute with steel supplier sent supplier check for certain sum as final payment of amount due and thereafter, in further effort to resolve dispute, sent supplier second check for slightly higher amount also as final payment of account, and (2) supplier, after first certifying both checks and holding them for several months, returned first check to general contractor, deposited second check with indorsement "without prejudice and under protest," and thereafter advised general contractor that it was still asserting its claim for entire amount allegedly due, court held (1) that UCC § 1-207 was inapplicable because supplier had made no reservation of its rights at time it had second check certified, and (2) that trial court correctly concluded as a result that an accord and satisfaction had occurred as to amount in dispute on date second check was certified. Lange-Finn Constr. Co. v. Albany Steel & Iron Supply Co., 94 Misc. 2d 15 (1978).

Although the acceptance of a check tendered as final payment in full for a disputed amount with an indorsement stating that the negotiation of the check is "without prejudice" or "under protest" does not result in an accord and satisfaction (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-207), defendant's failure to expressly reserve its rights at the time it caused plaintiff's check tendered as a final payment for materials supplied by defendant on a construction project to be certified resulted in an accord and satisfaction. Where a check is tendered as payment in full for a disputed amount and the payee causes the check to be certified, an accord and satisfaction results since certification is equivalent to acceptance by the payee. Defendant only advised plaintiff that it was still asserting its claim for the entire balance after it caused plaintiff's check to be certified. Had defendant merely negotiated the check while reserving its rights, no accord and satisfaction would have occurred. Lange-Finn Constr. Co. v. Albany Steel & Iron Supply Co., 94 Misc. 2d 15 (1978).

Under UCC § 1-207, buyers of stock, by continuing to perform under contract, did not waive right to complain of sellers' retention of dividends where, although buyers made no explicit reservation of right to dividends, buyers' actions clearly indicated that they were not waiving any rights accruing to them. Deering Milliken, Inc. v. Clark Estates, Inc., 57 A.D.2d 773 (1st Dep't 1977), aff'd, 43 N.Y.2d 545, 402 N.Y.S.2d 987, 373 N.E.2d 1212 (1978).

Rights which cotton sellers had, in event of reversal of their appeal from trial court judgment that certain written contracts between sellers and buyer were valid agreements, were fixed by statutes relating to reversal of judgments on appeal; UCC § 1-207 did not apply. Peek Planting Co. v. W.H. Kennedy & Sons, 257 Ark. 669, 519 S.W.2d 49 (1975).

Indorsement with explicit reservations is not acceptance in full payment but reservation of right to collect remainder of unpaid bill. Baillie Lumber Co. v. Kincaid Carolina Corp., 4 N.C. App. 342, 167 S.E.2d 85 (1969).

§ 75-1-208. Option to accelerate at will.

A term providing that one party or his successor in interest may accelerate payment or performance or require collateral or additional collateral "at will" or "when he deems himself insecure" or in words of similar import shall be construed to mean that he shall have power to do so only if he in good faith believes that the prospect of payment or performance is impaired. The burden of establishing lack of good faith is on the party against whom the power has been exercised.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general; necessity of express provision for acceleration.
2. Construction of acceleration clauses.
3. What constitutes good faith.
4. Circumstances justifying exercise of option.
5. What constitutes demand for additional collateral.
6. Presumptions.
7. Burden of proof.

1. In general; necessity of express provision for acceleration.

Section 75-1-208 is inapplicable to situations where a creditor, under the terms of its contract with the debtor, has accelerated its debtor's outstanding obligations after the occurrence of an event that was in the complete control of the debtor-i.e., where the creditor accelerates indebtedness because the debtor fails to comply with the terms and conditions contained in the promissory note, deed of trust, or loan agreement. Peoples Bank & Trust Co. v. Cermack, 658 So. 2d 1352 (Miss. 1995).

Although UCC does recognize validity of acceleration clauses under certain circumstances, if such clause is expressly set forth in instrument, UCC makes no provision for automatic acceleration upon default of installment payments not yet due; thus, where so-called "lease-purchase" agreement did not contain acceleration clause, installment payments could not be accelerated upon default and creditor was limited to recovery of unpaid installments then actually accrued. GECC v. Castiglione, 142 N.J. Super. 90, 360 A.2d 418 (1976).

There is no right to accelerate commercial paper in the absence of an express provision therefor. McDown v. Wilson, 426 S.W.2d 112 (Mo. Ct. App. 1968).

2. Construction of acceleration clauses.

An acceleration clause is not to be interpreted as exercisable only when the paper is given to an attorney for collection, even though the absence of punctuation in the note would appear to give the clause that meaning. Olsen v. Valley Nat'l Bank, 91 Ill. App. 2d 365, 234 N.E.2d 547 (2d Dist. 1968).

3. What constitutes good faith.

In action by debtor against bank and its loan officer for conversion, trespass, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution, where evidence showed that bank, which had made loan to debtor that was secured by automobile purchased with loan's proceeds, (1) had concluded, even before due date of first installment payment on loan, that debtor had falsified loan application, (2) that as a result, bank had declared loan to be in default, accelerated the debt obligation, and entered on debtor's property to repossess automobile, all without notice to debtor, (3) that bank's loan officer had asked debtor to come to officer's office to discuss the matter, (4) that when debtor arrived at bank, he was met by two FBI agents who interviewed him, and (5) that as a result of such interview, debtor was indicted, tried, and acquitted on federal charges of supplying false information to bank to obtain loan, it was error for trial court to grant summary judgment in favor of bank and loan officer on conversion and trespass claim, since issue of fact existed as to whether bank had acted in good faith under UCC § 1-208 and § 1-201(19) in deeming itself to be insecure with regard to debtor's obligation. Ginn v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 145 Ga. App. 175, 243 S.E.2d 528 (1978).

Ordinarily, the issue of whether the holder of an option to accelerate has or has not acted in good faith, within the meaning of UCC § 1-208, presents a question of fact for the jury and not a question of law for the court. Thus, under UCC § 1-208, the issue of good faith must ordinarily be submitted to the jury, unless the evidence relating to it is no more than a scintilla or lacks probative value having fitness to

In action to foreclose security interest in both real and personal property of defendant mink ranchers pursuant to acceleration clause in security agreement, trial court's findings in favor of plaintiff were sustained by evidence showing (1) that such acceleration clause provided that defendants would be in default if they did not pay any of three promissory notes when due, or did not perform any undertaking provided for in notes or security agreement, or if any part of collateral for notes should be lost, stolen, or damaged; and (2) that all notes were in default, that defendants had not cared for the mink (which were part of collateral) in husband-like manner, and that defendants claimed that mink pelts worth $25,000 had been stolen. In such case, defendants did not sustain their burden of proof under UCC § 1-208 to show lack of good faith on part of plaintiff in declaring notes in default and in accelerating payment thereof, since plaintiff genuinely believed that its prospects for payment had been impaired. State Bank v. Woolsey, 565 P.2d 413 (Utah 1977).

In view of fact that promissory note was secured by second mortgage on farm property which defendant had purchased for $110,000, there could be little doubt that note would have been paid, principal and interest, notwithstanding fact that defendants were frequently late in making monthly installment payments on note, and thus holders of promissory note failed to show good faith belief that prospect of payment was impaired justifying acceleration of note under UCC § 1-208. Williamson v. Wanlass, 545 P.2d 1145 (Utah 1976).

Even if UCC § 1-208 was applicable to contracts involving land, it imposes "good faith" standard on creditor where it is agreed that he may accelerate debt at his option, and thus did not apply to due-on-sale clause contained in deed of trust since right to accelerate was conditioned on occurrence of condition which was in control of debtor. Crockett v. First Fed. Sav. &

Loan Ass'n, 289 N.C. 620, 224 S.E.2d 580 (1976).

In action by trustee in bankruptcy to recover amount of funds bank had set off against bankrupt's checking account, finding that bank had acted in good faith within meaning of UCC § 1-208 was not clearly erroneous where bank, which had perfected security interest in bankrupt's cattle, discovered prior security interest in same cattle, deemed itself insecure, and, pursuant to clause contained in promissory notes executed by bankrupt in favor of bank, accelerated notes' due date, notwithstanding that bank gave no notification of acceleration and setoff to bankrupt. Jensen v. State Bank, 518 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. Iowa 1975).

Grain elevator cooperative failed to produce substantial evidence that bank was not in good faith in accelerating elevator's promissory notes where, on contrary, there was evidence that elevator owed bank $272,000 and needed additional $50,000 within next 2 weeks, that elevator had more checks outstanding than its bank balance, that elevator had loss of $22,000 in fiscal year just completed and that elevator closed for 2 business days. Farmers Coop. Elevator v. State Bank, 236 N.W.2d 674 (Iowa 1975).

Where security agreement, executed in connection with sale of truck, provided that secured party could not only accelerate payment thereunder but also repossess truck without demand or notice if secured party felt insecure, test as to whether secured party acted in "good faith" under UCC § 1-208 in repossessing truck was whether "reasonable man" under same set of facts or circumstances would have made same determination as to whether debt or collateral were insecure. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Shepler, 164 Ind. App. 516, 329 N.E.2d 620 (1975).

Plaintiff, as an unsecured creditor, had to consider the overall financial stability of defendant corporation in order to determine the likelihood of payment being made on loans previously extended to corporation by plaintiff, and even if plaintiff was negligent in not checking to determine whether defendant had in fact been denied a loan by third party, negligence was irrelevant to good faith, the standard being what plaintiff actually knew, or believed he knew, not what he could or should have known, and because plaintiff believed defendant had been denied a loan, and acted in accordance with that belief, he acted in good faith in demanding payments of notes. Van Horn v. Van De Wol, Inc., 6 Wash. App. 959, 497 P.2d 252, 61 A.L.R.3d 241 (1972).

4. Circumstances justifying exercise of option.

Plaintiff bank is entitled to liquidate municipal bonds held as collateral for loans made to defendant securities dealer since plaintiff had adequate cause to "deem itself insecure", a condition constituting default under the parties' security agreement, where defendant had engaged in wash sales to postpone the effect of losses occasioned by the declining bond market. Bankers Trust Co. v. J.V. Dowler & Co., 47 N.Y.2d 128, 390 N.E.2d 766 (1979).

Where creditor loaned debtor $250,000 for five-year period and loan was evidenced by one-year note that was renewable solely at debtor's option if all interest payments were made during first year of loan; where collateral for loan was second mortgage on building and surety bond for $250,000 that only covered first year of loan; where debtor failed to make interest payments during first year and surety cured such default by paying all interest arrearages; where before start of second year of loan, creditor's request that debtor obtain extension of its surety bond was not complied with; and where creditor then refused debtor's request to renew note for second year and claimed that note was fully due and payable under acceleration clause therein, which was of type permitted by UCC § 1-208, because creditor deemed collateral insufficient to secure entire indebtedness, creditor's demand for extension of debtor's surety bond was not demand for "additional collateral" within meaning of note's acceleration clause and UCC § 1-208, since right to demand "additional collateral" does not mean right to demand "temporal extension of same collateral" in case where parties expressly bargained for expiration of collateral (surety bond in present case) at precise date within term of principal debt and such agreed-on collateral currently covered debtor's full indebtedness. Bank of N.J. v. Brokers Fin. Corp., 557 F.2d 365 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 924, 98 S. Ct. 402, 54 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977).

"Good faith" requirement of UCC § 1-208 is in harmony with equitable principle that acceleration of payment of instrument in harsh remedy that should be allowed only for some reasonable justification, such as good-faith belief that prospect of payment has been impaired. State Bank v. Woolsey, 565 P.2d 413 (Utah 1977).

Under UCC § 1-208, conditional vendor of automobile was justified in exercising its "insecurity clause" and accelerating payment of balance due under conditional sales contract where conditional purchaser was charged with illegally transporting controlled substances in violation of state law, thereby subjecting vehicle to possible forfeiture proceedings by state and federal governments. Blaine v. GMAC, 82 Misc. 2d 653 (1975).

A bank, in enforcing its security interest in a roadside diner was not guilty of abuse of process in so doing where the facts justified the institution in deeming itself insecure and, as a matter of law, it acted in good faith. Fort Knox Nat'l Bank v. Gustafson, 385 S.W.2d 196 (Ky. 1964).

5. What constitutes demand for additional collateral.

Under language of retail instalment contract which provided that upon buyer's default seller would have right, at its election, to declare unpaid portion of total payments to be immediately due and payable, entire indebtedness did not become due ipso facto upon default in making of instalment payment on due date thereof, and creditor could not effectively exercise option to declare whole principal due without communicating his decision to debtor by some outward affirmative act sufficient to constitute notice of his election. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Barnes, 126 Ga. App. 444, 191 S.E.2d 121 (1972).

6. Presumptions.

Creditor exercising power to accelerate payment is presumed to have acted in good faith; trial court erroneously turned presumption around when it placed burden of proof on creditor. Sheppard Fed. Credit Union v. Palmer, 408 F.2d 1369 (5th Cir. Tex. 1969).

7. Burden of proof.

Under the last sentence of UCC § 1-208, the burden of establishing a lack of good faith is on the debtor. This burden applies to the quantum of evidence and sufficiency of proof as to the lack of good faith after all of the evidence is before the court. Such a burden, however, does not apply on a motion for summary judgment where the sole question before the court is whether a genuine issue of material fact exists; in such a case, the movant has the burden of proving the absence of a genuine issue of fact. McKay v. Farmers & Stockmens Bank, 92 N.M. 181, 585 P.2d 325 (Ct. App. 1978), cert. denied, 92 N.M. 79, 582 P.2d 1292 (1978).

Bank exercised good faith within meaning of UCC § 1-208 in accelerating payment date of note executed by debtor where debtor failed to sustain its burden of showing lack of good faith on bank's part and bank's evidence showed extent of debtor's indebtedness to other creditors and degree to which debtor was in default on such other indebtedness. Custom Panel Sys. v. Bank of Hampton, 143 Ga. App. 681, 239 S.E.2d 558 (1977) (holding that under express terms of note executed by debtor, bank could appropriate without notice, for application on note, amount in debtor's account with bank).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

General contract law, rather than sales provisions in Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), governed dispute between general contractor and subcontractor arising from subcontractor's refusal to dispose of cabinets that it tore out from public housing redevelopment site for purposes of installation of new cabinets; case did not concern cabinets manufactured, but rather subcontractor's refusal to assume duties which general contractor obligated itself to perform pursuant to contract with public housing authority. J.O. Hooker & Sons v. Roberts Cabinet Co., 683 So. 2d 396 (Miss. 1996).

Whether contract involving mixed transaction of goods and services should be interpreted under Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) or general contract law should depend on nature of contract and on whether dispute primarily concerns goods furnished or services rendered under contract. J.O. Hooker & Sons v. Roberts Cabinet Co., 683 So. 2d 396 (Miss. 1996).

UCC Article 2 (UCC §§ 2-101 et seq.) did not apply in action for breach by employer of contractual provision providing that employer, on employee's termination as golf professional at employer's country club, would repurchase 20 golf carts that employee had been required to purchase on accepting employment, since predominant purpose of employee's contract with employer was rendition of services and not sale of goods. Executive Ctrs. of Am., Inc. v. Bannon, 62 Ill. App. 3d 738, 379 N.E.2d 364 (3d Dist. 1978).

No conflict existed between Uniform Commercial Code provisions dealing with sales (UCC §§ 2-101 et seq.) and New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, and regulations adopted under such act to govern sale of pet cats and dogs, since (1) Uniform Commercial Code provisions on sales are merely intended to give stability to law of commercial transactions and do not limit proper exercise of police power in public interest, and (2) UCC § 2-102 expressly declares that Article 2 of the code dealing with sales does not impair or repeal any statute regulating sales to consumers. Thus, regulations adopted under New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act to govern sales of pet cats and dogs were valid and not in conflict with sales provisions of Article 2 of Uniform Commercial Code merely because such regulations provided consumer with broader remedies than were available under the code. Pet Dealers Ass'n of N.J., Inc. v. Division of Consumer Affairs, Dep't of Law & Pub. Safety, 149 N.J. Super. 235, 373 A.2d 688 (App. Div. 1977), certification denied, 75 N.J. 16, 379 A.2d 247 (1977).

claims that trial court erred in finding it sold machine and system in question to plaintiff, when in fact it sold machine to leasing company which in turn leased it to plaintiff, and that transaction did not fall within scope of Article 2 of UCC and, accordingly, was barred by statute of limitations for oral contract actions. Leasing company was financing agency and, as such, held security interest in subject matter transaction, and defendant was seller based on fact that: (1) equipment was shipped and installed by defendants; (2) leasing company did not select or inspect equipment; (3) leasing company was not manufacturer or dealer in like equipment; (4) monthly payments under lease were calculated to return to leasing company purchase price, sales tax and interest; (5) it was not contemplated equipment would be returned to leasing company; and (6) renewal rental was for nominal amount and extended to period beyond usable life of equipment. Atlas Indus., Inc. v. National Cash Register Co., 216 Kan. 213, 531 P.2d 41 (1975).

To determine which provisions of UCC Article 2 are applicable to lease transaction, court would look to commercial setting in which problem arises and contrast relevant common law with Article 2; court would use Article 2 as "a premise for reasoning only when the case involves the same consideration that gave rise to the Code provision and an analogy is not rebutted by additional antithetical circumstances." Glenn Dick Equip. Co. v. Galey Constr., Inc., 97 Idaho 216, 541 P.2d 1184 (1975).

Oral agreement between sub-contractor and contractor for installation of carpeting, whereby sub-contractor was to furnish material for installation other than carpeting, which was to be furnished by contractor, for which sub-contractor was to receive $1.00 per yard for installation, 35 cents per foot for metal and 75 cents per yard for padding, was service contract, not one for "goods," and thus UCC was not applicable. Dionne v. Columbus Mills, Inc., 311 So. 2d 681 (Fla. App. 1975).

When gravamen of consumer suit against manufacturer or retailer for consequential personal injuries and property damage is defect in article, action will be considered as one founded in strict liability in tort, whether cause of action is pleaded in express or implied warranty, in strict liability or in any combination of these theories; this is not to say that injured consumer, who cannot prove or does not desire to rely entirely on defect, may not sue, solely or alternatively, under Uniform Commercial Code for casually related breach of pertinent express warranty. Realmuto v. Straub Motors, Inc., 65 N.J. 336, 322 A.2d 440 (1974).

Contract for sale of two radio stations was not agreement for sale of "goods," to which Article 2 of UCC would apply, where nature of transaction, intention of parties as reflected by writing, and lack of specific reference to designated assets rendered inescapable conclusion that letter agreement was one integrated contract for sale of businesses of two radio stations, including their tangible and intangible assets, as going concern. Field v. Golden Triangle Broadcasting, Inc., 451 Pa. 410, 305 A.2d 689 (1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1158, 94 S. Ct. 916, 39 L. Ed. 2d 110 (1974).

Bareboat charter for period of 18 months is not sale as defined in UCC, and is not kind of lease which has been held to come within Code as "analogous" to sale.

Neubros Corp. v. Northwestern Nat'l Ins. Co., 359 F. Supp. 310 (E.D.N.Y. 1972).

Uniform Commercial Code, effective Oct. 1, 1958 supersedes previous Sales Act formerly appearing in c 106. Nugent v. Popular Mkts., Inc., 353 Mass. 45, 228 N.E.2d 91 (1967).

A buyer's right to recover under this Article after his revocation of acceptance of a sale is limited to the seller, and he has no right of recovery against the seller's agent. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

The sales provision of the Uniform Commercial Code have altered some of the formerly established doctrines of contract law in order to react more positively to the realistic needs of modern commerce. Bruce Lincoln-Mercury, Inc. v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 325 F.2d 2 (3d Cir. Pa. 1963).

The Uniform Commercial Code virtually re-enacts the Uniform Sales Act. Bafile v. Remchow & Ford Motor Co., 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 108 (Pa 1962).

In construing the Uniform Commercial Code, Article 2, the court may resort to decisions under comparable provisions of the Uniform Sales Act. Bafile v. Remchow & Ford Motor Co., 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 108 (Pa. 1962).

Unless the context otherwise requires, this chapter applies to transactions in goods; it does not apply to any transaction which although in the form of an unconditional contract to sell or present sale is intended to operate only as a security transaction nor does this chapter impair or repeal any statute regulating sales to consumers, farmers or other specified classes of buyers.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general; relationship with other laws.
2. Transaction in goods.
3. —Sale.
4. Mixed transactions.
5. Secured transactions.
6. Specified classes of buyers.
7. What constitutes goods.

1. In general; relationship with other laws.

In seller's action for buyer's breach of contract to buy specified quantity of potatoes suitable for processing into potato chips, which potatoes were to be delivered to buyer "as needed," trial court correctly concluded (1) that contract, pursuant to UCC § 1-102(3), varied normal rules for tender contained in Uniform Commercial Code in that contract required buyer to request delivery of quantity of potatoes, which buyer at no time did, before seller would become obligated to tender delivery, and (2) that as a result, seller's failure to tender delivery of any potatoes at all during entire contract period did not relieve buyer of liability for payment under UCC § 2-301 and § 2-507(1). Halverson v. Pet, Inc., 261 N.W.2d 887, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 574 (N.D. 1978) (also holding that even if potatoes in seller's warehouse were not suitable for buyer's use throughout entire contract period, buyer still breached contract by not requesting any deliveries at all during such period).

No conflict existed between Uniform Commercial Code provisions dealing with sales (UCC §§ 2-101 et seq.) and New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act, and regulations adopted under such act to govern sale of pet cats and dogs, since (1) Uniform Commercial Code provisions on sales are merely intended to give stability to law of commercial transactions and do not limit proper exercise of police power in public interest, and (2) UCC § 2-102 expressly declares that Article 2 of the code dealing with sales does not impair or repeal any statute regulating sales to consumers. Thus, regulations adopted under New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act to govern sales of pet cats and dogs were valid and not in conflict with sales provisions of Article 2 of Uniform Commercial Code merely because such regulations provided consumer with broader remedies than were available under the code. Pet Dealers Ass'n of N.J., Inc. v. Division of Consumer Affairs, Dep't of Law & Pub. Safety, 149 N.J. Super. 235, 373 A.2d 688 (App. Div. 1977), certification denied, 75 N.J. 16, 379 A.2d 247 (1977).

Action for price of goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered to buyer on open account was not time barred by the general statute of limitations of three years for oral contracts even though the purchases were incurred more than three but less than five years prior to filing of action, since, under UCC § 10-102 and 2-102, the five-year period of limitations of UCC § 2-725 superseded the pre-existing general statute and abrogated distinctions between oral and written sales contracts for purposes of statutes of limitations. Sesow v. Swearingen, 552 P.2d 705 (Okla. 1976).

Six-year limitation period relating to contracts in general, rather than more restrictive four-year statute of limitations specified in UCC, applied to action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for use in connection with rental of scaffold. Owens v. Patent Scaffolding Co., 50 A.D.2d 866 (2d Dep't 1975).

Where (1) general contractor retained sum due under contract with subcontractor on ground that subcontractor's work was poorly performed, and (2) subcontractor then assigned such sum to creditor, to whom subcontractor owed preexisting debt, without general contractor's written consent, although such consent was required by contract between general contractor and subcontractor, court held that since assignment did not involve sale within the meaning of UCC § 2-102, prohibition against assignments in contract between general contractor and subcontractor was not rendered invalid by UCC Article 2 on sales or by any other provision of Uniform Commercial Code, including UCC § 9-104(f) which deals with inapplicability of Article 9 to assignment of accounts or contract rights for collection only. Bafle v. Remchow & Ford Motor Co., 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 108 (Pa. 1962).

2. Transaction in goods.

Whether contract involving mixed transaction of goods and services should be interpreted under Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) or general contract law should depend on nature of contract and on whether dispute primarily concerns goods furnished or services rendered under contract. J.O. Hooker & Sons v. Roberts Cabinet Co., 683 So. 2d 396 (Miss. 1996).

Article 2 of the Mississippi UCC furnished analogous rules for determining controversies arising over a 2 party copier-equipment lease that conferred exclusive use and dominion to, and created obligations of maintenance and payment of taxes and insurance by, lessee, and which also contained renewal and purchase options, as well as an express warranty of freedom from defects of material and workmanship. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

As indicated in UCC §§ 2-102 and 2-106(1), the Uniform Commercial Code applies only to transactions in goods and not to service or repair contracts. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

UCC Article 2 applies only to transactions in goods and is inapplicable to construction contracts (see UCC § 2-102). Christiansen Bros. v. State, 90 Wash. 2d 872, 586 P.2d 840 (1978).

Plumbing construction contract that involves both labor and materials is not a "transaction in goods" under UCC § 2-102. Cork Plumbing Co. v. Martin Bloom Assocs., 573 S.W.2d 947 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

If a contract is for services, the transaction is not a sale within the provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code. The code applies to transactions involving goods (see UCC § 2-102), and its provisions are not applicable to either service or construction contracts. Perlmutter v. Don's Ford, Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 719 (1978).

Action for breach by buyer of written installment agreement, executed by buyer after having defaulted on original contract of sale, is governed by four-year statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) and not by 15-year, non-UCC statute of limitations for written contracts generally. In such case, installment agreement was subject to scope of UCC Article 2, even though it was not executed contemporaneously with original contract of sale, since under UCC § 2-102, provisions of Article 2 apply to "transactions in goods" and term "transaction," as used in UCC § 2-102, encompasses a far wider activity than a "sale." May Co. v. Trusnik, 54 Ohio App. 2d 71, 375 N.E.2d 72 (1977).

In action by assignee of computer-equipment lease for rent due under lease, (1) although applicable provisions of UCC Article 2 should be applied to equipment leases, entire article would not be applied on theory that equipment lease is transaction in goods under UCC § 2-102; (2) lease in issue was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302, since it conferred rights and imposed duties on both lessor and lessee, and parties to lease had virtually equal bargaining power; (3) language in lease disclaiming implied warranties of merchantability and fitness were sufficiently conspicuous under UCC § 2-316(2); and (4) since defense that plaintiff was not assignee in good faith within meaning of UCC § 9-206(1) presented fact issue that could not be resolved solely as issue of law, trial court erred in dismissing defendant's amended answer on ground that it raised insufficient defense as matter of law. Walter E. Heller & Co. v. Convalescent Home of First Church of Deliverance, 49 Ill. App. 3d 213, 365 N.E.2d 1285 (1st Dist. 1977).

A written agreement for the purchase and sale of an airplane and an oral modification thereof come within the phrase "transactions in goods" set forth in the instant section so as to make the instant article applicable thereto. Skinner v. Tober Foreign Motors, Inc., 345 Mass. 429, 187 N.E.2d 669 (1963).

3. —Sale.

The terms of a lease agreement between a motel owner and a television set supplier, including a nominal purchase price of $1 per television set at the expiration of the lease term, was evidence of a sale, sufficient to warrant application of the provisions of UCC Article 2. Patel v.

Telerent Leasing Corp., 574 So. 2d 3 (Miss. 1990).

The sale of an automobile is a sale of "goods" that is governed by UCC Article 2 (see UCC § 2-102). Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

In action by purchasers of new homes against contractor who built homes and seller of bricks used therein for damages resulting from defective brick: (1) contracts between purchasers and contractor did not provide for "sale" as that term is used in UCC Article 2 and, thus, were not governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in § 2-725, but rather by general six-year limitations for breach of contract; (2) conversely, only relationship between purchasers and seller of bricks was that of buyers and seller, which was governed by UCC Article 2, and, since more than four years passed between respective purchases from seller and alleged breach of warranty, action was barred. DeMatteo v. White, 233 Pa. Super. 339, 336 A.2d 355 (1975).

In action by hybrid seed corn processor against gas company for property damage resulting from gas explosion, allegations that gas company warranted fitness of its own equipment knowing that processor would rely upon warranty "and use the equipment for the purpose for which it was intended," failed to state cause of action against gas company for breach of implied warranties under UCC, since implied warranties under UCC extend only to goods sold to a buyer and gas company's meters and service lines were not sold to processor, and there was no allegation of breach of warranty with respect to gas which was sold to processor. Pioneer Hi-Bred Corn Co. v. Northern Ill. Gas Co., 61 Ill. 2d 6, 329 N.E.2d 228 (1975).

In action arising when aluminum step-ladder which had been loaned to plaintiff collapsed, plaintiff could not recover for breach of implied warranty where application of code to "transactions in goods" under UCC § 2-102 was not extended to loan of goods which were sold before UCC became law and question of whether plaintiff was foreseeable user of goods under UCC § 2-318 was moot. Harvey v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 315 A.2d 599 (Del. Super. 1973).

4. Mixed transactions.

Whether contract involving mixed transaction of goods and services should be interpreted under Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) or general contract law should depend on nature of contract and on whether dispute primarily concerns goods furnished or services rendered under contract. J.O. Hooker & Sons v. Roberts Cabinet Co., 683 So. 2d 396 (Miss. 1996).

General contract law, rather sales provisions in Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), governed dispute between general contractor and subcontractor arising from subcontractor's refusal to dispose of cabinets that it tore out from public housing redevelopment site for purposes of installation of new cabinets; case did not concern cabinets manufactured, but rather subcontractor's refusal to assume duties which general contractor obligated itself to perform pursuant to contract with public housing authority. J.O. Hooker & Sons v. Roberts Cabinet Co., 683 So. 2d 396 (Miss. 1996).

Even adopting lessee's contention that truck-rental and service contract, which provided that lessee would purchase rented trucks on cancellation of contract within first three years of contract's operation, was actually a sale that was subject to provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, lessee's reliance on Uniform Commercial Code remedies was misplaced where evidence did not show proper and timely rejection of the goods under either UCC § 2-607(2) and (3)(a) or in the manner required by the contract itself. Furthermore, since lessee's defenses, in action for deficiency arising out of lessee's refusal to purchase rented trucks, related solely to alleged inadequacy of services provided by lessor and not to trucks themselves, and since remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code apply only to sale of goods and not to sale of services (see UCC § 2-102), lessee could not avail itself of UCC remedies relating to nonconforming goods. Pepsico Truck Rental, Inc. v. Eastern Foods, Inc., 145 Ga. App. 410, 243 S.E.2d 662 (1978).

Contract between general contractor and subcontractor under which subcontractor was to complete cement construction work on apartment-tower project was transaction that, although calling for both labor and materials, had as its essence performance of services rather than sale and passage of title to goods (see UCC § 2-102) and thus was not governed by Uniform Commercial Code. Freeman v. Shannon Constr., Inc., 560 S.W.2d 732, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 867 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 14, 1978) (rejecting subcontractor's contention that essence of agreement was sale of 4815 cubic yards of cement).

Contract for sale and installation of carpeting in large apartment complex was primarily for sale, rather than installation, of such carpeting and thus was subject to UCC Art 2 on sales. Snyder v. Herbert Greenbaum & Assocs., 38 Md. App. 144, 380 A.2d 618 (1977).

Test for determining whether UCC Art 2 on sales applies to mixed sale and services contract is not whether contract is mixed but, granting that it is mixed, whether its predominant purpose, reasonably stated, is rendition of services with goods being incidentally involved (for example, contract with artist for painting) or whether it is sale transaction with labor being incidentally involved (for example, installation of water heater in bathroom). Snyder v. Herbert Greenbaum & Assocs., 38 Md. App. 144, 380 A.2d 618 (1977).

Test as to whether mixed-goods-and-services contract comes under UCC Article 2 is whether predominant purpose of such contract, reasonably stated, is rendition of services with sale of goods being incidentally involved, or whether contract is primarily sales transaction with rendition of services being incidentally involved. Air Heaters, Inc. v. Johnson Elec., Inc., 258 N.W.2d 649, 5 A.L.R.4th 489 (N.D. 1977).

Under UCC 2-102, engineering and construction contract that primarily involved rendition of services and not sale of goods is outside scope of UCC Article 2, even though such contract also involved furnishing of equipment. Lincoln Pulp & Paper Co. v. Dravo Corp., 436 F. Supp. 262 (D. Me. 1977).

Contract for sale of trucks was not contract for sale of goods and, thus, was not governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1) where contract was executed simultaneously with contract for sale of truck manufacturing plant and where contract for sale of trucks was merely incidental and collateral to main object of effecting transfer of truck manufacturing plant. Dynamics Corp. of Am. v. International Harvester Co., 429 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

Contract for sale of various bowling alley equipment, including, inter alia, lanes and ball returns, to be delivered and installed by seller, who warranted that lanes would be free from defects in workmanship and materials and that they would meet "all ABC specifications," was a "transaction in goods" under UCC § 2-102 and came within Article 2 of Code, despite fact that contract involved substantial amounts of labor; items sold under contract were "goods" as defined in UCC § 2-105(1) since they were all items of tangible property, normally in flow of commerce, portable at time of contract; contract was not construction contract, outside Code coverage, nor was it excluded from coverage merely because it was "mixed" contract for goods and services. Bonebrake v. Cox, 499 F.2d 951 (8th Cir. Iowa 1974).

Where the assets of a going concern are sold, Article 2 will apply to transfer with respect to the goods portion although not applicable to the non-goods portion of the transaction. Foster v. Colorado Radio Corp., 381 F.2d 222 (10th Cir. N.M. 1967).

5. Secured transactions.

As secured transactions are not governed by the provisions of Article 2 it follows that the "unconscionable" section of the Code (§ 2-302) does not apply to a secured transaction and it is therefore no objection that the advantage that a creditor has under a secured transaction may appear inequitable or even unconscionable. In re Advance Printing & Litho Co., 277 F. Supp. 101 (W.D. Pa. 1967), aff'd, 387 F.2d 952 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

6. Specified classes of buyers.

Even though contract for sale of used tractor to farmer contained complete disclaimer of warranties in accordance with UCC § 2-316, UCC § 2-102 states that Article 2 does not "impair or repeal any statute regulating sales to consumers, farmers or other specified classes of buyers," and hence disclaimer provision was void since it was in conflict with statute relating to purchase of tractors which made such disclaimers void; once disclaimer provision was voided, UCC § 2-314 injected implied warranty of merchantability into contract for sale of tractor. Hoffman Motors, Inc. v. Enockson, 240 N.W.2d 353 (N.D. 1976).

7. What constitutes goods.

Carpeting is "goods" under UCC § 2-102. Trust Co. Bank v. Barrett Distribs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 959 (S.D. Ind. 1978).

Contract to publish, distribute, and sell book was not contract for sale of "goods" within meaning of UCC § 2-102. Mallin v. University of Miami, 354 So. 2d 1227 (Fla. App. 1978).

Term "goods" as employed in UCC § 2-102 applies to sale by merchant of used, as well as new, goods; thus, buyer of used truck was entitled to bring action against seller for breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Moore v. Burt Chevrolet, Inc., 39 Colo. App. 11, 563 P.2d 369 (1977).

In action for damages for destruction of swimming pool, although there was no proof that pool was defective, there was proof that negligent installation of liner resulted in destruction of pool, and warranty provisions of UCC § 2-314 and 2-315 applied since sale was primarily one of goods as defined in UCC § 2-102 and services were necessary to insure that goods were merchantable and fit for particular purpose. Riffe v. Black, 548 S.W.2d 175 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

Where cotton farmer entered into contract with cotton merchants to sell cotton crop to be produced on 800 acres, where farmer was obligated by terms of lease to pay one-fourth of his cotton crop as rent, and where as result of flood conditions farmer was only able to plant 717 acres rather than expected 1066 acres, cotton merchants were entitled to whole crop and lessor's remedies, if any, were against lessee; when read together UCC §§ 2-102, 2-105 and 2-107 indicated that forward contracts for sale of yet to be grown cotton fell within § 2-402(1) which subordinates rights of seller's unsecured creditors in subject matter to those of buyer. Ralli-

Coney, Inc. v. Gates, 528 F.2d 572 (5th Cir. 1976).

Purchase of horse, apparently for recreational use, was covered by UCC Article 2 even though it was possibly casual sale. Key v. Bagen, 136 Ga. App. 373, 221 S.E.2d 234 (1975).

Contract to sell future cotton crop was sale of goods within scope of Article 2 of UCC. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 379 F. Supp. 1075 (M.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Sale of laundry and drycleaning business which was nothing more than sale of equipment, furniture, and other movables of business and which did not involve non-goods such as goodwill or real property, was a transaction in goods and came within scope of Article 2 of UCC; thus, where buyer breached contract to purchase laundry and drycleaning business and seller elected to resell business at private sale, but failed to give buyer notice of intention to resell, of time, place and manner of resale or of seller's intention to sue buyer for difference between contract price and amount ultimately realized on resale, seller was not entitled to recover difference between resale price and contract price as provided in UCC § 2-706, but was entitled to measure of damages prescribed by UCC § 2-708(1). Miller v. Belk, 23 N.C. App. 1, 207 S.E.2d 792 (1974).

Except as limited by UCC § 2-102, provisions of sales of goods chapter of UCC are applicable to sale of motor vehicle and, under UCC § 2-312(1), dealer in motor vehicles warrants he will convey good title free from any security interest or other lien or encumbrance of which buyer is without knowledge when contract of sale is made; absent express contractual language or circumstances under which person buying motor vehicle knows or should have known that only limited warranty is intended in accord with UCC § 2-312(2) (but only to extent that such warranty can be limited), automobile dealer having authority to expose floor-planned cars for sale in ordinary course of business binds his mortgagee to deliver title to any vehicle so sold when payment is made to dealer and whether or not dealer remits proceeds to his mortgagee. Levin v.

Nielsen, 37 Ohio App. 2d 29, 306 N.E.2d 173 (1973).

Under New York law, Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code applies to the sale of securities. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Buyer.
2. Consumer goods.
3. Good faith.
4. Goods.
5. Receipt.
6. Sale.
7. Seller.

1. Buyer.

Truck driver who obtained gasoline for his employer's truck and charged gasoline to his employer was not in privity with service station that sold gasoline and, thus, could not maintain action for breach of warranty against service station for injuries sustained when his truck became disabled and was struck by another vehicle allegedly as result of water in gasoline; under UCC § 2-103(1)(a) truck driver was not “buyer” of gasoline, but mere agent of buyer to whom UCC sales warranties did not extend; under UCC § 2-314 employee of buyer was not in privity with seller. Weaver v. Ralston Mo- tor Hotel, Inc., 135 Ga. App. 536, 218 S.E.2d 260 (1975).

A buyer who acquires property from one who has a voidable title must show that he was a “good faith purchaser for value”, which requires “honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing”. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

A licensed automobile wrecker and junk dealer who purchased a two-year-old station wagon from a thief for $900 by placing $300 down, and who sold the vehicle for $1200 that same day, although he never obtained a bill of sale or registration certificate, was liable to the two owners, since the car had not been entrusted to a merchant who dealt in used cars and the defendant had not demonstrated that he was a “buyer in ordinary course of business” or that he was a “good faith purchaser for value”. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

A hotel manager who, on behalf of his employer, personally purchased from a state liquor store champagne intended for the use and consumption by guests of the hotel was a buyer as that term is defined in the instant section. Yentzer v. Taylor Wine Co., 414 Pa. 272, 199 A.2d 463 (1964).

2. Consumer goods.

Sandblasting hoods and respirators used by employees in course of their employment are not consumer goods within meaning of UCC § 9-109(1) and UCC § 2-103(3). Simmons v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 433 F. Supp. 747 (S.D. Ala. 1976), aff'd sub nom. Love v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 560 F.2d 1021 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977), aff'd, 560 F.2d 1022 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977).

3. Good faith.

Where buyer of natural gas under 19 output contracts with producer-seller, after discovering that charts measuring seller's production and delivery of gas from wells involved in some of such contracts had been altered to show more protection and delivery of gas to buyer than was actually the case, stopped payments on all contracts entered into with seller, instead of only those affected by the altered charts, (1) buyer's action constituted under UCC § 2-703 repudiation of whole of each contract that was not affected by altered charts, (2) buyer's action did not constitute repudiation of contracts that were affected by altered charts, and (3) under UCC § 2-103(1)(b), buyer acted in commercially unreasonable manner with regard to all 19 contracts by insisting that it recover all excess payments made to seller, and also all amounts due on unpaid loans made by it to seller, before it would resume paying for seller's deliveries of gas. Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. v. Larry H. Wright, Inc., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 95, 443 F. Supp. 14 (S.D. Ohio 1977).

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of supposedly used Ferrari sports car of limited availability that seller ordered for buyer from another dealer, where car on seller's receipt thereof proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself, and where parties were shown to have modified in writing prior oral agreement under which buyer was to be sold "used" car in suit, seller's conduct in claiming that since such car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered did not meet standards of good faith imposed by UCC § 1-201(19) and UCC § 2-103(1)(b); and when car was identified to contract buyer had right of replevin under UCC § 2-716(3), since he was unable to effect cover and there was no other way for him to protect himself against loss of his deposit on car. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

"Honesty-in-fact" definition of good faith in UCC § 1-201(19) is to be distinguished from definition of good faith in UCC § 2-103(1)(b), since latter definition includes not only honesty in fact but also observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in trade. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

When the UCC intends to apply a concept of "good faith" beyond its definition in UCC § 1-201, subd 19 as "honesty in fact", a broader definition is provided, e.g. UCC § 2-103, subd 1(b), which adds the words "observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in the trade" to the definition of "good faith" as between merchants. Advanced Alloys, Inc. v. Sergeant Steel Corp., 72 Misc. 2d 614 (1973), rev'd on other grounds, 79 Misc. 2d 149, 360 N.Y.S.2d 142 (1973).

Section referred to an example of explicit requirement that party exercise more than "honesty in fact." Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

It is unreasonable to conclude that the drafters of the Code intended the UCC § 2-103(1)(b) definition of good faith to be applied to merchant-buyers throughout the entire Code; this definition would not be applied to question of rights and obligations of buyer and secured creditor, one to the other, a transaction expressly controlled by Article 9, and more specifically by the good faith definition of UCC § 1-201(19). Sherrock v. Commercial Credit Corp., 290 A.2d 648 (Del. 1972).

Requirements for establishing one's self as "good faith" buyer vary depending on commercial status of purchaser; and individual who purchases tractor for his own personal use is not held to same degree of sophistication in ascertaining existence of security interest on that tractor as is merchant who regularly deals in business of buying and selling tractors. Swift v. J.I. Case Co., 266 So. 2d 379 (Fla. App. 1972), cert. denied, 271 So. 2d 147 (Fla. 1972).

Commercially prudent tractor merchant may not purchase tractor from another dealer and thereby acquire title free of any prior recorded security interests without first making good faith inquiry into existence of such previously perfected interests. Swift v. J.I. Case Co., 266 So. 2d 379 (Fla. App. 1972), cert. denied, 271 So. 2d 147 (Fla. 1972).

An oral agreement between property owners and a handyman whereby the handyman agreed to purchase a heating unit for owners and install it in the owners' building did not create between the parties a relationship of buyer and seller, so as to entitle the owners to a recovery against the handyman on the ground of a breach of implied warranty of merchantability and of fitness for the purpose. Victor v. Barzaleski, 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 698 (1959).

4. Goods.

A motor vehicle is "goods." Park County Implement Co. v. Craig, 397 P.2d 800 (Wyo. 1964).

5. Receipt.

Where (1) buyer paid for motorcycle in full, was given necessary registration and insurance papers, and registered machine and secured liability insurance for it prior to its theft from seller's premises, although its license plates were never affixed, (2) seller agreed to hold machine on seller's premises until buyer returned from vacation, and (3) machine was stolen from seller's premises without negligence on seller's part, court held (1) that evidence showed that buyer had never exercised dominion or control over motorcycle, and (2) that in such situation, seller must bear risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3), which provides that risk of loss passes to buyer on his receipt of goods if seller is merchant, and UCC § 2-103(1)(c), which provides that "receipt" of goods means taking physical possession of them.

Ramos v. Wheel Sports Ctr., 96 Misc. 2d 646 (1978).

Regardless of whether the contract involves delivery at the seller's place of business or at the situs of the goods, a merchant seller cannot transfer risk of loss and it remains on him, under UCC §§ 2-509(3) and 2-103(1)(c), until actual receipt by the buyer, even though full payment has been made and the buyer has been notified that the goods are at his disposal. The underlying theory is that a merchant who is to make physical delivery at his own place of business continues to control the goods in the meantime and can be expected to insure his interest in them. Ramos v. Wheel Sports Ctr., 96 Misc. 2d 646 (1978).

Under UCC where goods are delivered to buyer under contract for sale and are physically received by him, they are in his possession. North Platte State Bank v. Production Credit Ass'n, 189 Neb. 44, 200 N.W.2d 1 (1972).

A buyer receives goods when he takes physical possession of them. Tennessee-Virginia Constr. Co. v. Willingham, 117 Ga. App. 290, 160 S.E.2d 444 (1968).

6. Sale.

There is no "sale" to a beauty parlor customer of materials used in giving her treatments, for the materials used in the performance of such services are patently incidental to the treatment itself and do not constitute a purchase of an article by the customer. Epstein v. Giannattasio, 25 Conn. Supp. 109, 197 A.2d 342 (1963).

7. Seller.

Purchaser of automobile battery who was injured when battery exploded could not recover under theory of implied warranty of merchantability from organization which allowed its name to be printed on battery because organization did not sell or contract to sell battery and was therefore not in position to make such warranty; organization was not liable for misrepresentation because no evidence was presented that plaintiff relied on name of organization in purchasing battery. Harmon v. National Automotive Parts Ass'n, 720 F. Supp. 79 (N.D. Miss. 1989).

Action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability against manufacturer, as seller, may be maintained by buyer because manufacturer qualified as seller under UCC § 2-103(1)(d) as person who sells or contracts to sell goods, although motor home in question had not been purchased directly from manufacturer. Hargett v. Midas Int'l Corp., 508 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1987).

An automobile manufacturer was a "seller" within the meaning of § 75-2-103(1)(d), where the retailer's sales contract accompanied by the manufacturer's warranty were so closely linked both in time of delivery and subject matter that they blended into a single unit at the time of sale. Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v. Novak, 418 So. 2d 801 (Miss. 1982).

In action for breach of implied warranty of fitness of isomax reactor charge heater, where buyer contracted directly with defendant corporation to purchase a completed product (isomax unit and hydrogen plant) assembled by defendant, and where defendant assembled component parts into final completed product and maintained title thereto until product was sold to buyer, defendant was "seller" within meaning of UCC § 2-103(1)(d), and buyer could bring action against it for breach of the implied warranty. Signal Oil & Gas Co. v. Universal Oil Prods., 572 S.W.2d 320 (1978).

Since Uniform Commercial Code does not limit definition of "seller" contained in UCC § 2-103(1)(d) to immediate seller of product but defines seller as "person who sells or contracts to sell goods," manufacturer of mobile homes which sold homes to retail buyers was "seller" under the code. Nobility Homes of Tex., Inc. v. Shivers, 557 S.W.2d 77 (Tex. 1977).

In action by buyer of new 1970 Lincoln Continental automobile against dealer and manufacturer, in which buyer alleged seller's breach of warranty and buyer's justifiable revocation of acceptance of vehicle, manufacturer was not "seller" under UCC § 2-103(1)(d), on theory that dealer from whom buyer actually purchased vehicle was "agent" of manufacturer, where (1) sales contract expressly recited that buyer understood that no principal-and-agent relationship existed between dealer and manufacturer, (2) dealer's franchise agreement with manufacturer also expressly stated that dealer was not manufacturer's agent, and (3) no other evidence supported conclusion that dealer was manufacturer's agent in sale of vehicle to buyer. Thus, manufacturer was entitled to directed verdict since buyer, to be entitled to remedy of revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608 as against manufacturer, was required to prove existence of buyer-seller relationship, and such proof was absent. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144, 20 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 899 (1976) (also observing that ordinarily automobile dealer's only attribute as agent of manufacturer is authority to extend manufacturer's limited warranty to dealer's purchasers).

In action for recovery of purchase price of accounting machine and accounting system allegedly sold to plaintiff by defendant through its agent, trial court properly awarded damages to plaintiff based on breach of both express and implied warranties, notwithstanding defendant's claims that trial court erred in finding it sold machine and system in question to plaintiff, when in fact it sold machine to leasing company which in turn leased it to plaintiff, and that transaction did not fall within scope of Article 2 of UCC and, accordingly, was barred by statute of limitations for oral contract actions. Leasing company was financing agency and, as such, held security interest in subject matter transaction, and defendant was seller based on fact that: (1) equipment was shipped and installed by defendants; (2) leasing company did not select or inspect equipment; (3) leasing company was not manufacturer or dealer in like equipment; (4) monthly payments under lease were calculated to return to leasing company purchase price, sales tax and interest; (5) it was not contemplated equipment would be returned to leasing company; and (6) renewal rental was for nominal amount and extended to period beyond usable life of equipment. Atlas Indus., Inc. v. National Cash Register Co., 216 Kan. 213, 531 P.2d 41 (1975).

Mechanical contracting firm that accepted order to supply custom cooling equipment which would conform to specifications supplied by buyer and that guaranteed its work for period of one year against defects was (1) "seller" as defined in UCC § 2-103(1)(d), and (2) "a merchant with respect to goods of that kind," i.e., with respect to cooling system, as provided in UCC § 2-314(1). Frantz, Inc. v. Blue Grass Hams, Inc., 520 S.W.2d 313 (Ky. 1974).

Auto manufacturer who sold autos only to authorized dealers was not "seller" of auto to retail purchaser. Ford Motor Co. v. Pittman, 227 So. 2d 246 (Fla. App. 1969), cert. denied, 237 So. 2d 177 (Fla. 1970).

An Illinois florist who receives interstate telegraphic orders for retail sales of flowers in Illinois is a seller, his sales are present sales made in the state whether the contract is unilateral or bilateral, and title to the flowers passes in Illinois, and the sale is not one for resale which would be true if the seller were the out-of-state florist who telegraphs the order; and the Illinois florist is subject to that state's retailers' occupational tax on such sales. O'Brien v. Isaacs, 32 Ill. 2d 105, 203 N.E.2d 890 (1965).

§ 75-2-104. Definitions: "merchant"; "between merchants"; "financing agency."

(1) "Merchant" means a person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his occupation holds himself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction or to whom such knowledge or skill may be attributed by his employment of an agent or broker or other intermediary who by his occupation holds himself out as having such knowledge or skill.

(2) "Financing agency" means a bank, finance company or other person who in the ordinary course of business makes advances against goods or documents of title or who by arrangement with either the seller or the buyer intervenes in ordinary course to make or collect payment due or claimed under the contract for sale, as by purchasing or paying the seller's draft or making advances against it or by merely taking it for collection whether or not documents of title accompany the draft. "Financing agency" includes also a bank or other person who similarly intervenes between persons who are in the position of seller and buyer in respect to the goods (Section 2-707) [Section 75-2-707].

(3) "Between merchants" means in any transaction with respect to which both parties are chargeable with the knowledge or skill of merchants.

1. In general.

Contract for sale of two radio stations was not agreement for sale of “goods,” to which Article 2 of UCC would apply, where nature of transaction, intention of parties as reflected by writing, and lack of specific reference to designated assets rendered inescapable conclusion that letter agreement was one integrated contract for sale of businesses of two radio stations, including their tangible and intangible assets, as going concern. Field v. Golden Triangle Broadcasting, Inc., 451 Pa. 410, 305 A.2d 689 (1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1158, 94 S. Ct. 916, 39 L. Ed. 2d 110 (1974).

A purchaser of a product under a trade or patent name receives no implied warranty of fitness of use for any particular purpose, but does receive an implied warranty that the goods are of merchantable quality. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 55 Misc. 2d 529 (1967).

Even in the absence of a written agreement with respect to every term of a contract, great weight attaches to the course of dealing of the parties, and where it appears from the conduct of the parties that their mode of calculating price, although not accepted formally by signature of a written instrument, was adhered to by both parties during an extensive course of dealing, during which the purchaser received, accepted, and paid for over $800,000 worth of merchandise, this course of dealing must be held applicable and governing with respect to remaining merchandise which was received, accepted, but not paid for. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 236 F. Supp. 879 (W.D. Pa. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

2. Merchants.

Although, through training and years of experience, the plaintiff may have possessed or acquired special knowledge, skills, and expertise about tractors, this did not make him a “professional,” equal in the marketplace with a company that sold and repaired tractors. Davidson v. North Cent. Parts, Inc., 737 So. 2d 1015 (Miss. Ct. App. 1998).

In breach-of-warranty action for damages by buyer of allegedly defective dump trailers against manufacturer-seller, court held (1) that buyer and its ultimate Mexican customers were “merchants” within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); (2) that seller was “merchant” within meaning of both UCC § 2-104(1) and § 2-314(1); (3) that telephoned order for 20 additional trailers was not enforceable under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) because it did not come within exceptions to such statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3); (4) that “specially manufactured goods” exception in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) applies only when seller, rather than buyer, seeks to escape statute-of-frauds defense; (5) that since three trailers purchased under valid written contract were put to improper use by buyer’s Mexican customers, rather than being used for their “ordinary purposes,” no breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) occurred; (6) that use of trailers for improper purposes, rather than for their stated “particular purpose,” prevented recovery under implied warranty of fitness in UCC § 2-315; (7) that buyer could not recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) because it failed to prove that it had relied on statements in manufacturer-seller's brochure either prior to or contemporaneously with making of parties' contract; and (8) that since buyer had no right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject two unused and undamaged trailers, manufacturer-seller was not required to retake them or to refund their purchase price to buyer. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Where seller sold tractor and trailer units all over United States, selling about 1,000 trucks in good business year, and exported to countries, particularly Singapore, Malaysia, Mexico, and Central America, proof established that buyers and ultimate customers were likewise experienced in buying and selling dump-trailers and their utilization respectively, therefore seller, under 75-2-104 was merchant in that he customarily dealt in buying and selling of tractors. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

A provision in an agreement between plaintiff subcontractor and defendant general contractor set out in a letter sent by plaintiff to defendant whereby plaintiff, in confirming an oral agreement, stated that defendant would pay for all steel as billed in the event that defendant was not awarded a contract on a construction project, is, standing alone, a contract for the sale of goods. While defendant is not a steel merchant, since it is not in the business of buying and selling steel, defendant, like plaintiff, is nonetheless a "merchant" "having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction" (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-104, subd [1]) for purposes of the merchant exception to the Statute of Frauds, which makes an oral contract for the sale of goods between merchants enforceable against a party who receives written confirmation of the existing oral agreement and does not give "written notice of objection to its contents" within 10 days after it is received. (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-201, subd [2].) Accordingly, based on all the evidence, defendant is bound by an oral agreement to purchase the steel from plaintiff. Pecker Iron Works, Inc. v. Sturdy Concrete Co. Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 998 (1978).

In action for seller's refusal to deliver corn and soybeans to buyer, evidence was sufficient to show that seller had held himself out, within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), as having knowledge or skill peculiar to corn and soybeans, so as to constitute seller a "merchant" under exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2). Currituck Grain, Inc. v. Powell, 38 N.C. App. 7, 246 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

Where buyer, on July 23, 1973, telephoned grain seller about buying wheat and seller said he might let buyer have 40,000 bushels, subject to buyer's sending written confirmation of contract for seller's approval; where such written confirmation, because of error by buyer, was sent to incorrect address and not received by seller until August 17, 1973; where seller, on July 31, 1973, informed buyer by phone that change should be made in contract, and buyer sent written confirmation of such change to incorrect address; and where seller, on August 21, 1973, wrote buyer that seller was repudiating contract because of provision in confirmation of contract giving buyer option to cancel, (1) buyer and seller were "merchants" under UCC § 2-104(1); (2) buyer's written confirmation of contract, which seller did not receive until August 17, 1973, was not received within reasonable time under UCC § 2-201(2); (3) seller's objection on August 21, 1973 to buyer's confirmation of contract, because of clause giving buyer option to cancel agreement, was made within ten-day period prescribed by UCC § 2-201(2); and (4) seller never admitted existence of valid contract so as to permit its enforcement under UCC § 2-201(3)(b). Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

Manufacturer which advertised in trade journals that it possessed expertise in field and would design conveyor-stacker equipment for use in a purchaser's business was "merchant" under UCC § 2-104(1). Barney Mach. Co. v. Continental M.D.M., Inc., 434 F. Supp. 596 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

Mere fact that lender accepted late payments from automobile purchaser on five different occasions did not operate as waiver of conditional sales contract provisions relating to timeliness of installment payments, in view of contract language to effect that waiver or indulgence of any default or failure to exercise any right under contract would not be construed as agreement to modify terms of instrument or to operate as waiver of any subsequent default, and particularly in view of fact that on one occasion purchaser obtained written 90-day extension of due date of note from lender; contract provision in question was not rendered inoperative by UCC § 2-209(2), even though contract provision was not separately set out and separately executed by borrower, since UCC provision applies only to merchants and there was no evidence in record that automobile purchaser was "merchant" as defined in UCC § 2-104(1). Trust Co. v. Montgomery, 136 Ga. App. 742, 222 S.E.2d 196 (1975).

Lessor of car wash systems, which had handled over forty lease transactions within period of several months, was not "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104, where it did not build, manufacture or sell any equipment or machines of kind involved in transaction, but rather was in business of purchasing or financing purchase of equipment specifically selected and specified by an approved lessee. All-States Leasing Co. v. Bass, 96 Idaho 873, 538 P.2d 1177, 91 A.L.R.3d 863 (1975).

Where prior to sale in question defendants had sold all cattle they raised or fed to packers, sale to third defendant was first sale to non-packer and "was forced by financial difficulties," and was dealing in different classification of stock than cow and calf for resale, defendants were not merchants under UCC, although third defendant, who was trader and bought and resold, and acted as agent for sales of cow and calf units, was well as steers, heifers, feeders, and other "goods," was merchant. Fear Ranches, Inc. v. Berry, 470 F.2d 905 (10th Cir. N.M. 1972).

One is not entitled to summary judgment as having bought goods free of any security interest because of purchase in ordinary course of business from merchant entrusted with goods under UCC §§ 2-403, 9-307, where status of seller as "merchant" has been assumed or concluded. Greater S. Distrib. Co. v. Usry, 124 Ga. App. 525, 184 S.E.2d 486 (1971).

Where plaintiff bought truck from a merchant in the ordinary course of business, without knowledge of a security agreement entered into by the seller and later assigned to a bank, in repossessing the truck after the sale, bank was liable for conversion and damages. Makransky v. Long Island Reo Truck Co., 58 Misc. 2d 338 (1968).

When it is apparent from the record that both parties customarily dealt in the goods involved, it is clear that they are merchants. Reich v. Helen Harper, Inc., 3 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1048 (1966, NY Civ Ct).

A wholesaler and retailer, being clearly merchants as defined in this section, the requirement of subsection (2) is satisfied when the retailer receives invoices on the wholesaler's letterhead stating the quantity and price terms of goods sold and sends no written objections within 10 days after their receipt. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

3. —Farmers as.

Farmers whose particular factual situation falls into the definition of merchant contained in § 75-2-104 may be a merchant class. Vince v. Broome, 443 So. 2d 23 (Miss. 1983).

The average farmer with no particular knowledge or experience in selling, buying, or dealing in future community transactions, who sells only the crops he raises to local elevators for cash or who places his grain in storage under one of the federal loan programs, is not a "merchant" within the meaning of the exception to the statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2). Although through training and years of experience, a farmer may well possess or acquire special knowledge, skill, and expertise in the production of grain crops, this does not make him a professional in business, within the meaning of UCC § 2-104(1) and Official Comments 1 and 2, who is equal in the marketplace with a grain-buying and selling company whose officers, agents, and employees are constantly conversant with the daily fluctuations in the commodity market, the many factors that affect that market, and its intricate practices and procedures. Terminal Grain Corp. v. Freeman, 270 N.W.2d 806, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1 (S.D. 1978) (holding, in buyer's action for farmer's failure to deliver grain under oral contract of sale, that since farmer was not a "merchant" within meaning of exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2) defense of statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) barred any recovery by buyer).

Farmer was merchant under UCC § 2-104 and thus came within "merchant exception" to UCC statute of frauds with respect to oral contract for delivery of soybeans where, inter alia, farmer had sold large quantities of corn, as well as smaller quantities of potatoes and soybeans under forward contracts for five or six years, where farmer had traded on Chicago Board Trade and kept up with market news, and where there was nothing to indicate that method of making forward contracts for corn differed in any respect from those for soybeans. Continental Grain Co. v. Harbach, 400 F. Supp. 695 (N.D. Ill. 1975).

Sellers of soybeans, who breached oral agreement to deliver soybeans to plaintiff buyer, were "merchants" under UCC § 2-104(1) and were liable, under exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2), for their breach of such oral agreement when they failed to object within ten days to buyer's written confirmation of the oral contract where evidence showed that sellers, despite their contention that they were merely farmers and not merchants, (1) had acted in such a way as to cause others to believe that they had special knowledge and skill in grain dealing, (2) had advertised themselves as grain dealers, and (3) had, in addition to selling their own crops, bought crops of others and sold such crops to wholesalers. Cargill, Inc. v. Gaard, 84 Wis. 2d 138, 267 N.W.2d 22 (1978).

In action for seller's refusal to deliver corn and soybeans to buyer, evidence was sufficient to show that seller had held himself out, within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), as having knowledge or skill peculiar to corn and soybeans, so as to constitute seller a "merchant" under exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2). Currituck Grain, Inc. v. Powell, 38 N.C. App. 7, 246 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

Farmer was merchant within UCC § 2-104 definition in that he was professional in business of growing and selling crops he raised, his livelihood depended on expertise with which he sold, as well as raised, crops and to that end he stayed informed as to market prices and was knowledgeable in business of selling; thus, he was bound by oral contract for sale of wheat where he received written confirmation of contract from buyer and did not give written objection to any of its terms within ten days of receipt as provided by UCC § 2-201(2). Nelson v. Union Equity Coop. Exch., 548 S.W.2d 352, 95 A.L.R.3d 471 (Tex. 1977).

Seller was not "merchant," as defined by UCC § 2-104(1), with respect to sale of corn and therefore was not bound to oral contract under UCC § 2-201(2), even though buyer sent confirmation notice to seller following oral agreement, since seller was not in business of selling corn but, rather, conducted cattle feeding operation, growing grain for that purpose and selling grain only when it was surplus to cattle feeding needs. However, seller's delivery of corn in approximate quantity called for in oral agreement, and its acceptance by buyer, constituted part performance under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) sufficient to take contract out of statute of frauds even though such conduct was consistent with making of spot sale at current market price. Gerner v. Vasby, 75 Wis. 2d 660, 250 N.W.2d 319, 97 A.L.R.3d 897 (1977).

Where buyer of soybeans sent written confirmation of oral contract to farmer and where farmer sold no crops or livestock except those which he raised, had limited experience in selling crops and no other business experience, and had not done business previously with buyer, farmer-seller did not come within definition of merchant under UCC § 2-104 and thus was not subject to statute of frauds exception relating to transactions between merchants. Sand Seed Serv., Inc. v. Poeckes, 249 N.W.2d 663 (Iowa 1977).

In action by grain buyer against farmer to recover damages for farmer's failure to deliver corn and soybeans under alleged oral contract, farmer's affidavit in support of his motion for summary judgment did not establish that he was casual or inexperienced seller in corn and soybeans, the "goods involved in the transaction," thereby establishing that he was not a merchant and thus entitled to defense of statute of frauds, notwithstanding he received written confirmation of contract from buyer, where affidavit established farmer's prior experience in trucking from 1960 to 1970, that he farmed during 1970, 1971 and 1974 and that one-half his gross income in 1971 and 1972 derived from livestock, but where affidavit did not establish whether farmer had ever negotiated with grain dealers prior to 1974, whether he had ever sold corn or soybeans previously, or whether he had knowledge of customs and practices peculiar to marketing of these grains. Currituck Grain, Inc. v. Powell, 28 N.C. App. 563, 222 S.E.2d 1 (1976).

Farmer who had been engaged in farming for 34 years, who had approximately 180 acres of corn and 150 acres of soybeans under cultivation, and who, for period of at least five years, had sold his crops to grain elevators both in "cash sales" and "future contracts" was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); thus, written confirmations of two oral agreements for sale of soybeans, sent by buyers to farmer were sufficient under UCC § 2-201. Sierens v. Clausen, 60 Ill. 2d 585, 328 N.E.2d 559 (1975).

Written confirmation of oral contracts for sale of soybeans satisfied statute of frauds where experienced farmer who had sold grain for at least five years on both cash and future contracts bases was a merchant familiar with practices, customs, and usages of grain business and commodities market. Sierens v. Clausen, 60 Ill. 2d 585, 328 N.E.2d 559 (1975).

Oral contract for purchase and sale of cotton was unenforceable against cotton farmer under UCC § 2-201, notwithstanding farmer received written confirmation of contract from buyer and failed to make any objection thereto, since farmer was not "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104; farmer does not solely by his occupation hold himself out as being professional cotton merchant within meaning of UCC § 2-104(2) and, although there was evidence that farmer was knowledgeable seller, there was no evidence that he ever sold anyone's cotton but his own and this was not sufficient to make him dealer within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1). Loeb & Co. v. Schreiner, 294 Ala. 722, 321 So. 2d 199 (1975).

Farmers who regularly sold their crops to grain companies over period of several years were merchants within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1). Campbell v. Yokel, 20 Ill. App. 3d 702, 313 N.E.2d 628 (5th Dist. 1974).

A farmer is not a merchant as defined in subdivision (1) of this section; and the term "merchant" as there defined has its roots in the law merchant concept of a professional in business. Cook Grains, Inc. v. Fallis, 239 Ark. 962, 395 S.W.2d 555 (1965).

4. —Warranties.

In action against sellers of used automobile and repairman to recover for personal injuries suffered by plaintiffs when they were struck by automobile while it was being driven by buyer, plaintiffs could not recover from sellers on theory that there was express warranty from sellers to buyer that automobile was free from defects, including defects from repair of automobile, since plaintiffs had no contract relation with sellers and were not within scope of UCC § 2-318; nor did they come within judicial exception to privity requirement inasmuch as sellers were neither merchants within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), nor engaged in business of selling automobiles. Similarly, plaintiffs could not recover against repairman on breach of warranty theory, there being no privity of contract between plaintiff and repairman, and any warranties, express or implied, that repairman might have given sellers did not extend to plaintiffs. Lemley v. J & B Tire Co., 426 F. Supp. 1376 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

Although seller was unfamiliar with "hoedads" (i.e., forestry tool used for planting seedling trees) and had not previously manufactured hoedad collars, seller did hold itself out, by operating foundry, as having skill in "practice" of casting iron and presumably in selection of materials to be used in manufacturing castings; inasmuch as transaction involved selection of type of metal appropriate for hoedad collars, seller was merchant within meaning of UCC § 2-104. Likewise, for purposes of UCC § 2-314, seller was merchant "with respect to goods of that kind," i.e., castings, seller having in past assisted buyer in choosing particular type of metals to fulfil various tasks in its manufacture of castings. Furthermore, since ordinary purpose of custom-made castings depended on their designated use, since seller knew that castings were to join handle and blade in tree-planting impact tools which occasionally would strike rock but since castings were not fit for this purpose, warranty of merchantability was breached. Valley Iron & Steel Co. v. Thorin, 278 Or. 103, 562 P.2d 1212 (1977).

Sale of repossessed boat by bank did not give rise to implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 where there was no evidence that bank was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), there being no evidence that bank dealt in kind of goods involved in transaction—boats—or that it held itself as having knowledge or skill peculiar to such goods, but rather record indicated sale of boat was no more than isolated transaction by bank; nor did sale give rise to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose within UCC § 2-315, although buyer told bank officer he "was thinking about buying a boat to put into charter service" where there was no evidence that buyer relied upon bank's skill or judgment, or that bank possessed such skill or judgment, that boat was fit for particular purpose of charter service use. Donald v. City Nat'l Bank, 295 Ala. 320, 329 So. 2d 92 (1976).

Manufacturer of blow-molded plastic products was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(9) with respect to plastic wiglet cases, notwithstanding manufacturer produced variety of plastic goods, and wiglet cases produced by manufacturer were subject to implied warranty of merchantability. However, since allegedly defective handle housing walls were result of specifications supplied by distributor that ordered cases and since distributor, who was informed buyer who designed product in issue and held mechanical and design patents covering similar cases, examined 15 pre-production cases, inspecting handles and handle housing by lifting cases and shaking them, any implied warranty of merchantability with respect to handle housings was precluded. Blockhead, Inc. v. Plastic Forming Co., 402 F. Supp. 1017 (D. Conn. 1975).

In action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability, brought against installer of home heating and air conditioning system for damages resulting from failure of condensate removal pump to function properly, jury question was presented on issue whether installer was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 1-104 and UCC § 2-314; fact that installer testified knowledgeably about workings and installation of condensate pumps and that he had recommended that a particular pump be installed in system, supported inference that he had installed and sold other pumps during his years in heating and air conditioning business, but also supported inference that condensate pump sale in question was only one that he had ever made. Storey v. Day Heating & Air Conditioning Co., 56 Ala. App. 81, 319 So. 2d 279 (Civ. App. 1975).

Since seller of used airplane was not merchant as defined in Code § 2-104, there could be no implied warranties attributed to him in sale of airplane. Downs v. Shouse, 18 Ariz. App. 225, 501 P.2d 401 (1972).

5. Financing agency.

Equipment lease transactions were security agreements under UCC § 1-201(37), and leasing corporation was "financing agency" and not seller of equipment under UCC § 2-104(2), where persons desirous of purchasing equipment or machinery applied to corporation for purchase money loan, corporation made commitments to advance money necessary for payment to manufacturer plus sales tax, equipment was shipped by manufacturer directly to purchaser and invoice was sent to corporation, purchaser and corporation thereupon entered into security agreements in form of equipment leases with options to purchase at nominal extra charge, UCC financing statements were thereupon executed and delivered to purchaser and filed by corporation, corporation did not select or inspect any equipment, corporation did not maintain warehouse for storage of equipment or machinery, corporation did not carry leased property as assets on books or take any depreciation deductions, and corporation never took possession of any of leased equipment at end of leased term. In re Sherwood Diversified Services, Inc., 382 F. Supp. 1359 (S.D.N.Y. 1974).

6. Between merchants.

In action by subcontractor against general contractor based on oral agreement that defendant would be liable for steel purchased by plaintiff for construction project that ultimately was not awarded to defendant, court held (1) that while defendant was not a steel merchant because it was not in business of buying and selling steel, it nevertheless was a "merchant" under broad language of UCC § 2-104(1) and (3); and (2) that as a result, merchants' exception in UCC § 2-201(2) to statute of frauds applied and removed oral contract sued on from operation of the statute, since plaintiff had sent letter to defendant confirming parties' oral agreement, such letter was received by defendant, and defendant had failed to give plaintiff, within ten days of receipt of letter, written notice of defendant's objection to letter's contents, as required by UCC § 2-201(2). Pecker Iron Works, Inc. v. Sturdy Concrete Co. Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 998 (1978).

Experienced farmer, who previously sold soy beans, kept abreast of soy bean market, and sold livestock and other farm products from time to time, was "chargeable with the knowledge or skill of merchants" referred to UCC § 2-104(3) in selling his current crop of soy beans; thus, where he offered to sell 1,500 bushels of soy beans for $5 per bushel in cash, and purchaser orally accepted offer and immediately sent him written confirmation, stating terms and standards to be met, and providing that failure to make timely correction was acknowledgement and acceptance of contract as stated, and farmer made no response but sold his soy beans to another, he was liable to purchaser for damages suffered from his breach of the contract. Ohio Grain Co. v. Swisshelm, 40 Ohio App. 2d 203, 318 N.E.2d 428 (1973).

Where plaintiff automobile dealer sold car to second dealer who in turn sold car to defendant buyer, who 15 years previously had had experience as automobile dealer, transaction was not "between merchants" as contemplated by Code § 2-104(3), so as to charge buyer with "knowledge or skill of merchants"; and, although buyer accepted automobile without instrument of title as required by Motor Vehicle Title and Registration Law, and accepted new automobile from non-franchised dealer without receiving manufacturer's certificate of origin to that vehicle, buyer took title to car free from plaintiff dealer's claim, under Code § 2-403(2) and (3). Couch v. Cockroft, 490 S.W.2d 713 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

§ 75-2-105. Definitions: transferability; “goods”; “future” goods; “lot”; “commercial unit.”

(1) “Goods” means all things (including specially manufactured goods) which are movable at the time of identification to the contract for sale other than the money in which the price is to be paid, investment securities (Chapter 8) and things in action. “Goods” also includes the unborn young of animals and growing crops and other identified things attached to realty as described in the section on goods to be severed from realty (Section 2-107) [Section 75-2-107].

(2) Goods must be both existing and identified before any interest in them can pass. Goods which are not both existing and identified are “future” goods. A purported present sale of future goods or of any interest therein operates as a contract to sell.

(3) There may be a sale of a part interest in existing identified goods.

(4) An undivided share in an identified bulk of fungible goods is sufficiently identified to be sold although the quantity of the bulk is not determined. Any agreed proportion of such a bulk or any quantity thereof agreed upon by number, weight or other measure may to the extent of the seller’s interest in the bulk be sold to the buyer who then becomes an owner in common.

(5) “Lot” means a parcel or a single article which is the subject matter of a separate sale or delivery, whether or not it is sufficient to perform the contract.

(6) “Commercial unit” means such a unit of goods as by commercial usage is a single whole for purposes of sale and division of which materially impairs its character or value on the market or in use. A commercial unit may be a single article (as a machine) or a set of articles (as a suite of furniture or an assortment of sizes) or a quantity (as a bale, gross, or carload) or any other unit treated in use or in the relevant market as a single whole.

1. In general.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code as adopted in Pennsylvania there is no requirement that a contract be evidenced by a single instrument, and if the parties wish, they may express their agreement in more than one writing, and in such circumstances the several documents are to be interpreted together, each one contributing, to the extent of its worth, to the ascertainment of the true intent of the parties, and this rule was held applicable to an agreement for the sale of securities. Stern & Co. v. State Loan & Fin. Corp., 238 F. Supp. 901 (D. Del. 1965).

The instant section was referred to in a case involving an agreement for the purchase and sale of an airplane and an oral modification of such contract, in connection with the proposition that both the original contract and the modifications would, by virtue of § 2-102 of the instant chapter be governed by article 2 thereof. Skinner v. Tober Foreign Motors, Inc., 345 Mass. 429, 187 N.E.2d 669 (1963).

The sales article of the Commercial Code does not apply to an agreement for the purchase and sale of the capital stock of a corporation. In re Carter, 390 Pa. 365, 134 A.2d 908 (1957).

2. Goods.

Since UCC does not distinguish between new and used goods, implied warranty of merchantability applies to sale of used motor vehicle. Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

Under UCC § 2-105(1), term "goods" has a very extensive meaning and embraces every species of property which is not real estate, choses in action, investment securities, or the like. Duffee v. Judson, 251 Pa. Super. 406, 380 A.2d 843 (1977).

Where materials manufactured by seller were sent from seller's plant to dam site, materials constituted goods under definition of UCC § 2-105(1) in that they were movable at time of identification to contract; thus, transaction was governed by UCC article 2. Lakeside Bridge & Steel Co. v. Mountain State Constr. Co., 400 F. Supp. 273 (E.D. Wis. 1975).

Statute relating to identification of specific goods before interest in goods passes does not by any means forbid sale of fungible goods without specific identification. Quality Fruit Buyers, Inc. v. Killarney Fruit Co., 269 So. 2d 424 (Fla. App. 1972).

Application of UCC is limited to all things which are movable or severable from realty; UCC does not apply to lumber, bricks, cement and other like building materials unless resultant structure remains personality. Vernali v. Centrella, 28 Conn. Supp. 476, 266 A.2d 200 (1970).

"Goods" has a very extensive meaning and embraces every species of property which is not real estate, except, perhaps, choses in action, investment securities, and the like. Buckley v. New York Post Corp., 260 F. Supp. 282 (D. Conn. 1966), rev'd on other grounds, 373 F.2d 175, 20 A.L.R.3d 942 (2d Cir. Conn. 1967).

3. Particular property as constituting goods.

UCC applies to sales of natural gas, and therefore governs sales contract between oil company and royalty owners in certain Mississippi oil and gas leases; in action by royalty owners seeking unrecovered payments from oil company under leases, gas underground is future goods pursuant to § 75-2-105, and thus no particular gas is sold until it is identified or brought to surface; accordingly, under § 75-2-107(1), contracts are contracts to sell and only become effective as sales when gas is severed from land; where sales contract itself provides that title to gas passes when gas is delivered, gas was not sold until it was produced, and accordingly, basis of royalty should be market value at well at time of production and delivery. Piney Woods Country Life Sch. v. Shell Oil Co., 726 F.2d 225 (5th Cir. 1984), reh'g denied, 750 F.2d 69 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1005, 105 S. Ct. 1868, 85 L. Ed. 2d 161 (1985).

Livestock are "goods" within the meaning of § 75-2-105, and are covered under the law governing commercial transactions. Vince v. Broome, 443 So. 2d 23 (Miss. 1983).

Timber, whether cut or to be cut, falls within the definition of "goods" contained in § 75-2-105(1), and by virtue of § 75-2-107(2), the Sales Article of the Mississippi Uniform Commercial Code expressly applies to timber sales. Bay Springs Forest Prods., Inc. v. Wade, 435 So. 2d 690 (Miss. 1983).

Computer hardware and software package agreement, under which defendant was to install completed system and train plaintiff's employees in its use, whereupon plaintiff would take over complete supervision of system, was agreement for sale of "goods" rather than "services." Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell investment securities that buyer had contracted to resell to third person, which breach caused buyer to make "cover" purchase of other securities to effect such resale, court held (1) that although UCC Art 8 contains no provision for buyer's remedies against seller for breach of contract to purchase securities, and although UCC § 2-105(1) expressly excludes investment securities from definition of "goods" for purposes of UCC Art 2, nevertheless, as indicated by Official Comment 1 to UCC § 2-105, buyer's remedies in Art 2 for breach of contract also apply by analogy to investment security transactions; (2) that under UCC § 2-712(2), buyer was entitled to recover as damages difference between cost of cover and contract price of securities in suit, plus incidental and consequential damages; and (3) that benefits that had accrued to buyer as result of its trading of its interest in securities in suit before seller's breach were not relevant to buyer's measure of damages for such breach. G.A. Thompson & Co. v. Wendell J. Miller Mtg. Co., 457 F. Supp. 996 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

In action to recover amount paid to travel bureau for arranging itinerary and supplying tour for African safari, which plaintiff was unable to take because of defendant's failure to supply tour operator with plaintiff's overseas address while plaintiff was on business trip prior to time tour was to start, defense contention that plaintiff had merely purchased tickets for trip, and that tickets were goods or "things" within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1), was not sustainable because plaintiff had actually contracted for trip and defendant's services as travel agent, instead of only goods or things, and Uniform Commercial Code was therefore inapplicable. Rosen v. DePorter-Butterworth Tours, Inc., 62 Ill. App. 3d 762, 379 N.E.2d 407 (3d Dist. 1978).

Bridge design plans were not "goods" as defined in UCC § 2-105(1), and, thus, implied warranty provisions of Uniform Commercial Code §§ 2-314 and 2-315, did not apply to cause of action based on defect in plans. Department of Transp. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 28 Pa. Commw. 214, 368 A.2d 888 (1977).

In action by feed company on installment sales contracts and security agreements providing for loan to enable defendant to purchase two hog-feeder houses from plaintiff's alleged agent, where houses were defective because they caused pigs placed therein for fattening to become sick and to die, and where plaintiff claimed that it merely financed purchase of such houses and did not sell them to defendant, (1) evidence supported finding that plaintiff's alleged agent was its agent in fact and that plaintiff was bound by agent's acts, including agent's sale of hog houses to defendant; (2) fact that plaintiff acted as financing agency in defendant's purchase of such houses did not preclude finding that plaintiff was also seller of such houses; (3) houses were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1); (4) defendant, by affirmative defense incorporated by reference in counterclaim, gave plaintiff notice of breach of implied warranty of fitness of goods for particular purpose, which notice was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (5) whether such implied warranty of fitness, which was in force at time of sale, was breached by plaintiff was question of fact to be determined by trial court on remand of case. Thompson Farms, Inc. v. Corno Feed Prods., 173 Ind. App. 682, 366 N.E.2d 3, 4 A.L.R.4th 58 (1977).

Notwithstanding contract specified that buyer had thirty days to inspect fabricated pipe, which constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105, trial court erred in holding buyer's performance bond liable by reason of buyer's failure to reject allegedly defective pipe within thirty days of delivery: (1) under UCC § 2-607, buyer was required to notify seller of breach of warranty within a reasonable time after actual or constructive discovery of defects; (2) UCC § 1-204 provides that whenever UCC requires action within reasonable time, any time which is not manifestly unreasonable may be fixed by agreement; (3) seller guaranteed workmanship and material in contract provided claim was made within one year from shipment; and (4) buyer made claim within one year following shipment. United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. North Am. Steel Corp., 335 So. 2d 18 (Fla. App. 1976).

Plaintiff who contracted to compile, edit and publish pamphlets and other printed materials for defendants was entitled to benefit of four year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725, since printed pamphlets and related materials were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1) and since UCC statute of limitations prevailed over general statute of limitations in action based on contract for sale of goods. Lake Wales Publishing Co. v. Florida Visitor, Inc., 335 So. 2d 335 (Fla. App. 1976).

Question of law was presented on issue of whether water supplied to customer was "goods" within meaning of UCC. Moody v. City of Galveston, 524 S.W.2d 583 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e. (Nov. 5, 1975).

Installed sauna heater described in bill of sale as personal property remained "goods" within meaning of UCC § 2-105 where intention to make sauna heater a fixture constituting a permanent accession to real estate did not affirmatively and plainly appear. Centennial Ins. Co. v. Vic Tanny Int'l of Toledo, Inc., 46 Ohio App. 2d 137, 346 N.E.2d 330 (1975).

Purchase of horse, apparently for recreational use, was covered by UCC Article 2 even though it was possibly casual sale. Key v. Bagen, 136 Ga. App. 373, 221 S.E.2d 234 (1975).

Definition of "goods" in UCC § 2-105(1) clearly excludes interests of oil and gas lessee. Casper v. Neubert, 489 F.2d 543 (10th Cir. Okla. 1973).

Contract for sale of cordwood business, including hardwood stumpage growing on defendant's land and certain equipment used in cutting and hauling wood, was transaction in "goods" governed by Sales Article of UCC, even though written contract was headed "Sale of Wood Business." Melms v. Mitchell, 266 Or. 208, 512 P.2d 1336, 65 A.L.R.3d 376 (1973).

Where plaintiff raised sod on several prior occasions and apparently treated it as commercial product, and sod owed its existence to annual maintenance and fertilization, sod was personalty, and sale of sod was within coverage of UCC. Barron v. Edwards, 45 Mich. App. 210, 206 N.W.2d 508 (1973).

Although UCC § 2-105(1) defines "goods" as excluding investment securities, the New York courts, nevertheless, have held that Article 2 applies to the sale of securities. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

Investment securities are expressly excluded from Sales Article of UCC. Lineberger v. Welsh, 290 A.2d 847 (Del. Ch. 1972).

Bareboat charter for period of 18 months is not sale as defined in UCC, and is not kind of lease which has been held to come within Code as "analogous" to sale. Neubros Corp. v. Northwestern Nat'l Ins. Co., 359 F. Supp. 310 (E.D.N.Y. 1972).

The sale of photographs is the sale of "goods" within UCC § 2-105. Carpel v. Saget Studios, Inc., 326 F. Supp. 1331 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

Shares of cooperative stock relative to proprietary lease are "goods" within UCC § 2-105 definition. Silverman v. Alcoa Plaza Assocs., 37 A.D.2d 166 (1st Dep't 1971).

Milk comes within Code definition of "goods". Spiering v. Fairmont Foods Co., 424 F.2d 337 (7th Cir. Ill. 1970).

Compressor, included among sold chattels located on railroad premises, was within goods definition since "movable at the time of identification to the contract for sale." National Compressor Corp. v. Carrow, 417 F.2d 97 (8th Cir. Mo. 1969).

When a blood bank sells blood to a hospital for its use in treating patients there is a sale within Article 2 of the Code. Jackson v. Muhlenberg Hosp., 96 N.J. Super. 314, 232 A.2d 879 (1967), rev'd on other grounds, 53 N.J. 138, 249 A.2d 65 (1969).

United States coins having a numismatic value in excess of the value expressed on their face and pledged as collateral to secure a bank loan are to be considered as "goods" within the meaning of the UCC, and not solely as a medium of exchange. In re Midas Coin Co., 264 F. Supp. 193 (E.D. Mo. 1967), aff'd, 387 F.2d 118 (8th Cir. Mo. 1968).

If the intent of the parties is to treat a diner as personal property it will be governed by Article 2 of the Code. Conte v. Styli, 26 Mass. App. Dec. 73 (1963).

4. —Aircraft and watercraft.

An aircraft is "goods" under UCC § 2-105(1). McCullum Aviation, Inc. v. CIM Assocs., 446 F. Supp. 511 (S.D. Fla. 1978).

Ships are "goods" within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1). Puamier v. Barge BT 1793, 395 F. Supp. 1019 (E.D. Va. 1974).

Ships are "goods" within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1); thus, UCC § 2-401 governed passage of title in connection with sale of tugboat and barge where tugboat and barge were to be delivered at boatyard where they were moored and title passed under UCC § 2-401(3)(b) at time when contract for sale was made. Puamier v. Barge BT 1793, 395 F. Supp. 1019 (E.D. Va. 1974).

Ships are "goods" within meaning of Sales Article of UCC. R.C. Craig, Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 1066 (S.D. Ga. 1972).

Aircraft is movable property and therefore subject to UCC Article 2 under UCC § 2-105 definition of goods. Kiecker v. Pacific Indem. Co., 5 Wash. App. 871, 491 P.2d 244 (1971).

5. —Assets included in sale of business.

Alleged contract for transfer of assets of automobile dealership including, inter alia, parts, work in progress, vehicles, receivables and contracts covering services, was sale of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105, notwithstanding some of the assets to be transferred were not goods within meaning of that provision. De Filippo v. Ford Motor Co., 516 F.2d 1313 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 912, 96 S. Ct. 216, 46 L. Ed. 2d 141 (1975).

Oral contract for sale of automobile dealership was unenforceable under UCC § 2-105 where its subject matter included goods worth more than $500; fact that seller substituted written offer to sell for signing by parties, instead of contract for sale, did not remove transaction from Statute of Frauds where seller did not intentionally fail to disclose that document buyers were signing had been changed to offer. De Filippo v. Ford Motor Co., 378 F. Supp. 456 (E.D. Pa. 1974), rev'd, 516 F.2d 1313 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 912, 96 S. Ct. 216, 46 L. Ed. 2d 141 (1975).

In action arising out of sale of sporting goods business, sale of inventory as part of transaction amounted to sale of "goods" under UCC § 2-105(1) and UCC § 2-607(3)(a) requirement that buyer must within reasonable time notify seller of breach, governed buyer's claim, made 14 months after sale, that seller had fraudulently overstated inventory. Jarstad v. Tacoma Outdoor Recreation, Inc., 10 Wash. App. 551, 519 P.2d 278 (1974), review denied, 83 Wash. 2d 1014 (1974).

Sale of laundry and drycleaning business which was nothing more than sale of equipment, furniture, and other movables of business and which did not involve non-goods such as goodwill or real property, was a transaction in goods and came within scope of Article 2 of UCC; thus, where buyer breached contract to purchase laundry and drycleaning business and seller elected to resell business at private sale, but failed to give buyer notice of intention to resell, of time, place and manner of resale or of seller's intention to sue buyer for difference between contract price and amount ultimately realized on resale, seller was not entitled to recover difference between resale price and contract price as provided in UCC § 2-706, but was entitled to measure of damages prescribed by UCC § 2-708(1). Miller v. Belk, 23 N.C. App. 1, 207 S.E.2d 792 (1974).

Office equipment and furniture of a radio station are goods governed by the Code even though the entire radio station and all of its assets are sold as a going concern. Foster v. Colorado Radio Corp., 381 F.2d 222 (10th Cir. N.M. 1967).

The license, good will, real estate, studios, and transmission equipment of a radio station are not goods within Article 2. Foster v. Colorado Radio Corp., 381 F.2d 222 (10th Cir. N.M. 1967).

6. —Crops.

Crops are included within definition of "goods" in UCC § 2-105(1). Kimball County Grain Coop. v. Yung, 200 Neb. 233, 263 N.W.2d 818 (1978).

Although statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201 was applicable to contract for sale of soybeans which constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105 and also constituted under UCC § 2-107 growing crops capable of severance, seller was prohibited from asserting statute of frauds as defense in action on contract where seller admitted that contract was made. Cargill, Inc., Commodity Mktg. Div. v. Hale, 537 S.W.2d 667 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

Where plaintiff entered into oral contracts with defendant cotton growers for sale of their cotton crops, each involving more than $500 worth of cotton: (1) under UCC §§ 2-105 and 2-107, sale of cotton was sale of goods and, under UCC § 1-201, was not enforceable unless there was writing sufficient to indicate contract for sale had been made, signed by party against whom enforcement was sought; (2) oral contracts between plaintiff and defendants did not come within agency or broker exception to statute of frauds where there were two separate, independent sets of contracts under which defendants agreed to sell to plaintiff, and plaintiff independently contracted to sell to mills; (3) although exception to statute of frauds exists under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) if party against whom enforcement is sought admits in his pleadings, testimony or otherwise in court that contract for sale was made, such exception did not apply in present case since defendants denied under oath that agreement for sale was made with plaintiff and, although trial court made credibility determination adverse to defendants' testimony, such finding did not constitute finding that "admission" exception applied; (4) defendants were not estopped to assert defense of statute of frauds merely because plaintiff had acted in reliance on oral agreement. Cox v. Cox, 292 Ala. 106, 289 So. 2d 609 (1974).

7. —Electricity.

Electricity is "goods", so that 4-year limitations statute of UCC § 2-725 applies to action to recover for damages to electric appliances from supply of excessive voltage. Helvey v. Wabash County

REMC, 151 Ind. App. 176, 278 N.E.2d 608, 48 A.L.R.3d 1055 (1972).

Electricity is not a "good" as defined by UCC § 2-105. Buckeye Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Detroit Edison Co., 38 Mich. App. 325, 196 N.W.2d 316 (1972).

8. —Mobile homes and modular home units.

Mobile home that was movable and not permanently affixed to foundation at time of its identification to contract of sale was included within definition of "goods" contained in UCC § 2-105(1). Duffee v. Judson, 251 Pa. Super. 406, 380 A.2d 843 (1977).

Acquisition of ownership of motor vehicle is governed by Ohio UCC Art 2 on sales, and not Ohio Certificate of Motor Vehicle Title Act, because motor vehicles and house trailers fall within definition of "goods" contained in Ohio UCC § 2-105(1). Fuqua Homes, Inc. v. Evanston Bldg. & Loan Co., 52 Ohio App. 2d 399, 370 N.E.2d 780, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 19 (1977) (observing that although perfection of security interest in motor vehicle is governed by Ohio UCC Art 9, plaintiff was asserting ownership interest, and not security interest, in trailer involved in suit).

Modular home units, which were movable at time of sale to buyer and until their subsequent assembly and installation on realty for use as house, were "goods" within meaning of Ohio UCC § 2-105(1). Fuqua Homes, Inc. v. Evanston Bldg. & Loan Co., 52 Ohio App. 2d 399, 370 N.E.2d 780 (1977).

In action by manufacturer of mobile home against dealer and purchaser of unit arising when dealer failed to pay manufacturer purchase price, mobile home fell within definition of "goods" under UCC § 2-105 and purchaser was entitled to protection from manufacturer's claim under UCC § 9-307(a) where purchaser, who took title from merchant entrusted with goods under UCC §§ 2-401 and 2-403, qualified as buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9), notwithstanding purchaser's failure to request certificate of title of purchase. Apeco Corp. v. Bishop Mobile Homes, Inc., 506 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 12, 1974).

The Special Term was in error in holding that a mobile home was consumer goods and not a motor vehicle within the meaning of UCC § 9-302, which requires that a financing statement must be filed to perfect a security interest therein. Recchio v. Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co., 35 A.D.2d 769 (4th Dep't 1970).

9. Future goods.

In action by seller of one million gallon water tank against buyer for repudiation of sales contract, in which buyer counter-claimed for breach of contract, water tank constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1) even though tank was not in existence when contract was executed. However, under sales contract which required payment 30 days after completion of tank, knowledge by seller that buyer had not completed loan negotiations were not "reasonable grounds for insecurity" within meaning of UCC § 2-609 justifying seller's demand of buyer for personal guarantee or for escrow of entire purchase price. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. v. Brookhaven Manor Water Co., 532 F.2d 572 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

Where cotton farmer entered into contract with cotton merchants to sell cotton crop to be produced on 800 acres, where farmer was obligated by terms of lease to pay one-fourth of his cotton crop as rent, and where as result of flood conditions farmer was only able to plant 717 acres rather than expected 1066 acres, cotton merchants were entitled to whole crop and lessor's remedies, if any, were against lessee; when read together UCC §§ 2-102, 2-105 and 2-107 indicated that forward contracts for sale of yet to be grown cotton fell within § 2-402(1) which subordinates rights of seller's unsecured creditors in subject matter to those of buyer. Ralli-Coney, Inc. v. Gates, 528 F.2d 572 (5th Cir. 1976).

Transactions in crops are within scope of UCC, and contracts for future delivery of crops, whether or not presently planted, are contemplated. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Contract for sale of unplanted cotton crop was valid contract for sale of goods for future delivery under UCC § 2-105(2) notwithstanding goods were not in existence at time of execution of contract. Cone Mills Corp. v. A.G. Estes, Inc., 377 F. Supp. 222 (N.D. Ga. 1974).

Contract to sell future cotton crop was sale of goods within scope of Article 2 of UCC. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 379 F. Supp. 1075 (M.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Contract for sale of crop was not invalid merely because contract was executed before crop in question was planted. Mitchell-Huntley Cotton Co. v. Lawson, 377 F. Supp. 661 (M.D. Ga. 1973).

10. Contracts for goods and services.

In action to enforce oral agreement by subcontractor to provide and install school lockers, chalkboards and tack boards, where quoted price did not distinguish between cost of goods supplied and installation charges, subcontractor did not sustain his burden of proving that service aspect of contract was merely incidental to sale of goods aspect, as defined in UCC §§ 2-106(1) and 2-105, and, thus, he failed to sustain his burden of proving that UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds was applicable to contract and barred its enforcement. Glover Sch. & Office Equip. Co. v. Dave Hall, Inc., 372 A.2d 221 (Del. Super. 1977).

Where contract for purchase and installation of prefabricated overhead doors charged lump sum for equipment and installation making it a nondivisible mixed contract, contract was for sale of goods as defined in UCC § 2-105 as service element did not dominate subject matter even though overhead doors were useless without performance of installation services; thus UCC statute of limitations governed. Meyers v. Henderson Constr. Co., 147 N.J. Super. 77, 370 A.2d 547 (L. Div. 1977).

Sod, trees and shrubs sold by nurseryman were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1); thus, contract for sale and installation of trees and shrubs and sale and placing of substantial amount of sod was contract for sale of goods governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1), notwithstanding contract in question also involved rendering of substantial amount of services. Burton v. Artery Co., 279 Md. 94, 367 A.2d 935 (1977).

Where design services which steel supplier provided under contract were incidental to basic purpose of contract, which was provision of structural steel to be used in construction of container handling facility, essence of transaction was sale of goods and supplier's action for breach of contract was barred by 4-year statute of limitations of UCC § 2-725; fact that specially designed product to fulfill needs of project was required did not negate characterization of transaction as sale of goods. Belmont Indus., Inc. v. Bechtel Corp., 425 F. Supp. 524 (E.D. Pa. 1976).

Contract for sale of various bowling alley equipment, including, inter alia, lanes and ball returns, to be delivered and installed by seller, who warranted that lanes would be free from defects in workmanship and materials and that they would meet "all ABC specifications," was a "transaction in goods" under UCC § 2-102 and came within Article 2 of Code, despite fact that contract involved substantial amounts of labor; items sold under contract were "goods" as defined in UCC § 2-105(1) since they were all items of tangible property, normally in flow of commerce, portable at time of contract; contract was not construction contract, outside Code coverage, nor was it excluded from coverage merely because it was "mixed" contract for goods and services. Bonebrake v. Cox, 499 F.2d 951 (8th Cir. Iowa 1974).

There is no "sale" to a beauty parlor customer of materials used in giving her treatments, for the materials used in the performance of such services are patently incidental to the treatment itself and do not constitute a purchase of an article by the customer. Epstein v. Giannattasio, 25 Conn. Supp. 109, 197 A.2d 342 (1963).

11. Commercial unit.

Where contract of sale stated quantity as all film at certain location and described it as approximately 250,000 pounds, and where agreed price was not lot price but 19 cents per pound, pound was "commercial unit" under UCC § 2-105(6) since it appeared to be unit used by parties and since evidence did not establish that division of material into such units would materially impair its character or value on market or in use. Askco Eng'g Corp. v. Mobil Chem. Corp., 535 S.W.2d 893 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

In action by feed company on installment sales contracts and security agreements providing for loan to enable defendant to purchase two hog-feeder houses from plaintiff's alleged agent, where houses were defective because they caused pigs placed therein for fattening to become sick and to die, and where plaintiff claimed that it merely financed purchase of such houses and did not sell them to defendant, (1) evidence supported finding that plaintiff's alleged agent was its agent in fact and that plaintiff was bound by agent's acts, including agent's sale of hog houses to defendant; (2) fact that plaintiff acted as financing agency in defendant's purchase of such houses did not preclude finding that plaintiff was also seller of such houses; (3) houses were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1); (4) defendant, by affirmative defense incorporated by reference in counterclaim, gave plaintiff notice of breach of implied warranty of fitness of goods for particular purpose, which notice was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (5) whether such implied warranty of fitness, which was in force at time of sale, was breached by plaintiff was question of fact to be determined by trial court on remand of case. Thompson Farms, Inc. v. Corno Feed Prods., 173 Ind.

Plaintiff who contracted to compile, edit and publish pamphlets and other printed materials for defendants was entitled to benefit of four year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725, since printed pamphlets and related materials were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1) and since UCC statute of limitations prevailed over general statute of limitations in action based on contract for sale of goods. Lake Wales Publishing Co. v. Florida Visitor, Inc., 335 So. 2d 335 (Fla. App. 1976).

§ 75-2-106. Definitions: “contract”; “agreement”; “contract for sale”; “sale”; “present sale”; “conforming to contract”; “termination”; “cancellation.”

(1) In this chapter unless the context otherwise requires “contract” and “agreement” are limited to those relating to the present or future sale of goods. “Contract for sale” includes both a present sale of goods and a contract to sell goods at a future time. A “sale” consists in the passing of title from the seller to the buyer for a price (Section 2-401) [Section 75-2-401]. A “present sale” means a sale which is accomplished by the making of the contract.

(2) Goods or conduct including any part of a performance are “conforming” or conform to the contract when they are in accordance with the obligations under the contract.

(3) “Termination” occurs when either party pursuant to a power created by agreement or law puts an end to the contract otherwise than for its breach. On “termination” all obligations which are still executory on both sides are discharged but any right based on prior breach or performance survives.

(4) “Cancellation” occurs when either party puts an end to the contract for breach by the other and its effect is the same as that of “termination” except that the cancelling party also retains any remedy for breach of the whole contract or any unperformed balance.

1. In general; contract for sale.

Contract governing rental of video monitoring equipment for use in grocery store, evidenced by instrument entitled "lease agreement," referring to parties as "lessor" and "lessee," maintaining title in lessor, and disclaiming warranties, did not constitute buy and sell agreement or security agreement, and thus did not support allegations by lessee that inoperability of equipment amounted to breach of warranty and justified default in lease payments. Briscoe's Foodland, Inc. v. Capital Assocs., 502 So. 2d 619 (Miss. 1986).

With respect to a contract for the sale of a computer system, although the ideas or concepts involved in the custom-designed software remain the seller's intellectual property, the buyer purchases the product of those concepts. Thus, although the product requires efforts to produce, it is nevertheless a product which, although intangible, is more readily characterized as "goods," rather than "services," since intangibles may be "goods" under UCC § 2-106(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In action by buyer of computer system for damages for system's failure to function properly, court held (1) that parties' designation under UCC § 1-105(1) of Massachusetts law to govern their sales contract was immaterial, since buyer's breach-of-contract claims were governed by limitation period contained in UCC § 2-725(1), which had been adopted by both New York and Massachusetts; (2) that contract in suit was not one for performance of services, as alleged by buyer, but was one for purchase of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); (3) that action was not timely commenced by buyer, since breach had occurred in January, 1971 and buyer did not commence suit until August 14, 1975, which was more than four years after cause of action accrued; (4) that UCC § 2-725(2), which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance and provides that discovery of breach must await such performance, did not apply, since warranty under UCC § 2-725(2) must expressly refer to the future and implied warranty alleged by buyer, by its very nature, did not do so; and (5) that seller's attempts to repair computer system did not toll running of statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

As indicated in UCC §§ 2-102 and 2-106(1), the Uniform Commercial Code applies only to transactions in goods and not to service or repair contracts. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

Contract for sale of trucks was not contract for sale of goods and, thus, was not governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1) where contract was executed simultaneously with contract for sale of truck manufacturing plant and where contract for sale of trucks was merely incidental and collateral to main object of effecting transfer of truck manufacturing plant. Dynamics Corp. of Am. v. International Harvester Co., 429 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

In action by materialman against property owner to recover for materials delivered to subcontractor where it was alleged that owner orally agreed to "guarantee" payment for materials previously delivered to subcontractor, in consideration for which materialman agreed to continue furnishing materials to job and to forebear from filing claim of lien against owner's real property, enforcement of alleged oral "guarantee" contract was not barred by statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201; materials supplied at instance of owner after promise sued on were delivered pursuant to new agreement and were "received and accepted" within contemplation of UCC § 2-201(3)(c) and thus statute of frauds was inapplicable as to them; with respect to materials supplied before "guarantee" contract sued on, they were not delivered pursuant to "contract for sale" within definition thereof in UCC § 2-106 and statute was thus inapplicable as to them. Jim & Slim's Tool Supply, Inc. v. Metro Commu- nities Corp., 328 So. 2d 213 (Fla. App. 1976).

Building subcontract for electrical work under which subcontractor had obligation to furnish exterior unit switchgear was not "contract for sale" within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); thus, UCC § 2-209(1) was inapplicable and alleged modification for which no consideration was given was ineffective. J & R Elec. Div. of J.O. Mory Stores, Inc. v. Skoog Constr. Co., 38 Ill. App. 3d 747, 348 N.E.2d 474 (4th Dist. 1976).

Contract for construction of anhydrous ammonia plant was intended by parties as one for provision of services, exclusively, not contract of sale, where, inter alia, throughout contract plaintiff was denominated "Owner", not buyer, and defendant was denominated "Contractor", not seller, where contract placed ultimate control of purchasing decision in hands of plaintiff, not defendant, and where, under terms of contract that "title to all machinery and equipment and supplies for the work shall, as between Owner and Contractor, be in Owner," defendant never had title to any component part of the plant, including defective converter. Nitrin, Inc. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 35 Ill. App. 3d 577, 342 N.E.2d 65 (1st Dist. 1976).

Contract to sell future cotton crop was sale of goods within scope of Article 2 of UCC. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 379 F. Supp. 1075 (M.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Customer's contract with broker for purchase of stock was contract of agency, rather than contract for sale under UCC § 2-106, and UCC § 8-319 [Repealed] statute of frauds pertaining to contract for sale of securities was therefore inapplicable. Hutton v. Zaferson, 509 S.W.2d 950 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 2, 1974).

Contract under which subcontractor was obligated to "furnish and erect" structural steel for construction of bridge was contract for rendition of services, a work, labor and materials contract, rather than contract for sale of goods, the steel beams involved. Schenectady Steel Co. v. Bruno Trimpoli Gen. Constr. Co., 43 A.D.2d 234 (3d Dep't 1974), aff'd, 34 N.Y.2d 939, 359 N.Y.S.2d 560, 316 N.E.2d 875 (1974).

Agreement to furnish all concrete for slab and to furnish all labor to pour and finish was contract for sale within meaning of § 2-106, though including agreement for work and labor. Port City Constr. Co. v. Henderson, 48 Ala. App. 639, 266 So. 2d 896 (Civ. App. 1972).

Contract with interior decorator to re-furnish room was contract for sale not service where price for new furniture "would include compensation for plaintiff's interior decorating services," and recitation in contract that these services would "be performed for a nominal fee" was mere surplusage. Norman Schuman Interiors, Inc. v. Sacks, 479 S.W.2d 200 (Mo. Ct. App. 1972).

Transaction between manufacturer of woolen cloth and supplier of card waste according to which manufacturer stored card waste until it was needed in its mill operation, and was billed only when goods were actually used, created no contract for sale by passage of title for price. Meinhard-Commercial Corp. v. Hargo Woolen Mills, 112 N.H. 500, 300 A.2d 321 (1972).

Contract providing that upon satisfactory completion of machine meeting defendant's specifications, defendant would purchase machine and plaintiff would sell both machine and exclusive right to use ideas and improvements involved therein; held, contract was one for sale of goods. Knisely v. Burke Concrete Accessories, Inc., 2 Wash. App. 533, 468 P.2d 717 (1970), review denied, 78 Wash. 2d 994 (1970).

Agreement by which defendant was to pick up, advertise, and sell furniture owned by plaintiff was not in writing; amount involved was in excess of $500; relationship between plaintiff and defendant was that of principal-factor rather than buyer-seller; held, agreement was not "contract for sale of goods." Blank v. Dubin, 258 Md. 678, 267 A.2d 165 (1970).

Alleged oral contract under which A had for over 30 years distributed and sold baked goods produced by B held to be contract for sale of goods within Article 2 so as to require reasonable notice before termination under Code § 2-309(3); contention that this was "sales distribution" arrangement rejected. Mastrian v. Wil- liam Freihofer Baking Co., 45 Pa. D. & C.2d 237 (1968).

2. Sale.

Computer hardware and software package agreement, under which defendant was to install completed system and train plaintiff's employees in its use, whereupon plaintiff would take over complete supervision of system, was agreement for sale of "goods" rather than "services." Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In prosecution for peddling goods without a license, defendants' contention that they were not guilty of "selling" goods because their activities had involved only giving of lollypops to passersby with simultaneous request for money, which was to be used on behalf of a church, could not be sustained in view of UCC § 2-106(1), which provides that a "sale" consists in passing of title to goods from seller to buyer on payment of a price. People v. Wood, 93 Misc. 2d 25 (1978).

In action against lessee of two refrigerator display cases for accelerated rent allegedly due lessor for lessee's breach of lease agreement, court held, on affirming judgment for lessee, (1) that transaction was sale within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1), since shipping order executed simultaneously with alleged "lease" gave lessee option to obtain, at no further cost, title to refrigerator cases at end of lease, (2) that waiver of any warranties of merchantability or fitness for particular purpose in lease agreement was not conspicuous under UCC § 2-316(2) and thus was ineffective, and (3) that lessee did not lose right to rescind sale agreement by failure to give lessor adequate opportunity to "cure" under UCC § 2-508(1), since replacement refrigerator cases purchased elsewhere by lessee were not installed until more than one month after lessor's attempt to cure defective cases sold to lessee. Transcontinental Refrigeration Co. v. Figgins, 179 Mont. 12, 585 P.2d 1301 (1978).

Where contract for purchase of burglar alarm system specifically stated that the materials were to remain the property of the "seller," there was no sale within meaning of Uniform Commercial Code. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

To be buyer in ordinary course of business, so as to take free of security interest created by seller, there must be a sale which under UCC § 2-106(1) consists in passing of title from seller to buyer for a price. Moreover, under UCC § 2-401, title passes at time of physical delivery of goods to buyer, unless it is otherwise explicitly agreed. Integrity Ins. Co. v. Marine Midland Bank-Western, 90 Misc. 2d 868 (1977).

In action to enforce oral agreement by subcontractor to provide and install school lockers, chalkboards and tack boards, where quoted price did not distinguish between cost of goods supplied and installation charges, subcontractor did not sustain his burden of proving that service aspect of contract was merely incidental to sale of goods aspect, as defined in UCC §§ 2-106(1) and 2-105, and, thus, he failed to sustain his burden of proving that UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds was applicable to contract and barred its enforcement. Glover Sch. & Office Equip. Co. v. Dave Hall, Inc., 372 A.2d 221 (Del. Super. 1977).

Personal services to be rendered by plaintiff in developing defendant's nursing home constituted "price" of stock agreed to be transferred by defendant in exchange for plaintiff's services, so as to cause agreement to come with definition of "sale" in UCC § 2-106(1) as "passing of title from the seller to the buyer for a price." Burns v. Gould, 172 Conn. 210, 374 A.2d 193 (1977).

Reasonable interpretation of term "net sales value of production," as used in business interruption insurance policy, did not require attributing to it technical definition of "sale" as that term is defined in UCC § 2-106(1). Travelers Indem. Co. v. Kassner, 322 So. 2d 80 (Fla. App. 1975), cert. denied, 333 So. 2d 41 (Fla. 1976).

Furnishing of blood to patient by blood banks and hospital was adjunct to services performed by hospital in endeavor to restore patient's health and thus was not "sale" giving rise to any warranty of fitness or merchantable quality. Consequently, actions for breach of warranty against blood banks and hospital were not maintainable. Jennings v. Roosevelt Hosp., 83 Misc. 2d 1 (1975).

In action by purchasers of new homes against contractor who built homes and seller of bricks used therein for damages resulting from defective brick: (1) contracts between purchasers and contractor did not provide for "sale" as that term is used in UCC Article 2 and, thus, were not governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in § 2-725, but rather by general six-year limitations for breach of contract; (2) conversely, only relationship between purchasers and seller of bricks was that of buyers and seller, which was governed by UCC Article 2, and, since more than four years passed between respective purchases from seller and alleged breach of warranty, action was barred. DeMatteo v. White, 233 Pa. Super. 339, 336 A.2d 355 (1975).

Contract to install, service and maintain vending machines on defendant's premises did not effect passing of title, and was not "sale" to which UCC would apply. George F. Mueller & Sons v. Northern Ill. Gas Co., 12 Ill. App. 3d 362, 299 N.E.2d 601 (1st Dist. 1973).

Sale of truck took place when buyer took possession of truck from seller, and title effectively passed to buyer, even though buyer did not have possession of certificate of title. Bunch v. Signal Oil & Gas Co., 505 P.2d 41 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Where plaintiff obtained wrinkle cream, which was subject of breach of warranty action, as result of purchasing $5 of cosmetics, transaction was sale rather than gift. Sheppard v. Revlon, Inc., 267 So. 2d 662 (Fla. App. 1972).

Blood transfusion was sale of "goods" so as to be subject to strict liability. Reilly v. King County Cent. Blood Bank, Inc., 6 Wash. App. 172, 492 P.2d 246, 10 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 342 (1971) (note that transfusions in issue occurred prior to UCC amendment declaring that under certain circumstances blood transfusions are not covered by any implied warranty).

Seller of machinery and equipment shipped grinding machine to itself, in care of manufacturer of machine parts who was to demonstrate and sell machine to third-party buyer at fixed price with title to pass to latter on payment in full to seller with manufacturer to receive 10% of invoice price as commission; held, transaction was not a sale but a price-fixing consignment. Columbia Int'l Corp. v. Kempler, 46 Wis. 2d 550, 175 N.W.2d 465, 40 A.L.R.3d 1066 (1970).

Shrimp, chicken, and loin ribs offered for sale and sold in buckets but fried or otherwise cooked after a customer places an order and after such frying or other cooking packaged or wrapped in the bucket container fall within the terms of subd 5 of § 193 of the Agriculture and Markets Law since according to the terms of subd 1 of the above statute a sale consists in the passing of title from the seller to the buyer for a price and according to the terms of § 2-401, subd 2, unless otherwise explicitly agreed title passes to the buyer at the time at which the seller completes his performance with reference to the physical delivery of the goods. Wickham v. Levine, 47 Misc. 2d 1 (1965), aff'd, 24 A.D.2d 1035, 264 N.Y.S.2d 785 (3 Dep't 1965), aff'd, 23 N.Y.2d 923, 298 N.Y.S.2d 507, 246 N.E.2d 357 (1969).

When auctioneer sold automobile in customary manner by accepting buyer's check and remitting to seller amount of sale price less commission, auctioneer was agent for seller until car was sold and did not "buy" car from seller and "resell" it to buyer; therefore auctioneer was not entitled to possession of automobile when buyer's payment check was dishonored. Tulsa Auto Dealers Auction v. North Side State Bank, 431 P.2d 408 (Okla. 1966).

Plaintiff's purchase of stock from a named individual at the request of defendant would serve as consideration for defendant's agreement to transfer common stock purchase warrants to the plaintiff; and the transaction between plaintiff and defendant constituted a "sale" within the meaning of the Uniform Commercial Code, which to be enforceable must be in writing. Mortimer B. Burnside & Co. v. Havener Sec. Corp., 25 A.D.2d 373 (1st Dep't 1966).

There is no "sale" to a beauty parlor customer of materials used in giving her treatments, for the materials used in the performance of such services are patently incidental to the treatment itself and do not constitute a purchase of an article by the customer. Epstein v. Giannattasio, 25 Conn. Supp. 109, 197 A.2d 342 (1963).

For the purpose of a criminal prosecution for selling narcotics, it is sufficient to show a participation in the commerce and it is not necessary to show that there was an actual transfer of title. State v. Weissman, 73 N.J. Super. 274, 179 A.2d 748, 93 A.L.R.2d 1001 (App. Div. 1962), certification denied, 37 N.J. 521, 181 A.2d 782 (1962).

The transfer of title is an implicit element of a sale under the Code. State v. Weissman, 73 N.J. Super. 274, 179 A.2d 748, 93 A.L.R.2d 1001 (App. Div. 1962), certification denied, 37 N.J. 521, 181 A.2d 782 (1962).

An oral agreement between property owners and a handyman whereby the handyman agreed to purchase a heating unit for owners and install it in the owners' building did not create between the parties a relationship of buyer and seller, so as to entitle the owners to a recovery against the handyman on the ground of a breach of implied warranty of merchantability and of fitness for the purpose. Victor v. Barzaleski, 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 698 (1959).

In National Dairy Products Corp. v. Gleeson (1958) 16 Pa D & C.2d 390, the court, in determining whether there was a taxable sale at retail when motor vehicles owned by two corporations were transferred, as part of a plan of merger, to a third surviving corporation, quoted UCC § 2-106(1) defining a sale as "the passing of title from the seller to the buyer for a price." National Dairy Prods. Corp. v. Gleeson, 16 Pa. D. & C.2d 390 (1959).

This section made no substantial change in the definition of a sale of goods under the Uniform Sales Act, wherein it was stated that "A sale of goods is an agreement whereby the seller transfers the property in goods to the buyer for a consideration called the price." E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. v. Kaufman & Chernick, Inc., 337 Mass. 216, 148 N.E.2d 634 (1958).

Sale of machines was consummated in Ohio, where the sales contract therefor was negotiated, acknowledged and accepted in Ohio by defendant's sales agents, the machines were manufactured at defendant's plant in that state, and shipped to purchaser in Michigan, f. o. b. city of manufacture. Welding Eng'rs, Inc. v. Aetna-Standard Eng'g Co., 84 Ohio Law Abs. 283, 169 F. Supp. 146, 119 U.S.P.Q. 489 (W.D. Pa. 1958).

Transfer of title took place on delivery to the carrier where goods were manufactured by the seller and shipped F. O. B. from his city to the buyer's city. Welding Eng'rs, Inc. v. Aetna-Standard Eng'g Co., 84 Ohio Law Abs. 283, 169 F. Supp. 146, 119 U.S.P.Q. 489 (W.D. Pa. 1958).

The word "sales," as used in the statute prescribing venue for an action for damages where sales infringe a patent, is to be given the same meaning as under the Uniform Commercial Code. Welding Eng'rs, Inc. v. Aetna-Standard Eng'g Co., 84 Ohio Law Abs. 283, 169 F. Supp. 146, 119 U.S.P.Q. 489 (W.D. Pa. 1958).

The "passage of title" concepts of the Uniform Commercial Code have no application to zoning regulations, in determining whether a building is a warehouse or a store for retail sales on the premises. Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Power, 390 Pa. 206, 134 A.2d 659 (1957).

3. Present sale.

Contracts under which farmers delivered soybeans to warehouseman for storage and subsequent sale at price to be agreed on at later date, and pursuant to which weight tickets or statement sheets were issued as receipts with words "hold," "stored," or "on storage" appearing on such receipts together with name of individual farmer, were bailments and not present sales with price to be fixed in the future within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1), UCC § 2-204(3), and UCC § 2-305(1), since such code sections did not contemplate farmers' right at their discretion to require a return of the same or equivalent fungible goods. NYTCO Servs., Inc. v. Wilson, 351 So. 2d 875, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 25 (Ala. 1977) (stating that fact that weight tickets and statement sheets issued as receipts had words indicating that soybeans were being stored also refuted contention that transactions were sales).

Transaction whereby seller, who was indebted to buyer, agreed to sell tractor to buyer in return for cancellation of seller's indebtedness constituted present, binding and completed sale, and title to tractor passed to buyer at time of execution of contract of sale, notwithstanding sales agreement provided that tractor would remain on seller's premises until needed by buyer and during that period of time seller would have right to sell tractor, and written agreement between seller and buyer was adequate as contract of sale under UCC since it contained date, identified buyer and seller and specified exactly model, make and serial number of tractor, listed amount and nature of consideration and was signed by agent of both parties. Ace Supply, Inc. v. Rocky-Mountain Mach. Co., 96 Idaho 183, 525 P.2d 965 (1974).

An Illinois florist who receives interstate telegraphic orders for retail sales of flowers in Illinois is a seller, his sales are present sales made in the state whether the contract is unilateral or bilateral, and title to the flowers passes in Illinois, and the sale is not one for resale which would be true if the seller were the out-of-state florist who telegraphs the order; and the Illinois florist is subject to that state's retailers' occupational tax on such sales. O'Brien v. Isaacs, 32 Ill. 2d 105, 203 N.E.2d 890 (1965).

4. Conforming to contract.

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of Ferrari sports car of limited availability ordered for buyer from another dealer, where order form and bill of sale identified car by name, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number, and stated that car was "used" car and that buyer had made $15,000 deposit on purchase price of $17,500; where half of such deposit was paid by buyer's personal check (on which was written name of car, year of manufacture, and serial number) and other half by cashier's check issued by bank making loan to buyer, which check was made payable to joint order of both buyer and seller and which contained restrictive indorsement requiring "payee" to record first lien on car in bank's favor; where car, when received by seller from other dealer, proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself; and where seller informed buyer that he would try to locate another Ferrari for him, sale was governed by UCC Art 2 and buyer was entitled to maintain replevin action, despite seller's contention that since car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered, since (1) under UCC § 2-209, parties had modified their prior oral agreement concerning sale of "used" car by entering into written agreement, evidenced by purchase order and bill of sale prepared by seller, which identified car sold by make, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number; (2) parties' modification of prior oral agreement also was evidenced by seller's acceptance of buyer's personal check and by negotiation by both seller and buyer of bank cashier's check bearing restrictive indorsement; (3) under UCC § 2-106(2), car delivered to seller conformed to modified contract; (4) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(b) and § 2-606(1)(a) to accept car that did not conform to purchase order, had delivery been tendered by seller; and (5) since car was identified to contract by purchase order and bill of sale which were in buyer's possession, title to car passed to buyer under UCC § 2-401(3)(a), even though seller retained vehicle. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

Contract for sale of crop was not invalid merely because contract was executed before crop in question was planted. Mitchell-Huntley Cotton Co. v. Lawson, 377 F. Supp. 661 (M.D. Ga. 1973).

The delivery of a generator to a job site, while identifying the goods to the contract, did not amount to a delivery of goods or the performance of obligations conforming to the contract, and could not constitute such a delivery and performance until the generator had been installed, started up, and field tests completed to the satisfaction of the government as was called for by the contract. Until then, risk of loss remained with the seller regardless of where title may have stood. William F. Wilke, Inc. v. Cummins Diesel Engines, Inc., 252 Md. 611, 250 A.2d 886 (1969).

5. Termination or cancellation of contract.

Right to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703(f) and § 2-106(4) differs from right to terminate under UCC § 2-106(3), and does not arise out of any termination provision in the agreement. Thus, where manufacturer of automobile air conditioners cancelled distributorship agreement with distributor because of distributor's chronic overdue balances and failure to pay note, manufacturer did not have to resort to termination procedures in distributorship agreement, and distributor could not claim unlawful termination of such agreement. Frigiking, Inc. v. Century Tire & Sales Co., 452 F. Supp. 935 (N.D. Tex. 1978).

A contract for the sale of from 10,000 to 50,000 tons of coal at a fixed price over a one-year period which provided that the seller might terminate the agreement by written notice, was effectively terminated by a letter in which the seller announced it would deliver no more than 10,000 tons, and seller was released from all future obligations thereunder. United States v. P. & D. Coal Mining Co., 251 F. Supp. 1005 (W.D. Ky. 1964), aff'd, 358 F.2d 619 (6th Cir. Ky. 1966).

6. Warranties.

A cause of action, which was based on breach of warranty and premised on the alleged sale by physicians of an unsafe drug to a decedent, alleges, notwithstanding the use of the term "sold", that the drug was furnished to the decedent as an incidental part of the services rendered in the course of medical treatment and, under the circumstances, there was no sale within the meaning of the Uniform Commercial Code so as to give rise to any express or implied warranties. Accordingly, the cause of action was properly dismissed. Osborn v. Kelley, 61 A.D.2d 367 (3d Dep't 1978).

In action against pharmacist and physician to recover damages for stroke allegedly suffered as result of oral contraceptive drug available only by prescription, implied warranties of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and of fitness under UCC § 2-315 were not applicable to transaction with pharmacist, since pharmacist filled prescription as issued by physician. Furthermore, physician was not "seller" within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1) by virtue of issuing prescription for oral contraceptive drug and, thus, he was not subject to liability on theory of breach of implied warranties of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and of fitness under UCC § 2-315. Batiste v. American Home Prods. Corp., 32 N.C. App. 1, 231 S.E.2d 269 (1977), cert. denied, 292 N.C. 466, 233 S.E.2d 921 (1977).

In action by purchaser of new automobile against dealer seeking revocation of acceptance and damages, contract provision between dealer and purchaser to effect that there were no warranties express or implied made by either dealer or manufacturer, other than manufacturer's warranty against defective materials, although sufficient to exclude all warranties by dealer except implied warranty of merchantability, did not eliminate implied warranty of merchantability in manner required by UCC § 2-316, and evidence that automobile battery was defective as result of poor materials or poor workmanship was sufficient to establish breach of warranty of merchantability; however, there was no evidence that such nonconformity substantially impaired value of car to purchaser as required by UCC § 2-608 before he could revoke his acceptance of automobile and recover price paid; thus, purchaser's remedy was action for damages and, since purchaser failed to present evidence to support award based on proper measure of damages, i.e., value of automobile in its non-conforming condition at time and place of acceptance, purchaser was not entitled to recover damages. Bill McDavid Oldsmobile, Inc. v. Mulcahy, 533 S.W.2d 160 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

In action by customer against self-service food store on theory of breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314, for injuries sustained when soft drink bottle exploded while customer was placing it on check-out counter, directed verdict in favor of store was erroneous where evidence established that store placed goods on shelves with specified price mark and customer removed bottle with intent to pay for it; such acts constituted a contract to sell within UCC § 2-106(1), giving rise to warranty protection, even though customer had not yet paid for goods and title had not yet passed. Fender v. Colonial Stores, Inc., 138 Ga. App. 31, 225 S.E.2d 691 (1976).

Contract documents under which refrigeration units were leased to defendant for term of four years, at specified monthly rental, and which gave defendant option to purchase equipment at termination of four-year lease upon payment of nominal sum (i.e., amount of sales tax on transaction), constituted contract for sale of goods subject to provisions of Uniform Commercial Code. Contract being one for sale of goods there was implied warranty of soundness by plaintiff-seller under UCC § 2-314 and defendant-purchaser was entitled to benefit thereof unless such implied warranty was excluded in accordance with provisions of UCC § 2-316. Repair clause which made lessee-purchaser responsible for necessary repairs, maintenance, operation and replacements, whatever its effect, was not effective to exclude implied warranty of fitness by seller. Mid-Continent Refrigerator Co. v. Way, 263 S.C. 101, 208 S.E.2d 31 (1974).

Lease agreement leasing automobile for period of 24 months, though it placed burden of repairs, taxes, insurance, etc. upon lessee, was not sale as defined by UCC § 2-106, and provisions of UCC § 2-316 governing exclusion or modification of warranties did not apply; thus, provisions of lease agreement that eliminated any implied warranty of law and the right to recover particular damages claimed against owner-lessor or assignee were effective, notwithstanding lease agreement did meet requirements of UCC § 2-316. Mays v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 132 Ga. App. 602, 208 S.E.2d 614 (1974).

In action by drug user seeking to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from bloodclot that allegedly developed as result of plaintiff's use of defendant's oral contraceptive, plaintiff failed to state cause of action against manufacturer under UCC § 2-715 for breach of warranty; since defendant gave allegedly defective product to plaintiff's physician as free sample and there was no payment by physician to defendant, (1) there was no sale which would form basis of cause of action, and, furthermore, (2) there was no privity between the parties. Allen v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp., 387 F. Supp. 364 (S.D. Tex. 1974).

In action by plaintiff to recover for breach of agreement termed a "lease," under which defendant agreed to lease business machines from plaintiff for 60-month-term, with title to pass to defendant at end of term, implied warranties of merchantability and fitness under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 were held applicable to transaction whether it was deemed lease or bailment agreement. Quality Acceptance Corp. v. Million & Albers, Inc., 367 F. Supp. 771 (D. Wyo. 1973).

The express warranty provisions of UCC § 2-313 and the warranty of fitness implied by UCC § 2-315 are parts of Article 2 of the UCC, which is clearly limited to sales of goods, and which will not be applied, in action to recover for injuries caused by runaway golf cart, to bailment for hire. Bona v. Graefe, 264 Md. 69, 285 A.2d 607, 48 A.L.R.3d 660 (1972).

§ 75-2-107. Goods to be severed from realty; recording.

(1) A contract for the sale of minerals or the like (including oil and gas) or a structure or its materials to be removed from realty is a contract for the sale of goods within this chapter if they are to be severed by the seller but until severance a purported present sale thereof which is not effective as a transfer of an interest in land is effective only as a contract to sell.

(2) A contract for the sale apart from the land of growing crops or other things attached to realty and capable of severance without material harm thereto but not described in subsection (1) or of timber to be cut is a contract for the sale of goods within this chapter whether the subject matter is to be severed by the buyer or by the seller even though it forms part of the realty at the time of contracting, and the parties can by identification effect a present sale before severance.

(3) The provisions of this section are subject to any third party rights provided by the law relating to realty records, and the contract for sale may be executed and recorded as a document transferring an interest in land and shall then constitute notice to third parties of the buyer's rights under the contract for sale.

5. Crops or timber.
6. Recording.

1. In general.

In Dean Vincent, Inc. v. Redisco, Inc. (1962) 232 Or 170, 373 P2d 995, it was stated that under the applicable law and under the thereafter applicable Uniform Commercial Code "the determination of the character of the goods sold as to whether real or personal property is left to the common law"; the conclusion reached was that wall to wall carpeting constitutes a fixture. Dean Vincent, Inc. v. Redisco, Inc., 232 Or. 170, 373 P.2d 995 (1962).

2. Minerals or the like.

UCC applies to sales of natural gas, and therefore governs sales contract between oil company and royalty owners in certain Mississippi oil and gas leases; in action by royalty owners seeking unrecovered payments from oil company under leases, gas underground is future goods pursuant to § 75-2-105, and thus no particular gas is sold until it is identified or brought to surface; accordingly, under § 75-2-107(1), contracts are contracts to sell and only become effective as sales when gas is severed from land; where sales contract itself provides that title to gas passes when gas is delivered, gas was not sold until it was produced, and accordingly, basis of royalty should be market value at well at time of production and delivery. Piney Woods Country Life Sch. v. Shell Oil Co., 726 F.2d 225 (5th Cir. 1984), reh'g denied, 750 F.2d 69 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1005, 105 S. Ct. 1868, 85 L. Ed. 2d 161 (1985).

In an action to recover the purchase price for the sale of borrow material from plaintiff seller's land, the oral contract was not barred by the statute of frauds § 75-2-107, where the oral contract constituted a revocable license to the purchaser which permitted it to remove the borrow material from the seller's land for a stated consideration, where the seller did not revoke the license, and where the purchaser allegedly removed the borrow material but refused to pay for it. Bell v. Hill Bros. Constr. Co., 419 So. 2d 575 (Miss. 1982).

Statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) did not apply to oral contract under which buyer of "borrow material" (fill soil), instead of seller, was to remove such material from seller's land, since UCC § 2-107(1)—which declares that contract for sale of "minerals or the like" is contract for sale of "goods" if such minerals are to be severed by seller—applies, as stated in Official Comment 1, only when minerals are to be severed by seller. As a result, oral contract for sale of "borrow material" in suit was governed by statute of frauds affecting realty. Bell v. Hill Bros. Constr. Co., 419 So. 2d 575 (Miss. 1982).

UCC § 2-107(1) applies only if the minerals are to be severed by the seller. If the buyer is to sever, such transactions are considered to be contracts affecting land to which the statute-of-frauds section of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC § 2-201) does not apply, although such contracts must conform to the statute of frauds that affects the transfer of interests in land. De Luca v. C.W. Blakeslee &

Sons, 174 Conn. 535, 391 A.2d 170, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 38 (1978) (holding that UCC § 2-107(1) did not apply to contract between landowner and highway contractor for sale of fill soil that was to be severed from seller's land by contractor-buyer).

Contract for sale of natural gas was contract for sale of "goods" under Ohio version of UCC § 2-107(1), even though Ohio had not adopted 1972 amendment to UCC § 2-107(1) which adds phrase "including oil and gas" to statute's language. Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. v. Larry H. Wright, Inc., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 95, 443 F. Supp. 14 (S.D. Ohio 1977).

Seller's remedies of UCC do not apply to vendors of oil and gas leases: (1) remedies provided in UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-706 are inapposite to protect seller of oil and gas lease, (2) definition of "goods" in UCC § 2-105(1) clearly excludes interests of oil and gas lessee, and (3) UCC § 2-107(1), dealing with goods to be severed from realty, provides that contract for sale of timber, minerals or like is contract for sale of goods within article 2, if they are to be severed by seller, but both Official Comment and Oklahoma Code Comment to § 2-107 recognize that Code applies only if timber, minerals, etc., are to be severed by seller. Casper v. Neubert, 489 F.2d 543 (10th Cir. Okla. 1973).

3. Structures.

Under UCC § 2-107(1), oral agreement whereby buyer agreed to pay sellers $500 in exchange for which buyer or his agents would be permitted to enter upon sellers' land for purpose of dismantling and carrying off structure was not contract for sale of goods since buyer rather than seller was to sever structure from land; thus, statute of frauds relating to interests in real property was applicable and alleged contract was unenforceable in absence of signed writing. Rosen v. Hummel, 47 A.D.2d 782 (3d Dep't 1975).

Sale of structure to be removed from appropriated land is within purview of Code provision relating to goods to be severed from realty and therefore provisions of Code § 2-401 are not applicable. Jonus v. Taddio, 61 Misc. 2d 176 (1969).

4. Timber (prior to 1977 amendment).

Contract for sale of cordwood business, including hardwood stumpage growing on defendant's land and certain equipment used in cutting and hauling wood, was transaction in "goods" governed by Sales Article of UCC, even though written contract was headed "Sale of Wood Business." Melms v. Mitchell, 266 Or. 208, 512 P.2d 1336, 65 A.L.R.3d 376 (1973).

Agreement between seller and buyer for sale and purchase of standing timber did not involve sale of goods movable at time of identification to contract and sale aspect of transaction was not covered by Article 2 of Code. Barry v. Bank of N.H., 112 N.H. 226, 293 A.2d 755 (1972).

5. Crops or timber.

In action between timber companies wherein plaintiff charged that defendant fraudulently induced plaintiff to purchase certain property by orally promising that defendant, which had previously acquired timber rights to such property, would sell or trade timber to plaintiff after plaintiff subsequently purchased property, alleged promise to convey timber rights was contract for sale of "goods" subject to statute of frauds and sales provisions of UCC. T.K. Stanley, Inc. v. Scott Paper Co., 793 F. Supp. 707 (S.D. Miss. 1992), aff'd, 5 F.3d 529 (5th Cir. 1993).

Oral contract allegedly made between wood dealer and mill did not come within brokerage exception to statute of frauds because dealer actually acquired interest in wood; promissory estoppel is not available as exception to statute of frauds applicable to such an agreement. Futch v. James River-Norwalk, Inc., 722 F. Supp. 1395 (S.D. Miss. 1989), aff'd, 887 F.2d 1085 (5th Cir. 1989).

Oral contract to supply timber to paper mill was contract for sale of timber not a brokerage contract and was therefore unenforceable due to lack of writing evidencing contract; agreement did not fall within any exceptions to UCC Statute of Frauds. Futch v. James River-Norwalk, Inc., 722 F. Supp. 1395 (S.D. Miss. 1989), aff'd, 887 F.2d 1085 (5th Cir. 1989).

Timber, whether cut or to be cut, falls within the definition of "goods" contained in § 75-2-105(1), and by virtue of § 75-2-107(2), the Sales Article of the Mississippi Uniform Commercial Code expressly applies to timber sales. Bay Springs Forest

Prods., Inc. v. Wade, 435 So. 2d 690 (Miss. 1983).

Although statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201 was applicable to contract for sale of soybeans which constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105 and also constituted under UCC § 2-107 growing crops capable of severance, seller was prohibited from asserting statute of frauds as defense in action on contract where seller admitted that contract was made. Cargill, Inc., Commodity Mktg. Div. v. Hale, 537 S.W.2d 667 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

Where cotton farmer entered into contract with cotton merchants to sell cotton crop to be produced on 800 acres, where farmer was obligated by terms of lease to pay one-fourth of his cotton crop as rent, and where as result of flood conditions farmer was only able to plant 717 acres rather than expected 1066 acres, cotton merchants were entitled to whole crop and lessor's remedies, if any, were against lessee; when read together UCC §§ 2-102, 2-105 and 2-107 indicated that forward contracts for sale of yet to be grown cotton fell within § 2-402(1) which subordinates rights of seller's unsecured creditors in subject matter to those of buyer. Ralli-Coney, Inc. v. Gates, 528 F.2d 572 (5th Cir. 1976).

Transactions in crops are within the scope of UCC, and contracts for future delivery of crops, whether or not presently planted, are contemplated. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Where plaintiff entered into oral contracts with defendant cotton growers for sale of their cotton crops, each involving more than $500 worth of cotton: (1) under UCC §§ 2-105 and 2-107, sale of cotton was sale of goods and, under UCC § 1-201, was not enforceable unless there was writing sufficient to indicate contract for sale had been made, signed by party against whom enforcement was sought; (2) oral contracts between plaintiff and defendants did not come within agency or broker exception to statute of frauds where there were two separate, independent sets of contracts under which defendants agreed to sell to plaintiff, and plaintiff independently contracted to sell to mills; (3) although exception to statute of frauds exists under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) if party against whom enforcement is sought admits in his pleadings, testimony or otherwise in court that contract for sale was made, such exception did not apply in present case since defendants denied under oath that agreement for sale was made with plaintiff and, although trial court made credibility determination adverse to defendants' testimony, such finding did not constitute finding that "admission" exception applied; (4) defendants were not estopped to assert defense of statute of frauds merely because plaintiff had acted in reliance on oral agreement. Cox v. Cox, 292 Ala. 106, 289 So. 2d 609 (1974).

Contract to sell future cotton crop was sale of goods within scope of Article 2 of UCC. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 379 F. Supp. 1075 (M.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Where plaintiff raised sod on several prior occasions and apparently treated it as commercial product, and sod owed its existence to annual maintenance and fertilization, sod was personalty, and sale of sod was within coverage of UCC. Barron v. Edwards, 45 Mich. App. 210, 206 N.W.2d 508 (1973).

6. Recording.

It was not necessary to record sale of citrus fruit in order to provide constructive notice to others of nature of buyer's interest in crop; sale constituted constructive severance of crops from land, and creditor was not entitled to position of secured creditor as against buyer where he did not rely on public records in extending credit to seller. Exchange Nat'l Bank v. Alturas Packing Co., 269 So. 2d 733 (Fla. App. 1972).

§ 75-2-201. Formal requirements; statute of frauds.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, a contract for the sale of goods for the price of five hundred dollars ($500.00) or more is not enforceable by way of action or defense unless there is some writing sufficient to indicate that a contract for sale has been made between the parties and signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought or by his authorized agent or broker. A writing is not insufficient because it omits or incorrectly states a term agreed upon but the contract is not enforceable under this paragraph beyond the quantity of goods shown in such writing.

(2) Between merchants if within a reasonable time a writing in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender is received and the party receiving it has reason to know its contents, it satisfies the requirements of subsection (1) against such party unless written notice of objection to its contents is given within ten (10) days after it is received.

(3) A contract which does not satisfy the requirements of subsection (1) but which is valid in other respects is enforceable

(a) if the goods are to be specially manufactured for the buyer and are not suitable for sale to others in the ordinary course of the seller's business and the seller, before notice of repudiation is received and under circumstances which reasonably indicate that the goods are for the buyer, has made either a substantial beginning of their manufacture or commitments for their procurement; or

(b) if the party against whom enforcement is sought admits in his pleading, testimony or otherwise in court that a contract for sale was made, but the contract is not enforceable under this provision beyond the quantity of goods admitted; or

(c) with respect to goods for which payment has been made and accepted or which have been received and accepted (Section 2-606) [§ 75-2-606].

A. In general.

1. Generally.

In action between timber companies wherein plaintiff charged that defendant fraudulently induced plaintiff to purchase certain property by orally promising that defendant, which had previously acquired timber rights to such property, would sell or trade timber to plaintiff after plaintiff subsequently purchased property, alleged promise to convey timber rights was contract for sale of "goods" subject to statute of frauds and sales provisions of UCC. T.K. Stanley, Inc. v. Scott Paper Co., 793 F. Supp. 707 (S.D. Miss. 1992), aff'd, 5 F.3d 529 (5th Cir. 1993).

A writing is required by the Code to give a claimant any rights in personal property of another having a value in excess of $500. Traska v. DeGennaro, 38 Wash. C. R. 50 (Pa. 1958) [court rejected the claim that the plaintiff and defendant were partners as to certain equipment].

2. Relationship with other laws.

In action by plaintiff timber company against defendant timber company alleging that defendant fraudulently induced plaintiff to purchase certain property by orally promising that defendant, which had previously acquired timber rights on such property, would sell or trade such timber to plaintiff after plaintiff subsequently purchased such property, plaintiff's fraudulent inducement claim was barred even if it could have been raised under state's general statute of frauds, because alleged promise to convey timber rights was contract for sale of "goods" subject to statute of frauds. T.K. Stanley, Inc. v. Scott Paper Co., 793 F. Supp. 707 (S.D. Miss. 1992), aff'd, 5 F.3d 529 (5th Cir. 1993).

Under principle that pre-UCC law is applicable unless displaced by particular provisions of Code, UCC statute of frauds, rather than general statute of frauds, applies to alleged oral agreement and subsequent confirmatory letter, where general statute of frauds and UCC provision are in conflict and mandate different results. H & W Indus., Inc. v. Formosa Plastics Corp., USA, 860 F.2d 172 (5th Cir. 1988), reh'g denied, 863 F.2d 882 (5th Cir. 1988).

Although UCC § 1-103 allows principle of estoppel to supplement UCC provisions, grain farmer was not estopped from asserting statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201, as defense to alleged oral contract for sale of 40,000 bushels of grain where there was no evidence of fraud, positive misrepresentation or unconscionable conduct akin to fraud chargeable to farmer. Farmers Coop. Ass'n v. Cole, 239 N.W.2d 808 (N.D. 1976).

Portions of Uniform Commercial Code relating to course of dealings or trade usage (1-205) were not intended to be applied in manner to defeat Code's statute of frauds requirements and, at best, evidence of custom or usage in trade may be used to explain ambiguous portions of an agreement; thus, potato farmer could not introduce evidence of usage or course of dealings within trade to substantiate oral agreement with potato buyer. Dangerfield v. Markel, 222 N.W.2d 373 (N.D. 1974).

Statute of frauds requirement that written memorandum be "subscribed" which was not fulfilled by initials at top thereof should not be confused with Uniform Commercial Code requirement that writing be "signed." Steinberg v. Universal Maschinenfabrik GMBH, 24 A.D.2d 886 (2d Dep't 1965), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 943, 277 N.Y.S.2d 142, 223 N.E.2d 567 (1966).

B. Scope.

3. In general.

Availability of statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) is limited to cases in which contractual obligation is basis of recovery sought by plaintiff. Acuri v. Figlioli, 91 Misc. 2d 831 (1977).

4. Bulk transfers.

Alleged agreement concerning sale of corporation could not be considered "contract for sale of goods" so as to be within coverage of UCC statute of frauds, although corporation may have owned "goods." Olympic Junior, Inc. v. David Crystal, Inc., 463 F.2d 1141 (3d Cir. N.J. 1972) (applying New York and New Jersey law, since similarity between laws of two states made it unnecessary to choose between them).

Trial court's conclusion that writing existed which indicated contract for sale of business had been made, and manifestations that seller who was being charged with breach had authenticated writing, provided proper basis for finding that contract was outside Code § 2-201. Interstate United Corp. v. White, 388 F.2d 5 (10th Cir. Okla. 1967).

5. Farm goods.

In an action to recover the purchase price for the sale of borrow material from the plaintiff seller's land, the statute of frauds § 75-2-201 did not apply to the oral contract, where the contract provided for the purchaser rather than the seller to sever the borrow material from the land. Bell v. Hill Bros. Constr. Co., 419 So. 2d 575 (Miss. 1982).

Statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201, applied to contract for sale of corn crop for future delivery. Farmers Coop. Elevator Co. v. Johnson, 90 S.D. 36, 237 N.W.2d 671 (1976).

The sale of a horse is governed by the Uniform Commercial Code covering sales of goods. Presti v. Wilson, 348 F. Supp. 543 (E.D.N.Y. 1972).

6. Franchise agreements.

In action for breach of oral contract creating exclusive mobile home dealership, trial court erred in granting summary judgment for defendant on ground that contract was unenforceable under UCC § 2-201(1) because it was nothing more than contract for sale of goods worth $500 or more, since exclusive sales agency agreement is more than mere sales contract. Apache Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Redman Indus., Inc., 117 Ariz. 504, 573 P.2d 904, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1089 (Ct. App. 1977) (also describing agreement in suit as one of continuation, rather than one of several separate buy-and-sell agreements).

7. Lease or bailment.

Contract was lease arrangement and was not covered by Uniform Commercial Code provisions relating to warranties where one party agreed to lease certain hens, known as "Parent Stock," and eggs therefrom, known as "Hatching Eggs," to other party for purpose of producing offspring, where contract provided that first party retained title to "Parent Stock" and "Hatching Eggs" and other party was precluded from selling or otherwise disposing of same without express written consent of first party, and where contract additionally provided for termination by either party on written notice at least 30 days in advance. DeKalb Agresearch, Inc. v.

Abbott, 391 F. Supp. 152 (N.D. Ala. 1974), aff'd, 511 F.2d 1162 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

8. Mixed sales and service.

Although a number of changes to contract involved acquisition of goods for installation in residence, all were related to overall construction project which was conceived by original contract; thus arrangement between homebuilders and contractor was for performance of service and did not fall within ambit of Mississippi statute of frauds provision applicable to sales transactions. In re Levingston, 119 B.R. 935 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1990).

Oral contract to supply timber to paper mill was contract for sale of timber not a brokerage contract and was therefore unenforceable due to lack of writing evidencing contract; agreement did not fall within any exceptions to UCC Statute of Frauds. Futch v. James River-Norwalk, Inc., 722 F. Supp. 1395 (S.D. Miss. 1989), aff'd, 887 F.2d 1085 (5th Cir. 1989).

In contracts that involve both the sale of goods and the rendition of services, the predominant feature of the contract controls with respect to the applicability of the statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1). Thus, where a contract for the sale of goods and the rendition of services is essentially one for the sale of goods, it is subject to the statute. Anderson Constr. Co. v. Lyon Metal Prods., Inc., 370 So. 2d 935 (Miss. 1979).

In action to enforce oral agreement by subcontractor to provide and install school lockers, chalkboards and tack boards, where quoted price did not distinguish between cost of goods supplied and installation charges, subcontractor did not sustain his burden of proving that service aspect of contract was merely incidental to sale of goods aspect, as defined in UCC §§ 2-106(1) and 2-105, and, thus, he failed to sustain his burden of proving that UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds was applicable to contract and barred its enforcement. Glover Sch. & Office Equip. Co. v. Dave Hall, Inc., 372 A.2d 221 (Del. Super. 1977).

UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds provision was applicable to contract which contained element of service, i.e. collection of waste by plaintiff, where principal object of agreement was sale of waste by defendant to plaintiff. Huyler Paper Stock Co. v. Information Supplies Corp., 117 N.J. Super. 353, 284 A.2d 568 (L. Div. 1971).

9. Option or sale on approval.

Transaction in which plaintiff purchased gems from company and received contemporaneous oral promise that he could return gems for complete refund at offices of company's New York City franchisee is "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326 since gems were delivered to plaintiff "primarily for use" and therefore, UCC § 2-201 is applicable to transaction. Kristinus v. H. Stern Com. E Ind. S.A., 466 F. Supp. 903 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

Option given to purchaser of car wash franchise which included equipment and accessories to make certain changes in times purportedly sold will not in itself make alleged contract unenforceable. Hankins v. American Pac. Sales Corp., 7 Wash. App. 316, 499 P.2d 214 (1972).

10. Persons protected.

Auto rental agency brought detinue action against bank; bank had obtained autos in question upon foreclosure of chattel mortgages executed by used car dealer; held, UCC statute of frauds did not apply to used car dealer's testimony, inasmuch as bank was not party to sales transaction, was not seeking to enforce contract, and had no rights controlled by contract. Blowers v. First Nat'l Bank, 45 Ala. App. 485, 232 So. 2d 666 (Civ. App. 1970).

11. Real estate transactions.

Statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) did not apply to oral contract under which buyer of "borrow material" (fill soil), instead of seller, was to remove such material from seller's land, since UCC § 2-107(1)—which declares that contract for sale of "minerals or the like" is contract for sale of "goods" if such minerals are to be severed by seller—applies, as stated in Official Comment 1, only when minerals are to be severed by seller. As a result, oral contract for sale of "borrow material" in suit was governed by statute of frauds affecting realty. Bell v. Hill Bros. Constr. Co., 419 So. 2d 575 (Miss. 1982).

UCC § 2-107(1) applies only if the minerals are to be severed by the seller. If the buyer is to sever, such transactions are considered to be contracts affecting land to which the statute-of-frauds section of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC § 2-201) does not apply, although such contracts must conform to the statute of frauds that affects the transfer of interests in land. De Luca v. C.W. Blakeslee & Sons, 174 Conn. 535, 391 A.2d 170, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 38 (1978) (holding that UCC § 2-107(1) did not apply to contracts between landowner and highway contractor for sale of fill soil that was to be severed from seller's land by contractor-buyer).

Where parties to contract for sale of realty and personalty of ranch orally agreed to constructively sever irrigation system motor and pump and to consider it as subject to oral agreement at buy and sell price of $7,500, transaction pertaining to pump and motor was not subject to statute of frauds. Martin v. McCaige, 261 Or. 99, 492 P.2d 770 (1972).

12. Service contracts.

Contract to employ plaintiff to provide labor, material and equipment necessary to perform masonry work involved in construction of private hospital did not fall within provisions of UCC § 2-201(1). Lusalon, Inc. v. Thomas O'Connor & Co., 3 Mass. App. Ct. 734, 325 N.E.2d 599 (1975).

13. —Real estate salespersons.

Agreement between real estate broker and dealer in modular homes was in nature of agreement for procuring purchaser of personal property, i.e. in nature of a finder's agreement, and was not agreement for sale of goods; thus, UCC § 2-201(1) statute of frauds was not applicable. Selected Listings Co. v. Humiston, 135 Vt. 106, 370 A.2d 1297 (1977).

This section is inapplicable to an oral contract between a housebuilder and an agent under which the latter was to receive a 5% commission on any building contracts he might obtain. Brown v. Lee, 242 Ark. 122, 412 S.W.2d 273 (1967).

14. Term of agreement.

Sale of gems and contemporaneous promise to repurchase them for complete refund at offices of New York City franchise is to be viewed as single contract and therefore UCC § 2-201 does not render that contract unenforceable since promise to repurchase by its term was to be performed within 1 year. Kristinus v. H. Stern Com. E Ind. S.A., 466 F. Supp. 903 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

C. Writing.

15. In general; necessity.

Writing must meet 3 requirements to satisfy statute of frauds: be sufficient to indicate that a contract for sale has been made between the parties, be signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought, and specify a quantity. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In breach-of-warranty action for damages by buyer of allegedly defective dump trailers against manufacturer-seller, court held (1) that buyer and its ultimate Mexican customers were "merchants" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); (2) that seller was "merchant" within meaning of both UCC § 2-104(1) and § 2-314(1); (3) that telephoned order for 20 additional trailers was not enforceable under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) because it did not come within exceptions to such statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3); (4) that "specially manufactured goods" exception in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) applies only when seller, rather than buyer, seeks to escape statute-of-fraud defense; (5) that since three trailers purchased under valid written contract were put to improper use by buyer's Mexican customers, rather than being used for their "ordinary purposes," no breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) occurred; (6) that use of trailers for improper purposes, rather than for their stated "particular purpose," prevented recovery under implied warranty of fitness in UCC § 2-315; (7) that buyer could not recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) because it failed to prove that it had relied on statements in manufacturer-seller's brochure either prior to or contemporaneously with making of parties' contract; and (8) that since buyer had no right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject two unused and undamaged trailers, manufacturer-seller was not required to retake them or to refund their purchase price to buyer. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Alleged agreement by seller of cotton module builders that it would sell module trailers in combination with the module builders, even if such agreement could have been proved by buyer, would not have been enforceable where buyer produced no writing sufficient to satisfy statute-of-fraud requirement of UCC § 2-201(1). FMC Fin. Corp. v. Reed, 592 F.2d 238 (5th Cir. 1979).

In breach of contract action by subcontractor against both supplier and manufacturer of air compressors for failure to make delivery, where (1) on September 13, 1977, supplier gave subcontractor oral quotation of $89,000 for five compressors in issue, (2) on previous day (September 12), supplier had obtained both an oral quotation and an estimate sheet, signed by manufacturer's agent, that listed price for two compressors, and agent orally stated that three more could be furnished at same unit price, so that total price for five compressors would be $80,000, (3) on September 13, 1977, subcontractor used supplier's quotation of $89,000 to make successful bid for contract sought by it, (4) on September 26, 1977, manufacturer, after finding out that its competitors charged higher prices for compressors, issued revised price quotation to supplier and offered to sell five compressors in suit for $113,000, (5) on October 24, 1977, supplier, ignoring manufacturer's revised quotation, issued purchase order to manufacturer for five compressors at manufacturer's original quotation of $80,000, (6) on November 7, 1977, manufacturer advised supplier that it would not furnish compressors at its original quotation, (7) on October 6, 1977, at meeting between subcontractor and supplier, supplier told subcontractor that it could not sell compressors for $89,000, but subcontractor nevertheless gave supplier purchase order for compressors at such price, and (8) on supplier's failure to deliver compressors, subcontractor purchased them elsewhere for $121,000 and sought to recover $32,000 as difference between supplier's original quotation of $89,000 and subcontractor's cover price, court held (1) that manufacturer was not liable to subcontractor on either theory of vicarious responsibility for supplier's acts or theory that subcontractor was third-party beneficiary of contract between supplier and manufacturer, (2) that manufacturer's answer to supplier's cross claim did not contain unqualified admission of facts that, under exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(3)(b), would remove alleged oral contract between supplier and manufacturer from statute of frauds, (3) that manufacturer's estimate sheet of September 12, 1977 was not, as claimed by supplier, writing sufficient to indicate that contract of sale had been made within meaning of statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1), but was at best mere offer that had been effectually revoked by manufacturer under UCC § 2-205 at time when manufacturer had right to revoke it, (4) that such revocation had occurred before supplier attempted to place purchase order for compressors with manufacturer, and (5) that as between subcontractor and supplier, there was no writing of any kind within meaning of statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) on which subcontractor could rely to avoid the statute, and also no admission of facts by supplier that would constitute contract enforceable under admissions exception to the statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3)(b). Ivey's Plumbing & Elec. Co. v. Petrochem Maintenance, Inc., 463 F. Supp. 543 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

In action arising out of agreement to provide city with municipal personnel ordinance for fixed fee, necessary elements of valid, binding contract, whether in terms of services contract or one for sale of goods, were present where UCC § 2-201(1) requirement that there be writing sufficient to indicate that contract has been made was met and where plaintiff commenced performance of its obligations within reasonable time as required by UCC § 2-309. National Civil Serv. League v. City of Santa Fe, 370 F. Supp. 1128 (D.N.M. 1973).

16. Modification of writing; oral.

Although UCC § 2-209(3) provides that statute of frauds (UCC § 2-201) must be satisfied if contract as modified is within its provisions, under UCC § 2-209(4) attempted oral modification may operate as waiver of statute of frauds and, once waived, there is no barrier to oral modification of terms of written contract; thus, trial court erred in granting summary judgment for defendant seller on ground that he had effectively terminated written sales agreement pursuant to cancellation provision where there was attempted oral modification of agreement to eliminate seller's right of cancellation which raised material issues of fact as to (1) whether there was waiver of statute of frauds, (2) whether there was oral modification of agreement removing seller's right of cancellation, and (3) whether seller's purported retraction of waiver pursuant to UCC § 2-209(5) met notice requirements. Double-E Sportswear Corp. v. Girard Trust Bank, 488 F.2d 292 (3d Cir. Pa. 1973).

In reclamation action by lessor to recover air conditioning units, trustee of bankrupt lessee should not have been permitted to introduce oral evidence, contradictory of unambiguous written lease agreement, suggesting that oral option had been granted to lessee to purchase units upon termination of lease, since effect of such evidence was "enforcement" of lessee's right under alleged oral agreement, and as such was improper in absence of "some writing sufficient to indicate that contract for sale has been made between the parties." In re Financial Computer Sys., 474 F.2d 1258 (9th Cir. Cal. 1973).

Alleged oral truck franchise agreement was unenforceable against truck manufacturer under statute of frauds, where purchase order documents submitted by plaintiff were devoid of any terms which could serve as evidence of franchise relationship, and where standard form contracts allegedly signed by manufacturer contained series of conditions precedent which plaintiff had not shown to have been satisfied. Artman v. International Harvester Co., 355 F. Supp. 482 (W.D. Pa. 1973).

Where a contract is required to be in writing, its terms cannot be modified orally. Edelstein v. Carole House Apts., Inc., 220 Pa. Super. 298, 286 A.2d 658 (1971).

Where there was oral agreement, collateral and contemporaneous with written agreement, between parties as to manner of feeding yearling steers intended for future delivery, and where trial court found that written contract was not intended by parties as complete and exclusive statement of all terms of agreement, statute of frauds was no bar to admissibility of oral agreement. Conner v. May, 444 S.W.2d 948 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Dec. 31, 1969).

17. —Written.

Under Uniform Commercial Code § 2-204 a liberal construction with respect to the formation of contracts of sale is mandated, and where the buyer of prepared meals signed a letter of intent containing price, time delivery, quantity, and quality terms; the conduct of the parties evidenced their contractual intention, notwithstanding the buyer's addition of a paragraph indicating that a detailed contract containing complete specifications as to quality and quantity and protective provision in event the quality of the produce or service fell below established standards was to be completed in the future. Graulich Caterer, Inc. v. Hans Holterbosch, Inc., 101 N.J. Super. 61, 243 A.2d 253 (App. Div. 1968).

A printed form which was otherwise complete and unambiguous is rendered ambiguous by the handwritten notation made by the salesman on one of the blank lines of the form of "thirty-day warranty." Leveridge v. Notaras, 433 P.2d 935 (Okla. 1967).

18. Sufficiency; specificity.

The parties entered into an enforceable contract where the dealer accepted the buyer's downpayment on a car, and integration of the documents, some of which the parties executed jointly or individually, indicated an agreement on a specific car for sale, its retail price, the interest rate and various coverages, and thus was sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute of frauds. Fairley v. Turan-Foley Imports, Inc., 65 F.3d 475 (5th Cir. 1995).

Statute of frauds can be met through the integration of several documents, each of which alone might not be sufficient to meet the statute's 3 requirements for sufficiency. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In order for a confirmatory writing under UCC § 2-201(2) to be "sufficient against the sender," it must satisfy the requirements of UCC § 2-201(1). These requirements are: (1) the writing must evidence a contract, (2) it must be signed by the sender, and (3) it must specify a quantity. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 9, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 33 (applying Mississippi UCC; holding that writing sent in confirmation of oral contract for purchase of poultry qualified as confirmatory writing under UCC § 2-201(2)).

Where (1) seller on August 3d orally offered to sell buyer 15,000 tons of fertilizer, which offer was valid until 2:00 p.m. on August 3d, (2) on morning of August 3d, as requested by buyer, seller sent buyer same offer by telex, (3) at 10:00 a.m. on August 3d, after seller had sent and relinquished control over its firm offer by telex, buyer allegedly accepted such offer orally, and (4) buyer thereafter sent seller responsive telex while seller's firm offer was still valid and such telex included certain terms, including terms as to payment and loading, that were not in seller's offer, court held (1) that inclusion in buyer's telex of payment and loading provisions not mentioned in seller's offer was not, under UCC § 2-207(1), necessarily fatal to buyer's alleged acceptance, (2) that under UCC § 2-207(2), term "plus or minus 10 percent at buyer's option," although it might have materially altered the contract, did not by itself invalidate the alleged acceptance, (3) that on the other hand, since UCC § 2-207 does require definite expression of acceptance before its provisions can apply, it might be that buyer's responsive telex, taken as a whole, did not represent agreement between the parties on even price and quantity of seller's fertilizer, and (4) that if a contract had been formed, it was enforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) because document signed by seller as party to be charged was its firm offer in its August 3d telex and buyer's oral acceptance of that written offer was responsive thereto, insofar as satisfying statute of frauds was concerned, and clearly showed that oral evidence offered by buyer rested on a real transaction. Ore & Chem. Corp. v. Howard Butcher Trading Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1150, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 823 (E.D. Pa. 1978) (applying New York and Pennsylvania UCC; holding, on cross-motions for summary judgment, that validity of buyer's acceptance depended on issues of fact to be resolved at the trial).

Where (1) buyer placed order for new Corvette on form furnished by dealer, (2) such form described car, listed its purchase price, provided for delivery to buyer as soon as possible, and also stated that order was not binding until accepted by dealer, (3) buyer, but not dealer, signed such order form and gave dealer check for $1,000 deposit on vehicle, (4) dealer on same day placed written order form, (3) that order form sent by dealer to manufacturer was sufficient memorandum of contract to satisfy statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), and (4) that even assuming absence of a sufficient memorandum under UCC § 2-201(1), buyer's part payment on the indivisible contract operated under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to take contract out of statute of frauds. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

Written agreement for sale of boat which was somewhat vague in many details, but which was signed by seller and buyer and referred to "Leisure Craft" boat that was "to be paid at terms below," constituted a sufficient writing with respect to statute-of-frauds provisions of UCC § 2-201(1) & (2), and parol evidence was admissible to supply missing portions of such contract. Hatley v. Frey, 145 Ga. App. 658, 244 S.E.2d 604 (1978).

Transaction whereby seller, who was indebted to buyer, agreed to sell tractor to buyer in return for cancellation of seller's indebtedness constituted present, binding and completed sale, and title to tractor passed to buyer at time of execution of contract of sale, notwithstanding sales agreement provided that tractor would remain on seller's premises until needed by buyer and during that period of time seller would have right to sell tractor, and written agreement between seller and buyer was adequate as contract of sale under UCC since it contained date, identified buyer and seller and specified exactly model, make and serial number of tractor, listed amount and nature of consideration and was signed by agent of both parties. Ace Supply, Inc. v. Rocky-Mountain Mach. Co., 96 Idaho 183, 525 P.2d 965 (1974).

Documents that look toward some sale in the future do not constitute a sufficient writing to satisfy the statute of frauds provision especially with respect to the specificity with which the terms and conditions of all promises constituting the contract are set forth. In re Flying W Airways, Inc., 341 F. Supp. 26 (E.D. Pa. 1972).

All that is required is that the writing afford a basis for believing that the offered oral evidence rests upon a real transaction. Harry Rubin & Sons v. Consolidated Pipe Co. of Am., 396 Pa. 506, 153 A.2d 472 (1959).

19. —Error or omission.

Where contract for sale of grain omitted delivery date, such omission did not involve statute of frauds problem as parties orally agreed that seller had option to deliver within 2 months period; where seller refused to deliver corn, buyer's remedy for nondelivery under UCC § 2-711 was for damages, this being difference between contract price for corn and market price at date of breach. Cargill, Inc. v. Fickbohm, 252 N.W.2d 739 (Iowa 1977).

Terms with respect to time and place of payment or delivery may be omitted from written instrument; in such event payment for goods sold is due at time and place of buyer's receipt of goods, even though place of shipment is also place of delivery. Southwest Eng'g Co. v. Martin Tractor Co., 205 Kan. 684, 473 P.2d 18 (1970).

A sales order for cable signed by the purchaser's employee containing the name of the seller, the name of the shipper, the quantity, description, and weight of the cable, and notations of the purchaser's order number and the seller's sales number is not violative of the statute of frauds for the reason that it failed to state the price and the price could be proved by parol. Julian C. Cohen Salvage Corp. v. Eastern Elec. Sales Co., 205 Pa. Super. 26, 206 A.2d 331 (1965).

20. —Memoranda.

A (1) memorandum from vice president of retail sales of wristwatch-selling company showing that seller's salesperson was authorized to offer buyer, a Mississippi corporation operating jewelry counters in department stores throughout southeast, a discounted price on certain wristwatches made by defendant, and (2) defendant's order form, taken together with (2) internal memorandum from a clerical employee in the employ of the defendant in charge of inventory control, announcing that a new promotion code had been set up to cover "a special order from [the plaintiff]", provided sufficient evidence to satisfy statute of frauds. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

Where a letter from a prospective seller to a prospective buyer adopted the position that no contract of sale had been formed, on the asserted basis that the seller's employee expressed a condition precedent to acceptance of the offer, namely, procuring the approval of her superiors, and where the letter contained the statement made by that employee that "we will take care of it", signifying acceptance on the part of the seller notwithstanding any secret intentions the seller's employee failed to express, the letter constituted a memorandum or writing evidencing a contract for the sale of goods, which was signed by the party against whom enforcement was sought, and it specified a quantity; thus, under § 75-2-201(1), the trial judge erred in sustaining the seller's motion to dismiss on the basis of the statute of frauds. Franklin County Coop. v. MFC Servs. (A.A.L.), 441 So. 2d 1376 (Miss. 1983).

Where (1) buyer placed order for new Corvette on form furnished by dealer, (2) such form described car, listed its purchase price, provided for delivery to buyer as soon as possible, and also stated that order was not binding until accepted by dealer, (3) buyer, but not dealer, signed such order form and gave dealer check for $1,000 deposit on vehicle, (4) dealer on same day placed written order form, (3) that order form sent by dealer to manufacturer was sufficient memorandum of contract to satisfy statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), and (4) that even assuming absence of a sufficient memorandum under UCC § 2-201(1), buyer's part payment on the indivisible contract operated under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to take contract out of statute of frauds. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

UCC § 2-201(1) makes only three invariable requirements as to the memorandum: (1) it must evidence a contract for the sale of goods; (2) it must be "signed," a word that includes any authentication that identifies the party to be charged; and (3) it must specify a quantity. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

In action for bank's breach of contract to sell plaintiff a repossessed truck tractor, signed letter to plaintiff from bank's vice president which stated that although bank would not extend credit to plaintiff, bank would sell tractor to plaintiff for $6,800 cash, constituted, in conjunction with plaintiff's offer to bank of money order for $6,800, sufficient memorandum of alleged contract under UCC § 2-201(1). Veik v. Tilden Bank, 200 Neb. 705, 265 N.W.2d 214, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1134 (1978) (where bank refused to sell tractor for sum originally agreed on).

UCC § 2-201(1) contains only three definite and invariable requirements as to the memorandum: (1) it must evidence a contract for the sale of goods; (2) it must be "signed," which includes any authentication that identifies the party to be charged; and (3) it must specify a quantity. Veik v. Tilden Bank, 200 Neb. 705, 265 N.W.2d 214 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-201(1), absence of memorandum in writing is merely defense to action to enforce executory contract for sale of goods; it is not basis for rescission of executed contract and completed sale. Vom Lehn v. Astor Art Galleries, Ltd., 86 Misc. 2d 1 (1976).

Under UCC § 2-201, memorandum functions only as evidence of contract and need not contain every term. Kerner v. Hughes Tool Co., 56 Cal. App. 3d 924 (2d Dist. 1976).

Oral agreement to extend credit entered into at time buyer purchased used car from seller, paid seller partial down payment, and executed partially completed bill of sale, but prior to time parties executed conditional sales contract, constituted valid and binding contract under statute of frauds: (1) bill of sale was sufficient written memorandum to take sale of car out of operation of statute under UCC § 2-201(1); (2) oral agreement to extend credit was collateral to sale and inducement for entire bargain; (3) terms of oral agreement to extend credit were consistent with and additional to written bill of sale under UCC § 2-202(b); and (4) conduct of parties indicated firm commitment to extend credit under UCC § 2-201(3)(c). Hardin v. Cliff Pettit Motors, Inc., 407 F. Supp. 297 (E.D. Tenn. 1976).

21. —Purchase orders or the like.

In an action seeking to recover on unpaid invoices for the purchase of cattle, the defendant was not entitled to summary judgment where the codefendant alleged that the defendant and codefendant entered into a partnership agreement to purchase, raise and sell cattle for a profit; if such an arrangement existed, the receipt by the codefendant of invoices for the cattle would be sufficient to refute the defendant's assertion of the statute of frauds. Mississippi Livestock Producers Ass'n v. Hood, 758 So. 2d 447 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Subsection (2) of this section does not allow seller of wristwatches to reject an offer by buyer made within 10 days after seller received copy of buyer's purchase order; subsection (2) provides merchants with a method of satisfying statute of frauds when an oral contract has been formed but signature of party to be charged is lacking, by contrast, subsection (2) cannot be invoked to excuse a breach of that contract in the present case, in which there were 2 writings signed by seller's representatives which, together with the unsigned seller order form, were sufficient to establish written contract. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In proceeding to stay arbitration, trial court did not err in refusing to instruct jury, as requested by seller, to effect that mere receipt of purchase order including arbitration clause, without returning it, did not constitute agreement to arbitrate, unless preceded by oral agreement. S. Kornblum Metals Co. v. Intsel Corp., 47 A.D.2d 523 (2d Dep't 1975), aff'd, 38 N.Y.2d 376, 379 N.Y.S.2d 826, 342 N.E.2d 591 (1976).

Under UCC § 2-201, an agreement is enforceable only to the extent of the goods shown in the writing which is relied upon to establish the contract, and hence the purchase invoices, even if deemed to meet the statutory requirement of a writing, cannot support a claim for damages to future goods. Huyler Paper Stock Co. v. Information Supplies Corp., 117 N.J. Super. 353, 284 A.2d 568 (L. Div. 1971).

22. —Quantity.

In action by supplier against subcontractor for latter's alleged breach of contract to purchase limestone, which district court had ruled was contract to purchase specific quantity of limestone, court held (1) that contract was supported by consideration and thus was enforceable, (2) that contract satisfied statute-of-fraud's requirement in UCC § 2-201(1) as to presence of "quantity term" in the agreement, since by incorporating certain bid documents by reference, it obligated supplier to furnish limestone "of a grade and quality to conform to specified requirements" in such bid documents, (3) that as a result of provisions in incorporated bid documents, the contract, instead of being agreement for fixed amount of limestone, was a requirements contract within meaning of UCC § 2-306(1), (4) that subcontractor did not breach such contract by directing supplier not to supply any limestone at all, since subcontractor had no requirements as result of decision by National Parks Service not to use limestone on project that subcontractor was working on, and (5) that although limiting language of UCC § 2-306(1) would seem to prevent subcontractor from reducing its requirements to zero, such language did not in fact preclude a good-faith reduction in a party's requirements that was highly disproportionate to such party's normal prior requirements or stated estimates. R.A. Weaver & Assocs. v. Asphalt Constr., Inc., 587 F.2d 1315, 190 U.S. App. D.C. 418 (1978).

In order for a confirmatory writing under UCC § 2-201(2) to be "sufficient against the sender," it must satisfy the requirements of UCC § 2-201(1). These requirements are: (1) the writing must evidence a contract, (2) it must be signed by the sender, and (3) it must specify a quantity. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 9, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 33 (applying Mississippi UCC; holding that writing sent in confirmation of oral contract for purchase of poultry qualified as confirmatory writing under UCC § 2-201(2)).

One page form marketing agreement between association of independent fishermen and cannery was unenforceable under UCC § 2-201 where contract omitted any mention of quantity of fish to be purchased and where there was no quantity provision in any writing between parties to furnish basis for explanation by parol evidence. Alaska Indep. Fishermen's Mktg. Ass'n v. New England Fish Co., 15 Wash. App. 154, 548 P.2d 348 (1976).

Enforcement of contract between hosiery manufacturer and buyer under which manufacturer agreed to accept returns of certain merchandise for credit in exchange for buyer's promise to purchase sufficient amount of hosiery to exhaust such credits, was barred by statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201, although writings between parties evidenced ongoing buyer-seller relationship predicated on a "real transaction," where writings failed to state quantity of hosiery necessary to exhaust credits and where it was impossible to determine total quantity necessary to exhaust credits, since amounts of credits and purchases varied with styles of hosiery returned and purchased. Doral Hosiery Corp. v. Sav-A-Stop, Inc., 377 F. Supp. 387 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

In action by supplier against homeowners to recover unpaid balance for materials supplied to contractor in construction of home, documents signed by homeowners under which they agreed to accept liability for materials delivered to contractor, but which did not show any quantity of goods being sold, was not sufficient to satisfy UCC § 2-201. Lowe's Cos. v. Lipe, 20 N.C. App. 106, 201 S.E.2d 81 (1973).

Where it was obvious that reference to volume of four and one-half to five million feet was merely an estimate constituting "all" of hemlock logs in area known to defendant, there is no inconsistency between references to "all" and to specific amount in different portions of letter which would disqualify it as confirmation of oral contract under UCC § 2-201(2). Fort Hill Lumber Co. v. Georgia-Pacific Corp., 261 Or. 431, 493 P.2d 1366 (1972).

Agreement "to furnish all concrete for slab" was not insufficient as description of quantity to satisfy requirements of statute of frauds, since term "all the concrete for slab" meant in effect that quantity of concrete to be delivered and poured was that which was required for slab, and parol evidence ultimately produced undisputably indicated location and identity of slab referred to. Port City Constr. Co. v. Henderson, 48 Ala. App. 639, 266 So. 2d 896 (Civ. App. 1972).

In a dispute as to the existence of a contract to sell a valuable coin collection, a letter written by the defendant which failed to indicate the existence of a contract and the quantity of coins to be sold failed to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Oswald v. Allen, 285 F. Supp. 488 (S.D.N.Y. 1968), aff'd, 417 F.2d 43 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1969).

23. —Quantity; "output" contracts.

Where contracts for sale of cotton between buyer and cotton growers specified that buyer would purchase, and grower would sell, cotton grown during 1973 crop year on specified acreage, with projected yield of certain number of pounds of cotton per acre, quantity terms of contracts were not only sufficiently definite to satisfy UCC statute of frauds provision, § 2-201, but also were sufficient to meet standards of definiteness required by UCC § 2-204(3) for enforceability. Riegel Fiber Corp. v. Anderson Gin Co., 512 F.2d 784 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

Contracts for sale of cotton under which buyer agreed to buy all cotton produced by seller on specified acreage at specified price for specified grades were "output" contracts, as defined in UCC § 2-306(1), for sale of all of farmers' cotton produced by them during crop year 1973, were not vague and indefinite as to quantity and subject matter, and were sufficient to satisfy requirements of statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201(1). Furthermore, specific performance of contracts was available to buyers since parties stipulated that cotton involved was unique. R.L. Kimsey Cotton Co. v. Ferguson, 233 Ga. 962, 214 S.E.2d 360 (1975).

Contract for sale of growing cotton, which were "goods" within contemplation of UCC § 2-105(1), met requirements of statute of frauds provision of UCC § 2-201(1) where both parties signed writing, quantity was sufficiently shown for "output" contract for sale of all defendants' cotton produced on their 825 acres under UCC § 2-306(1), and document indicated that agreement to sell had been made. Harris v. Hine, 232 Ga. 183, 205 S.E.2d 847 (1974).

24. Signature.

In order for a confirmatory writing under UCC § 2-201(2) to be "sufficient against the sender," it must satisfy the requirements of UCC § 2-201(1). These requirements are: (1) the writing must evidence a contract, (2) it must be signed by the sender, and (3) it must specify a quantity. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 9, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 33 (applying Mississippi UCC; holding that writing sent in confirmation of oral contract for purchase of poultry qualified as confirmatory writing under UCC § 2-201(2)).

Where (1) seller on August 3d orally offered to sell buyer 15,000 tons of fertilizer, which offer was valid until 2:00 p.m. on August 3d, (2) on morning of August 3d, as requested by buyer, seller sent buyer same offer by telex, (3) at 10:00 a.m. on August 3d, after seller had sent and relinquished control over its firm offer by telex, buyer allegedly accepted such offer orally, and (4) buyer thereafter sent seller responsive telex while seller's firm offer was still valid and such telex included certain terms, including terms as to payment and loading, that were not in seller's offer, court held (1) that inclusion in buyer's telex of payment and loading provisions not mentioned in seller's offer was not, under UCC § 2-207(1), necessarily fatal to buyer's alleged acceptance, (2) that under UCC § 2-207(2), term "plus or minus 10 percent at buyer's option," although it might have materially altered the contract, did not by itself invalidate the alleged acceptance, (3) that on the other hand, since UCC § 2-207 does require definite expression of acceptance before its provisions can apply, it might be that buyer's responsive telex, taken as a whole, did not represent agreement between the parties on even price and quantity of seller's fertilizer, and (4) that if a contract had been formed, it was enforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) because document signed by seller as party to be charged was its firm offer in its August 3d telex and buyer's oral acceptance of that written offer was responsive thereto, insofar as satisfying statute of frauds was concerned, and clearly showed that oral evidence offered by buyer rested on a real transaction. Ore & Chem. Corp. v. Howard Butcher Trading Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1150, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 823 (E.D. Pa. 1978) (applying New York and Pennsylvania UCC; holding, on cross-motions for summary judgment, that validity of buyer's acceptance depended on issues of fact to be resolved at the trial).

Where contract between supplier and contractor was orally modified and where supplier sent letter of confirmation to contractor who did not object thereto, claim for modified price of additional materials was not barred by UCC § 2-201; typewritten signature on letter of confirmation sent by supplier met definition of "signed" under UCC § 1-201(39). A & G Constr. Co. v. Reid Bros. Logging Co., 547 P.2d 1207 (Alaska 1976).

Purchase order unsigned by party against whom it was sought to be enforced was not such writing as would satisfy statute of frauds. LTV Aerospace Corp. v. Bateman, 492 S.W.2d 703 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e. (July 11, 1973).

There was no merit to defendant's contention that a writing was unenforceable because it was not signed by plaintiff, since the statute requires only the signature of the party against whom enforcement is sought. Whirlpool Corp. v. Regis Leasing Corp., 29 A.D.2d 395 (1st Dep't 1968).

Under this section, unsigned invoice describing goods and stating terms of payment, received following delivery of goods, was not enforceable. Evans Implement

Co. v. Thomas Indus., Inc., 117 Ga. App. 279, 160 S.E.2d 462, 5 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 124 (1968) (recognizing rule; invoice held admissible evidence in absence or raising of issue of statute of frauds by pleading or by objection).

It is immaterial whether the writing is signed by the party who is seeking enforcement of the contract. Fyre-Safety, Inc. v. Yerger Bros., 56 Lanc. L. Rev. 311 (Pa. 1959).

The Code continues the requirement that there be a signed writing in order to validate certain sales. Traska v. DeGennaro, 38 Wash. C. R. 50 (Pa. 1958).

25. —Agent's authority.

In action for breach of alleged contract to sell store to plaintiff, where (1) only writing offered as note or memorandum of such contract was letter from plaintiff to defendant's attorney containing certain terms of proposed sale, (2) letter did not mention any duties to be performed by plaintiff in return for right to purchase store, and (3) defendant's president struck out words "consented to" at bottom of letter and wrote signed note on such letter to defendant's attorney stating that terms in letter were subject to attorney's legal advice, court held (1) that as matter of law, signature of defendant's president on letter was not made with intent to authenticate letter as memorandum of preexisting oral contract or to bind defendant to terms contained in letter, and (2) letter therefore failed as matter of law to satisfy statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(1). Cohn v. Geon Intercontinental Corp., 62 A.D.2d 1161 (4th Dep't 1978).

Where plaintiff entered into oral contracts with defendant cotton growers for sale of their cotton crops, each involving more than $500 worth of cotton: (1) under UCC §§ 2-105 and 2-107, sale of cotton was sale of goods and, under UCC § 2-201, was not enforceable unless there was writing sufficient to indicate contract for sale had been made, signed by party against whom enforcement was sought; (2) oral contracts between plaintiff and defendants did not come within agency or broker exception to statute of frauds where there were two separate, independent sets of contracts under which defendants agreed to sell to plaintiff, and plaintiff independently contracted to sell to mills; (3) although exception to statute of frauds exists under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) if party against whom enforcement is sought admits in his pleadings, testimony or otherwise in court that contract for sale was made, such exception did not apply in present case since defendants denied under oath that agreement for sale was made with plaintiff and, although trial court made credibility determination adverse to defendants' testimony, such finding did not constitute finding that "admission" except applied; (4) defendants were not estopped to assert defense of statute of frauds merely because plaintiff had acted in reliance on oral agreement. Cox v. Cox, 292 Ala. 106, 289 So. 2d 609 (1974).

In action on contract to furnish certain construction stone, evidence was sufficient to show that contract was enforceable under statute of frauds, where authorized office of buyer had sent to seller telegram which was writing sufficient to indicate that contract for sale had been made between parties and signed by party against whom enforcement was sought, and officer also admitted in his testimony that contract for sale was made. Providence Granite Co. v. Joseph Rugo, Inc., 362 Mass. 888, 291 N.E.2d 159 (1972).

Although owner-auctioneer of goods was under disability to sign memorandum of sale to gratify statute of frauds and bind buyer as party to be charged, this disability did not carry over to auctioneer's agent who, by buyer's bid made in open and regular course of auction, was authorized to sign buyer's name to such memorandum. Romani v. Harris, 255 Md. 389, 258 A.2d 187 (1969).

D. Confirmation as Between Merchants.

26. In general.

In seller's action for buyer's breach of contract to purchase seller's product line of floor sweepers and also, on "pay-as-used basis," inventory for such product line, (1) seller's oral acceptance by telephone of buyer's written offer, in conjunction with seller's written confirmation of its acceptance and buyer's failure to object in writing to contents of confirmation within ten days after it was received, satisfied exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2) and rendered contract enforceable, (2) contract was binding, even though both parties expected that it would be reduced to formal writing by their attorneys, (3) seller was entitled to recover contract price under UCC § 2-709(1)(b) because seller, after buyer refused to perform, was unable to resell sweeper line at reasonable price to another person, and (4) buyer's liability for sweeper-line inventory, which buyer had purchased on "pay-as-used basis," was analogous to good-faith liability of a buyer under a requirements contract provided for in UCC § 2-306(1). Lambert Corp. v. Evans, 575 F.2d 132 (7th Cir. Wis. 1978).

Before the merchant sending the confirmatory writing can invoke UCC § 2-201(2), he must show (1) that both parties are merchants; (2) that the writing was in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender; (3) that the writing was received by the other merchant within a reasonable time after the contract was made; (4) that the merchant receiving the writing had reason to know its contents; and (5) that the merchant receiving the writing did not give written notice of objection within ten days after the date on which the writing was received. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

UCC § 2-201(2) is a new addition to the statute of frauds and provides merchants with an alternative method of satisfying the writing requirement of UCC § 2-201(1). Under UCC § 2-201(2), if the merchant sending the confirmatory writing has met the prerequisites of the subsection, and if the merchant receiving the writing has not given written notice of objection within ten days of its receipt, the confirmatory writing satisfies the statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), even through the receiving merchant did not sign it. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

To be effective, the written notice of objection required by UCC § 2-201(2) must be given by the receiving merchant within ten days of his receipt of the confirmatory writing. However, it is not necessary that the sending merchant receive such notice. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

UCC § 2-201(2) does not by itself transform a confirmation into a contract. Instead, a written confirmation which is followed by the recipient's failure to respond within ten days after the confirmation is received merely negates, as between merchants, the defense of the statute of frauds, and the party who claims a contract must still prove it. McCubbin Seed Farm, Inc. v. Tri-Mor Sales, Inc., 257 N.W.2d 55, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 599 (Iowa 1977) (holding in action for breach of contract to sell seed that defendant's evidence raised material question of fact as to existence of such contract, so as to preclude granting of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment).

As between merchants, subsection (2) significantly changes the former law by obviating the necessity of having a memorandum signed by the party sought to be charged. Harry Rubin & Sons v. Consolidated Pipe Co. of Am., 396 Pa. 506, 153 A.2d 472 (1959).

Subsection (2) requires (a) that, within a reasonable time, there be a writing in confirmation of the oral contract; (b) that the writing be sufficient to bind the sender; (c) that such writing be received; (d) that no reply has been made thereto although the recipient had reason to know of its contents. Harry Rubin & Sons v. Consolidated Pipe Co. of Am., 396 Pa. 506, 153 A.2d 472 (1959).

27. "Merchants".

Before the merchant sending the confirmatory writing can invoke UCC § 2-201(2), he must show (1) that both parties are merchants; (2) that the writing was in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender; (3) that the writing was received by the other merchant within a reasonable time after the contract was made; (4) that the merchant receiving the writing had reason to know its contents; and (5) that the merchant receiving the writing did not give written notice of objection within ten days after the date on which the writing was received. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

A provision in an agreement between plaintiff subcontractor and defendant general contractor set out in a letter sent by plaintiff to defendant whereby plaintiff, in confirming an oral agreement, stated that defendant would pay for all steel as billed in the event that defendant was not awarded a contract on a construction project, is, standing alone, a contract for the sale of goods. While defendant is not a steel merchant, since it is not in the business of buying and selling steel, defendant, like plaintiff, is nonetheless a "merchant" "having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction" (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-104, subd [1]) for purposes of the merchant exception to the Statute of Frauds, which makes an oral contract for the sale of goods between merchants enforceable against a party who receives written confirmation of the existing oral agreement and does not give "written notice of objection to its contents" within 10 days after it is received. (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-201, subd [2].) Accordingly, based on all the evidence, defendant is bound by an oral agreement to purchase the steel from plaintiff. Pecker Iron Works, Inc. v. Sturdy Concrete Co. Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 998 (1978).

In action for seller's refusal to deliver corn and soybeans to buyer, evidence was sufficient to show that seller had held himself out, within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), as having knowledge or skill peculiar to corn and soybeans, so as to constitute seller a "merchant" under exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2). Currituck Grain, Inc. v. Powell, 38 N.C. App. 7, 246 S.E.2d 853 (1978).

In action by buyer against seller of soybeans who refused to deliver after price rose, seller was not entitled to rely on statute of frauds defense where evidence was sufficient to support finding that seller was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-201(b), and where oral agreement had been confirmed by written correspondence from buyer to seller. Continental Grain Co. v. Martin, 536 F.2d 592 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1024, 97 S. Ct. 643, 50 L. Ed. 2d 625 (1976).

28. —Farmers; "merchants".

Sellers of soybeans, who breached oral agreement to deliver soybeans to plaintiff buyer, were "merchants" under UCC § 2-

104(1) and were liable, under exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2), for their breach of such oral agreement when they failed to object within ten days to buyer's written confirmation of the oral contract where evidence showed that sellers, despite their contention that they were merely farmers and not merchants, (1) had acted in such a way as to cause others to believe that they had special knowledge and skill in grain dealing, (2) had advertised themselves as grain dealers, and (3) had, in addition to selling their own crops, bought crops of others and sold such crops to wholesalers. Cargill, Inc. v. Gaard, 84 Wis. 2d 138, 267 N.W.2d 22 (1978).

Farmer who was "merchant" under UCC § 2-201(2) could not recover for soybeans sold to defendant buyer where evidence showed that farmer and buyer had entered into contract for sale of 6,000 bushels of soybeans to buyer, that farmer had breached this contract by failing to deliver entire quantity of soybeans contracted for, and that amount that farmer sued for had been withheld by buyer as damages for loss sustained from farmer's breach. In such case, since plaintiff farmer was "merchant" under UCC § 2-201(2), and since he had received from buyer written contract calling for sale of 6,000 bushels of soybeans but had thrown such contract away without objecting in writing, within ten-day period specified by UCC § 2-201(2), to provision in contract calling for sale of "6,000" bushels of soybeans, oral contract involved in case was not barred by statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), but could be proved and relied on by buyer as defense. Rush Johnson Farms, Inc. v. Missouri Farmers Ass'n, 555 S.W.2d 61 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Farmer was merchant within UCC § 2-104 definition in that he was professional in business of growing and selling crops he raised, his livelihood depended on expertise with which he sold, as well as raised, crops and to that end he stayed informed as to market prices and was knowledgeable in business of selling; thus, he was bound by oral contract for sale of wheat where he received written confirmation of contract from buyer and did not give written objection to any of its terms within ten days of receipt as provided by UCC § 2-201(2). Nelson v. Union Equity Coop. Exch., 548 S.W.2d 352, 95 A.L.R.3d 471 (Tex. 1977).

In action by grain buyer against farmer to recover damages for farmer's failure to deliver corn and soybeans under alleged oral contract, farmer's affidavit in support of his motion for summary judgment did not establish that he was casual or inexperienced seller in corn and soybeans, the "goods involved in the transaction," thereby establishing that he was not a merchant and thus entitled to defense of statute of frauds, notwithstanding he received written confirmation of contract from buyer, where affidavit established farmer's prior experience in trucking from 1960 to 1970, that he farmed during 1970, 1971 and 1974 and that one-half his gross income in 1971 and 1972 derived from livestock, but where affidavit did not establish whether farmer had ever negotiated with grain dealers prior to 1974, whether he had ever sold corn or soybeans previously, or whether he had knowledge of customs and practices peculiar to marketing of these grains. Currituck Grain, Inc. v. Powell, 28 N.C. App. 563, 222 S.E.2d 1 (1976).

Farmer was merchant under UCC § 2-104 and thus came within "merchant exception" to UCC statute of frauds with respect to oral contract for delivery of soybeans where, inter alia, farmer had sold large quantities of corn, as well as smaller quantities of potatoes and soybeans under forward contracts for five or six years, where farmer had traded on Chicago Board Trade and kept up with market news, and where there was nothing to indicate that method of making forward contracts for corn differed in any respect from those for soybeans. Continental Grain Co. v. Harbach, 400 F. Supp. 695 (N.D. Ill. 1975).

Farmer who had been engaged in farming for 34 years, who had approximately 180 acres of corn and 150 acres of soybeans under cultivation, and who, for period of at least five years, had sold his crops to grain elevators both in "cash sales" and "future contracts" was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); thus, written confirmations of two oral agreements for sale of soybeans, sent by buyers to farmer were sufficient under UCC § 2-201. Sierens v. Clausen, 60 Ill. 2d 585, 328 N.E.2d 559 (1975).

Written confirmation of oral contracts for sale of soybeans satisfied statute of frauds where experienced farmer who had sold grain for at least five years on both cash and future contracts bases was a merchant familiar with practices, customs, and usages of grain business and commodities market. Sierens v. Clausen, 60 Ill. 2d 585, 328 N.E.2d 559 (1975).

Farmers who regularly sold their crops to grain companies over period of several years were merchants within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), and were barred from asserting statute of frauds in buyer's action for breach of an alleged oral contract for sale of soybeans where buyer sent written confirmation pursuant to UCC § 2-201(2). Campbell v. Yokel, 20 Ill. App. 3d 702, 313 N.E.2d 628 (5th Dist. 1974).

29. —Farmers; not "merchants".

The average farmer with no particular knowledge or experience in selling, buying, or dealing in future commodity transactions, who sells only the crops he raises to local elevators for cash or who places his grain in storage under one of the federal loan programs, is not a "merchant" within the meaning of the exception to the statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2). Although through training and years of experience, a farmer may well possess or acquire special knowledge, skill, and expertise in the production of grain crops, this does not make him a professional in business, within the meaning of UCC § 2-104(1) and Official Comments 1 and 2, who is equal in the marketplace with a grain-buying and selling company whose officers, agents, and employees are constantly conversant with the daily fluctuations in the commodity market, the many factors that affect that market, and its intricate practices and procedures. Terminal Grain Corp. v. Freeman, 270 N.W.2d 806, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1 (S.D. 1978) (holding, in buyer's action for farmer's failure to deliver grain under oral contract of sale, that since farmer was not a "merchant" within meaning of exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2) defense of statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) barred any recovery by buyer).

Where buyer of soybeans sent written confirmation of oral contract to farmer and where farmer sold no crops or livestock except those which he raised, had limited experience in selling crops and no other business experience, and had not done business previously with buyer, farmer-seller did not come within definition of merchant under UCC § 2-104 and thus was not subject to statute of frauds exception relating to transactions between merchants. Sand Seed Serv., Inc. v. Poeckes, 249 N.W.2d 663 (Iowa 1977).

In action by grain broker against wheat farmer to enforce alleged oral contract for sale of wheat crop under UCC § 2-201(2): (1) farmer, who had been hay and grain farmer for 25 years, who did not buy and sell from or for anyone, other than what was produced on his own farm, and who did not maintain roadside stand or otherwise continuously offer his produce to public for sale, although he did keep conversant with market prices and each year negotiated and contracted to sell his crops to his best advantage, was not acting as "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-201(2); (2) however, even if it was assumed that he was "merchant," grain broker did not give notice of confirmation of purchase of grain within reasonable time where 12 days elapsed before any indication of confirmation was given during which time price of grain increased about one dollar per bushel and there was no apparent explanation for delay. Lish v. Compton, 547 P.2d 223 (Utah 1976).

Although farmer undoubtedly had special knowledge or skill in raising wheat, this factor, coupled with annual sales of wheat crops and purchases of seed wheat, did not qualify him as "merchant" with respect to sale of wheat where farmer sold only products he raised and there was no indication that any of these sales were other than cash sales to local grain elevators. Decatur Coop. Ass'n v. Urban, 219 Kan. 171, 547 P.2d 323 (1976).

Oral contract for purchase and sale of cotton was unenforceable against cotton farmer under UCC § 2-201, notwithstanding farmer received written confirmation of contract from buyer and failed to make any objection thereto, since farmer was not "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104; farmer does not solely by his occupation hold himself out as being professional cotton merchant within meaning of UCC § 2-104(2) and, although there was evidence that farmer was knowledgeable seller, there was no evidence that he ever sold anyone's cotton but his own and this was not sufficient to make him dealer within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1). Loeb & Co. v. Schreiner, 294 Ala. 722, 321 So. 2d 199 (1975).

A farmer, not being a merchant as defined in subdivision (1) of section 2-104, cannot be bound under the provisions of subdivision (2) of this section for not returning to a grain company a proposed contract in writing which provided that the farmer sold to the company 5,000 bushels of soybeans. Cook Grains, Inc. v. Fallis, 239 Ark. 962, 395 S.W.2d 555 (1965).

30. Timeliness of confirmation.

Before the merchant sending the confirmatory writing can invoke UCC § 2-201(2), he must show (1) that both parties are merchants; (2) that the writing was in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender; (3) that the writing was received by the other merchant within a reasonable time after the contract was made; (4) that the merchant receiving the writing had reason to know its contents; and (5) that the merchant receiving the writing did not give written notice of objection within ten days after the date on which the writing was received. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Where seller of poultry under oral contract admitted receiving writing confirming such contract within eight days after contract allegedly was made, such receipt occurred within reasonable time under UCC § 2-201(2). Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Receipt of written confirmation of oral contract for sale of wheat more than six months after contract was made, and only one day before last possible delivery date under such contract, was not, where there was no adequate excuse for such delay, receipt of confirmatory writing within reasonable time under UCC § 2-201(2), and contract was unenforceable under UCC § 2-201(1). Kimball County Grain Coop. v. Yung, 200 Neb. 233, 263 N.W.2d 818 (1978).

Where in telephone conversation on July 31, 1973, seller agreed to sell and buyer agreed to buy 26,000 bushels of wheat and buyer's written confirmation of contract was received by seller on August 7, 1973; and where seller, on August 21, 1973, repudiated such contract (and also an earlier contract for sale of 40,000 bushels of wheat) because of clause in buyer's confirmation giving buyer option to cancel agreement, (1) buyer's confirmation of contract was received by seller within reasonable time under UCC § 2-201(2); (2) seller's objection to confirmation of contract on August 21, 1973, was not made within ten-day period prescribed by UCC § 2-201(2); (3) provision in buyer's confirmation giving buyer option to cancel was addition of material term to contract; and (4) since buyer's confirmation of contract was not predicated on seller's assent to such additional term, seller's receipt of buyer's confirmation within reasonable time constituted acceptance of contract under UCC § 2-207(1) and such additional term did not void contract, although seller was not bound by additional term. Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

Provisions of UCC § 2-201(1) and (2) barred contractor's action against pump supplier for breach of alleged oral bid or contract to supply and sell pumps at specified price which contractor used in submitting bid on construction project: (1) throughout their dealings concerning pumps, parties were "merchants" within meaning of that term as used in UCC § 2-201(2), and thus supplier's telephonic bid in and of itself was subject to revocation by supplier during and awaiting a reasonable time for contractor's writing in confirmation of contract; (2) subsequent dispute between parties over actual terms and exceptions in supplier's telephonic bid, and especially supplier's letter proposing modifications of telephonic bid, constituted clear and decisive communicated revocation of telephonic bid prior to any "writing" from contractor as permitted under UCC § 2-201(2); (3) however, assuming supplier's telephonic bid or offer in and of itself remained outstanding, contractor's subsequent letters fell short of constituting "confirmation of the contract" where letters spoke of future intended executed agreement incorporating "the price and terms of the bid you submitted;" (4) pump supplier was not estopped from relying on UCC § 2-201(1) merely because contractor relied on supplier's oral offer in submitting his bid or on theory that supplier was unjustly enriched. C.R. Fedrick, Inc. v. Borg-Warner Corp., 552 F.2d 852 (9th Cir. Cal. 1977).

Where record indicated that both parties to oral contract for purchase and sale of sod were merchants, and that confirmatory memorandum was sent by buyer to seller to which seller did not object within 10-day period, factual question was presented as to whether buyer sent memorandum within reasonable time. Barron v. Edwards, 45 Mich. App. 210, 206 N.W.2d 508 (1973).

31. Delivery and receipt of confirmation.

Before the merchant sending the confirmatory writing can invoke UCC § 2-201(2), he must show (1) that both parties are merchants; (2) that the writing was in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender; (3) that the writing was received by the other merchant within a reasonable time after the contract was made; (4) that the merchant receiving the writing had reason to know its contents; and (5) that the merchant receiving the writing did not give written notice of objection within ten days after the date on which the writing was received. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

UCC § 2-201(2) is intended to allow merchants to use confirmatory writings to satisfy the statute of frauds and to encourage the business practice of sending writings to confirm the terms of oral contracts. To preclude use of the presumption of receipt by mailing, and to limit the manner of proving receipt of the confirmatory writing by requiring that a merchant show by direct evidence—such as mailing by registered mail with return receipt requested—that the confirmatory writing was actually received would seriously limit the utility of UCC § 2-201(2). Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

UCC §§ 2-201(2) and 1-201(26) do not prescribe any particular method for proving the receipt of a confirmatory writing. However, to prove such receipt, the sending merchant can rely on the presumption that a correctly addressed letter, which was properly mailed and was not returned undelivered to the sender, was delivered to the addressee. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

In action for balance due for sale of steel reinforcing bars, where (1) buyer alleged making of oral contract under which bars would be sold at fixed price of $5.90 per 100 pounds until December 31, 1972, and thereafter at price no higher than $6.35 throughout completion of buyer's construction job, but (2) evidence did not sustain buyer's claim that it had mailed letter confirming such contract and also comprehensive purchase order to seller, trial court did not err in holding that seller had not received any confirmation memoranda and that contract was therefore unenforceable under UCC § 2-201(1) and (2). Wholesale Materials Co. v. Magna Corp., 357 So. 2d 296 (Miss. 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 864, 99 S. Ct. 188, 58 L. Ed. 2d 174 (1978).

Where buyer, on July 23, 1973, telephoned grain seller about buying wheat and seller said he might let buyer have 40,000 bushels, subject to buyer's sending written confirmation of contract for seller's approval; where such written confirmation, because of error by buyer, was sent to incorrect address and not received by seller until August 17, 1973; where seller, on July 31, 1973, informed buyer by phone that change should be made in contract, and buyer sent written confirmation of such change to incorrect address; and where seller, on August 21, 1973, wrote buyer that seller was repudiating contract because of provision in confirmation of contract giving buyer option to cancel, (1) buyer and seller were "merchants" under UCC § 2-104(1); (2) buyer's written confirmation of contract, which seller did not receive until August 17, 1973, was not received within reasonable time under UCC § 2-201(2); (3) seller's objection on August 21, 1973 to buyer's confirmation of contract, because of clause giving buyer option to cancel agreement, was made within ten-day period prescribed by UCC § 2-201(2); and (4) seller never admitted existence of valid contract so as to permit its enforcement under UCC § 2-201(3)(b). Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

Evidence established that seller received written confirmation of contract for sale of soybeans and, thus, that buyer satisfied statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201(2), notwithstanding buyer admitted it incorrectly addressed letter confirming contract and seller denied receiving letter, where letter was sent to small town about five miles from seller's town and, although seller was known in small town to which letter was sent, letter was not returned to buyer even though its return address was on envelope. Pillsbury Co. v. Buchanan, 37 Ill. App. 3d 876, 346 N.E.2d 386 (4th Dist. 1976).

32. Failure to object.

Before the merchant sending the confirmatory writing can invoke UCC § 2-201(2), he must show (1) that both parties are merchants; (2) that the writing was in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender; (3) that the writing was received by the other merchant within a reasonable time after the contract was made; (4) that the merchant receiving the writing had reason to know its contents; and (5) that the merchant receiving the writing did not give written notice of objection within ten days after the date on which the writing was received. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

UCC § 2-201(2) is a new addition to the statute of frauds and provides merchants with an alternative method of satisfying the writing requirement of UCC § 2-201(1). Under UCC § 2-201(2), if the merchant sending the confirmatory writing has met the prerequisites of the subsection, and if the merchant receiving the writing has not given written notice of objection within ten days of its receipt, the confirmatory writing satisfies the statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), even through the receiving merchant did not sign it. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

To be effective, the written notice of objection required by UCC § 2-201(2) must be given by the receiving merchant within ten days of his receipt of the confirmatory writing. However, it is not necessary that the sending merchant receive such notice. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

The merchant exception to the Statute of Frauds (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-201, subd [2]) which makes an oral contract for the sale of goods between merchants enforceable against a party who signed nothing if that party received a written confirmation of the existing oral agreement and does not give "written notice of objection to its contents" within 10 days after it is received, merely deprives the recipient of the opportunity to raise the Statute of Frauds as a defense in the event of a failure to respond in writing within 10 days, and does not signify assent to the terms of the writing or mean that the terms of the writing are automatically accepted in the event of a failure to respond. It is up to the trier of facts to determine whether there was or was not an oral contract. Pecker Iron Works, Inc. v. Sturdy Concrete Co. Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 998 (1978).

UCC § 2-201(2) merely makes an oral contract for the sale of goods enforceable against a party who has signed nothing, provided that such party has received a written confirmation of the existing oral agreement and failed to give written notice of objection to its contents within ten days after its receipt. Failure to object in writing within ten days does not signify assent to the terms of the writing; it merely deprives the recipient of the opportunity to raise the statute of frauds as a defense. Therefore, in such a case the trier of facts must determine whether or not there was an oral contract. Pecker Iron Works, Inc. v. Sturdy Concrete Co. Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 998 (1978).

In action by subcontractor against general contractor based on oral agreement that defendant would be liable for steel purchased by plaintiff for construction project that ultimately was not awarded to defendant, court held (1) that while defendant was not a steel merchant because it was not in business of buying and selling steel, it nevertheless was a "merchant" under broad language of UCC § 2-104(1) and (3); and (2) that as a result, merchants' exception in UCC § 2-201(2) to statute of frauds applied and removed oral contract sued on from operation of the statute, since plaintiff had sent letter to defendant confirming parties' oral agreement, such letter was received by defendant, and defendant had failed to give plaintiff, within ten days of receipt of letter, written notice of defendant's objection to letter's contents, as required by UCC § 2-201(2). Pecker Iron Works, Inc. v. Sturdy Concrete Co. Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 998 (1978).

Timely objection was given within UCC § 2-201(2) where notice of objection was mailed on tenth day. Tiffany, Inc. v. W.M.K. Transit Mix, Inc., 16 Ariz. App. 415, 493 P.2d 1220, 56 A.L.R.3d 1028 (1972).

Subsection (2) penalizes a party who fails to answer a written communication of a contract within ten days of the receipt of the writing by depriving such party of the defense of the statute of frauds. Harry Rubin & Sons v. Consolidated Pipe Co. of Am., 396 Pa. 506, 153 A.2d 472 (1959).

33. —Seller.

In action by lessee of crane for defendant-lessor's refusal to sell crane to plaintiff under option in oral lease allegedly granting plaintiff right to purchase crane at "any time," where jury could have found (1) that parties had entered into oral lease during telephone conversation; (2) that such lease had actually given plaintiff option to purchase crane during "first six months of lease"; (3) that although written confirmation of oral lease, which plaintiff drafted and sent to defendant, did provide that plaintiff had option to purchase at "any time," defendant never signed confirmation document; and (4) that although defendant's first rental invoice to plaintiff did refer to order number on confirmation document, such reference did not constitute consent by defendant to proposed modification in confirmation document of purchase option in oral lease, plaintiff was not entitled, under UCC § 2-201(2) and Comment 3 thereto, to ruling that defendant was liable as matter of law under provisions of confirmation document, even though defendant did not object to such provisions within ten days, since only effect of defendant's failure to object was to be deprived of defense of statute of frauds, which he had not raised, and plaintiff's burden of proving prior oral lease remained unaffected. Defendant was also not liable as matter of law under UCC § 2-207(2) because of plaintiff's insertion in document confirming oral lease of provision giving plaintiff option to purchase crane at "any time," since jury could have found that such provision constituted material alteration of option-to-purchase provision in oral lease. Willamette-Western Corp. v. Lowry, 279 Or. 525, 568 P.2d 1339 (1977).

In action by buyer against seller arising out of nondelivery of wheat under oral sales contract, original oral contract was not rendered unenforceable by UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds, where seller admitted existence of contract. Nor was oral modification of contract as to delivery date due to unavailability of elevator space rendered unenforceable by statute of frauds requirement under UCC §§ 2-209 and 2-201 where pursuant to UCC § 1-103 and 2-209, seller waived statute of frauds defense through his course of performance under UCC § 2-208 and 1-205 in delivering 36 truckloads of wheat well after original delivery date without making timely objection. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Anderson, 170 Mont. 175, 552 P.2d 63 (1976).

Oral contract between two elephant merchants for sale of elephant was enforceable under UCC § 2-201(2) where purchaser of elephant in writing confirmed terms of oral contract so as to bind himself and where seller of elephant never at any time made any written objection to letter. Miller v. Kaye, 545 P.2d 199 (Utah 1975).

In action for breach of oral contract to deliver dried citrus pulp for use in manufacture of cattle feed, seller's failure to respond to buyer's "Confirmation of Purchase" deprived it of defense under statute of frauds, but did not relieve buyer of burden of establishing that oral contract was made under UCC § 2-201. I.S. Joseph Co. v. Citrus Feed Co., 490 F.2d 185 (5th Cir. Fla. 1974), reh'g denied, 492 F.2d 1242 (5th Cir. Fla. 1974).

34. —Buyer.

Failure to object within ten days to erroneous prices in an invoice does not bind the buyer thereto as the "failure to object" concept is applicable to determining whether there is a contract initially although a writing would ordinarily be required by the statute of frauds provision. Duralon Indus., Inc. v. Petal Sales Co., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 736 (1967, NY Sup).

35. —Buyer; arbitration agreements.

Where (1) buyer, after entering into oral contract for sale of fabrics, sent seller purchase order which did not provide for arbitration of contract disputes, (2) seller promptly sent buyer printed acknowledgement of order which contained provision for such arbitration, and (3) buyer, in suit concerning payments owed by it, contended that it had not agreed to arbitrate provision, court held (1) that case was governed by UCC § 2-207(2)(b), dealing with additional terms in acceptance or confirmation of a contract, instead of UCC § 2-201(2), since UCC § 2-201(2) deals only with question whether contract exists that is enforceable under statute of frauds and has no application to situation, such as that in instant case, where parties concede that contract does exist and dispute concerns only terms of such contract, and (2) since parties to instant dispute were merchants and arbitration clause was clearly a proposed additional term that materially altered contract within meaning of UCC § 2-207(2)(b), such clause did not become part of contract because of buyer's failure to agree to it expressly. Marlene Indus. Corp. v. Carnac Textiles, Inc., 45 N.Y.2d 327, 380 N.E.2d 239 (1978).

In view of common practice in textile industry to include arbitration provisions in written confirmations of all sales between merchants, it was incumbent upon textile buyers who received written confirmation to examine it and to make timely objection to allegedly unauthorized arbitration clause contained therein; thus, upon failure of buyers to make such objection within 10 days and upon receipt of goods in accordance with their instructions they were bound to arbitrate when they attempted to cancel balance of contract. C.M.I. Clothesmakers, Inc. v. A.S.K. Knits, Inc., 85 Misc. 2d 462 (1975).

Where buyer and seller met and agreed to terms for sale of yarn, seller's sales manager made written notes of terms agreed upon, such terms were later incorporated in written contract which also contained arbitration provision and which was mailed to buyer, and where contract form was not signed by buyer, but was retained by him until after goods were delivered, under UCC § 2-201(2), contract between parties was the instrument received by buyer, not written notes made by seller's sales manager, and, thus, buyer was bound by arbitration provision contained therein. Loudon Mfg., Inc. v. American & Efrid Mills, Inc., 46 A.D.2d 637 (1st Dep't 1974).

Contract sent by seller to purchaser following oral orders stated that any controversy could be settled only by arbitration; held, this provision was binding where purchaser had not objected to contents of contract within ten days after receipt. Trafalgar Square, Ltd. v. Reeves Bros., 35 A.D.2d 194 (1st Dep't 1970).

36. Signature on confirmation.

A purchaser's letter was a sufficient "writing in confirmation of the contract and sufficient against the sender" within the meaning of § 75-2-201(2), in spite of the seller's assertion that a confirmatory writing must be manually signed, where the letter was on the purchaser's letterhead which bore his address, and the letter referred to and recited the contract terms, requested execution of the previously-delivered forward contract, and included the typewritten name of the sender on the line where a manual signature is usually made. Dawkins & Co. v. L & L Planting Co., 602 So. 2d 838 (Miss. 1992).

Oral agreement between seller and buyer's agent for sale of wheat was enforceable against seller where, following telephone call with seller, agent completed two written grain purchase contracts, which reflected terms of agreement, signed contracts as agent of buyer and signed seller's name, where agent delivered copy of each contract a few days later to seller who noted terms of contracts and made no objections to them or to fact that his name had been signed by agent, and where seller within a few days thereafter asked for and received advance payment by check attached to memorandum which incorporated earlier contracts by referring specifically to their numbers; when seller accepted memorandum without objection to its contents and took further step of signing his name to check attached, he either signed sufficient memorandum of earlier oral contract, or he accepted offer made by buyer when its agent handed him written numbered contracts. Cargill Inc. v. Wilson, 166 Mont. 346, 532 P.2d 988 (1975).

37. Particular writings as confirmation.

UCC § 2-201(2) and the Official Comments thereto do not prescribe any particular form for a "writing in confirmation." Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Where (1) seller on August 2nd orally offered to sell buyer 15,000 tons of fertilizer, which offer was valid until 2:00 p.m. on August 3rd, (2) on morning of August 3rd, as requested by buyer, seller sent buyer same offer by telex, (3) at 10:00 a.m. on August 3rd, after seller had sent and relinquished control over its firm offer by telex, buyer allegedly accepted such offer orally, and (4) buyer thereafter sent seller responsive telex while seller's firm offer was still valid and such telex included certain terms, including terms as to payment and loading, that were not in seller's offer, court held (1) that inclusion in buyer's telex of payment and loading provisions not mentioned in seller's offer was not, under UCC § 2-207(1), necessarily fatal to buyer's alleged acceptance, (2) that under UCC § 2-207(2), term "plus or minus 10 percent at buyer's option," although it might have materially altered the contract, did not by itself invalidate the alleged acceptance, (3) that on the other hand, since UCC § 2-207 does require definite expression of acceptance before its provisions can apply, it might be that buyer's responsive telex, taken as a whole, did not represent agreement between the parties on even price and quantity of seller's fertilizer, and (4) that if a contract had been formed, it was enforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) because document signed by seller as party to be charged was its firm offer in its August 3 telex and buyer's oral acceptance of that written offer was responsive thereto, insofar as satisfying statute of frauds was concerned, and clearly showed that oral evidence offered by buyer rested on a real transaction. Ore & Chem. Corp. v. Howard Butcher Trading Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1150, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 823 (E.D. Pa. 1978) (applying New York and Pennsylvania UCC; holding, on cross-motions for summary judgment, that validity of buyer's acceptance depended on issues of fact to be resolved at the trial).

In seller's action against merchant buyer for damages for nonpayment of accounts due for furniture sold, trial court committed error in refusing to admit, on ground that it was barred by statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201, seller's evidence of goods ordered and delivered that consisted in part of signed check that buyer had sent to seller, which referred to specifically numbered invoice and had been accepted by seller and deposited in its bank account before being returned for insufficient funds, since check was sufficient under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to take at least part of contract out of statute of frauds. Furthermore, seller's proffered copies of acknowledgments that it had sent to buyer, to which buyer had raised no objections whatever, also removed contract from operation of statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201(2) and Official Comment 3. LEA Indus., Inc. v. Raelyn Int'l, Inc., 363 So. 2d 49 (App. 3 Dist. 1978).

Ordinarily, under UCC § 2-206(1)(a), an offer to make a contract invites acceptance in any manner that is reasonable under the circumstances. However, where (1) buyer's purchase order for pumps expressly provided for seller's acceptance in writing, (2) acceptance copy accompanying purchase order pointed out that order was not valid until buyer received acceptance copy from seller, and (3) purchase order did not invite acceptance by partial performance, trial court erred in holding that seller's conduct in shipping some of the pumps ordered, more than a year after the date of the purchase order, amounted to acceptance. Furthermore, buyer's purchase order was not a confirmatory memorandum within the meaning of UCC § 2-201(2), since evidence did not show that parties had entered into an oral contract. Nations Enters., Inc. v. Process Equip. Co., 40 Colo. App. 390, 579 P.2d 655 (1978).

Document which appeared to be invoice on form containing letterhead and identification markings of seller and which seemed to demonstrate party to whom merchandise was sold, date of sale, quantities and description of items and price, could be sufficient as writing in confirmation of oral contract under UCC § 2-201(2), notwithstanding document did not contain formal signature of seller. Automotive Spares Corp. v. Archer Bearings Co., 382 F. Supp. 513 (N.D. Ill. 1974).

Periodic accountings prepared by seller of 1500 tons of hay and sent to buyer within 2 ½ months of oral agreement constituted confirming memoranda within UCC § 2-201(2) so as to remove oral contract from statute of frauds bar. Azevedo v. Minister, 86 Nev. 576, 471 P.2d 661 (1970).

38. —Letters.

UCC §§ 2-201(2) and 1-201(26) do not prescribe any particular method for proving the receipt of a confirmatory writing. However, to prove such receipt, the sending merchant can rely on the presumption that a correctly addressed letter, which was properly mailed and was not returned undelivered to the sender, was delivered to the addressee. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Where seller's salesman offered to sell buyer 756 pairs of boots and, after discussion of price, buyer's president agreed to purchase, signed order which he prepared on his own order form and attached handwritten financial statements, where seller's salesman annexed to buyer's order inventory of boots which had been written on seller's order form, where seller's order form contained provision that all orders were subject to home office acceptance and credit approval but buyer's president denied reading document and did not sign it, where seller refused to accept order because handwritten credit statement was not legible and forwarded letter to buyer acknowledging order by buyer's order number and requesting new credit statement, and where sale of boots to buyer was never completed by seller, buyer's cause of action for breach of contract was not barred by statute of frauds since buyer's written order was sufficient under UCC § 2-201(2), in confirmation of alleged oral contract reached after negotiations on price; seller not only did not object to order as required by § 2-201(2), but its letter in response acknowledged order and took contract out of statute of frauds. GTP Leisure Prods., Inc. v. B-W Footwear Co., 55 A.D.2d 1009 (4th Dep't 1977).

Letter signed by president of plastics supplier which provided that supplier would maintain supply of certain plastics "in sufficient amounts to supply all of the plastic" for furniture manufacturer's use, satisfied requirements of statute of frauds and was binding on supplier. Fortune Furn. Mfg. Co. v. Mid-South Plastic Fabric Co., 310 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1975).

The use of the term "order" by merchant-buyer in a letter sufficiently complied with subsection (2) to remove an oral contract for merchandise from the statute of frauds, particularly since use of that term contemplated a binding contract, at least, on part of the merchant-buyer, and should have been interpreted in like manner by the seller. Harry Rubin & Sons v. Consolidated Pipe Co. of Am., 396 Pa. 506, 153 A.2d 472 (1959).

39. —Telegrams.

Handwritten contract signed by both parties served as signed contract and memorandum of agreement to outfit and sell large fiberglass hulls, and satisfied statute of frauds; and telegram sent by defendants and referring to all written and verbal agreements with plaintiff constituted signed memorandum. Ashland Oil, Inc. v. Pickard, 269 So. 2d 714 (Fla. Ct. App. 1972), cert. denied, 285 So. 2d 18 (Fla. 1973), 300 So. 2d 897 (Fla. 1974).

In action to recover for lost profits for contractor's refusal to accept deliveries of stone, a telegram sent by the contractor's officer was a writing sufficient to indicate that a contract for sale had been made between the parties and signed by the party against whom enforcement was sought. Providence Granite Co. v. Joseph Rugo, Inc., 362 Mass. 888, 291 N.E.2d 159 (1972).

E. Exceptions.

40. In general.

A farmer's oral agreement to sell soybeans was enforceable, even though the farmer did not subsequently sign the contract form, where (1) the farmer had booked produce with the buyer on 4 previous occasions, 2 of which involved contracts which the farmer never signed, and (2) the farmer had canceled an earlier contract with the buyer and had inquired into the possibility of canceling the soybean contract, which indicated his knowledge of the course of performance for such bookings. Gooch v. Farmers Mktg. Ass'n, 519 So. 2d 1214 (Miss. 1988).

Where there has been fully executed sale with elements of acceptance and receipt of subject matter by buyer and payment of purchase price and acceptance thereof by seller, transaction is outside statute of frauds. Hickman v. Bross, 58 Pa. D. & C.2d 137 (1972).

41. Specially manufactured goods.

In breach-of-warranty action for damages by buyer of allegedly defective dump trailers against manufacturer-seller, court held (1) that buyer and its ultimate Mexican customers were "merchants" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); (2) that seller was "merchant" within meaning of both UCC § 2-104(1) and § 2-314(1); (3) that telephoned order for 20 additional trailers was not enforceable under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) because it did not come within exceptions to such statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3); (4) that "specially manufactured goods" exception in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) applies only when seller, rather than buyer, seeks to escape statute-of-fraud defense; (5) that since three trailers purchased under valid written contract were put to improper use by buyer's Mexican customers, rather than being used for their "ordinary purposes," no breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) occurred; (6) that use of trailers for improper purposes, rather than for their stated "particular purpose," prevented recovery under implied warranty of fitness in UCC § 2-315; (7) that buyer could not recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) because it failed to prove that it had relied on statements in manufacturer-seller's brochure either prior to or contemporaneously with making of parties' contract; and (8) that since buyer had no right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject two unused and undamaged trailers, manufacturer-seller was not required to retake them or to refund their purchase price to buyer. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Where shipping crates or containers were manufactured to detailed specifications required by purchaser, were to be used for shipping overseas all-terrain vehicle manufactured by purchaser, and were not suitable for sale to others in ordinary course of seller's business, contract for purchase and sale of crates was not rendered unenforceable by statute of frauds. LTV Aerospace Corp. v. Bateman, 492 S.W.2d 703 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e. (July 11, 1973).

Blacktop that has already been packed down and laid in place is goods which is manufactured specially for the buyer and for which this seller would be hard pressed to find a suitable sale in the ordinary course of business, so as to fall within statute of frauds exception. Rose Acre Farms, Inc. v. L.P. Cavett Co., 151 Ind. App. 268, 279 N.E.2d 280 (1972).

Where there was a possibility that an oral agreement relating to sale of lacquered plate may fall within UCC § 2-201(3)(a) exception for specially manufactured goods, court below abused its discretion in failing to allow amendment of complaint to set forth such agreement. Pittsburgh Metal Lithographing Co. v. Sovereign Corp., 220 Pa. Super. 219, 283 A.2d 714 (Super. 1971).

A contract whereby plaintiff was to render sales promotional services to the defendant was not a contract for the sale of special order goods governed by the provisions of § 85 of the Personal Property Law. Tradeways Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 342 F.2d 350 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1965), cert. denied, 382 U.S. 832, 86 S. Ct. 71, 15 L. Ed. 2d 75 (1965).

42. Admissions by parties.

In action for breach of oral contract to sell hay, where (1) seller admitted in pleadings and testimony that there was a sales contract, but denied that it involved sale of all hay raised on his farm during season in question, (2) seller admitted that contract was for sale of first two cuttings of hay during season in question, and (3) performance of such contract involved delivery and receipt of payment for only first two cuttings of hay, court held that under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) and (c), contract was enforceable only as to quantity of hay (first two cuttings) admitted, which either had been received and accepted or concerning which payment had been made and accepted. Darrow v. Spencer, 581 P.2d 1309 (Okla. 1978).

In suit on open account, buyer's contention that requirement of writing under statute of frauds had not been met was eliminated under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) by buyer's acknowledgement that alleged agent had ordered goods in dispute. Custom Radio Wholesalers, Inc. v. Hamilton/Avnet Elecs., 147 Ga. App. 110, 248 S.E.2d 187 (1978).

In sellers' action to rescind written contract for sale of cotton on ground of mutual mistake, where buyer before execution of written contract informed sellers that oral negotiations between parties had contractually bound sellers to sell, but sellers consistently denied making any oral contract, case was governed by statute of frauds provision set forth in UCC § 2-201(3)(b), which provides that oral contract for sale of goods can be enforced provided that party against whom enforcement is sought has judicially admitted making such contract. In such case, moreover, buyer could not successfully contend that there was no evidence that parties were mistaken in their belief that sellers were contractually obligated to sell their cotton even before sellers executed the written contract. Plains Cotton Coop. Ass'n v. Wolf, 553 S.W.2d 800 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), ref. n.r.e. (Jan. 11, 1978).

Where buyer, on July 23, 1973, telephoned grain seller about buying wheat and seller said he might let buyer have 40,000 bushels, subject to buyer's sending written confirmation of contract for seller's approval; where such written confirmation, because of error by buyer, was sent to incorrect address and not received by seller until August 17, 1973; where seller, on July 31, 1973, informed buyer by phone that change should be made in contract, and buyer sent written confirmation of such change to incorrect address; and where seller, on August 21, 1973, wrote buyer that seller was repudiating contract because of provision in confirmation of contract giving buyer option to cancel, (1) buyer and seller were "merchants" under UCC § 2-104(1); (2) buyer's written confirmation of contract, which seller did not receive until August 17, 1973, was not received within reasonable time under UCC § 2-201(2); (3) seller's objection on August 21, 1973 to buyer's confirmation of contract, because of clause giving buyer option to cancel agreement, was made within ten-day period prescribed by UCC § 2-201(2); and (4) seller never admitted existence of valid contract so as to permit its enforcement under UCC § 2-201(3)(b). Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

Where buyer of transformers admitted to making of oral contract with seller and where buyer accepted goods without giving seasonable notice of rejection as required by UCC § 2-602, oral contract for sale of goods was enforceable pursuant to UCC § 2-201(3)(b)(c). Carolina Transformer Co. v. Anderson, 341 So. 2d 1327 (Miss. 1977).

If making of oral contract is admitted in court, either in written pleading, by stipulation, or by oral statement before the court, no additional writing is necessary for protection against fraud. Under UCC § 2-201(3)(b), it is no longer possible to admit an oral contract in court and still assert statute of frauds as defense. However, the contract is not thus conclusively established. The admission so made by a party is itself evidential against him of truth of facts admitted and nothing more, and as against the other party, it is not evidential at all. Packwood Elevator Co. v. Heisdorffer, 260 N.W.2d 543 (Iowa 1977).

Although statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201 was applicable to contract for sale of soybeans which constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105 and also constituted under UCC § 2-107 growing crops capable of severance, seller was prohibited from asserting statute of frauds as defense in action on contract where seller admitted that contract was made. Cargill, Inc., Commodity Mktg. Div. v. Hale, 537 S.W.2d 667 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

In action based on two alleged oral agreements for sale of corn, action on first agreement was permitted under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) where defendant seller admitted existence of agreement and his incomplete performance, but action based on second agreement was barred by UCC § 2-201(1) statute of frauds since defendant seller denied existence of second agreement. Jurek v. Thompson, 308 Minn. 191, 241 N.W.2d 788 (1976).

In action by buyer against seller arising out of nondelivery of wheat under oral sales contract, original oral contract was not rendered unenforceable by UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds, where seller admitted existence of contract. Nor was oral modification of contract as to delivery date due to unavailability of elevator space rendered unenforceable by statute of frauds requirement under UCC §§ 2-209 and 2-201 where pursuant to UCC § 1-103 and 2-209, seller waived statute of frauds defense through his course of performance under UCC § 2-208 and 1-205 in delivering 36 truckloads of wheat well after original delivery date without making timely objection. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Anderson, 170 Mont. 175, 552 P.2d 63 (1976).

An oral contract was valid and unenforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) where both parties admitted to it. Frances Hosiery Mills, Inc. v. Burlington Indus., Inc., 285 N.C. 344, 204 S.E.2d 834, 72 A.L.R.3d 466 (1974).

It is the intent of paragraph (b) of subdivision (3) of this section that if, after the petition or cross action is filed based on an oral contract for the sale of goods of the value of more than $500, the person charged admits the contract in the case thus pending, the statute of frauds as a defense shall not be available to him, but on the contrary the case thus made shall be determined on the merits without reference to the statute of frauds; and it was further designed to prevent the statute of frauds itself from becoming an aid to fraud, by prohibiting one claiming the benefit of the statute who admits in the case the oral contract sued on. Garrison v. Piatt, 113 Ga. App. 94, 147 S.E.2d 374 (1966).

43. —In testimony.

In action for seller's breach of oral contract to sell soybeans, where seller admitted making contract during testimony as adverse witness, but testified that contract had expired by its own terms 14 days after date on which it was made, buyer testified that contract had provided for "usual 30-day delivery period," and other testimony showed that market price of soybeans had risen after contract was made and that seller had sold his soybeans to another buyer for a higher price, (1) under UCC § 2-201(3)(b), defense of statute of frauds was not available to seller because of his testimonial admission that he had made contract; (2) after seller's admission of agreement, buyer had burden of proving existence of agreement and its terms; (3) buyer's manager was properly allowed to testify as to his understanding about alleged 30-day delivery term; and (4) there was substantial evidence in record on appeal to support trial court's finding that delivery term provided for 30 days, rather than two weeks as contended by seller. Packwood Elevator Co. v. Heisdorffer, 260 N.W.2d 543 (Iowa 1977).

Verbal agreement for sale of heavy equipment and gravel pit was enforceable against buyer under UCC § 2-201(3)(b), notwithstanding contract involved sale of realty in addition to goods, where contract was "entire" contract and thus was not severable, where contract was predominantly one for sale of goods since gravel pit represented only about five per cent of total price agreed upon, and where buyer freely admitted in his testimony existence of oral agreement. Dehahn v. Innes, 356 A.2d 711 (Me. 1976).

In action by wholesale gas and oil distributor against supplier for breach of oral contract, trial court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of supplier on ground that action was barred by UCC § 2-201, where supplier conceded it made some agreement for sale of petroleum products to distributor, where sales had actually been made and where, based on testimony, jury could find either that agreement by supplier was to furnish 50 million gallons to distributor within one year period or that agreement was one for "spot sales" with no firm commitment. Oskey Gasoline & Oil Co. v. Continental Oil Co., 534 F.2d 1281 (8th Cir. Minn. 1976).

In action for breach of oral contract for sale of mobile home, Uniform Commercial Code statute of frauds was satisfied under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) where, although defendant denied existence of contract, he testified in court that he had agreed to pay seller's price, a fact which established as matter of law that contract was formed. Lewis v. Hughes, 276 Md. 247, 346 A.2d 231, 88 A.L.R.3d 406 (1975).

Admission in testimony of contractor's officer that contract for sale of stone had been made was evidence that contract was enforceable under statute of frauds. Providence Granite Co. v. Joseph Rugo, Inc., 362 Mass. 888, 291 N.E.2d 159 (1972).

The contention that no written contract was entered into and, therefore, no valid contract could be possible because of the requirements of the statute of frauds is without merit since the seller admitted in his testimony that the contract of sale, as alleged in the plaintiff's complaint, was made. Hale v. Higginbotham, 228 Ga. 823, 188 S.E.2d 515 (1972).

Defendant-farmer's testimony, both as adverse witness called by grain company and as witness in his own behalf, established evidence to bring claimed oral contract for sale of corn within statute of fraud's exception relating to admission of contract by party against whom enforcement is sought. Quad County Grain, Inc. v. Poe, 202 N.W.2d 118 (Iowa 1972).

44. —In pleadings.

In action by buyer of automobile on oral contract with seller for money had and received when seller resold vehicle to third person, although contract in suit did not comply with UCC § 2-201(1), it was nevertheless enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(b), since seller's pleadings admitted making of such contract. Acuri v. Figliolli, 91 Misc. 2d 831 (1977).

Contract held enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) where complaint alleged, and affidavit admitted, possession of goods. Davis v. Aandewiel, 16 Ariz. App. 262, 492 P.2d 758 (1972).

A verbal agreement to repurchase a certain number of generators may be enforced under UCC § 2-201(3)(b), notwithstanding the statute of frauds, where the existence of the verbal agreement is admitted in pleadings. Chrysler Corp. v. Majestic Marine, Inc., 35 Mich. App. 403, 192 N.W.2d 507 (1971).

UCC statute of frauds was not bar to action where affidavits of plaintiff and answer of defendant clearly show receipt, acceptance, and retention of goods by defendant. Rochester Iron & Metal Co. v. Capellupo, 62 Misc. 2d 264 (1969).

45. —In discovery.

Admission by corporate agent in discovery deposition that contract had been made constituted judicial admission sufficient to permit plaintiff to enforce alleged oral contract under exception in Miss Code § 75-2-201(3)(b). Babst v. FMC Corp., 661 F. Supp. 82 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Admission made in discovery deposition by party to be charged that such party had entered into oral contract sought to be enforced was in-court admission of such contract within meaning of UCC § 2-201(3)(b). URSA Farmers Coop. Co. v. Trent, 58 Ill. App. 3d 930, 374 N.E.2d 1123 (4th Dist. 1978).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of alleged oral contract under which seller was to supply all potatoes required by buyer's chain of restaurants, (1) contract was sufficiently definite in quantity to be enforceable under UCC § 2-306(1), but (2) since buyer in its pleading did not admit making of contract within meaning of UCC § 2-201(3)(b), and since deposition testimony of buyer's former employees, which admitted existence of oral contract sued on, did not constitute binding admission against buyer under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) because of witnesses' lack of authority at time depositions were taken, contract was unenforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1). Miller v. Sirloin Stockade, 224 Kan. 32, 578 P.2d 247 (1978).

46. —Non-judicial admissions.

In seller's action to recover for 9,072 bushels of corn delivered to buyer under oral contract to sell 20,000 bushels to buyer, in which buyer counterclaimed for damages for seller's failure to deliver remainder of corn contracted for, (1) seller was entitled under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to payment for corn received and accepted by buyer, but (2) buyer was not entitled to recover for corn that seller did not deliver, since letter written by seller's attorney to buyer discussing alleged oral contract did not satisfy requirements of UCC § 2-201(3)(b), dealing with enforceability of contract unenforceable under statute of frauds if making of contract is admitted by party to be charged in his "pleading, testimony, or otherwise in court." Wilke v. Holdrege Coop. Equity Exch., 200 Neb. 803, 265 N.W.2d 672 (1978).

Copy of buyer's check stub for check allegedly sent to seller for purchase of horse and the assertion of plaintiff and his executive assistant who allegedly monitored phone call in which seller stated that he did not wish to complete the transaction until after the first of the year for tax reasons along with buyer's assertions that seller retained check did not establish assent to the contract by the seller in view of the seller's denials, and thus alleged contract was not removed from the operation of the statute of frauds. Presti v. Wilson, 348 F. Supp. 543 (E.D.N.Y. 1972).

47. Partial performance.

The effect of part payment on a contract for the sale of an indivisible item is not specifically treated by the Uniform Commercial Code (see UCC § 2-201(3)(c)). Generally, however, such payment is construed to render an indivisible oral contract enforceable, notwithstanding the statute of frauds. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

Oral agreement by president of corporation to sell truck to corporation did not fall within any exception to statute of frauds for sale of goods contained in UCC § 2-201(3) where certificate of title to truck had not been transferred to corporation, corporation had not paid any part of purchase price to seller, entry of debt for payment of purchase price had not been made on corporation's books, and truck had never been altered or used for corporation's purposes. In such case, neither party could have enforced such contract unless other party admitted that contract had been made or that truck had been received and accepted. Keller Lorenz Co. v. Insurance Assocs. Corp., 98 Idaho 678, 570 P.2d 1366 (1977).

The statute of frauds permits a party to welch on an oral bargain in order to avoid the risk that an oral contract may be proved by fraudulent testimony; the exceptions for part performance or payment and acceptance both involved mutual participation and not unilateral acts. Presti v. Wilson, 348 F. Supp. 543 (E.D.N.Y. 1972).

Contract to supply milk at special discount price was terminated after 6 months by the giving of reasonable notice; held, this partial performance did not take the contract out of statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201(3)(c). Spiering v. Fairmont Foods Co., 424 F.2d 337 (7th Cir. Ill. 1970).

A writing is not required under the Code when equipment sold by the seller is delivered and installed by him. Fyre-Safety, Inc. v. Yerger Bros., 56 Lanc. L. Rev. 311 (Pa. 1959).

48. —Extent of ratification; whole contract.

Seller was not "merchant," as defined by UCC § 2-104(1), with respect to sale of corn and therefore was not bound to oral contract under UCC § 2-201(2), even though buyer sent confirmation notice to seller following oral agreement, since seller was not in business of selling corn but, rather, conducted cattle feeding operation, growing grain for that purpose and selling grain only when it was surplus to cattle feeding needs. However, seller's delivery of corn in approximate quantity called for in oral agreement, and its acceptance by buyer, constituted part performance under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) sufficient to take contract out of statute of frauds even though such conduct was consistent with making of spot sale at current market price. Gerner v. Vasby, 75 Wis. 2d 660, 250 N.W.2d 319, 97 A.L.R.3d 897 (1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-201(1) and 2-309, oral contract to supply plastic pipe which did not include times for delivery was enforceable beyond extent to which it had been performed. Owens v. Clow Corp., 491 F.2d 101 (5th Cir. Ala. 1974).

49. —Extent of ratification; part performed.

Oral contract to purchase 100 cattle for $50,000, under which buyer gave seller check for $1,000 as earnest money, was unenforceable under UCC § 2-201(1), except to extent that buyer's check for $1,000 earnest money could constitute partial payment for cattle within meaning of UCC § 2-201(3)(c). Anthony v. Tidwell, 560 S.W.2d 908 (Tenn. 1977).

Trial court properly dismissed complaint alleging breach by defendants of oral contract to sell 7,000 bushels of soybeans to plaintiffs at $4.42 per bushel and further alleging partial performance of such contract; although UCC § 2-201(3)(c) provides exception for completely executed part of oral contract, existence of partial performance does not support cause of action for anything over that already performed. Lippold v. Beanblossom, 23 Ill. App. 3d 595, 319 N.E.2d 548 (4th Dist. 1974).

In action for purchase price of certain goods delivered to and accepted by plaintiff, UCC § 2-201(1) statute of frauds, vitiating plaintiff's capacity to sue, could have been raised by demurrer but for fact that degree of performance alleged was sufficient to erase effect of language of statute of frauds and validate contract for goods allegedly accepted. Texas Truck Sleeper Co. v. Artman, 62 Pa. D. & C.2d 663 (1973).

In action for purchase price of certain goods delivered to and accepted by plaintiff, UCC § 2-201(1) statute of frauds, vitiating plaintiff's capacity to sue, could have been raised by demurrer but for fact that degree of performance alleged was sufficient to erase effect of language of statute of frauds and validate contract for goods allegedly accepted. Texas Truck Sleeper Co. v. Artman, 62 Pa. D. & C.2d 663 (1973).

Under oral contract for sale of corn, buyer by making part payment, and seller by accepting that part payment, made enforceable contract only as to that quantity of corn that could have been purchased by that part payment. In re Augustin Bros. Co., 460 F.2d 376 (8th Cir. Neb. 1972).

UCC parted company with old Sales Act in holding that partial performance of an agreement does not avoid the requirement of a writing under UCC § 2-201, but renders the agreement enforceable only with respect to the goods which have been delivered and accepted. Huyler Paper Stock Co. v. Information Supplies Corp., 117 N.J. Super. 353, 284 A.2d 568 (L. Div. 1971).

50.—Indivisible contracts.

The effect of part payment on a contract for the sale of an indivisible item is not specifically treated by the Uniform Commercial Code (see UCC § 2-201(3)(c)). Generally, however, such payment is construed to render an indivisible oral contract enforceable, notwithstanding the statute of frauds. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

An order form for a specifically optioned automobile sent by the dealer to the manufacturer, either taken alone or when read in conjunction with the customer's purchase order is a sufficient note or memorandum to satisfy the provisions of section 2-201 of the Uniform Commercial Code, since the order form evidences the existence of a contract, is signed by the party to be charged and implicitly specifies the quantity involved. However, assuming the absence of a sufficient writing, nevertheless the customer's part payment of $1,000 on the indivisible contract operated to take the agreement out of the Statute of Frauds (§ 2-201, subd [3], par [c]). Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

Even if subparagraph (c) validates a divisible contract only for as much of the goods as have been paid for, it does not necessarily follow that such a rule invalidates an indivisible oral contract where some payment has been made and accepted; it is difficult to see how the contract for the purchase of an automobile, upon which the buyer paid $25, could have contemplated less than one automobile, assuming as the court did, that automobiles are indivisible. Any other conclusion would work an unconscionable result and would encourage rather than discourage fraud if the facts as pleaded were proven at the trial. Starr v. Freeport Dodge, Inc., 54 Misc. 2d 271 (1967).

51.—Payment; sufficient.

In seller's action against merchant buyer for damages for nonpayment of accounts due for furniture sold, trial court committed error in refusing to admit, on ground that it was barred by statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201, seller's evidence of goods ordered and delivered that consisted in part of signed check that buyer had sent to seller, which referred to specifically numbered invoice and had been accepted by seller and deposited in its bank account before being returned for insufficient funds, since check was sufficient under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to take at least part of contract out of statute of frauds. Furthermore, seller's proffered copies of acknowledgements that it had sent to buyer, to which buyer had raised no objections whatever, also removed contract from operation of statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201(2) and Official Comment 3. LEA Indus., Inc. v. Raelyn Int'l, Inc., 363 So. 2d 49 (App. 3 Dist. 1978).

Where (1) buyer placed order for new Corvette on form furnished by dealer, (2) such form described car, listed its purchase price, provided for delivery to buyer as soon as possible, and also stated that order was not binding until accepted by dealer, (3) buyer, but not dealer, signed such order form and gave dealer check for $1,000 deposit on vehicle, (4) dealer on same day placed written order with manufacturer for car ordered by buyer, (5) such order was signed by dealer, listed buyer as "customer," and described order as "sold," rather than "stock" for inventory, (6) dealer subsequently notified buyer by letter that "market conditions" had made buyer's "offer" unacceptable and that dealer would refund buyer's $1,000 deposit, and (7) car was ultimately manufactured, delivered to dealer, and sold to third party, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-204(1) and (2), dealing with making of contracts generally, contract was formed as matter of law no later than time when dealer, after taking and retaining buyer's down payment, placed signed order for car with manufacturer which designated car as "sold" and listed buyer's name as "customer," (2) that dealer's conduct was clearly sufficient to signify an acceptance, even though it did not sign its own order form, (3) that order form sent by dealer to manufacturer was sufficient memorandum of contract to satisfy statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), and (4) that even assuming absence of a sufficient memorandum under UCC § 2-201(1), buyer's part payment on the indivisible contract operated under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to take contract out of statute of frauds. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

In action by prospective buyer to enforce oral contract for sale of piece of construction equipment, question of fact was raised as to whether sellers had accepted payment, thus removing oral contract from statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) and precluding entry of summary judgment, where sellers received and retained buyer's check, in amount alleged to be full purchase price of equipment, for 30 days before check was returned unendorsed to buyer. Kaufman v. Solomon, 524 F.2d 501 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975).

A check for $2,325 bearing legend "deposit on aux. sloop, D'Arc Wind, full amount $4,650" would constitute partial performance sufficient to uphold entire contract calling for sale of this boat, as against statute of frauds objection. Cohn v. Fisher, 118 N.J. Super. 286, 287 A.2d 222 (L. Div. 1972).

52. —Payment; insufficient.

In action on option contract to purchase airplane, where (1) defendants gave plaintiff written option to purchase on April 1, 1977, which by its terms would expire on April 11, 1977, (2) defendants issued sight draft on April 5, 1977, payable to order of defendants and listing plaintiff as drawee, which plaintiff's bank received on April 8, 1977 together with partially executed bill of sale, (3) defendants on April 11, 1977 (expiration date of written option) gave plaintiff oral extension of option to purchase plane and (4) plaintiff on April 18, 1977 instructed his bank to pay sight draft, but defendants in the interim sold plane to another person, court held (1) that contract was required by UCC § 2-201(1) (statute of frauds) to be in writing; (2) that written option-offer was not accepted by plaintiff within time limit contained therein; (3) that expiration date of written option-offer was not superseded by oral extension of such date because parol evidence of extension was not admissible under UCC § 2-202 to vary material term of written option; (4) that if written option-offer, as claimed by plaintiff, was still only an offer at time of its oral modification, then acceptance tendered by plaintiff after original time limit of written option had expired was acceptance of different contract offer and contract thus formed was unenforceable under statute of frauds provision contained in UCC § 2-201(1); and (5) that such different contract was not removed from statute of frauds by part performance that allegedly occurred when defendants sent sight draft to plaintiff's bank. McCollum Aviation, Inc. v. CIM Assocs., 446 F. Supp. 511 (S.D. Fla. 1978).

Evidence was conclusive that there was sale of automobile to buyer under UCC § 2-201(3) where seller delivered automobile to buyer at his home so buyer could drive it, where buyer drove automobile to seller's place of business and informed seller that he had decided to buy it, giving seller check for whole purchase price of car and leaving his old car in possession of seller, although buyer left automobile in possession of seller for purpose of making minor repairs, and seller subsequently asked for additional payment and refused to deliver possession of automobile to buyer. Shipman v. Craig Ayers Chevrolet, Inc., 541 P.2d 876 (Okla. Ct. App. 1975).

Oral contract for sale of two conveyors for price in excess of $500 did not fall within payment and acceptance exceptions to statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(3)(c) where check given by purchaser as payment was not accepted by seller, but was returned uncashed, and where seller never consented to removal of equipment by buyer. Nelson v. Hy-Grade Constr. & Materials, Inc., 215 Kan. 631, 527 P.2d 1059 (1974).

Payment without acceptance of the payment is not sufficient to establish part performance removing oral contract from statute of frauds; tender alone does not establish payment, and there must be some objective manifestation referable to payment and acceptance. Presti v. Wilson, 348 F. Supp. 543 (E.D.N.Y. 1972).

Copy of check stub representing check allegedly mailed by buyer as payment for horse and affidavit of buyer's executive assistant that he monitored telephone call in which seller allegedly indicated willingness to sell horse and desire not to consummate transaction until later date for tax reason and that he prepared and mailed bill of sale and check, along with buyer's assertion that seller retained check was not evidence of an objective manifestation of assent to contract and did not constitute payment and acceptance taking oral contract out of statute of frauds. Presti v. Wilson, 348 F. Supp. 543 (E.D.N.Y. 1972).

If the whole agreement (written and oral) require transfer of the stone stockpiles, and if they were not transferred, the provisions of UCC § 2-201(3)(c) are satisfied by payment of the whole consideration. Bridgewater Washed Sand & Stone Co. v. Bridgewater Materials, Inc., 361 Mass. 809, 282 N.E.2d 912 (1972).

53. —Receipt and acceptance.

Contract for sale of pyrenone was enforceable under statute of frauds where (1) pyrenone was "received and accepted" by buyer under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), and (2) buyer's attempt to reject pyrenone three months later was not effective under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and § 2-602(1). Pride Lab., Inc. v. Sentinel Butte Farmers Elevator Co., 268 N.W.2d 474, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 817 (N.D. 1978) (under circumstances of case, rejection three months after delivery was not attempted within reasonable time).

Contract between seller of footwear and wholesale grocery corporation with subsidiaries that serviced independently owned retail stores in two states, which allegedly provided that footwear ordered by such stores would be shipped directly to stores and that stores would be billed through corporation's warehouse, was enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), since bar of statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(1) does not apply to goods that have been received and accepted, and in present case stores ordering footwear from seller had received and accepted all goods contracted for. Pedi Bares, Inc. v. P & C Food Mkts., Inc., 567 F.2d 933 (10th Cir. Kan. 1977).

Where there was ample proof that contract for sale of sawmill existed and it was clear that purchasers received and accepted sawmill, under UCC § 2-201(3)(b), (c) it was necessary for trial court to determine what were provisions of sale, notwithstanding purchaser's contention that their alleged assumption of notes was invalid because sale contract was over $500 and not in writing. Barnett v. Stewart Lumber Co., 547 S.W.2d 788 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

Seller was not "merchant," as defined by UCC § 2-104(1), with respect to sale of corn and therefore was not bound to oral contract under UCC § 2-201(2), even though buyer sent confirmation notice to seller following oral agreement, since seller was not in business of selling corn but, rather, conducted cattle feeding operation, growing grain for that purpose and selling grain only when it was surplus to cattle feeding needs. However, seller's delivery of corn in approximate quantity called for in oral agreement, and its acceptance by buyer, constituted part performance under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) sufficient to take contract out of statute of frauds even though such conduct was consistent with making of spot sale at current market price. Gerner v. Vasby, 75 Wis. 2d 660, 250 N.W.2d 319, 97 A.L.R.3d 897 (1977).

Oral accord and satisfaction was enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), where evidence was presented that debtor performed by delivering potatoes to third party, that creditor allowed debtor to mistakenly believe that third party was associated with creditor, that creditor agreed to credit value of potatoes to debt, and that agreement to extinguish debt was executed when creditor credited potatoes to debt and accepted notes without demanding additional money that he subsequently contended was still owing. Smith v. Hornbuckle, 140 Ga. App. 871, 232 S.E.2d 149 (1977).

Oral agreement by cottonseed buyer that it would in all respects meet prices and rebates of its competition was enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) where seller delivered seed from time to time to buyer and buyer acknowledged and receipted delivery. Tennessee Valley Cotton Oil Mill v. Oakland Gin Co., 341 So. 2d 153 (Ala. Civ. App. 1976).

In action by materialman against property owner to recover for materials delivered to subcontractor where it was alleged that owner orally agreed to "guarantee" payment for materials previously delivered to subcontractor, in consideration for which materialman agreed to continue furnishing materials to job and to forebear from filing claim of lien against owner's real property, enforcement of alleged oral "guarantee" contract was not barred by statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201; materials supplied at instance of owner after promise sued on were delivered pursuant to new agreement and were "received and accepted" within contemplation of UCC § 2-201(3)(c) and thus statute of frauds was inapplicable as to them; with respect to materials supplied before "guarantee" contract sued on, they were not delivered pursuant to "contract for sale" within definition thereof in UCC § 2-106 and statute was thus inapplicable as to them. Jim & Slim's Tool Supply, Inc. v. Metro Communities Corp., 328 So. 2d 213 (Fla. App. 1976).

Mortgage loan company was liable to pay purchase price of building materials delivered to third party where there was evidence that mortgage loan company entered into oral contract with lumber company to pay for building materials and where there was evidence that mortgage loan company designated employee of third party to sign invoices for receipt of materials; contract was enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), notwithstanding lack of a writing, since building materials had been received and accepted. Engel Mtg. Co. v. Triple K Lumber Co., 56 Ala. App. 337, 321 So. 2d 679 (Civ. App. 1975).

Oral contracts for sale of lettuce were enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), notwithstanding they were not in writing, where seller was transferred lettuce from its cooler to motor carrier for delivery for buyer; for purpose of satisfying UCC § 2-201(3)(c), lettuce was "received" by buyer when it was shipped in accordance with each invoice, and buyer would be deemed to have "accepted" lettuce, as defined in UCC § 2-606, since (1) transfer of lettuce to carrier was "an act inconsistent with the seller's ownership," and (2) buyer failed to make an effective rejection" of lettuce after it was received. O'Day v. George Arakelian Farms, Inc., 24 Ariz. App. 578, 540 P.2d 197 (1975).

Fact issue was presented on question whether oral contract for sale of house was enforceable under "received and accepted" exception found in UCC § 2-201(3)(c), where seller alleged that he had installed house on concrete blocks on the buyers' land and buyers had accepted this labor and material. Wade v. Jones, 526 S.W.2d 160 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Contract for sale of cattle received by buyer was not required to be in writing under UCC § 1-206, since provision does not apply to contracts for sale of goods, nor by § 2-201, since written contract was not required with respect to goods which have been received or accepted. Clifton Cattle Co. v. Thompson, 43 Cal. App. 3d 11 (2d Dist. 1974).

Where last purchase of goods as demonstrated by accounts occurred 20 days prior to commencement of action on accounts, difference between 2 dates represented reasonable time within which any inspection and rejection of goods should have been made, so that sales of goods represented by account were taken out of statute of frauds by receipt and acceptance of goods by defendant. Gardner & Beedon Co. v. Cooke, 267 Or. 7, 513 P.2d 758 (1973).

Properly treating the indebtedness owned by respondent as representing money owned on a sale of goods the parties may show the terms of the oral agreement between respondent and testator relating to such indebtedness including price, terms of payment and dates for such payment, since complete delivery of the goods took the sale out of the statute. Cornelius v. Crea, 33 A.D.2d 887 (4th Dep't 1969), rev'd on other grounds, 27 N.Y.2d 339, 318 N.Y.S.2d 133, 266 N.E.2d 815 (1971).

Contractor received and accepted cabinets; contractor raised statute of frauds as defense to cabinet maker's action for payment on contract to build cabinets; held, UCC § 2-201(3)(c) precluded this defense. Buxton v. Horn, 452 S.W.2d 250 (Mo. Ct. App. 1970).

Oral contract enforceable and statute of frauds inapplicable where truck in question had been received and accepted. Roe v. Flamegas Indus. Corp., 16 Mich. App. 210, 167 N.W.2d 835 (1969).

Where buyer and automobile dealer had agreed on a "trade", buyer had turned over his old car to the dealer and had in turn received absolute and unconditional possession of the new vehicle, and nothing remained except for the title papers to be processed and the delivery to seller of a check for the cash payment, title to the new car passed to buyer at time of its delivery; and when the car was wrecked on the night the trade was made, buyer's rather than seller's insurer was liable. Motors Ins. Corp. v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Am., 412 S.W.2d 584 (Ky. 1967).

The seller's contract sent to the buyer declared that it was binding when it was delivered to the buyer if no objection was made thereto or when the buyer accepted and paid for any goods thereunder, it was held that the buyer was bound by the contract when he made no objection thereto, and accepted part of the goods, and was therefore required to arbitrate any dispute as specified in the contract. Aaron Kamhi, Inc. v. Vanity Fabrics, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 481 (1967, NY Sup.).

Where goods are received and accepted by the purchaser, the transaction is without the statute of frauds. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

54. Waiver and estoppel.

UCC § 2-201, by its own terms, permits a party to waive the statute of frauds. Moreover, UCC § 2-201 does not by its terms operate as a bar to, or destroy, a plaintiff's cause of action. Duffee v. Judson, 251 Pa. Super. 406, 380 A.2d 843, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 823 (1977) (holding that because UCC § 2-201 is waivable, it could only be raised, under Pennsylvania procedure, in new matter and not in preliminary objections).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of oral contract to purchase 17 million advertising "flyers" for insertion in national mail-sale literature, oral contract in suit was not voidable under written-memorandum requirement of UCC § 2-201(1) because such contract came under exception contained in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) concerning goods specially manufactured for buyer that are not suitable sale to others in ordinary course of seller's business and seller, before receiving notice of buyer's repudiation of contract, had made substantial commencement of goods' manufacture by printing 62 per cent of 17 million flyers ordered. Perlmutter Printing Co. v. Strome, Inc., 436 F. Supp. 409 (N.D. Ohio 1976).

55. —Equitable estoppel.

In action by buyer to enforce oral contract for sale of 20,000 bushels of corn at $1.22 per bushel for future delivery, seller was barred from raising defense of statute of fraud, UCC § 2-201(1), by doctrine of equitable estoppel where buyer substantially changed its position in reliance on oral contract by selling 18,000 bushels of corn to two third parties in accordance with buyer's general business practice, and where seller knew or should have known that buyer would rely on contract and would resell corn. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Lyle, 90 S.D. 86, 238 N.W.2d 290 (1976).

Under UCC § 2-201, oral agreement regarding sale of goods may be enforced if admitted by other party to agreement. Furthermore, equitable estoppel may be applied to avoid statute of frauds provision regarding oral agreements for sale of goods if agreement is first established by competent evidence, where statute does not render such agreement void; thus, where one party, in reliance on representation or conduct of another, changes his position or otherwise suffers unjust or unconscionable injury or loss, or where one party has accepted performance for benefits to detriment of other, a party may be estopped to deny validity of oral agreement. Dangerfield v. Markel, 222 N.W.2d 373 (N.D. 1974).

56. —Promissory estoppel.

Oral contract allegedly made between wood dealer and mill did not come within brokerage exception to statute of frauds because dealer actually acquired interest in wood; promissory estoppel is not available as exception to statute of frauds applicable to such an agreement. Futch v. James River-Norwalk, Inc., 722 F. Supp. 1395 (S.D. Miss. 1989), aff'd, 887 F.2d 1085 (5th Cir. 1989).

Alleged contract of farmers to sell cotton crop to buyer was not enforceable under UCC § 2-201(1) where there was no writing sufficient to indicate that such contract had been made and been signed by parties against whom enforcement was sought; although sellers failed to keep oral promise to sign and deliver written contract of sale that would comply with statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(1), doctrine of promissory estoppel did not preclude sellers from asserting statute, since no complete agreement was ever reached by parties as to terms of written contract. H. Molsen & Co. v. Hicks, 550 S.W.2d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 27, 1977).

Doctrine of promissory estoppel was applicable so as to bind subcontractor to written bid which it submitted to general contractor notwithstanding subcontractor's claim that, since bid included sale of materials valued in excess of $500 and did not specify any quantities, it was unenforceable under UCC § 2-201(1). Jenkins & Boller Co. v. Schmidt Iron Works, Inc., 36 Ill. App. 3d 1044, 344 N.E.2d 275 (2d Dist. 1976).

In action against farmer to obtain possession of wheat allegedly sold by him to cooperative grain elevator under oral contract, or alternatively, for damages for failure to deliver wheat: (1) defendant farmer was not "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-201(2) so as to render inoperative defense afforded by statute of frauds; but (2) sufficient facts were pleaded and presented to trial court to invoke doctrine of promissory estoppel so as to render oral promise enforceable despite statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201(1), and rendition of summary judgment in favor of defendant was improper. Decatur Coop. Ass'n v. Urban, 219 Kan. 171, 547 P.2d 323 (1976).

Action for breach of oral contract to sell 90,000 bushels of corn was barred by statute of frauds in that sale was for more than $500, contract was not in writing, there was no written confirmation of contract, and it was not within any exceptions enumerated in UCC § 2-201(3); UCC § 2-201 contains no exception for claim based on promissory estoppel. Farmland Serv. Coop, Inc. v. Klein, 196 Neb. 538, 244 N.W.2d 86 (1976).

Statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201 was not applicable to action based on promissory estoppel. Janke Constr. Co. v. Vulcan Materials Co., 386 F. Supp. 687 (W.D. Wis. 1974), aff'd, 527 F.2d 772 (7th Cir. Wis. 1976).

Where contractor obtained price quotation on certain pipe required for construction project from pipe supplier, relied on price quotation and incorporated it into his bid, was awarded contract, and supplier then refused to supply pipe at price quoted: (1) no binding contractual obligation existed under UCC, since mere use of supplier's bid was not acceptance giving rise to contract, and, since supplier had not offered to make its bid irrevocable, nor was there an option supported by consideration, its bid did not meet "firm offer" requirement of § 2-205; (2) however, supplier was liable to contractor on theory of promissory estoppel; (3) statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201 was not applicable to action based on promissory estoppel. Janke Constr. Co. v. Vulcan Materials Co., 386 F. Supp. 687 (W.D. Wis. 1974), aff'd, 527 F.2d 772 (7th Cir. Wis. 1976).

Where plaintiff submitted bid on used machinery in conformance with defendant's invitation and instructions, defendant was not entitled to summary judgment on ground that plaintiff's claim was barred by statute of frauds, since evidence raised genuine issues of material fact as to whether statements of defendant through its agent constituted acceptance of bid and promised to confirm this bid in writing, whether plaintiff detrimentally relied upon representation of defendant, and whether defendant reasonably should have expected reliance of nature alleged by plaintiff. Fairway Mach. Sales Co. v. Continental Motors Corp., 40 Mich. App. 270, 198 N.W.2d 757 (1972).

F. Procedural Matters.57. In general; pleading.

A plaintiff does not aver a cause of action when he pleads the existence of an oral contract which comes within the scope of the statute of fraud section of the Code, but does not plead any fact which removes the contract from the scope of the statute. Kessler v. Green Co., 28 Pa. D. & C.2d 186 (1962).

58. Evidence and burden of proof.

A confirmatory writing to which no timely written notice of objection was given merely prevents the merchant who failed to give such notice from invoking the statute of frauds as a defense. The sending merchant still has the burden of proving both that a contract was made and also its terms. Perdue Farms, Inc. v. Motts, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 7 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Auto rental agency brought detinue action against bank; bank had obtained autos in question upon foreclosure of chattel mortgages executed by used car dealer; held, UCC statute of frauds did not apply to used car dealer's testimony, inasmuch as bank was not party to sales transaction, was not seeking to enforce contract, and had no rights controlled by contract. Blowers v. First Nat'l Bank, 45 Ala. App. 485, 232 So. 2d 666 (Civ. App. 1970).

59. Questions of law or fact.

UCC § 2-201(2) merely makes an oral contract for the sale of goods enforceable against a party who has signed nothing, provided that such party has received a written confirmation of the existing oral agreement and failed to give written notice of objection to its contents within ten days after its receipt. Failure to object in writing within ten days does not signify assent to the terms of the writing; it merely deprives the recipient of the opportunity to raise the statute of frauds as a defense. Therefore, in such a case the trier of facts must determine whether or not there was an oral contract. Pecker Iron Works, Inc. v. Sturdy Concrete Co. Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 998 (1978).

Letters and order confirmations offered by buyer as evidence of valid contract orally made with seller of clothing raised issue for jury as to whether such documents satisfied statute-of-frauds requirements of UCC § 2-201(1). The Hip Pocket, Inc. v. Levi Strauss & Co., 144 Ga. App. 792, 242 S.E.2d 305 (1978).

Question of whether facts existed to bring a contract within the statute of frauds was for the jury. Ken Wire & Metal Prods., Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting Sys., 338 F. Supp. 624, 172 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 632 (S.D.N.Y. 1971), aff'd, 464 F.2d 1393, 175 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 391 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

60. Appellate review.

A defense founded on the statute of frauds cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. McMillan Feeder Fin. Corp. v. Stephens, 240 Ark. 167, 398 S.W.2d 535 (1966).

G. Decisions Under Former Statutes.61. Construction and application, generally.

An oral agreement between two parties to acquire jointly shares of corporate stock owned by a third person is not a contract of sale and purchase and consequently does not violate this section. Jones v. McGahey, 187 So. 2d 579 (Miss. 1966), error overruled, 191 So. 2d 532 (Miss. 1966).

The statute does not apply where the contract calls for the making of articles not a marketable commodity, but especially for defendant's use. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

Oral testimony is admissible to show that a contract is not within the statute. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

Where a case is taken out of the statute for any reason, parol evidence is admissible to show the terms of the agreement. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

The statute of frauds was designed to serve the salutary purpose of requiring traders and others to make open summaries of their contracts of sale before they will be enforced. Gordon v. Fechtel, 220 Miss. 722, 71 So. 2d 769 (1954).

Where there was an oral contract to furnish baby chicks needed and the contract had been enforceable despite the failure to provide method for determining price, subsequent letter making three substantial changes in the original agreement of the parties, amounted to a completely new oral contract which was within the statute of frauds and unenforceable. Gordon v. Fechtel, 220 Miss. 722, 71 So. 2d 769 (1954).

An action for breach of an oral contract to cut and deliver pulp wood to the railroad for shipment to defendant with a guarantee to the plaintiff of employment under the contract for a period of not less than two years could not be maintained, whether or not the contract should be regarded as one of employment or as one for the purchase of pulp wood, since it could not be performed within a period of fifteen months from the making thereof. Poole v. Johns-Manville Prods. Corp., 210 Miss. 528, 49 So. 2d 891 (1951).

Parol promise that deceased's realty and personalty would someday belong to the promisees if they continued to look after deceased's property, was unenforceable under the statute of frauds, where the promisees were never placed in possession of such property, irrespective of whether the transfer of the property was to be by will, deed or otherwise, and regardless whether the promisees performed their part of the arrangement. Wells v. Brooks, 199 Miss. 327, 24 So. 2d 533 (1946).

The statute does not apply either where the writing signed by the party sufficiently shows the contract, or where the purchase price is fully paid by the purchaser. John M. Parker Co. v. May, 128 F.2d 1020 (5th Cir. 1942), cert. denied, 317 U.S. 675, 63 S. Ct. 80, 87 L. Ed. 542 (1942).

Oral contract for exchange of horses held within statute of frauds. Garner v. Broom, 161 Miss. 734, 138 So. 336 (1931).

In action for breach of contract a parol waiver of a stipulation may be pleaded and proved. Albert Mackie & Co. v. S.S. Dale & Sons, 122 Miss. 430, 84 So. 453 (1920).

The statute of frauds has reference only to the "contract for the sale" and has no influence whatever on a "sale." The two are totally distinct. Berry v. Waterman, 71 Miss. 497, 15 So. 234 (1894).

A contract of sale may fulfill the requirements of this statute and yet be insufficient to transfer the property. Smith v. Sparkman, 55 Miss. 649, 30 Am. R. 537 (1878).

A contract within the statute is void. Daniel v. Frazer, 40 Miss. 507 (1866).

62. Delivery or receipt of property.

The exception applies where in accordance with an oral lease-purchase agreement the buyer received the property and made a payment thereon. Dreijer v. Girod Motor Co., 294 F.2d 549 (5th Cir. 1961).

Upon the sale of store property, this section did not preclude the passing of the store's contents owned by seller's wife, where the seller had told the buyer in the wife's presence that everything went with store, and buyer was given possession of the store. Rice v. Quong, 238 Miss. 794, 120 So. 2d 156 (1960).

As regards the validity of an oral contract whereby the buyer of goods resold part of the goods of a value in excess of $50 back to the seller in settlement of the balance due on the original contract, without any consideration or money passing between the parties, buyer's agreement to hold the goods as bailee or agent of the seller until called for did not constitute a delivery under this section. Carrilon v. Thornton, 211 Miss. 507, 52 So. 2d 9 (1951).

Parol contract for sale of sugar cane without payment of purchase price was void, unless buyer received part or all of cane bought. Entrekin v. Byrd, 149 Miss. 340, 115 So. 562 (1928).

Receipt sufficient to take parol contract of sale out of statute requires taking of property into possession with intent to become owner. Entrekin v. Byrd, 149 Miss. 340, 115 So. 562 (1928).

Sellers, retaining possession of sugar cane sold under parol contract for purpose of counting stalks, invalidated contract because of failure of delivery. Entrekin v. Byrd, 149 Miss. 340, 115 So. 562 (1928).

Receipt of property by buyer to satisfy statute must be by taking possession and control with intent to become owner. A.K. Burrow & Co. v. Planters' Oil Mill & Gin Co., 138 Miss. 284, 103 So. 9 (1925).

Oral subscription for stock void in absence of performance. Mayhaw Canning &

Preserving Co. v. Cohen, 135 Miss. 378, 99 So. 896 (1924).

Buyer must have "received" part of property with intent to become owner. Young v. Alexander, 123 Miss. 708, 86 So. 461 (1920).

Delivery not compliance with oral contract if buyer declines to accept. Young v. Alexander, 123 Miss. 708, 86 So. 461 (1920).

Contract for sale of personalty void under statute, unless partial receipt thereunder. Young v. Alexander, 123 Miss. 708, 86 So. 461 (1920).

Oral contract for sale of ice during season rendered valid by delivery of 30 tons of ice. Crystal Ice Co. v. Holliday, 106 Miss. 714, 64 So. 658 (1914).

Where sale of personalty is otherwise complete delivery is not necessary to vest purchaser with title unless contract requires it. Johnson v. Tabor, 101 Miss. 78, 57 So. 365 (1912).

Statute satisfied where purchaser actually received and paid for part of cotton under oral contract. Moreland v. Newberger Cotton Co., 94 Miss. 572, 48 So. 187 (1908).

However, verbal sale of soda water fountain is valid on delivery of a pitcher which is part of the outfit. L.A. Becker Co. v. E.D. Davis Drug Co., 93 Miss. 803, 47 So. 468 (1908).

Verbal sale of flock of sheep ranging in woods for $400 not saved from statute by delivery of three pet lambs not of the flock. Ladnier v. Ladnier, 90 Miss. 475, 43 So. 946 (1907).

A receipt of a part of the goods in pursuance of a previous oral contract is sufficient. Stonewall Mfg. Co. v. Peek, 63 Miss. 342 (1885).

63. Payment of purchase price.

Where personalty is credited on indebtedness there is a payment of the purchase money. Johnson v. Tabor, 101 Miss. 78, 57 So. 365 (1912).

64. Note or memorandum.

A real estate agent's oral agreement that if plantation owners would execute a written contract to convey the land to agent's principal, agent would be responsible for a quantity of liquid fertilizer then in tanks on the subject property was unenforceable; the landowners' execution of the sales contract did not constitute part performance of the agent's agreement with respect to the fertilizer, and there was no evidence that the fertilizer was ever delivered to the agent. Howell v. Buford, 218 So. 2d 859 (Miss. 1969).

Where a customer executed a written contract authorizing a brokerage firm to act as his agent in the purchase and sale of future contracts and thereafter gave certain oral instructions to the broker concerning transactions which were fully consummated, this section does not apply. Kohlmeyer & Co. v. Rotwein, 186 So. 2d 768 (Miss. 1966), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 971, 87 S. Ct. 508, 17 L. Ed. 2d 435 (1966).

The memorandum must state the names of both parties, and show which is the buyer and which the seller, and be signed by the party to be charged or his lawful agent. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

There must be a valid oral contract of which the memorandum is a written statement, and the memorandum must be complete in itself and cannot be eked out by oral testimony. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

Parol evidence is admissible to show that the written memorandum of an oral contract is inadequate or inaccurate and hence does not comply with the statute. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

The requirement of the statute is met when a written memorandum of an oral contract is signed by the party to be charged at any time before suit brought. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

If the memorandum contains all the features of the agreement, parol evidence is admissible to show the situation of the parties and the application of the terms used. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

The written memorandum may consist of several writings if so related by reference, express or implied, that the one signed by the party to be charged can be held to approve the others. Ludke Elec. Co. v. Vicksburg Towing Co., 240 Miss. 495, 127 So. 2d 851 (1961).

Entry by wife of the buyer in a looseleaf account book of transaction whereby the buyer of the goods resold to the seller part of the merchandise of value in excess of fifty dollars under an oral contract for settlement of the balance due on the original contract, without any consideration passing between the parties, was insufficient memoranda to take the contract of resale out of the statute of frauds. Carrilon v. Thornton, 211 Miss. 507, 52 So. 2d 9 (1951).

But memorandum must contain substantial terms of the contract so as to be understood without resort to parol evidence. Willis v. Ellis, 98 Miss. 197, 53 So. 498, Am. Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1039 (1910).

Where a contract for the sale of personal property is evidenced by letters between the parties fully recognizing the existence and setting forth the terms of the contract, it is immaterial that precedent cipher telegrams do not sufficiently show a sale to take the case out of the statute. Bonds v. Thos. J. Lipton Co., 85 Miss. 209, 37 So. 805 (1905).

Where it is impossible to decide upon the face of the memorandum of sale who is purchaser and who is seller, the writing is insufficient. Frank v. Eltringham, 65 Miss. 281, 3 So. 655 (1888).

§ 75-2-202. Final written expression; parol or extrinsic evidence.

Terms with respect to which the confirmatory memoranda of the parties agree or which are otherwise set forth in a writing intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement with respect to such terms as are included therein may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of a contemporaneous oral agreement but may be explained or supplemented

(a) by course of dealing or usage of trade (Section 1-205) [Section 75-1-205] or by course of performance (Section 2-208) [Section 75-2-208]; and

(b) by evidence of consistent additional terms unless the court finds the writing to have been intended also as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement.

1. In general.

Evidence of matter not addressed in formal written contract, competitive pricing, which was discussed incident to execution contract, showed that retailer had breached contract with gasoline supplier where supplier never agreed to sell to retailer on such terms as would enable him to sell gasoline at pump at same price as local communities, although supplier did sell to retailer on terms that enabled him to be competitive within his own town; there was no evidence to show that supplier had failed to pay any claim which had been reduced to judgment concerning a second verbal side agreement, which required supplier to indemnify and hold harmless retailer from any judgment and litigation expenses related to claims of prior supplier. Lovett v. E.L. Garner, Inc., 511 So. 2d 1346 (Miss. 1987).

Under Miss Code § 75-2-202, court may be able to consider course of dealing, usage of trade, and course of performance in determining whether contract is ambiguous. Southern Natural Gas Co. v. Pursue Energy, 781 F.2d 1079 (5th Cir. 1986).

In an action to recover damages resulting from fraudulent misrepresentations made by defendant's sales employee, the chancellor presumably considered parol evidence in rendering his final decision, where the record clearly indicated that parol evidence was permitted to be introduced into evidence even though the chancellor reserved his ruling on its admissibility. Franklin v. Lovitt Equip. Co., 420 So. 2d 1370 (Miss. 1982).

The issue of the admissibility of written or parol evidence at the trial (see UCC § 202) to prove the terms of an agreement requires an initial, substantive determination by the trial court of what constitutes the final, integrated agreement of the parties. Such evidence is admissible at the trial only if it is found to be part of, or a subsequent amendment of, that agreement. This preliminary determination depends on the facts of each case, and no relevant evidence should be excluded in making it. Written documents, standing alone, are not sufficient to determine this threshold issue. Burroughs Corp. v. Weston Int'l Corp., 577 F.2d 137 (4th Cir. Md. 1978).

The parol evidence rule precludes adding oral terms to the description of the goods in the contract so as to then charge the seller with breach of the warranty of conformity to the goods. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

2. Writing intended as final expression of agreement.

In action for balance due on purchase price of 15 miles of used railroad track, (1) defendant buyer's amendment of its original purchase order, which changed dimensions of materials described in original purchase order, supported conclusion that original purchase order was not intended to be final expression of parties, within meaning of UCC § 2-202, concerning quantities and sizes of materials purchased and thus did not bar admission of parol evidence to establish actual terms of agreement; (2) under UCC § 2-209(4), buyer by orally agreeing to pay for 110-pound materials at contract price waived contract requirement that such materials must be 90-pound materials; and (3) as result of buyer's inspection of purchased materials before delivery, there was under UCC § 2-316(3)(b) no implied warranty with regard to defects in materials that buyer's inspection should have disclosed. Durbano Metals, Inc. v. A & K R.R. Materials, Inc., 574 P.2d 1159 (Utah 1978).

In action by buyer to recover damages from seller for breach of oral express warranties and representations allegedly made by seller during negotiations prior to sale of truck, testimony as to alleged misrepresentations made by seller was, under parol evidence rule of UCC § 2-202, inadmissible, notwithstanding UCC § 2-316 provision regarding the exclusion or modification of warranties, where purchase order contract was intended by parties as final expression of sales agreement, buyer failed to allege or prove fraud, contract contained unequivocal and conspicuous "as is" disclaimer, and buyer read the contract, saw the handwritten disclaimer, understood what it meant, and signed the contract. Jordan v. Doonan Truck & Equip. Inc., 220 Kan. 431, 552 P.2d 881 (1976).

UCC § 2-313(1)(a), pertaining to samples or models giving rise to express warranties, did not apply in action by purchaser of computer equipment alleging that computer equipment manufactured and sold by defendant for use in plaintiff's insurance premium service business did not perform as defendant had represented or warranted it would where all prior negotiations, demonstrations, "conditional" lease, and experiments, culminated in two outright sales whose terms were put into final written expression signed by plaintiff which set out entire agreement between parties and by separate conspicuous paragraph excluded all outside matters, thus conforming to UCC § 2-202 as final written expression of parties and to UCC § 2-316 as exclusion of matters not specified in final agreements. Investors Premium Corp. v. Burroughs Corp., 389 F. Supp. 39 (D.C.S.C. 1974).

Where contract between gasoline dealer and supplier specified minimum amount of gasoline that supplier could be required to deliver in any one month, and where contract, by its express terms, constituted entire agreement of parties, under UCC § 2-202 dealer was precluded by parole evidence rule from introducing evidence to show that contract was intended to be "requirements contract," thus imposing upon supplier obligation and duty to supply dealer its entire marketing needs of gasoline. Intermar, Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 364 F. Supp. 82 (E.D. Pa. 1973).

Where invoices were no more than statements of amounts due and were never intended by parties to be final expression of their agreement, parole evidence rule did not operate to exclude oral testimony as to time within which payment was due on contract for sale of construction materials. Fizzano Bros. Concrete Prods. v. Ceritano Brickwork, Inc., 59 Del. Co. 518 (1972).

Where the court could not upon the record determine whether the parties intended the confirmation of a contract of sale to be a final expression of their agreement, Uniform Commercial Code § 2-202 had no application. Crispin Co. v. Delaware Steel Co., 283 F. Supp. 574 (E.D. Pa. 1968).

Where invoices were no more than statements of amounts due and were never intended by parties to be final expression of their agreement, parole evidence rule did not operate to exclude oral testimony as to time within which payment was due on contract for sale of construction materials. Fizzano Bros. Concrete Prods. v. Ceritano Brickwork, Inc., 59 Del. Co. 518 (1972).

3. —Ambiguities.

In action for seller's alleged breach, by late delivery, of contract for sale of heating and air-conditioning equipment, parole evidence concerning delivery dates was inadmissible under UCC § 2-202 to contradict unambiguous language in written contract that any date agreed on by parties was only a "best estimate," and that seller would incur no liability as result of late delivery. General Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. American Air Filter Co., 696 F.2d 375 (5th Cir. 1983).

Where the parties have not defined with precision the terms of a written instrument, notwithstanding a written statement that the instrument is a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of their agreement, evidence may be received under UCC § 2-202 to determine the intention of the parties. Sunbury Textile Mills, Inc. v. Commissioner, 585 F.2d 1190, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 642 (3d Cir. 1978) (applying Massachusetts UCC; admitting evidence to clarify meaning of words "cancelled" and "cancellation" in in contract for purchase of textile looms).

Under contract between building subcontractor and supplier for sale of ductwork, where both subcontractor's purchase order form and supplier's acceptance thereof contained trade phrase "as released" and testimony admitted under UCC § 2-202(a) showed that such phrase referred to no specific date but to entire life of construction project, supplier was obligated to deliver ductwork under contract terms and at contract price until February, 1976, which was estimated life of construction project in suit. U.S. Indus., Inc. v. Semco Mfg., Inc., 562 F.2d 1061 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 986, 98 S. Ct. 613, 54 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1977).

It is not a prerequisite to the admissibility of testimony under UCC § 2-202 that the wording of the contract be ambiguous, since no such requirement is contained in the statute. Nor is it correct that the court, rather than the jury, must determine the effect of such testimony on the meaning of the contract. Campbell v. Hostetter Farms, Inc., 251 Pa. Super. 232, 380 A.2d 463, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 563 (1977) (where parol testimony was admitted under UCC § 2-202(a) to explain meaning of written agreements for sale of wheat and corn which, although clear about commodities purchased, quantities, price, and time of delivery, were silent as to whether seller's farms were to be the source of the commodities).

In action by wholesaler against retailer for recovery of purchase price of two motorcycles, under UCC §§ 1-205, 2-202 and 2-326(4) trial court properly denied admissibility to defendant's proposed parol evidence that agreement was actually consignment sale agreement under "sale or return" arrangement, where written sales agreement between parties was not ambiguous. Recreatives, Inc. v. Travel-On Motorcycles Co., 29 N.C. App. 727, 225 S.E.2d 637 (1976).

Description of cotton covered by contracts for sale of future cotton crop, i.e., purchase of cotton grown on specified approximate acreage, was not so vague as to render contracts unenforceable under Code where it appeared, by contracts in question, that each seller intended to sell his entire cotton crop for the year to buyer. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 379 F. Supp. 1075 (M.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Parol testimony was properly admitted to remove ambiguities with respect to description of mobile home, where sales agreement contained blank spaces, incomplete descriptions of optional equipment, and contradictory language regarding parties' use of samples or models. Mobile Hous., Inc. v. Stone, 490 S.W.2d 611 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

A finding of ambiguity is not necessary for the admission of extrinsic evidence about the usage of the trade and the parties' course of dealing under UCC § 2-202. Columbia Nitrogen Corp. v. Royster Co., 451 F.2d 3 (4th Cir. Va. 1971).

Trial court erred in rejecting parol proof to interpret what parties meant by use, in written agreement, of language referring to "among other things." Nord v. Ruderman, 34 A.D.2d 555 (2d Dep't 1970).

Code rejects those New York cases which require ambiguity in contract before evidence of course of dealing or performance is admissible. Division of Triple T Serv., Inc. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 720 (1969), aff'd, 34 A.D.2d 618, 311 N.Y.S.2d 961 (2 Dep't 1970), stay denied, 26 N.Y.2d 1020 (1970), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 614 (1970).

Agreement to pay "within the next 60 days the sum of $5,000 from the jobs now under construction" did not contain an unconditional promise to pay and therefore was not a negotiable instrument and the language was ambiguous as to whether payment was to be made from gross receipts or solely if profits existed and evidence as to such question would clearly be admissible particularly since the additional terms sought to be developed were not inconsistent with the existing agreement. Webb & Sons v. Hamilton, 30 A.D.2d 597 (3d Dep't 1968).

There is an ambiguity when the printed part of the contract would create an "as is" sale while a handwritten notation created a "thirty-day warranty." Leveridge v. Notaras, 433 P.2d 935 (Okla. 1967).

4. —Integration clauses.

Where the contractual intention of the parties was evidenced by their conduct and an agreement satisfying the statute of frauds was made, although that writing was expressly not intended to be an integration, parol evidence could be used to explain the interim agreement. Graulich Caterer, Inc. v. Hans Holterbosch, Inc., 101 N.J. Super. 61, 243 A.2d 253 (App. Div. 1968).

5. —Multiple instruments.

In action for breach of written contract for sale of carpeting, where five documents, each purporting to be prior contract between the parties and bearing notation on its face that it had been rescinded, were offered by buyer as proof of prior course of dealing, or oral agreement, between parties to effect that either party could unilaterally cancel any contract made by them, documents were properly excluded by trial court under parole evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202(b), since (1) effect of such documents was to add consistent additional terms to contract sued on, and (2) such additional terms were inadmissible because contract sued on was intended by parties to be complete and exclusive statement of terms of their agreement. Snyder v. Herbert Greenbaum & Assocs., 38 Md. App. 144, 380 A.2d 618, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1104 (1977) (stating that any agreement between the parties as to right of unilateral cancellation would certainly have been included in contract sued on).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code as adopted in Pennsylvania there is no requirement that a contract be evidenced by a single instrument, and if the parties wish, they may express their agreement in more than one writing, and in such circumstances the several documents are to be interpreted together, each one contributing, to the extent of its worth, to the ascertainment of the true intent of the parties, and this rule was held applicable to an agreement for the sale of securities. Stern & Co. v. State Loan & Fin. Corp., 238 F. Supp. 901 (D. Del. 1965).

6. Effect of prior agreements.

Where buyer of used diesel tractor and trailer alleged making of oral warranties prior to execution of written contract of sale and also conduct on part of seller which tended to show that such warranties had been made, material issue of fact for resolution was whether parties had intended written sale contract to be final expression of their agreement and, if not, what the terms of that agreement actually were. Under such circumstances, parol evidence concerning such oral warranties and course of conduct was admissible under UCC § 2-202 to resolve the issue. O'Neil v. International Harvester Co., 40 Colo. App. 369, 575 P.2d 862 (1978).

Parol evidence as to terms of agreement made prior to execution of document is not effective to vary terms of written contract. Romines v. Wagstaff Motor Co., 120 Ga. App. 608, 171 S.E.2d 752 (1969).

Uniform Commercial Code § 2-202 may not be applied to permit the introduction of parol evidence with respect to contracts that predated its enactment. Eskimo Pie Corp. v. Whitelawn Dairies, Inc., 284 F. Supp. 987 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

7. Effect of contemporaneous oral agreements.

In an action to recover the purchase price for the sale of borrow material from plaintiff seller's land, the trial court improperly held that the action was an effort to amend a written contract by a previous or contemporaneous parol agreement, where plaintiff specifically alleged that the oral agreement was entered into subsequent to the written contract, and where plaintiff brought suit on a separate, independent oral contract. Bell v. Hill Bros. Constr. Co., 419 So. 2d 575 (Miss. 1982).

In action by seller of carpeting against buyer, which had repudiated entire contract of purchase, for damages consisting of difference between resale price and contract price of such goods, court held (1) that conversation and representations as to delivery date of goods, which took place before signing of purchase order, were properly disregarded by trial court, since terms of written agreement cannot be contradicted under UCC § 2-202 by evidence of prior agreement or contemporaneous oral agreement; (2) that trial court properly received evidence under UCC § 2-202(a) that in carpet industry, term "at once" meant "as soon as possible"; (3) that trial court's failure to find that seller had not identified conforming goods to the contract prior to resale thereof, as required by UCC § 2-704(1)(a), was proper and was supported by the evidence; and (4) that damages assessed against buyer under UCC § 2-706(1), dealing with seller's resale of the goods, had been properly calculated, since trial court did not include therein amount of carpeting sold at such resale before seller gave notice to buyer. Action Time Carpets, Inc. v. Midwest Carpet Brokers, Inc., 271 N.W.2d 36 (Minn. 1978).

While contracts dealt with same amount of steel and were made on same day, where seller's price to buyer was not at original bid price but at a higher price, giving seller a profit, and it could be inferred that seller's omission of "as is" and "deficiencies" clauses in contract with buyer was deliberate, there was no basis for finding that buyer and seller impliedly agreed that sale of steel to buyer would be on same terms as seller's contemporaneous purchase and its "sale back" of steel, and thus seller was obligated to reimburse buyer for conceded shortage of steel paid for in full by buyer. Apache-Beals Corp. v. International Adjusters, Ltd., 59 A.D.2d 1032 (4th Dep't 1977), aff'd, 46 N.Y.2d 888, 414 N.Y.S.2d 685, 387 N.E.2d 617 (1979).

Where note sued on was executed on printed form that was absolute in its terms and required payment six months from date of note's execution, terms of note could not be contradicted under UCC § 2-202 by evidence of allegedly contemporaneous oral agreement that note would be renegotiated on its due date, even though such oral agreement was judicially admitted in testimony of plaintiff holder. Chaplin v. Milne, 555 S.W.2d 161, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 374 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Where invoices sent by seller of potatoes to broker contained term that broker was to "collect and remit," a standard clause in commodities brokerage business meaning that broker was to collect purchase price from buyer and remit to seller but that broker did not guarantee payment, under UCC § 2-202 alleged prior oral agreement could not be used to modify express written terms of contract and broker incurred no liability for buyer's failure to pay. C.H. Robinson Co. v. L & M Brokerage Co., 344 So. 2d 894 (Fla. App. 1977).

In an action based upon the contract for the sale of laundry and drycleaning equipment, in which defendant having prepared the written contract with considerable precision sought to introduce upon trial parol testimony that plaintiff was to supervise installation of the equipment, provide for the training of personnel, and thereafter notify defendant that it had an operable plant taxed the court's credulity and was therefore inadmissible. Whirlpool Corp. v. Regis Leasing Corp., 29 A.D.2d 395 (1st Dep't 1968).

The Arkansas parol evidence rule was not changed by this section, and the testimony of automobile buyer and his wife that seller's agent had told them that mechanical parts of the vehicle were guaranteed for one year was inadmissible. Green Chevrolet Co. v. Kemp, 241 Ark. 62, 406 S.W.2d 142 (1966).

8. Effect of allegations of fraud.

(criticized by Broadus v. Town North Nat'l Bank (1977, Tex Civ App Tyler) 558 SW2d 909, 23 UCCRS 371).

Since it was well established prior to enactment of Uniform Commercial Code that if fraud were alleged with respect to formation of written contract, parol evidence rule did not bar consideration of contemporaneous oral agreement, and since UCC § 1-103 expressly provides that common-law principles of fraud and misrepresentation supplement Uniform Commercial Code's provisions, courts have continued to recognize pre-UCC fraud exception to parol evidence rule after adoption of parol evidence rule set forth in UCC § 2-202. Thus, in action by buyer of front-end loader to recover damages caused by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's employee, chancellor was required to consider testimony by buyer—even though parties' written contract specifically declared that it was complete and exclusive statement of terms of their agreement (see UCC § 2-202(b))—that loader, although represented as being 1973 model, was in fact manufactured in 1968. Franklin v. Lovitt Equip. Co., 420 So. 2d 1370 (Miss. 1982).

In an action to recover damages resulting from fraudulent misrepresentations made by defendant's sales employee, the chancellor was required to consider parol evidence of two witnesses, where their testimony regarded the events surrounding the purchase of the equipment and the alleged fraudulent statement made by defendant's employee. Franklin v. Lovitt Equip. Co., 420 So. 2d 1370 (Miss. 1982).

In action to rescind contract for fraud, where (1) buyer purchased baler from seller for $2,995, based on offer in seller's letter which represented that baler was two years old and was worth $4,250, and (2) buyer alone signed purchase agreement, court held (1) that purchase agreement did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of contract, (2) that seller's letter offering baler for sale and making certain representations about it, including representations as to its age, was admissible supplementary evidence of consistent additional terms within meaning of UCC § 2-202(b), and (3) that in absence of any specification in purchase agreement about baler's age or model year, its age as set forth in seller's letter became both a consistent additional term of the purchase agreement and, by operation of law, an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a). Mill Printing & Lithographing Corp. v. Solid Waste Mgt. Sys., 65 A.D.2d 590, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 124 (2d Dep't 1978) (also holding that warranty disclaimer found inferentially by trial court was inconspicuous and therefore ineffective).

Provision in contract for sale of recreation equipment located in seller's theater building which provided that seller should in no way be deemed to be liable under any guarantees or warranties concerning such equipment, including any implied warranties of title, was ineffective to disclaim warranty of title under UCC § 2-312(2), since such provision did not make disclaimer in specific language required by UCC § 2-312(2), but was couched in negative terminology that stated what seller would not be liable for, rather than what buyer was not receiving. Moreover, in such case testimony that manager of seller's theater had told buyer prior to sale that seller owned such equipment was not precluded by parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202, since party may not invoke parol evidence rule to shield his own fraud. Sunseri v. RKO-Stanley Warner Theatres, Inc., 248 Pa. Super. 111, 374 A.2d 1342 (1977).

Although written agreements may not be varied or contradicted by contemporaneous oral agreement or prior accord under UCC § 2-202, there is exception to this rule where instrument is procured by fraud, and charge of fraud, if adequately alleged, may therefore be established by parol evidence; thus, in action to enforce contract for sale of cotton crop at "12 cents above loan," allegations of seller's counterclaim and cross-claim to effect that seller was enticed into signing "12 cent" contract with buyer by promise of subsequent written agreement for sale of cotton at price of 12 and one-half cents, although buyer had no intention of fulfilling that promise, was sufficient to support suit for cancellation of written contract. Cone Mills Corp. v. A.G. Estes, Inc., 377 F. Supp. 222 (N.D. Ga. 1974).

In action in tort by buyer of used car against seller for alleged fraudulent misrepresentation, buyer claiming that he purchased automobile with understanding that it had never been wrecked when in fact it had, language of clause in sales agreement that "no other agreement, promise, or understanding of any kind pertaining to this purchase will be recognized" did not prevent buyer from claiming that he relied on seller's misrepresentation; although UCC § 2-202 was intended to allow sellers to prevent buyers from making false claims of oral warranties in contract actions, parol evidence of alleged misrepresentation was admissible on question of fraud and deceit since UCC does not preclude action in tort based upon fraudulent misrepresentation action could not be controlled by terms of contract itself. City Dodge, Inc. v. Gardner, 232 Ga. 766, 208 S.E.2d 794, 71 A.L.R.3d 1054 (1974).

Where there are allegations of fraud and misrepresentation, parol evidence rule does not preclude inquiry into whether writing is intended as final expression of parties' agreement. Fecik v. Capindale, 54 Pa. D. & C.2d 701 (1971).

As provided in § 1-103, it was settled law in Pennsylvania prior to enactment of the Uniform Commercial Code that where fraud, accident, or mistake are alleged with respect to the execution of a written contract, prior oral agreements between the parties are admissible. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

Under Pennsylvania law where parties, without any fraud or mistake, have deliberately put their engagements in writing, the writing is not only the best, but the only, evidence of their agreement. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

9. Course of dealing, etc. (par. (a)).

The defendant could not establish a course of dealing based on language employed by the plaintiff in an unrelated transaction, especially where the contract between the parties was drafted by the defendant. Carlo Corp. v. Casino Magic, 26 F. Supp. 2d 904 (S.D. Miss. 1998).

Contract of seller of wheat was supplemented under UCC § 2-202(a) by evidence of trade usage that parties to such contracts intend to be bound regardless of success of seller's crop, and seller's failure to deliver all wheat under his contract because of partial crop failure was not excused under either UCC § 2-613 (dealing with casualty to identified goods) or UCC § 2-615(a) (dealing with commercial impracticability), which were, inapplicable to case. Colley v. Bi-State, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 769, 586 P.2d 908 (1978).

Course of performance (see UCC § 2-202(a)) is always relevant in interpreting a writing. Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Razumic, 480 Pa. 366, 390 A.2d 736 (1978).

Since Uniform Commercial Code does not apply to contract to excavate boot-pit area for rice dryer, provisions of code did not govern admissibility of evidence of custom and usage of trade to explain basis for paying for such excavation work. Venturi, Inc. v. Adkisson, 261 Ark. 855, 552 S.W.2d 643 (1977).

When UCC § 2-202 is read in light of UCC § 1-205(4), it is clear that the test of admissibility is not whether the contract appears on its face to be complete in every detail, but whether the proffered evidence of course of dealing and trade usage reasonably can be construed as consistent with the express terms of the agreement. Columbia Nitrogen Corp. v. Royster Co., 451 F.2d 3 (4th Cir. Va. 1971).

This section limits parties in explaining the meaning of language in a written integrated contract to proof of a course of dealing, usage of trade, and a course of performance; and none of these terms encompass testimony or other proof as to the subjective intent of the parties. Es-kimo Pie Corp. v. Whitelawn Dairies, Inc., 284 F. Supp. 987 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

10. —Evidence admissible.

Under Mississippi law, if agreement falls within purview of Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), agreement need not be found to be incomplete or ambiguous before evidence of course of dealing and usage of trade may be considered. Yazoo Mfg. Co. v. Lowe's Cos., 976 F. Supp. 430 (S.D. Miss. 1997).

In action for balance due on sale of computer equipment, where evidence showed (1) that buyer had purchased equipment from seller by submitting a purchase order to seller dated December 30, 1970, (2) that seller, by letter also dated December 30, 1970, had assured buyer that equipment purchased, which buyer intended to lease to third party, would be repurchased by seller if buyer's lessee should decide to replace it, (3) that lessee had terminated its lease at an early date, but seller had refused to repurchase equipment, (4) that buyer then refused to pay balance due seller, (5) that buyer alleged that its refusal to pay was justified by seller's December 30, 1970 letter, which buyer initially contended was admissible under UCC § 2-202(b) as part of parties' agreement because it was a consistent additional term to buyer's purchase order, and (6) that buyer, after district court ruled that letter was inadmissible under UCC § 2-202(b), had sought by motion for reconsideration to have it admitted under UCC § 2-202(a), concerning prior course of dealing between the parties, court held that district court erred in refusing to reconsider its ruling on letter's admissibility since buyer's evidence on motion for reconsideration showed (1) that purchase order for equipment and seller's letter promising to repurchase it were physically exchanged in seller's branch office, (2) that the parties might have intended, by such exchange, that both documents should evidence their final agreement, (3) that there was also the possibility that if seller's letter was delivered and accepted after buyer had submitted its purchase order, such letter was admissible as modification of the parties' agreement, and (4) that if evidence of similar transactions between the parties could be produced to show that they had engaged in a prior course of dealing, within meaning of UCC § 2-202(a), which indicated their intent to include trade-in terms similar to those contained in seller's letter, letter might be admissible to explain terms of buyer's purchase order. Burroughs Corp. v. Weston Int'l Corp., 577 F.2d 137 (4th Cir. Md. 1978).

In action by lessor of new office machine against lessee thereof for balance due under lease agreement, which agreement was rescinded by lessee when machine did not function properly, lessee's claim that parties had agreed as part of contract that payments under lease would not start until salesman of machine's manufacturer had demonstrated proper operation of machine to lessee was not sustained under UCC § 2-202 by evidence showing that although salesman never did demonstrate machine's operation to lessee, leasee made 15 monthly payments under such lease to lessor. Lectro Mgt., Inc. v. Freeman, Everett & Co., 135 Vt. 213, 373 A.2d 544 (1977).

Evidence of custom and usage was admissible by virtue of UCC § 2-202 to explain memorandum of agreement for sale and purchase of cotton crop providing for sale of "all cotton produced on 400 acres" where buyer contended contract required seller to deliver 400 acres of cotton, whereas seller contended contract called for his delivery all cotton produced on 400 acres of land, although part of land was "skip row planted", and where seller was apparently knowledgeable as to custom and usage relating to sales of cotton crops. Loeb & Co. v. Martin, 295 Ala. 262, 327 So. 2d 711 (1976).

Under UCC § 2-202(a), providing that with regard to the parol evidence rule for personal property sales contracts, trade customs may be put in evidence to aid interpretation of such contracts, established trade customs are part of the contract unless the parties otherwise agree. Thus, in action by grower against food processor alleging breach of two contracts to buy specified quantities of potatoes, it was proper to admit evidence of the custom of treating such specified quantities as being only reasonable estimates, where the contract did not say that the quantities were "fixed" or "firm," and where the parties' conduct of negotiations raised a factual question for the jury as to their intent to exclude the custom from the contracts. Heggblade-Marguleas-Tenneco, Inc. v. Sunshine Biscuit, Inc., 59 Cal. App. 3d 948 (5th Dist. 1976).

In action for defendant's breach of contract to repurchase cars used in plaintiff's car-rental business, where (1) plaintiff purchased business from independent owner thereof, (2) owner of business, prior to its sale to plaintiff, had agreed with defendant that cars purchased from defendant for use in such business would be repurchased by defendant if they had not been used more than 6,000 miles, and (3) plaintiff's written contract with defendant, covering purchase and repurchase of vehicles used in plaintiff's business and executed after plaintiff had purchased business from prior owner, did not specify number of miles vehicles could be used before repurchase by defendant, but merely provided that after 9,000 miles, "time left in service" of a vehicle would "be negotiated," court held (1) that evidence did not show that written contract between plaintiff and defendant had been modified, with respect to defendant's repurchase of vehicles, by prior course of dealing between same parties within meaning of UCC § 1-205(1), but showed that person involved in such prior course of dealing with defendant was seller of business to plaintiff; (2) purchaser of business does not adopt, in absence of evidence to the contrary, seller's prior course of dealing with third parties; and (3) provision in contract between plaintiff and defendant concerning "time left in service" of a vehicle did not impose absolute mileage limitation, but was agreement to negotiate "continued use" of vehicle after it had been used for 9,000 miles. Budget Sys. v. Seifert Pontiac, Inc., 40 Colo. App. 406, 579 P.2d 87, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 630 (1978) (stating that on retrial of case, if evidence should establish a prior course of dealing between plaintiff and defendant that included a mileage limitation, such evidence would be admissible under UCC § 2-202(a) since it would not directly contradict terms of parties' written agreement, but would supplement it).

In action by purchaser to recover damages from manufacturer for repudiation of contract to supply airconditioners, where manufacturer had submitted bid to supply air conditioners in accord with buyer's specifications, where, although specifications provided that "[c]apacities shall not be less than indicated," air conditioners had approximate six per cent deficiency in capacity to remove heat, and where manufacturer refused to supply air conditioners in literal compliance with bid, trial court erred (1) in excluding evidence as to customs and usage in air conditioning industry to effect that reasonable variations in cooling capacity are considered to comply with specifications, and (b) in refusing to permit jury to consider such customs and usage if they would vary terms of written agreement. Modine Mfg. Co. v. North E. Indep. Sch. Dist., 503 S.W.2d 833 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 17, 1974).

Even in the absence of a written agreement with respect to every term of a contract great weight attaches to the course of dealing of the parties, and where it appears from the conduct of the parties that their mode of calculating price, although not accepted formally by signature of a written instrument, was adhered to by both parties during an extensive course of dealing, during which the purchaser received, accepted, and paid for over $800,000 worth of merchandise, this course of dealing must be held applicable and governing with respect to remaining merchandise which was received, accepted, but not paid for. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 236 F. Supp. 879 (W.D. Pa. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

11. —Evidence inadmissible.

Testimony by one corporate officer as to his company's practices in pricing resin used for PVC pipes is insufficient to establish pattern or "regularity of observance" and therefore such testimony should not be admitted as evidence of course of dealing or usage of trade. H & W Indus., Inc. v. Occidental Chem. Corp., 911 F.2d 1118 (5th Cir. 1990).

A contract's express terms and conditions that the written contract contained the entire agreement of the parties precluded the introduction of oral testimony regarding delivery dates, since, even if the subject oral arrangements constituted "trade usage" or somehow would represent a "course of dealing" between the parties, they could be introduced only to clarify ambiguities in the written contract, not to contradict and alter the express contract provisions. General Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. American Air Filter Co., 696 F.2d 375 (5th Cir. 1983).

Where a contract was assigned to plaintiff finance corporation with recourse, inasmuch as it contained a limited repur-chase clause which provided that payment was guaranteed by defendant car dealership for six months, parol evidence of a loss reserve account, from which the finance company sometimes covered losses incurred upon repossession of merchandise, was erroneously admitted, under § 75-2-202, 75-1-205, and 75-2-208, in that the parol evidence was not an explanation of or supplementary to the recourse agreement in the contract, but rather was contradictory to it. Security Mut. Fin. Corp. v. Willis, 439 So. 2d 1278 (Miss. 1983).

Under contract of sale for approximately 70,000 cubic yards of concrete where buyer purchased only 12,542 cubic yards, buyer could not introduce under UCC 2-202 evidence of custom in trade or of additional conditions allegedly agreed to in that (1) contract terms were fairly specific as to quantity, price, and time without provision for repricing rights to either party; (2) no prior dealings were alleged by either party; (3) contract specified that conditions not incorporated in contract would not be recognized; and (4) contract did not intimate that buyer would be liable only for concrete actually delivered. Southern Concrete Servs., Inc. v. Mableton Contractors, 407 F. Supp. 581 (N.D. Ga. 1975), aff'd, 569 F.2d 1154 (5th Cir. Ga. 1978).

Written contracts for leasing of construction cranes which designated in each contract a specific monthly rental, and which also did not mention any discounting of such rentals, could not be contradicted under UCC § 2-202 by parol evidence to show alleged prior practice of cranes' lessor to grant rental discounts on completion of similar equipment-leasing agreements with lessee. Eisert v. Ermco Erectors, Inc., 60 A.D.2d 903 (2d Dep't 1978). But see Eisert v. Ermco Erectors, Inc., 62 A.D.2d 1027 (2d Dep't 1978).

In action arising out of contract for sale of 700 head of cattle, where buyer contended that because quality of cattle was stated as "choice" and contract warranted that quality, he was justified in not accepting 56 head of cattle, but where seller contended that requirement of contract that buyer would take all cattle governed, extrinsic evidence to explain contract should not have been received under UCC § 2-202 since parties pointed only to language contract to sustain their respective positions and neither of them suggested that additional evidence constituted "evidence of consistent additional terms" or evidence of "course of dealing or usage of trade" or "course of performance" within meaning of subsections (a) or (b) of § 2-202. Shepard v. Top Hat Land & Cattle Co., 560 P.2d 730 (Wyo. 1977).

Buyer purchased used truck "as is" and could not raise implied warranty claim against his seller where buyer insisted on closing sale without inspecting truck, although seller repeatedly advised buyer of risk he was taking by purchasing truck without inspection, and where buyer admitted that he purchased truck "as it was"; under UCC § 2-316(3)(c) implied warranty could be excluded or modified by course of performance and fact that exclusion in present case, raised by parties' course of performance, was oral did not vitiate its utility or relevance; under UCC § 2-202(a) parol evidence was admissible to explain and supplement lease-purchase agreement and to establish oral waiver of implied warranties. Robinson v. Branch Moving & Storage Co., 28 N.C. App. 244, 221 S.E.2d 81 (1976).

In action on contract to deliver 4,000 bushels of soybeans by buyer against farmer who as result of drought was able to deliver less than 2,000 bushels, his entire crop, rejection of buyer's evidence relating to custom and usage of soybean trade was proper under UCC § 1-205(6) where offer of evidence came late in trial and probably would have denied seller opportunity to rebut it absent continuance or other disruption of trial. Paymaster Oil Mill Co. v. Mitchell, 319 So. 2d 652 (Miss. 1975).

An antecedent misunderstanding in that the seller allegedly expected the buyer to test a gas purifier for the exclusion of hydrogen as well as the removal of oxygen while buyer, not conscious of such expectation and testing only for oxygen removal, unintentionally misled the seller by its reports that the model was operating satisfactorily, was not such a set of circumstances as might be categorized as a "course of dealing", "usage of trade", or

"course of performance" which explain or supplement the integrated contract under Code § 2-202. GE Co. v. United States Dynamics, Inc., 403 F.2d 933 (1st Cir. Mass. 1968).

12. Consistent additional terms.

UCC § 2-202(b) precludes the contradiction of confirmatory memoranda by prior or contemporaneous oral agreements when the writing was "intended by the parties as a final expression of their agreement," and permits the introduction of consistent additional terms, unless the court finds that the writing was also intended to be "a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement". The focus of the statute is plainly on the intention of the parties and not on the integration practices of reasonable persons acting normally and naturally. Interform Co. v. Mitchell, 575 F.2d 1270 (9th Cir. Idaho 1978).

Contract of seller of wheat was supplemented under UCC § 2-202(a) by evidence of trade usage that parties to such contracts intend to be bound regardless of success of seller's crop, and seller's failure to deliver all wheat under his contract because of partial crop failure was not excused under either UCC § 2-613 (dealing with casualty to identified goods) or UCC § 2-615(a) (dealing with commercial impracticability), which were, inapplicable to case. Colley v. Bi-State, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 769, 586 P.2d 908 (1978).

In action to rescind contract for fraud, where (1) buyer purchased baler from seller for $2,995, based on offer in seller's letter which represented that baler was two years old and was worth $4,250, and (2) buyer alone signed purchase agreement, court held (1) that purchase agreement did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of contract, (2) that seller's letter offering baler for sale and making certain representations about it, including representations as to its age, was admissible supplementary evidence of consistent additional terms within meaning of UCC § 2-202(b), and (3) that in absence of any specification in purchase agreement about baler's age or model year, its age as set forth in seller's letter became both a consistent additional term of the purchase agreement and, by operation of law, an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a). Mill Printing & Lithographing Corp. v. Solid Waste Mgt. Sys., 65 A.D.2d 590, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 124 (2d Dep't 1978) (also holding that warranty disclaimer found inferentially by trial court was inconspicuous and therefore ineffective).

Under UCC § 2-202(b), evidence of consistent additional terms to agreement may be introduced, since Uniform Commercial Code rejects assumption that because final writing has been worked out on some terms, such writing includes all matters agreed on. However, writing itself may indicate that it was intended by both parties as complete and exclusive statement of all terms of agreement, and if examination of four corners of writing demonstrates that such was intent of parties, extrinsic or parol evidence may not then be introduced to show additional consistent terms. Dave Markley Ford, Inc. v. Lair, 565 P.2d 671 (Okla. 1977).

UCC § 2-202(b) allows evidence of additional terms, subject to two prerequisites to admission. First, the writing or contract sued on must not be found by the court to have been intended as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of such contract. Second, the additional terms must not be inconsistent with those contained in the contract. Snyder v. Herbert Greenbaum & Assocs., 38 Md. App. 144, 380 A.2d 618 (1977).

UCC parol evidence rule permits oral evidence of consistent additional terms to contract to explain or supplement contract, but only where court finds that written terms were not intended as complete and exclusive statement of contract. North Penn Oil & Tire Co. v. Phillips Petro. Co., 358 F. Supp. 908 (E.D. Pa. 1973), reargument denied, 371 F. Supp. 676 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

Where writing in question was not intended as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement, evidence of oral terms of agreement which were not inconsistent with written terms but merely supplemented what was written was properly admitted. Pacific Indem. Co. v. McDermott Bros. Co., 336 F. Supp. 963 (M.D. Pa. 1971), aff'd, 475 F.2d 1395 (3d Cir. Pa. 1973).

Having decided that contract for sale of concrete for slab was ambiguous, lacking in clarity and not including all terms necessary for construction, court was not in error in allowing parol evidence of consistent additional terms and of facts and circumstances surrounding creation of agreement. Port City Constr. Co. v. Henderson, 48 Ala. App. 639, 266 So. 2d 896 (Civ. App. 1972).

13. —Price and payment.

Where contract was ambiguous as to whether payment made to subcontractor for carpet padding delivered, but not installed, should include proportion of total overhead and profit for the job, extrinsic evidence was properly admitted under UCC § 2-202(b) to help ascertain intent of parties on the matter. United States ex rel. Union Bldg. Materials Corp. v. Haas & Haynie Corp., 577 F.2d 568 (9th Cir. Haw. 1978).

Where contract for sale of new automobile expressly provided that it constituted entire agreement of parties, trial court committed reversible error under UCC § 2-202(b) in admitting both parol and extrinsic evidence offered by seller to establish, as consistent supplemental term of such contract, that buyer was obligated to pay seller for cost of repairing vehicle that buyer had traded in for new car. Dave Markley Ford, Inc. v. Lair, 565 P.2d 671 (Okla. 1977).

Oral agreement to extend credit entered into at time buyer purchased used car from seller, paid seller partial down payment, and executed partially completed bill of sale, but prior to time parties executed conditional sales contract, constituted valid and binding contract under statute of frauds: (1) bill of sale was sufficient written memorandum to take sale of car out of operation of statute under UCC § 2-201(1); (2) oral agreement to extend credit was collateral to sale and inducement for entire bargain; (3) terms of oral agreement to extend credit were consistent with and additional to written bill of sale under UCC § 2-202(b); and (4) conduct of parties indicated firm commitment to extend credit under UCC § 2-201(3)(c). Hardin v. Cliff Pettit Motors, Inc., 407 F. Supp. 297 (E.D. Tenn. 1976).

Evidence regarding alleged oral agreement covering rebates allegedly promised as inducement to purchase automobiles was admissible as not inconsistent with any terms of written chattel mortgages which were found not to have been intended as complete and exclusive statement of parties' agreement. Thrifty Rent-A-Car Sys. v. Chuck Ruwart Chevrolet, 500 P.2d 172 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

With no indication in the record that the trial court found a bill of sale "to have been intended also as a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement" for the sale of cattle and machinery, the trial court could not be convicted of reversible error for receiving parol evidence that defendants would execute a note and security instruments covering the personalty, since that evidence was not offered in contradiction of the bill of sale but rather as tending to show consistent additional terms. McDown v. Wilson, 426 S.W.2d 112 (Mo. Ct. App. 1968).

14.—Quality; warranties.

In buyer's action for seller's breach of written and oral warranties in sale of marine diesel engine, (1) where terms of sale contract were contained in seller's letter to buyer, buyer's written purchase order, and manufacturer's written warranty which accompanied sale of engine; (2) where seller also orally warranted to buyer that engine would deliver specified standard of performance, that if it did not do so it could be removed from buyer's boat at seller's expense, and that it would be delivered in time to meet requirements of builder of buyer's boat; (3) where such oral warranties were breached and buyer, within six-months period provided in written engine warranty for manufacturer's repair or replacement of defective parts, refused to allow manufacturer's mechanic to inspect defective engine; (4) where buyer, more than six months after date engine was put into operation, notified seller that he had removed engine from his boat, tendered engine back to seller, and demanded return of purchase price; and (5) where such tender and demand were refused by seller, (1) trial court properly found that all terms of sale contract had not been reduced to writing; (2) admission in evidence of oral warranties as part of sale contract did not violate parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202; (3) such oral warranties did not constitute "sale or return" provision in contract under UCC § 2-326(1)(b), but were analogous to "sale on approval" provision under UCC § 2-326(1)(a) and thus were not required by UCC § 2-326(4) to be in writing; (4) buyer's failure to allow seller to exercise right under UCC § 2-508(1) to inspect and repair engine negated warranty provisions of sale contract; (5) buyer accepted engine under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) by not seasonably notifying seller of buyer's election to return engine; and (6) buyer's delay of nearly six months in informing seller of buyer's intention to revoke acceptance of engine was insufficient compliance with buyer's good faith obligation under UCC § 1-203 and did not revoke such acceptance under UCC § 2-608. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

In action arising out of contract for sale of 700 head of cattle, where buyer contended that because quality of cattle was stated as "choice" and contract warranted that quality, he was justified in not accepting 56 head of cattle, but where seller contended that requirement of contract that buyer would take all cattle governed, extrinsic evidence to explain contract should not have been received under UCC § 2-202 since parties pointed only to language contract to sustain their respective positions and neither of them suggested that additional evidence constituted "evidence of consistent additional terms" or evidence of "course of dealing or usage of trade" or "course of performance" within meaning of subsections (a) or (b) of § 2-202. Shepard v. Top Hat Land & Cattle Co., 560 P.2d 730 (Wyo. 1977).

In action for breach of warranty in sale of defective printing press, where sale transaction was complicated by existence of security agreement signed by buyer which contained disclaimer of all express and implied warranties other than those set forth in security agreement, and where there was testimony that seller had told buyer that if buyer would sign security agreement, seller would “make the press print,” seller’s statement was promise that formed part of bargain of sale and created express warranty within meaning of UCC § 2-313(1)(a). Drier v. Perfection, Inc., 259 N.W.2d 496, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 323 (S.D. 1977) (also holding that testimony that seller had made such warranty was not barred by UCC § 2-202, and that words in security agreement which limited such warranty were inoperative under UCC § 2-316(1)).

In sales contract, express warranties based on UCC § 2-313 need not be part of written agreement or bill of sale, but written expressed warranties given in a written agreement or bill of sale in accordance with UCC § 2-313 may be explained or supplemented by oral express warranties in accordance with UCC §§ 2-202 and 2-316, where written agreement was not intended by parties as final expression of their agreement. Centennial Ins. Co. v. Vic Tanny Int’l of Toledo, Inc., 46 Ohio App. 2d 137, 346 N.E.2d 330 (1975).

Where contract for sale of cucumbers to be grown from seed furnished by plaintiff was silent as to type of seed to be furnished, parol evidence as to type of seed agreed on by parties was supplementary or explanatory, and did not contradict, modify, or rescind written agreement between parties. Flamm v. Scherer, 40 Mich. App. 1, 198 N.W.2d 702 (1972).

15. —Quantity.

In buyer’s action for seller’s breach of contract to sell mohair, parol evidence was admissible under UCC § 2-202(a) to show that term “fleece” had well understood meaning in mohair industry, that average weight of spring fleece of kid mohair was three pounds, and that average weight of spring fleece of adult mohair was four pounds. Raney v. Uvalde Producers Wool & Mohair Co., 571 S.W.2d 199 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), ref. n.r.e (Nov. 22, 1978).

In action for seller’s breach of contract to sell buyer all of seller’s stock of certain type of equipment located in specified warehouse, where both buyer and seller relied on invoice showing purchase price of $9,000 for (1) one lot of selected equipment, (2) one trailer-load of equipment, and (3) “remainder” of such equipment “currently in inventory,” oral testimony by buyer that he was told that the two lots specified in the invoice constituted half of goods purchased was admissible under UCC § 2-202(b) to explain understanding of parties as to quantity of equipment indicated in invoice by use of term “remainder.” Atlanta Army & Navy Store, Inc. v. Stuckman, 143 Ga. App. 850, 240 S.E.2d 220 (1977).

The fact that one party makes subsequent additions to an order blank does not show that there was not a complete written contract if such additions are merely the unit prices for the goods ordered in the original writing. Wolcov v. Russell, 46 Del. Co. 202 (1959).

16. —Time or date.

Where the parties have not defined with precision the terms of a written instrument, notwithstanding a written statement that the instrument is a complete and exclusive statement of the terms of their agreement, evidence may be received under UCC § 2-202 to determine the intention of the parties. Sunbury Textile Mills, Inc. v. Commissioner, 585 F.2d 1190, 25 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 642 (3d Cir. 1978) (applying Massachusetts UCC; admitting evidence to clarify meaning of words “cancelled” and “cancellation” in contract for purchase of textile looms).

Contract of seller of wheat was supplemented under UCC § 2-202(a) by evidence of trade usage that parties to such contracts intend to be bound regardless of success of seller’s crop, and seller’s failure to deliver all wheat under his contract because of partial crop failure was not excused under either UCC § 2-613 (dealing with casualty to identified goods) or UCC § 2-615(a) (dealing with commercial impracticability), which were, inapplicable to case. Colley v. Bi-State, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 769, 586 P.2d 908 (1978).

In action by seller of carpeting against buyer, which had repudiated entire contract of purchase, for damages consisting of difference between resale price and contract price of such goods, court held (1) that conversation and representations as to delivery date of goods, which took place before signing of purchase order, were properly disregarded by trial court, since terms of written agreement cannot be contradicted under UCC § 2-202 by evidence of prior agreement or contemporaneous oral agreement; (2) that trial court properly received evidence under UCC § 2-202(a) that in carpet industry, term "at once" meant "as soon as possible"; (3) that trial court's failure to find that seller had not identified conforming goods to the contract prior to resale thereof, as required by UCC § 2-704(1)(a), was proper and was supported by the evidence; and (4) that damages assessed against buyer under UCC § 2-706(1), dealing with seller's resale of the goods, had been properly calculated, since trial court did not include therein amount of carpeting sold at such resale before seller gave notice to buyer. Action Time Carpets, Inc. v. Midwest Carpet Brokers, Inc., 271 N.W.2d 36 (Minn. 1978).

Where written contract for sale of jewelry on approval did not specify date on which jewelry was to be returned if buyer did not accept it, parol evidence was admissible under UCC § 2-202(b) to show such date. George v. Davoli, 91 Misc. 2d 296 (1977).

Terms of specific statute providing that time was never considered as of the essence of a contract, unless by its terms expressly so provided, prevailed over those of general statute, UCC § 2-202, which states that written contract may be explained or supplemented by evidence of consistent additional terms; thus, parol evidence was not admissible to show that time of delivery was the essence in contract for sale of truck crane. Martel Constr. v. Gleason Equip., Inc., 166 Mont. 479, 534 P.2d 883 (1975).

In action for breach of express warranty in sale of bull, sellers' liability for breach of warranty that bull was breeder would be determined as of May 27, date when written agreement for sale of bull was executed, notwithstanding buyers made down payment on March 8 and bull was delivered on April 17. Lamb v. Bangart, 525 P.2d 602 (Utah 1974).

Allegation that seller orally promised a delivery date of no later than the end of the second week of December and that they would try to make delivery by the first week of December is not contradictory to, nor does it negate, the written expression that buyer understood that seller would try to ship by approximately the first of December, and the parol evidence of a firm delivery date, not being inconsistent with the terms of the letter, should have been admitted. MacGregor v. McReki, Inc., 30 Colo. App. 196, 494 P.2d 1297 (1971).

17. —Other particular terms and conditions.

Where purchase orders of general contractor and owner of concrete-molding forms used by contractor on construction projects were not intended as final expression of parties' agreement with respect to whether such forms were to be rented to or purchased by contractor, trial court properly admitted under UCC § 2-202(b) evidence extrinsic to purchase orders to determine whether transaction was sale or lease. Interform Co. v. Mitchell, 575 F.2d 1270 (9th Cir. Idaho 1978).

Parol evidence rule, UCC § 2-202, did not preclude consideration of understanding between parties to contract for sale and delivery of soybeans as to damages in event of breach where such understanding did not contradict any terms of contract; seller could not rely on defense of impossibility under UCC § 2-615, notwithstanding seller was farmer and was unable to deliver because his soybean crop failed, where buyer did not contemplate that contract would be filled by beans from any particular crop and where seller did not give seasonable notice of his inability to deliver. Bunge Corp. v. Miller, 381 F. Supp. 176 (W.D. Tenn. 1974).

A term or understanding that a stock option was not to be exercised unless the owner of the stock sought outside bids, which was admittedly discussed but whose operative effect was disputed, which was not set out in the writing evidencing the stock option, was clearly "additional" to what was in the writing, and could be proven in a dispute arising when the stockholder declined plaintiff's tender and refused to deliver the stock. Hunt Foods & Indus., Inc. v. Doliner, 26 A.D.2d 41 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 26 A.D.2d 623, 272 N.Y.S.2d 686 (1st Dep't 1966).

18. What constitutes inconsistency.

"Inconsistency," as used in UCC § 2-202(b), does not mean that the additional terms offered must negate or contradict the express terms contained in the contract sued on. Instead, "inconsistency" means the absence of reasonable harmony in terms of the language and respective obligations of the parties. Snyder v. Herbert Greenbaum & Assocs., 38 Md. App. 144, 380 A.2d 618 (1977).

Summary judgment was granted to seller for entire amount due in payment for certain air conditioning/heating units which allegedly did not comply with express warranties contained in advertising brochure, where front page of sales contract contained boldface disclaimer "Of Warranties, Express or Implied, of Merchantability or Fitness" not discussed by said contract, and where same page contained large bold print warning buyer to read contract. Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Secord Bros., 73 Misc. 2d 1031 (1973), aff'd, 44 A.D.2d 906, 357 N.Y.S.2d 702 (4th Dep't 1974).

To be inconsistent with the terms of a written agreement, the parol conditions sought to be introduced must contradict or negate a term of the writing, and a parol term or condition which has a lesser effect is provable. Whirlpool Corp. v. Regis Leasing Corp., 29 A.D.2d 395 (1st Dep't 1968).

To be "inconsistent", the term sought to be proven must contradict or negate a term of the writing, and a term or condition which has a lesser effect is provable. Hunt Foods & Indus., Inc. v. Doliner, 26 A.D.2d 41 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 26 A.D.2d 623, 272 N.Y.S.2d 686 (1st Dep't 1966).

19. Complete and exclusive statement of terms.

Where defendant sellers agreed in telephone conversation to sell 4,500 bushels of soybeans to plaintiff buyer; where buyer thereafter prepared and mailed to sellers written "confirmation of purchase" which contained requisite contract language as to amount, quality, price, and place and method of delivery of such soybeans; and where such written agreement was signed by both plaintiff and defendants, written agreement constituted exclusive statement of contract between parties under UCC § 2-202, so as to bar, in action for breach of contract for defendants' failure to deliver quantity of soybeans contracted for, parol evidence that would vary quantity of soybeans that defendants had agreed to sell. Moreover, without admission of such parol evidence, defense of impossibility of performance of contract because of flooding of defendants' farm at harvest time, which defense was based on additional provision in Mississippi Uniform Commercial Code that was not part of official code, could not be sustained. Ralston Purina Co. v. Rooker, 346 So. 2d 901 (Miss. 1977).

Where written contract for lease of three truck trailers expressly stated that it was an equipment lease, that transaction was not a sale of the trailers, conditional or otherwise, that lessee by payment of rentals acquired only right to use trailers, that written instrument contained entire agreement of the parties, and that no representations or understandings not contained in the written instrument would be binding unless reduced to writing and signed by parties to be bound, trial court correctly concluded that transaction was lease and that parol evidence was not admissible under UCC § 2-202(b) to contradict instrument's terms, since instrument was complete and final statement of parties' agreement. Hobbs Trailers v. J.T. Arnett Grain Co., 560 S.W.2d 85 (Tex. 1977) (stating that lease of trailers under express agreement that lessee would not acquire, by paying rentals, any title or interest in the equipment was inconsistent with contemporaneous collateral agreement that lessee would acquire title).

In seller's action to recover unpaid balance of purchase price of machine for producing packing-list pouches, where provision in express warranty paragraph contained in the written contract of sale stated that such warranty was in place of any other warranties, express or implied, including any warranty of merchantability or fitness for particular purpose, written contract constituted complete and exclusive statement of agreement of parties and could not be explained or supplemented under UCC § 2-202 by evidence offered by defendant to show express warranty by seller that machine would produce pouches equal to sample shown defendant before machine was purchased.

FMC Corp. v. Seal Tape Ltd., Inc., 90 Misc. 2d 1043 (1977).

In action by car dealer against buyer to recover alleged unpaid balance due on sale of car, dealer was not entitled to offer parole testimony under UCC § 2-202(a) that buyer had agreed to deliver insurance check covering wrecked trade-in vehicle as part of consideration where insurance check was not mentioned in contract and contract was, by its own terms, complete and exclusive statement of terms of agreement; nor did evidence disclose course of dealing and usage of trade as defined by UCC § 2-205 or course of performance as defined by UCC § 2-208 which would permit introduction of such evidence. Noble v. Logan-Dees Chevrolet-Buick, Inc., 293 So. 2d 14 (Miss. 1974).

20. —Writings found incomplete.

In action on option contract to purchase airplane, where (1) defendants gave plaintiff written option to purchase on April 1, 1977, which by its terms would expire on April 11, 1977, (2) defendants issued sight draft on April 5, 1977, payable to order of defendants and listing plaintiff as drawee, which plaintiff's bank received on April 8, 1977 together with partially executed bill of sale, (3) defendants on April 11, 1977 (expiration date of written option) gave plaintiff oral extension of option to purchase plane, and (4) plaintiff on April 18, 1977 instructed his bank to pay sight draft, but defendants in the interim sold plane to another person, court held (1) that contract was required by UCC § 2-201(1) (statute of frauds) to be in writing; (2) that written option-offer was not accepted by plaintiff within time limit contained therein; (3) that expiration date of written option-offer was not superseded by oral extension of such date because parole evidence of extension was not admissible under UCC § 2-202 to vary material term of written option; (4) that if written option-offer, as claimed by plaintiff, was still only an offer at time of its oral modification, then acceptance tendered by plaintiff after original time limit of written option had expired was acceptance of different contract offer and contract thus formed was unenforceable under statute of frauds provision contained in UCC § 2-201(1); and (5) that such different contract was not removed from statute of frauds by part performance that allegedly occurred when defendants sent sight draft to plaintiff's bank. McCollum Aviation, Inc. v. CIM Assocs., 446 F. Supp. 511 (S.D. Fla. 1978).

In buyer's action to rescind sale of sloop, oral assurances made by seller during course of parties' negotiations that sloop would become watertight after it had been placed into the water and allowed sufficient time to swell created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) and (b), and evidence of such warranty was not barred by UCC § 2-202(b) since writings involved in case, which consisted of written notice of intent to purchase, bill of sale, and seller's advertisement incorporated by reference into bill of sale, did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of parties' agreement. Werner v. Montana, 117 N.H. 721, 378 A.2d 1130, 22 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 894 (1977) (also holding that such express warranty did not merely relate to condition of sloop at time of sale, but of necessity related to time when sloop would be put into water and prepared for sailing).

Action for breach of contract to supply stainless steel solids; there was no clause in written contract stating that it was complete agreement; held, corporate defendant was not precluded from introducing evidence that written contract specifying delivery of 500 tons did not represent complete understanding of parties and that there was oral agreement that defendant was to supply as many tons as could be obtained up to 500 tons. Michael Schiavone & Sons v. Securalloy Co., 312 F. Supp. 801 (D. Conn. 1970).

Where instalment sales contract containing provision that no representations, promises, or statements had been made by seller unless incorporated therein was found not to be "complete and exclusive statement of terms of agreement," parole evidence was admissible under Code § 2-202(b) to establish seller's oral agreement to repair defects in mobile home. Zwierzyski v. Owens, 499 P.2d 996 (1972).

Parole evidence may be introduced to show an agreement to execute a note and "security interests" where the bill of sale which was executed was not found by the court to have been intended as the complete and exclusive statement of the terms of the agreement. McDown v. Wilson, 426 S.W.2d 112 (Mo. Ct. App. 1968).

Where the security agreement states that it constitutes the entire "agreement" between the parties, but as to "warranties, representations and promises" the language is that they are not "to be binding on any assignee" of the seller, the "agreement" and "representations, warranties, and promises" are treated as being separate and distinct, and representations as to the condition of the property sold are not generally considered a part of the agreement but an inducement to the execution of the sale agreement, and it cannot be said that the parties intended the security agreement as a final statement of the terms of sale; and parol evidence is admissible, in an action for breach of contract brought by the buyer against the seller, as to the defective condition of the automobile sold. Hull-Dobbs, Inc. v. Mallicoat, 57 Tenn. App. 100, 415 S.W.2d 344 (1966).

"Cash Repair and Service Agreement" with the words "one cozy-aire oil furnace installed as is with oil burner-tank-gauge, etc. $350" written after the phrase "Additional Material and Labor As Follows" was not a complete and exclusive statement of the terms relied on, and parol evidence was admissible to supplement the memorandum. Holland Furnace Co. v. Heidrich, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 204 (1955).

21. —Warranty disclaimers or the like.

In buyer's action for breach of warranty in sale of computer and computer programs, (1) trial court properly admitted parol evidence under UCC § 2-202(b) to show that parties had entered into contract of sale, rather than security agreement; (2) seller's claim that admission of extrinsic evidence as to oral warranties contradicted warranty-disclaimer clause on reverse side of contract violated parol evidence rule codified in UCC § 2-202(b) was immaterial because warranty-disclaimer clause was not part of sale contract; (3) since limitation-of-damages provision also was not part of sale contract, whether trial court was correct in holding such provision unconscionable under UCC § 2-302(1) was also immaterial; and (4) trial court's finding that seller did not supply goods as promised and warranted was supported by ample evidence in record. Burroughs Corp. v. Chesapeake Petro. & Supply Co., 282 Md. 406, 384 A.2d 734 (1978).

Exculpatory clause, which was listed among 31 other paragraphs and not distinguished from them by lettering, type size or otherwise, was ineffective to disclaim warranties of merchantability and fitness, since it did not comply with requirement of UCC § 2-316 that disclaimer be conspicuous. Redfern Meats, Inc. v. Hertz Corp., 134 Ga. App. 381, 215 S.E.2d 10 (1975).

Sale contract which contained provisions that machine was "accepted in its present condition" and that no warranties, express or implied, had been made by seller "unless specifically set forth in writing" were permissible exclusions and modifications of warranties, so that evidence of alleged oral statements of seller that machine was in "good condition" was prohibited by Code § 2-202. Avery v. Aladdin Prods. Div., Nat'l Serv. Indus., Inc., 128 Ga. App. 266, 196 S.E.2d 357 (1973).

Where the plaintiff had signed a statement releasing the defendant from liability for injuries caused in the course of receiving hair treatment from the defendant, and the issue to be determined was whether the covenant not to sue was broad enough to prevent recovery for injury to plaintiff's ear, testimony disclosing the intent of the parties was admissible. Ciunci v. Wella Corp., 26 A.D.2d 109 (1st Dep't 1966).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Since UCC § 2-204(1) recognizes that a contract can come into being as a result of either a writing or words or conduct, and since UCC § 2-203 recognizes that in order to condition assent on formalities the parties must expressly agree thereto, it could be contended that there was a written contract if it was signed, even though there was no delivery, or alternatively, that there was an oral agreement evidenced by a draft and bill of sale. Osguthorpe v. Anschutz Land & Livestock Co., 456 F.2d 996 (10th Cir. Utah 1972).

The common-law rule that an undisclosed principal is not a party to a contract executed by his agent under seal has been abrogated in Pennsylvania by the instant section as to contracts for the sale of goods. Commonwealth Bank & Trust Co. v. Keech, 201 Pa. Super. 285, 192 A.2d 133 (1963).

The question as to whether a motor vehicle dealer was the undisclosed principal of the salesman involved in an installment sales contract was a jury question. Commonwealth Bank & Trust Co. v. Keech, 201 Pa. Super. 285, 192 A.2d 133 (1963).

If a motor vehicle dealer was principal of seller of automobile who assigned instalment sales contract, dealer was liable as assignor and guarantor of contract of sale, and was also the seller against whom the buyers had a defense which was good as against an assignee of the instalment contract under the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Sales Financing Act. Commonwealth Bank & Trust Co. v. Keech, 201 Pa. Super. 285, 192 A.2d 133 (1963).

The fact that an agreement for the conditional sale of an automobile purported to be sealed is of no significance, and failure of consideration can be shown despite the seal. Quality Fin. Co. v. Hurley, 337 Mass. 150, 148 N.E.2d 385 (1958).

§ 75-2-204. Formation in general.

(1) A contract for sale of goods may be made in any manner sufficient to show agreement, including conduct by both parties which recognizes the existence of such a contract.

(2) An agreement sufficient to constitute a contract for sale may be found even though the moment of its making is undetermined.

(3) Even though one or more terms are left open a contract for sale does not fail for indefiniteness if the parties have intended to make a contract and there is a reasonably certain basis for giving an appropriate remedy.

Contracts under which farmers delivered soybeans to warehouseman for storage and subsequent sale at price to be agreed on at later date, and pursuant to which weight tickets or statement sheets were issued as receipts with words "hold," "stored," or "on storage" appearing on such receipts together with name of individual farmer, were bailments and not present sales with price to be fixed in the future within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1), UCC § 2-204(3), and UCC 2-305(1), since such code sections did not contemplate farmers' right at their discretion to require a return of the same or equivalent fungible goods. NYTCO Servs., Inc. v. Wilson, 351 So. 2d 875, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 25 (Ala.

1977) (stating that fact that weight tickets and statement sheets issued as receipts had words indicating that soybeans were being stored also refuted contention that transactions were sales).

Where (1) buyer placed order for new Corvette on form furnished by dealer, (2) such form described car, listed its purchase price, provided for delivery to buyer as soon as possible, and also stated that order was not binding until accepted by dealer, (3) buyer, but not dealer, signed such order form and gave dealer check for $1,000 deposit on vehicle, (4) dealer on same day placed written order with manufacturer for car ordered by buyer, (5) such order was signed by dealer, listed buyer as "customer," and described order as "sold," rather than "stock" for inventory, (6) dealer subsequently notified buyer by letter that "market conditions" had made buyer's "offer" unacceptable and that dealer would refund buyer's $1,000 deposit, and (7) car was ultimately manufactured, delivered to dealer, and sold to third party, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-204(1) and (2), dealing with making of contracts generally, contract was formed as matter of law no later than time when dealer, after taking and retaining buyer's down payment, placed signed order for car with manufacturer which designated car as "sold" and listed buyer's name as "customer," (2) that dealer's conduct was clearly sufficient to signify an acceptance, even though it did not sign its own order form, (3) that order form sent by dealer to manufacturer was sufficient memorandum of contract to satisfy statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), and (4) that even assuming absence of a sufficient memorandum under UCC § 2-201(1), buyer's part payment on the indivisible contract operated under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to take contract out of statute of frauds. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, practical business people are not expected to govern their actions with reference to nice legal formalisms. Thus, when there is a basic agreement, however manifested and whether or not precise moment of such agreement can be determined, failure of parties to articulate agreement in precise legal language, with every difficulty and contingency considered and resolved, will not prevent formation of contract. However, if there is no basic agreement, the code will not imply one. And without an agreement, there can be no contract and without a contract, there can be no breach. This principle is explicitly recognized by UCC § 1-201(3) and (11), and UCC § 2-204(1) and (2). Kleinschmidt Div. of SCM Corp. v. Futuronics Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 972, 363 N.E.2d 701 (1977).

2. Liberal construction.

Under this section a liberal construction with respect to the formation of contracts of sale is mandated, and where the buyer of prepared meals signed a letter of intent containing price, time delivery, quantity, and quality terms; the conduct of the parties evidenced their contractual intention, notwithstanding the buyer's addition of a paragraph indicating that a detailed contract containing complete specifications as to quality and quantity and protective provision in event the quality of the produce or service fell below established standards was to be completed in the future. Graulich Caterer, Inc. v. Hans Holterbosch, Inc., 101 N.J. Super. 61, 243 A.2d 253 (App. Div. 1968).

3. Relationship with other law.

Since UCC § 2-204(1) recognizes that a contract can come into being as a result of either a writing or words or conduct, and since UCC § 2-203 recognizes that in order to condition assent on formalities the parties must expressly agree thereto, it could be contended that there was a written contract if it was signed, even though there was no delivery, or alternatively, that there was an oral agreement evidenced by a draft and bill of sale. Osguthorpe v. Anschutz Land & Livestock Co., 456 F.2d 996 (10th Cir. Utah 1972).

Although the sales provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code have altered some of the formerly established doctrines of contract law in law to react more positively to the realistic needs of modern commerce, a sales contract must be made in a manner sufficient to show agreement. Bruce Lincoln-Mercury, Inc. v. Universal

C.I.T. Credit Corp., 325 F.2d 2 (3d Cir. Pa. 1963).

4. Intent of parties.

In suit for breach of alleged contract to furnish two pump stations for contractor, contractor's inclusion in purchase order of requirement that pump stations be in full compliance with plans and specifications for unique pump station previously erected by contractor, rather than contractor's standard type of station, constituted material alteration of supplier's offer, which was based on construction of standard type of station, so as to make purchase order a mere offer to buy which was not accepted by supplier. In such case, since no meeting of minds between parties took place within meaning of UCC § 2-204(1) as to products and services to be provided by supplier, no contract was ever entered into. Lakeside Pump & Equip., Inc. v. Austin Constr. Co., 89 Wash. 2d 839, 576 P.2d 392, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 886 (1978) (holding that while Uniform Commercial Code liberalized some rules of contract formation, it did not eliminate basic requirement, codified by UCC § 2-204(1) that there must be agreement, or meeting of minds of parties, concerning subject matter of contract).

Insurance policies, issued to buyer of farm products and covering loss by fire of stock, materials, and supplies that were property of insured or where held by insured, did not provide coverage for beans destroyed in fire where beans were not delivered to insured; since seller remained free to make another disposition of crop, parties never intended to enter binding contract for sale of beans, no dominion passed to insured, and beans were not insured's property within terms of policy. Dossey v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 528 P.2d 417 (Colo. Ct. App. 1974).

Use in purchase order of phrase "as per agreement, assignment to Coronet Carpet Co. subject to approval of buyer and seller and/or assignee" could arguably support reasonable inference of expressed intent that there was to be no legal obligation until subsequent formal documents met with parties' approval. Peninsular Carpets, Inc. v. Bradley Homes, Inc., 58 Wis. 2d 405, 206 N.W.2d 408 (1973).

Where seller of diesel generator units was not satisfied that buyer had given it sufficient assurance as to whom the equipment would ultimately be sold and where it would be placed for use, as required in seller's invitation for an offer of purchase, and seller had not treated buyer's offer to purchase as acceptable, no contract had come into existence. Euclid Eng'g Corp. v. Illinois Power Co., 79 Ill. App. 2d 145, 223 N.E.2d 409 (4th Dist. 1967).

To have a contract for financing, there must be, among other things, the requisite mutual assent to the same bargain, and accordingly, where the finance company at the time it paid for automobiles had no intention of creating a financing relationship, and the car dealer was under the impression that another finance company had financed the cars there was no formation of a financing contract between the parties. Bruce Lincoln-Mercury, Inc. v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 325 F.2d 2 (3d Cir. Pa. 1963).

Subsection (3) of the Pennsylvania equivalent of this section was applicable to determine whether letters concerning the sale of corporate stock constituted a binding agreement. Pennsylvania Co. v. Wilmington Trust Co., 39 Del. Ch. 453, 166 A.2d 726 (1960).

5. Conduct of parties.

The parties' actions established that they consummated a contract for the sale of a car (§ 75-2-204) where (1) the dealer and buyer had discussed financing the car at an 8.5 annual percentage rate, along with insurance and warranty coverage, and had arrived at an oral contract, (2) the car and the initial payments on it were delivered and accepted, and (3) the buyer faithfully made monthly payments on the car; the dealer's quick assignment of a retail installment contract to a third party before the buyer even picked up the car was inconsistent with the dealer's argument that it did not enter into a contract for sale of the car. Fairley v. Turan-Foley Imports, Inc., 65 F.3d 475 (5th Cir. 1995).

A farmer's oral agreement to sell soybeans was enforceable, even though the farmer did not subsequently sign the contract form, where (1) the farmer had booked produce with the buyer on 4 previous occasions, 2 of which involved contracts which the farmer never signed, and (2) the farmer had canceled an earlier contract with the buyer and had inquired into the possibility of canceling the soybean contract, which indicated his knowledge of the course of performance for such bookings. Gooch v. Farmers Mktg. Ass'n, 519 So. 2d 1214 (Miss. 1988).

Conduct "sufficient to show agreement" was shown by the acts of agents of a railroad who accepted diesel fuel from a supplier and signed an invoice which omitted price but included quantity; the law would supply a reasonable price in the absence of an agreement (§ 75-2-305(1)). However, judgment in favor of the supplier pursuant to a motion for a peremptory instruction would be reversed where a triable issue of fact existed as to the supplier's status as an agent of an oil company. Alabama G.S.R.R. v. McVay, 381 So. 2d 607 (Miss. 1980).

Where (1) plaintiff, but not defendant manufacturer, signed manufacturer's standard order form for purchase of computer system which contained disclaimer of all express and implied warranties concerning such system, (2) plaintiff thereafter arranged lease of system by having leasing company buy it from manufacturer exclusively for lease to plaintiff, (3) lease under which system was installed in plaintiff's plant provided that lessor made no warranties, express or implied, as to such system and that lessee (plaintiff) should have benefit of manufacturer's warranties, if any, (4) sales contract between manufacturer and lessor-purchaser expressly stated that lessor-purchaser agreed to terms and conditions on manufacturer's standard order form, and (5) plaintiff lessee, on system's failure to function properly, sued manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties allegedly attaching to system, court held that manufacturer had effectively disclaimed all warranties, other than limited three-month warranty contained in manufacturer's standard order form, because (1) sales contract signed by plaintiff with manufacturer (prior to plaintiff's subsequent lease of system), although not constituting parties' entire agreement, was nevertheless enforceable under UCC § 2-204(1), dealing with sufficiency of contracts established by conduct of parties, (2) original sales contract with plaintiff, although never signed by defendant manufacturer, became foundation for broader agreement whereby system was ultimately leased to plaintiff, (3) plaintiff's execution of original sales contract, after reading its terms, was conduct that showed agreement to such terms, including manufacturer's limited three-month warranty and disclaimer of all other express and implied warranties, (4) although defendant manufacturer never signed original sales contract, manufacturer subsequently agreed to its terms by incorporating them into later sales contract with leasing company, and (5) warranty disclaimer in original contract was not unconscionable. Badger Bearing Co. v. Burroughs Corp., 444 F. Supp. 919 (E.D. Wis. 1977), aff'd, 588 F.2d 838 (7th Cir. Wis. 1978).

Where (1) buyer placed order for new Corvette on form furnished by dealer, (2) such form described car, listed its purchase price, provided for delivery to buyer as soon as possible, and also stated that order was not binding until accepted by dealer, (3) buyer, but not dealer, signed such order form and gave dealer check for $1,000 deposit on vehicle, (4) dealer on same day placed written order with manufacturer for car ordered by buyer, (5) such order was signed by dealer, listed buyer as "customer," and described order as "sold," rather than "stock" for inventory, (6) dealer subsequently notified buyer by letter that "market conditions" had made buyer's "offer" unacceptable and that dealer would refund buyer's $1,000 deposit, and (7) car was ultimately manufactured, delivered to dealer, and sold to third party, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-204(1) and (2), dealing with making of contracts generally, contract was formed as matter of law no later than time when dealer, after taking and retaining buyer's down payment, placed signed order for car with manufacturer which designated car as "sold" and listed buyer's name as "customer," (2) that dealer's conduct was clearly sufficient to signify an acceptance, even though it did not sign its own order form, (3) that order form sent by dealer to manufacturer was sufficient memorandum of contract to satisfy statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1), and (4) that even assuming absence of a sufficient memorandum under UCC § 2-201(1), buyer's part payment on the indivisible contract operated under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) to take contract out of statute of frauds. Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

Although "Declaration Terms" executed by brewer and beer distributor did not in and of itself create valid contract in that contract appeared to be illusory, under UCC § 2-204 trial court could have found that valid agreement existed between parties in regard to their conduct and continuing recognition that agreement for wholesale distribution of beer existed between them. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Central Beverage Co., 172 Ind. App. 81, 359 N.E.2d 566 (1977).

Although seller took position that its sales confirmation form was offer which buyer accepted by mailing back its purchase order form, whereas buyer took position that seller's sales confirmation form was offer which buyer orally rejected shortly after its receipt and that its purchase order was counter-offer which seller accepted by making two partial shipments, evidence established that oral contract for purchase of steel was formed before either party began sending or receiving written contract forms; conduct of parties indicated common understanding that sale had been arranged at time seller sent its sales confirmation form to buyer where, inter alia, on same date, seller mailed order to its supplier for 1,000 tons of steel which included size and grade specifications buyer had given to seller, and where buyer's testimony indicated that buyer only objected to boiler plate terms regarding delivery in seller's sales confirmation form and did not show any disagreement with seller's assertion in cover letter to form that contract for purchase of steel had already been agreed upon; even though it was difficult to identify exact point at which binding contract was formed, under UCC § 2-204(2) it could be found that agreement was in fact made during series of telephone conversations conducted by parties during week preceding mailing of sales confirmation form and fact that shipping and delivery terms were not completely ironed out during oral negotiations was likewise unimportant under UCC § 2-204(3). Harlow & Jones, Inc. v. Advance Steel Co., 424 F. Supp. 770 (E.D. Mich. 1976).

Under UCC §§ 2-204(1) and 1-201(3), buyer was not justified in terminating orders of submarine valves for alleged failure to meet delivery dates specified in contracts, notwithstanding alleged promise by seller to meet or improve upon delivery dates originally requested by buyer, where buyer requested certain delivery dates when it placed orders, seller clearly and unequivocally rejected buyer's requested dates and promised delivery at later dates, buyer merely appealed to seller to conform to requested dates and later appealed to seller to expedite one shipment, and buyer gave no notice to seller that seller breached contract by failing to meet required delivery dates. Crane Co. v. Roberts Supply Co., 196 Neb. 67, 241 N.W.2d 516 (1976).

In action by milk case manufacturer against manufacturer of polyethylene used for milk case bottoms, fact that polyethylene manufacturer invoiced plastics to, and received payment from, company that performed actual molding of polyethylene for milk case manufacturer was not conclusive on issue whether there was necessary privity between milk case manufacturer and polyethylene manufacturer to support action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315. Cumberland Corp. v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 383 F. Supp. 595 (E.D. Tenn. 1973).

Since UCC § 2-204(1) recognizes that a contract can come into being as a result of either a writing or words or conduct, and since UCC § 2-203 recognizes that in order to condition assent on formalities the parties must expressly agree thereto, it could be contended that there was a written contract if it was signed, even though there was no delivery, or alternatively, that there was an oral agreement evidenced by a draft and bill of sale. Osguthorpe v. Anschutz Land & Livestock Co., 456 F.2d 996 (10th Cir. Utah 1972).

An offer by a trust company to sell corporate stock held by it in its fiduciary capacity, which offer was subject to approval by the purchasers' boards of directors, could, after such approval, form a contract for the sale of the stock. Wilmington Trust Co. v. Coulter, 200 A.2d 441 (1964).

6. —Course of dealing.

Where seller's trailers were ordered over telephone by buyer and 5 trailers were delivered, each exceeding $500 amount, which under § 2-201 necessitates writing signed by agent of buyer before alleged order for additional 20 trailers could be enforceable, and such was not in writing, no admission of existence of contract for additional 20 trailers was made, buyer never tendered and seller never received payment for these trailers, no deposit was tendered, exception for specially manufactured goods was inapplicable, court concluded that as matter of law, enforcement of any order in excess of 5 units was precluded by statute of frauds. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Where (1) seller of heat-and-chemical-recovery boiler, in response to buyer's request for revised sale proposal, informed buyer by letter on July 27, 1970 of seller's firm price for boiler and stated that such price was "firm for acceptance by August 15, 1970," (2) seller on August 7, 1970 submitted revised sale proposal to buyer which excluded all express and implied warranties, except one-year warranty for repairs and replacement of parts, and also all liability for consequential damages, (3) buyer on August 12, 1970 sent seller letter of intent to purchase which stated boiler's price, terms of payment, shipping schedule, liquidated damages for breach of contract, and authorization to seller to begin work immediately subject only to cancellation charges, and (4) buyer on February 15, 1971 sent seller formal purchase order which contained certain conditions that were never agreed to by seller, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-204(1), contract to purchase boiler was entered into in August, 1970; (2) that such contract consisted of seller's offer-as contained in seller's letters of July 27, 1970 and August 7, 1970, and seller's revised proposal of August 7, 1970-and buyer's acceptance of seller's offer in buyer's letter of intent on August 12, 1970; (3) that such contract also contained seller's proposed commercial terms and conditions of sale, including seller's disclaimer of warranties, limitation of liability to repairs and replacement of defective parts for one year, and exclusion of liability for consequential damages; and (4) such commercial terms of sale were not modified, under UCC § 2-207(2)(c) by buyer's subsequent inclusion of conflicting commercial terms in buyer's confirming purchase order of February 15, 1971, since seller had objected in writing within reasonable time to buyer's proposed changes. Lincoln Pulp & Paper Co. v. Dravo Corp., 445 F. Supp. 507 (D. Me. 1977).

Where general contractor of building project promptly notified subcontractor of its successful bid and verbally accepted subcontractor's offer to supply concrete, and where subcontractor began delivering concrete and general contractor accepted and paid for it in same manner parties had done business before, until price was raised by subcontractor, conduct of parties recognized existence of contract pursuant to UCC §§ 2-204 and 2-206. Maryland Supreme Corp. v. Blake Co., 279 Md. 531, 369 A.2d 1017 (1977).

Even in the absence of a written agreement with respect to every term of a contract, great weight attaches to the course of dealing of the parties, and where it appears from the conduct of the parties that their mode of calculating price, although not accepted formally by signature of a written instrument, was adhered to by both parties during an extensive course of dealing, during which the purchaser received, accepted, and paid for over $800,000 worth of merchandise, this course of dealing must be held applicable and governing with respect to remaining merchandise which was received, accepted, but not paid for. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 236 F. Supp. 879 (W.D. Pa. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

7. —Customs and usages of trade.

Oral contract for sale of soybeans which showed amount of beans to be sold and price per bushel, in conjunction with evidence that showed that custom was to deal in particular grade of beans and to deliver at particular time, was established with sufficient certainty within meaning of UCC § 2-204(3). URSA Farmers Coop. Co. v. Trent, 58 Ill. App. 3d 930, 374 N.E.2d 1123 (4th Dist. 1978).

In action by diamond wholesaler against retailer to recover price of goods shipped under "all-risk" memorandum, custom and usage of industry established liability of consignee for full memorandum price of merchandise stolen while in his possession. Lipschutz v. Gordon Jewelry Corp., 373 F. Supp. 375 (S.D. Tex. 1974).

Evidence of long-established customs and usages of trade established implied agreement which obligated cooperative to pay milk producers reasonable value for milk purchased by cooperative based on competitive prices in area. Columbus Milk Producers' Coop. v. Department of Agric., 48 Wis. 2d 451, 180 N.W.2d 617 (1970).

8. Definiteness of contract.

Under UCC § 2-204(3), legally enforceable contract existed for manufacture of cooling systems to be incorporated into electronic countermeasure (ECM) pods produced for United States Air Force where (1) both buyer and seller knew and understood terms and conditions of such contract, (2) both buyer and seller were fully aware of documents that comprised contract, and (3) such documents were clear on their face and provided all of the essential elements of a contract of sale. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Garrett Corp., 437 F. Supp. 1301 (D. Md. 1977), aff'd, 601 F.2d 155 (4th Cir. Md. 1979).

Valid oral contract for purchase of 17 million mail-order advertising "flyers" was sufficiently established under UCC § 2-204(3) by evidence which showed essential contract terms of quantity, price, and date and place of delivery, and which also revealed that buyer had urged seller to start printing flyers as soon as possible. Perlmutter Printing Co. v. Strome, Inc., 436 F. Supp. 409 (N.D. Ohio 1976).

Contract for sale of one carload of plywood composed of unspecified amount of A-C and D-C grades of plywood, with limitation on shop grade of plywood to extent of 5 percent of carload shipped, was not so uncertain that it was unenforceable, and carload of plywood received by buyer fully complied with terms of contract, even though it contained approximately 85 percent D-C grade plywood, where, inter alia, there was nothing in applicable commercial standards (referred to in buyer's purchase order) which specified particular percentages of any grade in shipment mixed with another grade unless specified in contract between buyer and seller. Pacific Prods., Inc. v. Great W. Plywood, Ltd., 528 S.W.2d 286 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Where contracts for sale of cotton between buyer and cotton growers specified that buyer would purchase, and grower would sell, cotton grown during 1973 crop year on specified acreage, with projected yield of certain number of pounds of cotton per acre, quantity terms of contracts were not only sufficiently definite to satisfy UCC statute of frauds provision, § 2-201, but also were sufficient to meet standards of definiteness required by UCC § 2-204(3) for enforceability. Riegel Fiber Corp. v. Anderson Gin Co., 512 F.2d 784 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

9. —Open terms.

In action brought by buyer against seller of paint for breach of implied warranties of fitness under UCC § 2-315 when paint, purchased as primer for structural steel, failed to adhere and prevent rusting, defendant-seller's contention that disclaimer appearing on each invoice for paint excluded implied warranties under UCC § 2-316 and established course of dealing under UCC § 1-205 was rejected because contract was made at time defendant's bid was accepted and attempted disclaimer made at time of delivery cannot affect implied warranties if disclaimer was not known to buyer at time of contract; defendant's challenge to existence of contract at time bid was orally accepted was controlled by UCC § 2-201(3)(c), which recognized partial performance as substitute for required writing and, under UCC § 2-204(3), fact that some matters were not covered did not render contract unenforceable where plaintiff informed defendant that he was low bidder and had the contract. Geo. C. Christopher & Son v. Kansas Paint & Color Co., 215 Kan. 185, 523 P.2d 709

(1974), modified on denial of reh'g, 215 Kan. 510, 525 P.2d 626 (1974).

Even though party sent cable accepting price terms of contract existence of open term as to letter of credit evidenced no meeting of minds, where accepting party was uninformed as to unusual nature of letter of credit which involved possible violation of Argentinian currency regulations. Luis Hirsch y Cia. Sociedad Anonima v. Rosenblatt Casing Co., 418 F.2d 1300 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1969).

Where some of contract terms were open, whether parties intended to make contract should be determined by commercial standards; where one of contracting parties was uninformed as to nature of credit involving possible violation of foreign country's currency regulations and where it was virtually certain that this party would have been advised of such circumstances by bank upon inquiry for letter of credit, there was no meeting of minds when this party sent cable accepting price terms. Luis Hirsch y Cia. Sociedad Anonima v. Rosenblatt Casing Co., 418 F.2d 1300 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1969).

10. —Basis for appropriate remedy.

Under UCC § 2-204, parties may establish contract in any manner sufficient to show agreement and may leave open one or more terms as long as reasonably certain basis for giving appropriate remedy exists. Every detail of contract need not be specified by parties or proved in court, and moment of contract's formation need not be ascertained. Transammonia Export Corp. v. Conserv, Inc., 554 F.2d 719 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

In action for breach of oral contracts for sale of anhydrous ammonia, where buyer testified that it originally entered into oral contract in June, 1972, with seller for sale of 60,000 tons of ammonia of designated purity at $28 per ton, FOB buyer's vessel, and that parties orally modified such contract in October, 1972, by reducing quantity of ammonia to 45,000 tons, of which 15,000 tons were actually delivered; and where evidence also showed more than enough terms of such contracts-with respect to product, quantity, price, due dates, and FOB delivery terms-to provide remedy under UCC § 2-204 for seller's alleged breach thereof, trial court correctly denied seller's motion for directed verdict and properly submitted issue of breach of contracts to jury, which returned verdict for plaintiff. Transammonia Export Corp. v. Conserv, Inc., 554 F.2d 719 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-204(3), if parties intended to contract and if appropriate remedy can be fashioned, contract of sale will not fail for indefiniteness, even though material terms are left open. But if dispute over material terms manifests lack of intent to contract, no contract will result. Kleinschmidt Div. of SCM Corp. v. Futuronics Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 972, 363 N.E.2d 701 (1977).

§ 75-2-205. Firm offers.

An offer by a merchant to buy or sell goods in a signed writing which by its terms gives assurance that it will be held open is not revocable, for lack of consideration, during the time stated or if no time is stated for a reasonable time, but in no event may such period of irrevocability exceed three (3) months; but any such term of assurance on a form supplied by the offeree must be separately signed by the offeror.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Letter proposal and surrounding negotiations between buyer and seller of various meat products, which provided that buyer would be informed 45 days prior to any adjustment in price, was at most “firm offer” which was irrevocable, without consideration, only for period of 3 months commencing on date of proposal; thus, seller had right, after 3 month period, to raise its offered price without provision of 45 days’ notice. Mid-South Packers, Inc. v. Shoney’s, Inc., 761 F.2d 1117 (5th Cir. 1985).

In action by seller to recover amount offset by buyer against purchase price of meat, court held (1) that seller’s “letter proposal” to sell meat constituted firm offer under UCC § 2-205 that was irrevocable, even without consideration, for three-month period after proposal’s date; (2) that letter proposal was not requirements contract under UCC § 2-306(1) because buyer did not promise to purchase its entire requirements exclusively from seller; (3) that after expiration of three months from date of letter proposal, each of buyer’s purchase orders stood on its own as separate contract between buyer and seller; (4) that offer in letter proposal was properly revoked after three months from proposal’s date and was replaced by offer to sell at increased price that buyer accepted by making subsequent purchase orders; that invoices sent by seller after buyer’s subsequent purchase orders constituted “written confirmations” under UCC § 2-207(1) that were enforceable against seller under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1); and (6) that because buyer did not contend that exceptions in UCC § 2-207(2) prevented additional terms in invoices concerning interest on delinquent accounts and reasonable costs of collection from becoming “part of the contract” under UCC § 2-207(2), such additional terms became part of parties’ contract. Mid-South Packers, Inc. v. Shoney’s, Inc., 761 F.2d 1117 (5th Cir. 1985).

Under UCC § 2-205, a merchant’s price quotation, estimate, or other offer, in order to be irrevocable for a reasonable length of time, must by its terms give assurance that it will be held open. A mere offer lacking such assurance is subject to revocation by the seller at anytime prior to the buyer’s acceptance. Ivey’s Plumbing & Elec. Co. v. Petrochem Maintenance, Inc., 463 F. Supp. 543 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

In breach of contract action by subcontractor against both supplier and manufacturer of air compressors for failure to make delivery, where (1) on September 13, 1977, supplier gave subcontractor oral quotation of $89,000 for five compressors in issue, (2) on previous day (September 12), supplier had obtained both an oral quotation and an estimate sheet, signed by manufacturer’s agent, that listed price for two compressors, and agent orally stated that three more could be furnished at same unit price, so that total price for five compressors would be $80,000, (3) on September 13, 1977, subcontractor used supplier's quotation of $89,000 to make successful bid for contract sought by it, (4) on September 26, 1977, manufacturer, after finding out that its competitors charged higher prices for compressors, issued revised price quotation to supplier and offered to sell five compressors in suit for $113,000, (5) on October 24, 1977, supplier, ignoring manufacturer's revised quotation, issued purchase order to manufacturer for five compressors at manufacturer's original quotation of $80,000, (6) on November 7, 1977, manufacturer advised supplier that it would not furnish compressors at its original quotation, (7) on October 6, 1977, at meeting between subcontractor and supplier, supplier told subcontractor that it could not sell compressors for $89,000, but subcontractor nevertheless gave supplier purchase order for compressors at such price, and (8) on supplier's failure to deliver compressors, subcontractor purchased them elsewhere for $121,000 and sought to recover $32,000 as difference between supplier's original quotation of $89,000 and subcontractor's cover price, court held (1) that manufacturer was not liable to subcontractor on either theory of vicarious responsibility for supplier's acts or theory that subcontractor was third-party beneficiary of contract between supplier and manufacturer, (2) that manufacturer's answer to supplier's cross claim did not contain unqualified admission of facts that, under exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(3)(b), would remove alleged oral contract between supplier and manufacturer from statute of frauds, (3) that manufacturer's estimate sheet of September 12, 1977 was not, as claimed by supplier, writing sufficient to indicate that contract of sale had been made within meaning of statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1), but was at best mere offer that had been effectually revoked by manufacturer under UCC § 2-205 at time when manufacturer had right to revoke it, (4) that such revocation had occurred before supplier attempted to place purchase order for compressors with manufacturer, and (5) that as between subcontractor and supplier, there was no writing of any kind within meaning of statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) on which subcontractor could rely to avoid the statute, and also no admission of facts by supplier that would constitute contract enforceable under admissions exception to the statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3)(b). Ivey's Plumbing & Elec. Co. v. Petrochem Maintenance, Inc., 463 F. Supp. 543 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Where contractor obtained price quotation on certain pipe required for construction project from pipe supplier, relied on price quotation and incorporated it into his bid, was awarded contract, and supplier then refused to supply pipe at price quoted: (1) no binding contractual obligation existed under UCC, since mere use of supplier's bid was not acceptance giving rise to contract, and, since supplier had not offered to make its bid irrevocable, nor was there an option supported by consideration, its bid did not meet "firm offer" requirement of § 2-205; (2) however, supplier was liable to contractor on theory of promissory estoppel; (3) statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201 was not applicable to action based on promissory estoppel. Janke Constr. Co. v. Vulcan Materials Co., 386 F. Supp. 687 (W.D. Wis. 1974), aff'd, 527 F.2d 772 (7th Cir. Wis. 1976).

Evidence that vendors left written "quotations" with purchaser and that purchaser subsequently called vendors and placed orders for goods fell short of establishing firm offer to sell by vendors. Realty Dev., Inc. v. Kosydar, 67 Ohio Op. 2d 67, 322 N.E.2d 328 (Ct. App. 1974).

Transaction whereby seller, who was indebted to buyer, agreed to sell tractor to buyer in return for cancellation of seller's indebtedness constituted present, binding and completed sale, and title to tractor passed to buyer at time of execution of contract of sale, notwithstanding sales agreement provided that tractor would remain on seller's premises until needed by buyer and during that period of time seller would have right to sell tractor, and written agreement between seller and buyer was adequate as contract of sale under UCC since it contained date, identified buyer and seller and specified exactly model, make and serial number of tractor, listed amount and nature of consideration and was signed by agent of both parties. Ace Supply, Inc. v. Rocky-Mountain Mach. Co., 96 Idaho 183, 525 P.2d 965 (1974).

A subcontractor's letter to a general contractor, making an offer to furnish certain materials and perform certain work, which contained no terms giving assurance that would be held open does not fall within this section, and the offer could be withdrawn at any time prior to its acceptance. E.A. Coronis Assocs. v. M. Gordon Constr. Co., 90 N.J. Super. 69, 216 A.2d 246 (App. Div. 1966).

The offer of a trust company to sell stock held by it in its fiduciary capacity is not a firm offer within the meaning of this section which applies only to merchants, and the trust company, in the absence of the written consent of its cotrustee, could not make a firm offer to sell and there was no assurance in its agreement of sale that the offer would be held open, and the trust company should have considered a subsequent offer to purchase the stock at a higher price (applying Pennsylvania UCC). Wilmington Trust Co. v. Coulter, 200 A.2d 441 (1964).

§ 75-2-206. Offer and acceptance in formation of contract.

(1) Unless otherwise unambiguously indicated by the language or circumstances

(a) an offer to make a contract shall be construed as inviting acceptance in any manner and by any medium reasonable in the circumstances;

(b) an order or other offer to buy goods for prompt or current shipment shall be construed as inviting acceptance either by a prompt promise to ship or by the prompt or current shipment of conforming or nonconforming goods, but such a shipment of nonconforming goods does not constitute an acceptance if the seller seasonably notifies the buyer that the shipment is offered only as an accommodation to the buyer.

(2) Where the beginning of a requested performance is a reasonable mode of acceptance, an offeror who is not notified of acceptance within a reasonable time may treat the offer as having lapsed before acceptance.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action by assignee of account of buyer of carpeting for balance due on such account, where (1) buyer ordered carpeting from seller-assignor on discount terms specified by buyer, (2) invoice mailed after goods were shipped contained different discount terms, (3) buyer continued to hold goods, although claiming that it had rejected them, and (4) entire shipment of goods was later destroyed by fire at buyer's warehouse, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-206(1)(b), when seller-assignor shipped goods to buyer, it accepted buyer's offer to purchase goods, (2) that even if UCC § 2-207 superficially applied to alter terms of parties' contract, buyer properly objected under UCC § 2-207(2)(c) to different credit terms on seller-assignor's invoice and such terms did not apply, (3) that contract therefore was on buyer's own credit terms, (4) that there was nothing that buyer could reject as nonconforming, since goods were admittedly satisfactory, (5) that contract had not been breached by either party, (6) that since there had been no breach, risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3) passed to buyer on his receipt of goods, and buyer thus had to bear loss of goods by fire, and (7) that under UCC § 2-210(2), assignment of buyer's account to plaintiff was valid. Trust Co. Bank v. Barrett Distribs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 959 (S.D. Ind. 1978).

Ordinarily, under UCC § 2-206(1)(a), an offer to make a contract invites acceptance in any manner that is reasonable under the circumstances. However, where (1) buyer's purchase order for pumps expressly provided for seller's acceptance in writing, (2) acceptance copy accompanying purchase order pointed out that order was not valid until buyer received acceptance copy from seller, and (3) purchase order did not invite acceptance by partial performance, trial court erred in holding that seller's conduct in shipping some of the pumps ordered, more than a year after the date of the purchase order, amounted to acceptance. Furthermore, buyer's purchase order was not a confirmatory memorandum within the meaning of UCC § 2-201(2), since evidence did not show that parties had entered into an oral contract. Nations Enters., Inc. v. Process Equip. Co., 40 Colo. App. 390, 579 P.2d 655, 24 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 828 (1978) (also holding that seller was entitled to purchase price for pumps that were shipped to and accepted by buyer, and that contract for their sale was enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3) c)).

A contract for the sale of a specifically optioned automobile was formed as a matter of law no later than the time when the dealer, after having taken and retained the plaintiff's down payment of $1,000, placed an order signed by it for the identical vehicle with the manufacturer, designating the vehicle as "sold" and listing plaintiff's name under the heading "customer"; the conduct of the dealer was sufficient to signify an acceptance notwithstanding its conceded failure to sign the purchase agreement in the space provided therefor after the words "Accepted by". Thomaier v. Hoffman Chevrolet, Inc., 64 A.D.2d 492 (2d Dep't 1978).

Under UCC § 2-206(1)(a), a written bid can be effectively accepted not only by a written acceptance but also in any other manner and by any medium that is reasonable under the circumstances. However, it still must be accepted. Woodridge v. Bohnen Int'l, Inc., 60 Ill. App. 3d 692, 377 N.E.2d 121 (1978) (holding that there was no acceptance of bid submitted to city for purchase of three trucks where city board of trustees merely voted to "recommend" acceptance of the bid).

Seller's action in shipping part of goods ordered by buyer would be sufficient to constitute acceptance of buyer's offer under UCC § 2-206(1)(b). Avila Group, Inc. v. Norma J., 426 F. Supp. 537 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

Where general contractor of building project promptly notified subcontractor of its successful bid and verbally accepted subcontractor's offer to supply concrete, and where subcontractor began delivering concrete and general contractor accepted and paid for it in same manner parties had done business before, until price was raised by subcontractor, conduct of parties recognized existence of contract pursuant to UCC §§ 2-204 and 2-206. Maryland Supreme Corp. v. Blake Co., 279 Md. 531, 369 A.2d 1017 (1977).

UCC § 2-206(1)(a) was not intended to change common-law rule that if offer to make contract by its terms indicates that acceptance can only be made in particular manner, offeree must comply with such manner. However, in case where manufacturer of office telephone system by letter solicited offer from prospective buyer to purchase system, letter was accompanied by equipment sales agreement providing that agreement would become binding only on manufacturer's acceptance thereof at its home office, buyer signed and returned agreement to manufacturer with check for down payment, but manufacturer did not formally execute agreement at its home office and relied on UCC § 2-206(1)(a) in alleging that no contract was ever entered into, (1) buyer was offeror and manufacturer was offeree; (2) manufacturer had right to rely on manner of acceptance specified in equipment sales agreement, but could also assent to buyer's waiver of such manner of acceptance; (3) manufacturer's assent to such waiver could be sufficiently expressed by conduct, provided that such conduct was by persons having authority to bind manufacturer; and (4) letter from representative of one of manufacturer's divisions to telephone company advising telephone company of contract between manufacturer and buyer raised issue of fact as whether letter constituted manufacturer's assent to be bound by equipment sales agreement. Empire Mach. Co. v. Litton Bus. Tel. Sys., 115 Ariz. 568, 566 P.2d 1044 (Ct. App. 1977).

In action by supermarket customer for injuries sustained when one or more bottles of Coca Cola exploded prior to being placed in shopping cart, retailer's act of placing bottles on shelf with price affixed manifested intent to offer them for sale, customer's act of taking physical possession of the goods with intent to pay for them constituted reasonable mode of acceptance and at that moment contract for sale came into existence. Sheeskin v. Giant Food, Inc., 20 Md. App. 611, 318 A.2d 874 (1974), aff'd, 273 Md. 592, 332 A.2d 1, 78 A.L.R.3d 682 (1975).

Where plaintiff-seller sent list of furnishings to defendants to be purchased by them at specified prices, calling for payment of $3,000 upon acceptance and asking that defendants sign letter and return copy, and where defendant sent letter enclosing $3,000 check and asking that additional piece of furniture be included, stating that contract had been misplaced, while defendants did not sign and return one copy of contract in manner requested by plaintiff, under UCC § 2-206, acceptance could be made by any medium reasonable and circumstances, i.e. defendant's letter. McAfee v. Brewer, 214 Va. 579, 203 S.E.2d 129 (1974).

Use of yard goods constituted an acceptance of such goods under UCC § 2-606, and thus purchaser's claims that such goods were nonconforming was rejected. Kesco Textile Co. v. Coit Int'l, Inc., 41 A.D.2d 828 (1st Dep't 1973), aff'd, 34 N.Y.2d 700, 356 N.Y.S.2d 616, 313 N.E.2d 74 (1974).

Even if steel and wire products fabricator's oral offer to sell steel broker specified quantities of steel rods had lapsed, jury could find that required elements of offer and acceptance were present in broker's two subsequent telephone conversations with fabricator, in which broker agreed to purchase specific size and quantity of rods previously discussed at price previously agreed upon, and fabricator responded "Fine, Thank you." Textron, Inc. v. Froelich, 223 Pa. Super. 506, 302 A.2d 426 (1973).

In action on contract for purchase of tractor, whether notice given 4 weeks after acceptance was given within reasonable time under Code § 206(2) was question for trier of fact. Petersen v. Thompson, 264 Or. 516, 506 P.2d 697 (1973).

Negotiations for purchase of incinerator; purchase order referred to seller's prior proposal and requested that incinerator be shipped subject to submitting any controversy to arbitration; held, purchase order was counter-offer which was accepted so as to create contract when incinerator was shipped as ordered; arbitration provision was binding. Universal Oil Prods. Co. v. S.C.M. Corp., 313 F. Supp. 905 (D. Conn. 1970).

Even in the absence of a written agreement with respect to every term of a contract, great weight attaches to the course of dealing of the parties, and where it appears from the conduct of the parties that their mode of calculating price, although not accepted formally by signature of a written instrument, was adhered to by both parties during an extensive course of dealing, during which the purchaser received, accepted, and paid for over $800,000 worth of merchandise, this course of dealing must be held applicable and governing with respect to remaining merchandise which was received, accepted, but not paid for. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 236 F. Supp. 879 (W.D. Pa. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

An Illinois florist who receives interstate telegraphic orders for retail sales of flowers in Illinois is a seller, his sales are present sales made in the state whether the contract is unilateral or bilateral, and title to the flowers passes in Illinois, and the sale is not one for resale which would be true if the seller were the out-of-state florist who telegraphs the order, and the Illinois florist is subject to that state's retailers' occupational tax on such sales. O'Brien v. Isaacs, 32 Ill. 2d 105, 203 N.E.2d 890 (1965).

§ 75-2-207. Additional terms in acceptance or confirmation.

(1) A definite and seasonable expression of acceptance or a written confirmation which is sent within a reasonable time operates as an acceptance even though it states terms additional to or different from those offered or agreed upon, unless acceptance is expressly made conditional on assent to the additional or different terms.

(2) The additional terms are to be construed as proposals for addition to the contract. Between merchants such terms become part of the contract unless:

- (a) the offer expressly limits acceptance to the terms of the offer;
- (b) they materially alter it; or
- (c) notification of objection to them has already been given or is given within a reasonable time after notice of them is received.

(3) Conduct by both parties which recognizes the existence of a contract is sufficient to establish a contract for sale although the writings of the parties do not otherwise establish a contract. In such case the terms of the particular contract consist of those terms on which the writings of the parties agree, together with any supplementary terms incorporated under any other provisions of this code.

1. In general.

Interest and attorney fee provisions contained in invoices of seller of meat products, which terms provide for payment of both interest on delinquent accounts as well as reasonable costs of collection, including attorney fees, became part of contracts between buyer and seller when buyer expressly accepted purchase orders. Mid-South Packers, Inc. v. Shoney's, Inc., 761 F.2d 1117 (5th Cir. 1985).

Since UCC § 2-207(1) speaks of both acceptances and written confirmations, it is intended to include at least two distinct situations: (1) that in which the parties have reached a prior oral contract and any writings serve only as confirmation of that contract, and (2) the situation in which the prior dealings of the parties did not constitute actual formation of a contract, and the writings serve as either an offer or an acceptance, or as both an offer and acceptance. In either case, the writing or writings may contain additional terms, and in either case, the effect of such additional terms is the same under the Uniform Commercial Code. Marlene Indus.

Corp. v. Carnac Textiles, Inc., 45 N.Y.2d 327, 380 N.E.2d 239 (1978).

Acceptance is prerequisite to application of UCC § 2-207(1), and section should be applied only if traditional criteria of intent showing that contract has been made are met. Only then do prescriptions in UCC § 2-207(1) concerning "additional terms" become relevant. U.S. Indus., Inc. v. Semco Mfg., Inc., 562 F.2d 1061 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 986, 98 S. Ct. 613, 54 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1977).

2. Scope.

Where a bargain becomes effective upon execution of a contract several days before a purchase order is issued, terms of a purchase order cannot be read together with the contract as an additional term of the agreement, because § 75-2-207 applies only to the formation of contracts. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In action by general contractor, which had been employed by defendant utility to construct power plant, for retained funds that utility refused to disburse, which action was ultimately settled with regard to all parties except for utility's counterclaim against subcontractor that supplied turbine generator and turbines for project, district court held, with respect to utility's claims against subcontractor for (a) breach of implied warranties by furnishing defective equipment, (b) cost of replacement power, and (c) lost profits, (1) that general contractor had express and implied authority from utility to execute limitation-of-liability agreement as to subcontractor's warranties and general contractor's remedies thereon, (2) that such limitation-of-liability agreement was valid and insulated subcontractor from utility's claims for cost of replacement power, lost profits, and breach of implied warranties, (3) that utility did not obtain contract rights under UCC § 2-207 by virtue of subcontractor's price quotation, utility's purchase order, and events subsequent to execution of such documents, (4) that under UCC § 2-719(1)(a), general contractor's standard contract terms, when construed in light of both its course of dealing with subcontractor and usage of the trade, also limited utility's recovery to cost of replacement and repair of defective parts, and did not permit recovery under any legal theory for cost of replacement power, and (5) that cost of replacement power was consequential damage for breach of warranty attaching to power-generating equipment involved in suit. Ebasco Servs., Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 460 F. Supp. 163 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

Fact that trial court utilized standards embodied in UCC § 2-207, relating to additional terms in acceptance in connection with sale of goods, to determine whether option for purchase of real property had been properly exercised was not error. Adams v. Waddell, 543 P.2d 215 (Alaska 1975).

Where bargain became effective upon the execution of a contract several days before purchase order was issued, terms of purchase offer could not be read together with contract as additional term of agreement, since UCC § 2-207 applies only to the formation of contracts. Columbia Nitrogen Corp. v. Royster Co., 451 F.2d 3 (4th Cir. Va. 1971).

3. Conditional acceptance or counter-offer.

Where (1) seller on August 2nd orally offered to sell buyer 15,000 tons of fertilizer, which offer was valid until 2:00 p.m. on August 3d, (2) on morning of August 3d, as requested by buyer, seller sent buyer same offer by telex, (3) at 10:00 a.m. on August 3d, after seller had sent and relinquished control over its firm offer by telex, buyer allegedly accepted such offer orally, and (4) buyer thereafter sent seller responsive telex while seller's firm offer was still valid and such telex included certain terms, including terms as to payment and loading, that were not in seller's offer, court held (1) that inclusion in buyer's telex of payment and loading provisions not mentioned in seller's offer was not, under UCC § 2-207(1), necessarily fatal to buyer's alleged acceptance, (2) that under UCC § 2-207(2), term "plus or minus 10 percent at buyer's option," although it might have materially altered the contract, did not by itself invalidate the alleged acceptance, (3) that on the other hand, since UCC § 2-207 does require definite expression of acceptance before its provisions can apply, it might be that buyer's responsive telex, taken as a whole, did not represent agreement between the parties on even price and quantity of seller's fertilizer, and (4) that if a contract had been formed, it was enforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) because document signed by seller as party to be charged was its firm offer in its August 3d telex and buyer's oral acceptance of that written offer was responsive thereto, insofar as satisfying statute of frauds was concerned, and clearly showed that oral evidence offered by buyer rested on a real transaction (applying New York and Pennsylvania UCC; holding, on cross-motions for summary judgment, that validity of buyer's acceptance depended on issues of fact to be resolved at the trial). Ore & Chem. Corp. v. Howard Butcher Trading Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1150 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

In order to give effect to the expectations of the parties, UCC § 2-207 recognizes that a proposed deal, which in commercial understanding has in fact been closed, is to be treated as a contract. Thus, under UCC § 2-207(1), a definite and reasonable expression of acceptance operates as an acceptance, even though it states terms additional to, or different from, those offered or agreed on. If a contract is recognized under UCC § 2-207(1), the additional terms in the acceptance are treated under UCC § 2-207(2) as proposals for additions to the contract and, as between merchants, become part of the contract unless certain specified conditions render the proposals inoperative. UCC § 2-207(1) provides, however, that if an acceptance is expressly conditioned on the offeror's assent to the new terms and no assent is forthcoming, the entire transaction aborts. In other words, the consequence of a clause that conditions acceptance on assent to the additional or different terms is that, as of the writings, no contract exists. Nevertheless, under UCC § 2-207(3), if the parties' conduct recognizes the existence of a contract for sale by performance, it is sufficient to establish such a contract. In such case, the terms of the contract are those on which the writings of the parties agree, together with supplemental provisions of the code. Uniroyal, Inc. v. Chambers Gasket & Mfg. Co., 177 Ind. App. 508, 380 N.E.2d 571 (1978).

Where paper mill's order acknowledgment forms stated that any acceptance of buyer's order was expressly made conditional on buyer's assent to additional terms contained in acknowledgment form and that acceptance by buyer of delivery would be deemed to constitute such assent, under UCC § 2-207(1), no contract was formed for sale of paper absent buyer's assent to such additional or different terms. Aaron E. Levine & Co. v. Calkraft Paper Co., 429 F. Supp. 1039 (E.D. Mich. 1976).

Letters from steel supplier which purported to accept buyers' purchase orders did not operate as acceptance of shipping schedule contained in purchase orders under UCC § 2-207(1) where letters stated that supplier could not establish firm shipping schedule until firm quantities and required delivery schedule was established. West Penn Power Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 236 Pa. Super. 413, 348 A.2d 144 (1975).

Seller of fabric was liable to buyer for breach of express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, notwithstanding seller's invoice contained statement "No refunds after 5 days. Check goods before cutting," where buyer's purchase order stated that fabric was to be used for swimwear and that all "colors, prints and bonding processes must meet swimwear specifications," where buyer's order was based on sample supplied by seller and, although another fabric was substituted for sample fabric, such modification was initiated by seller, where seller's salesman assured buyer that substituted fabric would meet swimwear specifications and where fabric supplied and subsequently manufactured into swimsuits was defective and failed to meet minimum performance standards for colorfastness: seller's invoice and shipment of goods did not constitute both acceptance and counteroffer under UCC § 2-207, binding buyer to terms of invoice, since language used did not clearly condition acceptance on additional terms nor were such terms conspicuous as defined by UCC § 1-201(10). Rite Fabrics, Inc. v. Stafford-Higgins Co., 366 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

Where an acceptance was "expressly made conditional on assent to the additional or different terms" contained in an earlier letter, the District Court was justified in permitting the jury to treat that earlier letter as a counter-offer. Construction Aggregates Corp. v. Hewitt-Robins, Inc., 404 F.2d 505 (7th Cir. Ill. 1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 921, 89 S. Ct. 1774, 23 L. Ed. 2d 238 (1969).

4. —Acceptance on additional terms distinguished.

Under UCC § 2-207(1), contract between building subcontractor and supplier of ductwork existed where (1) antecedent negotiations of parties and circumstances prior to subcontractor's submission of purchase order showed that subcontractor had clearly intended to limit scope of purchase order in accordance with exclusions contained in supplier's written price quotation, (2) parties had bargained with reference to supplier's second price quotation and had arrived at contract price of $207,500, which was same price stated in subcontractor's purchase order and supplier's written acknowledgment of such order, and (3) subcontractor's purchase order and supplier's acceptance thereof in no way indicated that subcontractor in purchase order had intended to include items that had been excluded throughout course of parties' negotiations. U.S. Indus., Inc. v. Semco Mfg., Inc., 562 F.2d 1061 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 986, 98 S. Ct. 613, 54 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1977).

Where in telephone conversation on July 31, 1973, seller agreed to sell and buyer agreed to buy 26,000 bushels of wheat, and buyer's written confirmation of contract was received by seller on August 7, 1973; and where seller, on August 21, 1973, repudiated such contract (and also an earlier contract for sale of 40,000 bushels of wheat) because of clause in buyer's confirmation giving buyer option to cancel agreement, (1) buyer's confirmation of contract was received by seller within reasonable time under UCC § 2-201(2); (2) seller's objection to confirmation of contract on August 21, 1973, was not made within ten-day period prescribed by UCC § 2-201(2); (3) provision in buyer's confirmation giving buyer option to cancel was addition of material term to contract; and (4) since buyer's confirmation of contract was not predicated on seller's assent to such additional term, seller's receipt of buyer's confirmation within reasonable time constituted acceptance of contract under UCC § 2-207(1) and such additional term did not void contract, although seller was not bound by additional term. Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

Execution of forward contract by cotton grower was an offer to sell on terms contained therein and the subsequent attachment by buyer of a price schedule, with price related to quality, and a change in the exclusion date (i.e., the date after which buyer had the option to reject the cotton) was an acceptance by buyer of the offer on additional terms; under UCC § 2-207(2), additional terms did not invalidate the contract. Bradford v. Plains Cotton Coop. Ass'n, 539 F.2d 1249 (10th Cir. Okla. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1042, 97 S. Ct. 743, 50 L. Ed. 2d 754 (1977).

Where seller sent buyer price quotation which contained sufficiently complete and specific terms as to quantity, description and price, and where buyer responded with purchase order containing specifications that were substantially identical with price quotation except for warranty clauses in dispute but also required seller's express consent to buyer's document, under language of UCC 2-207(1) stating "unless acceptance is expressly made conditional on assent to the additional or different terms," buyer's purchase order constituted a counter-offer, seller's signature was a binding acceptance, and contract was totally encompassed within purchase order form. Falcon Tankers, Inc. v.

Litton Sys., 355 A.2d 898 (Del. Super. 1976).

Where manufacturer of jail doors submitted written purchase order for gear motors to open and close doors automatically, specifying input speed of approximately 1,590 r.p.m., but where seller returned order acknowledgement referring to accepted prototype by description and number, and prototype had input speed of 3,200 r.p.m., notwithstanding its facial irreconcilability with purchase order, seller's acknowledgement operated as an acceptance resulting in a valid contract under UCC § 2-207(1). Stewart-Decatur Sec. Sys. v. Von Weise Gear Co., 517 F.2d 1136 (8th Cir. Mo. 1975).

Where cotton farmer signed and delivered to his agent one-page purchase-and-sale agreement covering his 1973 cotton crop, which was complete except for name of purchaser, and where buyer responded by sending to agent three-page agreement which contained same terms as one-page agreement, but which also contained additional terms, under UCC § 2-207 delivery of three-page document constituted acceptance of one-page document and was not substantially different counteroffer which constituted automatic rejection of one-page document. Hohenberg Bros. Co. v. Killebrew, 505 F.2d 643 (5th Cir. 1974), reh'g denied, 507 F.2d 1280 (1975).

Where plaintiff-seller sent list of furnishings to defendants to be purchased by them at specified prices, calling for payment of $3,000 upon acceptance and asking that defendants sign letter and return copy, and where defendant sent letter enclosing $3,000 check and asking that additional piece of furniture be included, stating that contract had been misplaced, defendant's letter constituted definite and reasonable acceptance or written confirmation sent within reasonable time after receipt of plaintiff's offer to sell under UCC § 2-207. McAfee v. Brewer, 214 Va. 579, 203 S.E.2d 129 (1974).

5. Additional terms as non-binding proposals.

In action by assignee of account of buyer of carpeting for balance due on such account, where (1) buyer ordered carpeting from seller-assignor on discount terms specified by buyer, (2) invoice mailed after goods were shipped contained different discount terms, (3) buyer continued to hold goods, although claiming that it had rejected them, and (4) entire shipment of goods was later destroyed by fire at buyer's warehouse, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-206(1)(b), when seller-assignor shipped goods to buyer, it accepted buyer's offer to purchase goods, (2) that even if UCC § 2-207 superficially applied to alter terms of parties' contract, buyer properly objected under UCC § 2-207(2)(c) to different credit terms on seller-assignor's invoice and such terms did not apply, (3) that contract therefore was on buyer's own credit terms, (4) that there was nothing that buyer could reject as nonconforming, since goods were admittedly satisfactory, (5) that contract had not been breached by either party, (6) that since there had been no breach, risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3) passed to buyer on his receipt of goods, and buyer thus had to bear loss of goods by fire, and (7) that under UCC § 2-210(2), assignment of buyer's account to plaintiff was valid. Trust Co. Bank v. Barrett Distribs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 959 (S.D. Ind. 1978).

Where (1) seller on August 2nd orally offered to sell buyer 15,000 tons of fertilizer, which offer was valid until 2:00 p.m. on August 3d, (2) on morning of August 3d, as requested by buyer, seller sent buyer same offer by telex, (3) at 10:00 a.m. on August 3d, after seller had sent and relinquished control over its firm offer by telex, buyer allegedly accepted such offer orally, and (4) buyer thereafter sent seller responsive telex while seller's firm offer was still valid and such telex included certain terms, including terms as to payment and loading, that were not in seller's offer, court held (1) that inclusion in buyer's telex of payment and loading provisions not mentioned in seller's offer was not, under UCC § 2-207(1), necessarily fatal to buyer's alleged acceptance, (2) that under UCC § 2-207(2), term "plus or minus 10 percent at buyer's option," although it might have materially altered the contract, did not by itself invalidate the alleged acceptance, (3) that on the other hand, since UCC § 2-207 does require definite expression of acceptance before its provisions can apply, it might be that buyer's responsive telex, taken as a whole, did not represent agreement between the parties on even price and quantity of seller's fertilizer, and (4) that if a contract had been formed, it was enforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) because document signed by seller as party to be charged was its firm offer in its August 3d telex and buyer's oral acceptance of that written offer was responsive thereto, insofar as satisfying statute of frauds was concerned, and clearly showed that oral evidence offered by buyer rested on a real transaction (applying New York and Pennsylvania UCC; holding, on cross-motions for summary judgment, that validity of buyer's acceptance depended on issues of fact to be resolved at the trial). Ore & Chem. Corp. v. Howard Butcher Trading Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1150 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

In order to give effect to the expectations of the parties, UCC § 2-207 recognizes that a proposed deal, which in commercial understanding has in fact been closed, is to be treated as a contract. Thus, under UCC § 2-207(1), a definite and seasonable expression of acceptance operates as an acceptance, even though it states terms additional to, or different from, those offered or agreed on. If a contract is recognized under UCC § 2-207(1), the additional terms in the acceptance are treated under UCC § 2-207(2) as proposals for additions to the contract and, as between merchants, become part of the contract unless certain specified conditions render the proposals inoperative. UCC § 2-207(1) provides, however, that if an acceptance is expressly conditioned on the offeror's assent to the new terms and no assent is forthcoming, the entire transaction aborts. In other words, the consequence of a clause that conditions acceptance on assent to the additional or different terms is that, as of the writings, no contract exists. Nevertheless, under UCC § 2-207(3), if the parties' conduct recognizes the existence of a contract for sale by performance, it is sufficient to establish such a contract. In such case, the terms of the contract are those on which the writings of the parties agree, together with supplemental provisions of the code. Uniroyal, Inc. v. Chambers Gasket & Mfg.

UCC § 2-207(1) was intended to abrogate the harsh “mirror-image” rule of common law under which any deviation in the language of a purported acceptance from the exact terms of the offer transformed the acceptance into counteroffer, so as to preclude contract formation on the basis of those two documents alone. Under UCC § 2-207(1), an acceptance containing additional terms will operate as an acceptance unless it is “expressly made conditional on assent to the additional or different terms.” Marlene Indus. Corp. v. Carnac Textiles, Inc., 45 N.Y.2d 327, 380 N.E.2d 239 (1978).

In action for buyer’s breach of contract to purchase brick wrap, where provision for one percent per month service charge on overdue accounts appeared only on form sent by seller to acknowledge buyer’s oral and written acceptance of seller’s offer to sell goods, such provision did not become part of contract under UCC § 2-207 and interest on recovery obtained by seller could not be based thereon, but would be allowed under state statute governing interest. Graham Paper Co. v. Schottco Corp., 555 F.2d 193 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977).

Because acceptances were not expressly conditional on the buyer’s assent to the additional terms within UCC § 2-207(1), a contract is recognized, and the additional terms are treated as “proposals” for addition to the contract under UCC § 2-207(2). Dorton v. Collins & Aikman Corp., 453 F.2d 1161 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1972).

Where parties orally negotiated the terms for the installation of an air conditioning system, one party reduced the terms to writing and sent two signed copies to the other party for execution, but the other party, in addition to signing, inserted a provision as to the time when the work under the contract was to be completed, after which the first party started performance of the work, it was said, without so deciding, that there may have been, by virtue of the instant section, a completed agreement upon the execution of the first party’s document, with a proposal for additional terms. Gateway Co. v. Charlotte Theatres, Inc., 297 F.2d 483 (1st Cir. Mass. 1961).

6. Additional terms as binding merchants.

The added terms became binding when they did not expressly limit acceptance to the terms of the offer, did not materially alter the original offer, and notification of objection to them was not given within a reasonable time after notice was received. American Cable Corp. v. Trilogy Communications, Inc., 754 So. 2d 545 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where the original understanding between the parties did not address venue or choice of law, the provision in the invoices submitted by the plaintiff, which stated that the transaction would be governed by Mississippi law and that jurisdiction and venue would be in Mississippi, constituted an additional term which was binding in the absence of objection by the defendant. American Cable Corp. v. Trilogy Communications, Inc., 1999 Miss. App. LEXIS 566 (Miss. Ct. App. Sept. 14, 1999), subst. op., 754 So. 2d 545 (Miss. Ct. App. 2000).

Where buyer’s contract contained certain delivery dates and seller’s order acknowledgment was silent concerning delivery dates but contained provision that seller’s terms would control in case of conflicting provisions or where buyer’s purchase order was silent, delivery terms contained in buyer’s purchase order became part of sales contract because delivery terms were not in conflict with any terms in acknowledgment. United States ex rel. Control Sys. v. Arundel Corp., 814 F.2d 193 (5th Cir. 1987), decision clarified on denial of reh’g, 826 F.2d 298 (5th Cir. 1987).

In order to give effect to the expectations of the parties, UCC § 2-207 recognizes that a proposed deal, which in commercial understanding has in fact been closed, is to be treated as a contract. Thus, under UCC § 2-207(1), a definite and seasonable expression of acceptance operates as an acceptance, even though it states terms additional to, or different from, those offered or agreed on. If a contract is recognized under UCC § 2-207(1), the additional terms in the acceptance are treated under UCC § 2-207(2) as proposals for additions to the contract and, as between merchants, become part of the contract unless certain specified conditions render the proposals inoperative. UCC § 2-207(1) provides, however, that if an acceptance is expressly conditioned on the offeror's assent to the new terms and no assent is forthcoming, the entire transaction aborts. In other words, the consequence of a clause that conditions acceptance on assent to the additional or different terms is that, as of the writings, no contract exists. Co.*, 177 Ind. App. 508, 380 N.E.2d 571 (1978).

Where a merchant orally placed an order for fabrics with another merchant and then sent the seller a purchase order, which did not provide for arbitration and specified that its terms could not be superseded by an unsigned contract, an arbitration clause in the seller's acknowledgment of the order, which the buyer retained without objection but did not sign, does not bind the buyer. Marlene Indus. Corp. v. Carnac Textiles, Inc., 45 N.Y.2d 327, 380 N.E.2d 239 (1978).

UCC § 2-207(1) was intended to abrogate the harsh "mirror-image" rule of common law under which any deviation in the language of a purported acceptance from the exact terms of the offer transformed the acceptance into counteroffer, so as to preclude contract formation on the basis of those two documents alone. 7. —Material alteration.

Where (1) seller on August 2nd orally offered to sell buyer 15,000 tons of fertilizer, which offer was valid until 2:00 p.m. on August 3d, (2) on morning of August 3d, as requested by buyer, seller sent buyer same offer by telex, (3) at 10:00 a.m. on August 3d, after seller had sent and relinquished control over its firm offer by telex, buyer allegedly accepted such offer orally, and (4) buyer thereafter sent seller responsive telex while seller's firm offer was still valid and such telex included certain terms, including terms as to payment and loading, that were not in seller's offer, court held (1) that inclusion in buyer's telex of payment and loading provisions not mentioned in seller's offer was not, under UCC § 2-207(1), necessarily fatal to buyer's alleged acceptance, (2) that under UCC § 2-207(2), term "plus or minus 10 percent at buyer's option," although it might have materially altered the contract, did not by itself invalidate the alleged acceptance, (3) that on the other hand, since UCC § 2-207 does require definite expression of acceptance before its provisions can apply, it might be that buyer's responsive telex, taken as a whole, did not represent agreement between the parties on even price and quantity of seller's fertilizer, and (4) that if a contract had been formed, it was enforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1) because document signed by seller as party to be charged was its firm offer in its August 3d telex and buyer's oral acceptance of that written offer was responsive thereto, insofar as satisfying statute of frauds was concerned, and clearly showed that oral evidence offered by buyer rested on a real transaction (applying New York and Pennsylvania UCC; holding, on cross-motions for summary judgment, that validity of buyer's acceptance depended on issues of fact to be resolved at the trial). Ore & Chem. Corp. v. Howard Butcher Trading Corp., 455 F. Supp. 1150 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

In action by lessee of crane for defendant-lessor's refusal to sell crane to plaintiff under option in oral lease allegedly granting plaintiff right to purchase crane at "any time," where jury could have found (1) that parties had entered into oral lease during telephone conversation; (2) that such lease had actually given plaintiff option to purchase crane during "first six months of lease"; (3) that although written confirmation of oral lease, which plaintiff drafted and sent to defendant, did provide that plaintiff had option to purchase at "any time," defendant never signed confirmation document; and (4) that although defendant's first rental invoice to plaintiff did refer to order number on confirmation document, such reference did not constitute consent by defendant to proposed modification in confirmation document of purchase option in oral lease, plaintiff was not entitled, under UCC § 2-201(2) and Comment 3 thereto, to ruling that defendant was liable as matter of law under provisions of confirmation document, even though defendant did not object to such provisions within ten days, since only effect of defendant's failure to object was to be deprived of defense of statute of frauds, which he had not raised, and plaintiff's burden of proving prior oral lease remained unaffected. Defendant was also not liable as matter of law under UCC § 2-207(2) because of plaintiff's insertion in document confirming oral lease of provision giving plaintiff option to purchase crane at "any time," since jury could have found that such provision constituted material alteration of option-to-purchase provision in oral lease (holding that terms of option were question for jury). Willamette-Western Corp. v. Lowry, 279 Or. 525, 568 P.2d 1339 (1977).

In action by seller against buyer for alleged breach of contract for sale of steel products, petition did not show under UCC § 2-207 "definite and seasonable expression of acceptance" by buyer of terms contained in seller's counter proposal, which was "conditional on assent to the additional or different terms" and which materially altered the terms contained in buyer's proposal, and, thus, petition was insufficient to support default judgment or award of attorney's fees where it was not alleged that counter proposal was ever accepted by buyer and face of exhibit contract showed that place for buyer's acceptance was left blank and unexecuted. Hillson Steel Prods., Inc. v. Wirth Ltd., 538 S.W.2d 162 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

8. —Material alteration; arbitration clauses.

Rule that addition of arbitration clause constitutes per se material alteration of contract merely applies to arbitration clauses traditional common-law principle that term does not become part of contract unless accepted by both parties; accordingly, rule is not superseded by 9 USCA § 2, which provides for validity and enforceability of written arbitration clause "in any...contract," and which, by its terms, does not apply until arbitration clause in question is determined to be part of contract. Supak & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Pervel Indus., Inc., 593 F.2d 135 (4th Cir. N.C. 1979).

The inclusion of an arbitration agreement materially alters a contract between merchants for the sale of goods, and thus an arbitration clause will not become a part of such a contract unless both parties explicitly agree to it, pursuant to the second exception listed in subdivision (2) of section 2-207 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which provides that additional terms in an acceptance or a written confirmation are to be considered merely proposals for addition to a contract for a sale, but that, as between merchants, such terms become part of the contract unless the offer expressly limits acceptance to the terms of the offer, or the terms "materially alter" the offer, or notification of objection to them has already been given or is given within a reasonable time after notice of them is received. Marlene Indus. Corp. v. Carnac Textiles, Inc., 45 N.Y.2d 327, 380 N.E.2d 239 (1978).

Where (1) buyer, after entering into oral contract for sale of fabrics, sent seller purchase order which did not provide for arbitration of contract disputes, (2) seller promptly sent buyer printed acknowledgement of order which contained provision for such arbitration, and (3) buyer, in suit concerning payments owed by it, contended that it had not agreed to arbitration provision, court held (1) that case was governed by UCC § 2-207(2)(b), dealing with additional terms in acceptance or confirmation of a contract, instead of UCC § 2-201(2), since UCC § 2-201(2) deals only with question whether contract exists that is enforceable under statute of frauds and has no application to situation, such as that in instant case, where parties concede that contract does exist and dispute concerns only terms of such contract, and (2) since parties to instant dispute were merchants and arbitration clause was clearly a proposed additional term that materially altered contract within meaning of UCC § 2-207(2)(b), such clause did not become part of contract because of buyer's failure to agree to it expressly. Marlene Indus. Corp. v. Carnac Textiles, Inc., 45 N.Y.2d 327, 380 N.E.2d 239 (1978).

Where oral contract to purchase yarn contained no reference to arbitration of contract disputes, seller's written confirmation of buyer's oral purchase order, which contained an arbitration clause, materially altered contract under UCC § 2-207(2)(b), so as to cause arbitration clause not to become part of contract. Duplan Corp. v. W.B. Davis Hosiery Mill, Inc., 442 F. Supp. 86 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

While it is generally recognized that commercial arbitration has had its principal use and development as means of resolving disputes in garment and fabric industries, and from this it might be inferred that buyers of fabric should not have been surprised or subjected to unnatural hardship upon finding arbitration clause in contract for purchase of fabric, it could not be said that trial court was clearly erroneous in holding that arbitration provision in seller's acknowledgment form was "material alteration" of buyers' purchase order where arbitration was never mentioned during course of negotiations between buyer and seller, there was no arbitration provision in buyers' purchase order, there was no evidence regarding industry practices or past experience, if any, of buyer with respect to such clauses, and buyer's agent testified that he did not read clause; it was not incumbent upon district court to take judicial notice of industry practice. N&D Fashions, Inc. v. DHJ Indus., Inc., 548 F.2d 722 (8th Cir. Minn. 1976).

Where buyer orally contracted through broker to purchase 15 tons of beef, broker sent written confirmation of contract to both buyer and seller, and seller sent buyer document entitled "contract of sale," setting forth essential terms of broker's confirmation, but also containing arbitration clause, arbitration clause was "material alteration" within meaning of UCC § 2-207(2)(b), and did not become part of contract between parties. John Thallon & Co. v. M & N Meat Co., 396 F. Supp. 1239 (E.D.N.Y. 1975).

Buyer of yarn was not obligated to submit contract dispute to arbitration where oral contract (valid and enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) because both parties admitted to it) did not provide for arbitration, and written contract later sent to buyer, which did provide for arbitration, constituted material alteration so that, under UCC § 2-207, arbitration provision did not become part of contract even though buyer failed to object. Frances Hosiery Mills, Inc. v. Burlington Indus., Inc., 285 N.C. 344, 204 S.E.2d 834, 72 A.L.R.3d 466 (1974).

In dispute between candy manufacturer and its supplier of gelatin, supplier's "Sales Acknowledgement Agreement" constituted acceptances of plaintiff's purchase orders, but under UCC § 2-207 arbitration clause contained in acknowledgement agreements was additional term which materially altered offer and as such did not become part of contract. Just Born, Inc. v. Stein, Hall & Co., 59 Pa. D. & C.2d 407 (1971).

9. —Material alteration; disclaimers.

In action for breach of express and implied warranties allegedly attaching to sale of electrostatic precipitator, where (1) buyer needed device to control emission of plastisol fumes at buyer's plant, (2) advertising brochures sent by seller to buyer prior to sale clearly stated that primary function of precipitator was to eliminate oil mist in industrial plants, (3) buyer nevertheless sent seller purchase order for precipitator, intending to use it to handle plastisol fumes, (4) seller's acknowledgment of purchase order contained both disclaimer of all express and implied warranties, except one-year warranty concerning repairs and replacement of defective parts, and also limitation-of-liability clause stating that neither party would be liable for incidental or consequential damages, (5) after installation in buyer's plant, precipitator allowed 90 per cent of particulate matter in plastisol fumes to escape into atmosphere, and (6) buyer paid large fine for causing such pollution and was also forced to purchase another device to abate it, effluent, court held (1) that buyer's purchase order constituted the original offer, (2) that such offer was materially altered under UCC

§ 2-207(2)(b) by seller's acknowledgment of order, which included seller's disclaimer of warranties and limitation-of-liability clause, (3) that buyer, by paying for and accepting precipitator without notifying seller of objection to additional terms contained in warranty disclaimer and limitation-of-liability clause, accepted counteroffer thus proposed in seller's acknowledgment and became bound by all terms of such counteroffer, including disclaimer of warranties, (4) that such disclaimer was sufficient under UCC § 2-316(2), and (5) that it effectively excluded all express and implied warranties respecting precipitator, except warranty concerning repairs and replacement of defective parts, which seller did not breach. Gilbert & Bennett Mfg. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 445 F. Supp. 537 (D. Mass. 1977).

Disclaimer for consequential loss contained in seller's "acknowledgment of order" was sufficiently material to require express conversation between parties over its inclusion or exclusion in contract; and absent such conversation, such disclaimer did not become part of contract. Air Prods. & Chems., Inc. v. Fairbanks Morse, Inc., 58 Wis. 2d 193, 206 N.W.2d 414, 78 A.L.R.3d 619 (1973).

10. —Objection within a reasonable time.

Addition of arbitration clause constitutes per se material alteration of contract; accordingly, provision in confirmation form requiring that any controversy arising out of contract be submitted to binding arbitration was not enforceable, even though recipient of form did not object to provision. Supak & Sons Mfg. Co. v. Pervel Indus., Inc., 593 F.2d 135 (4th Cir. N.C. 1979).

In action by assignee of account of buyer of carpeting for balance due on such account, where (1) buyer ordered carpeting from seller-assignor on discount terms specified by buyer, (2) invoice mailed after goods were shipped contained different discount terms, (3) buyer continued to hold goods, although claiming that it had rejected them, and (4) entire shipment of goods was later destroyed by fire at buyer's warehouse, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-206(1)(b), when seller-assignor shipped goods to buyer, it accepted buyer's offer to purchase goods, (2) that even if UCC § 2-207 superficially applied to alter terms of parties' contract, buyer properly objected under UCC § 2-207(2)(c) to different credit terms on seller-assignor's invoice and such terms did not apply, (3) that contract therefore was on buyer's own credit terms, (4) that there was nothing that buyer could reject as nonconforming, since goods were admittedly satisfactory, (5) that contract had not been breached by either party, (6) that since there had been no breach, risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3) passed to buyer on his receipt of goods, and buyer thus had to bear loss of goods by fire, and (7) that under UCC § 2-210(2), assignment of buyer's account to plaintiff was valid. Trust Co. Bank v. Barrett Distribs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 959 (S.D. Ind. 1978).

Where (1) seller of heat-and-chemical-recovery boiler, in response to buyer's request for revised sale proposal, informed buyer by letter on July 27, 1970 of seller's firm price for boiler and stated that such price was "firm for acceptance by August 15, 1970," (2) seller on August 7, 1970 submitted revised sale proposal to buyer which excluded all express and implied warranties, except one-year warranty for repairs and replacement of parts, and also all liability for consequential damages, (3) buyer on August 12, 1970 sent seller letter of intent to purchase which stated boiler's price, terms of payment, shipping schedule, liquidated damages for breach of contract, and authorization to seller to begin work immediately subject only to cancellation charges, and (4) buyer on February 15, 1971 sent seller formal purchase order which contained certain conditions that were never agreed to by seller, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-204(1), contract to purchase boiler was entered into in August, 1970; (2) that such contract consisted of seller's offer-as contained in seller's letters of July 27, 1970 and August 7, 1970, and seller's revised proposal of August 7, 1970-and buyer's acceptance of seller's offer in buyer's letter of intent on August 12, 1970; (3) that such contract also contained seller's proposed commercial terms and conditions of sale, including seller's disclaimer of warranties, limitation of liability to repairs and replacement of defective parts for one year, and exclusion of liability for consequential damages; and (4) such commercial terms of sale were not modified, under UCC § 2-207(2)(c) by buyer's subsequent inclusion of conflicting commercial terms in buyer's confirming purchase order of February 15, 1971, since seller had objected in writing within reasonable time to buyer's proposed changes. Lincoln Pulp & Paper Co. v. Dravo Corp., 445 F. Supp. 507 (D. Me. 1977).

Where merchants in textile business entered into series of contracts with buyer who placed oral order, seller sending order acknowledgment, and buyer sending purchase order, where seller's order acknowledgment made clear reference to terms on reverse side which included arbitration clause and stated that such terms would be binding unless objected to, and where arbitration clauses were commonly used in textile industry, arbitration clause was not material alteration and was binding on buyer when he failed to object to arbitration clause within reasonable time after receipt of order acknowledgment under UCC § 2-207. Gaynor-Stafford Indus., Inc. v. Mafco Textured Fibers, 52 A.D.2d 481 (1st Dep't 1976).

In view of common practice in textile industry to include arbitration provisions in written confirmations of all sales between merchants, it was incumbent upon textile buyers who received written confirmation to examine it and to make timely objection to allegedly unauthorized arbitration clause contained therein; thus, upon failure of buyers to make such objection within 10 days and upon receipt of goods in accordance with their instructions they were bound to arbitrate when they attempted to cancel balance of contract. C.M.I. Clothesmakers, Inc. v. A.S.K. Knits, Inc., 85 Misc. 2d 462 (1975).

Experienced farmer, who previously sold soy beans, kept abreast of soy bean market, and sold livestock and other farm products from time to time, was "chargeable with the knowledge or skill of merchants" referred to UCC § 2-104(3) in selling his current crop of soy beans; thus, where he offered to sell 1,500 bushels of soy beans for $5 per bushel in cash, and purchaser orally accepted offer and immediately sent him written confirmation, stating terms and standards to be met, and providing that failure to make timely correction was acknowledgement and acceptance of contract as stated, and farmer made no response but sold his soy beans to another, he was liable to purchaser for damages suffered from his breach of the contract. Ohio Grain Co. v. Swisshelm, 40 Ohio App. 2d 203, 318 N.E.2d 428 (1973).

With respect to an option to sell some 30,500 shares of then unregistered corporation stock, such option requiring defendant to purchase or find a purchaser for such number of shares whether or not registered at a fixed price or make up the difference if sold to another for less, defendant being required to buy an additional number of shares at the fixed price as might be necessary to total $800,000, a defect in the notice which could have been readily cured by giving defendant ten additional days to purchase the additional shares necessary to make the required total would not defeat exercise of the option where defendant failed to reject the notice or object to the variance. Steinthal v. Cohn, 22 A.D.2d 644 (1st Dep't 1964), aff'd, 16 N.Y.2d 767, 262 N.Y.S.2d 494, 209 N.E.2d 815 (1965), reargument denied, 16 N.Y.2d 883 (1965).

11. Conduct of parties.

In order to give effect to the expectations of the parties, UCC § 2-207 recognizes that a proposed deal, which in commercial understanding has in fact been closed, is to be treated as a contract. Thus, under UCC § 2-207(1), a definite and seasonable expression of acceptance operates as an acceptance, even though it states terms additional to, or different from, those offered or agreed on. If a contract is recognized under UCC § 2-207(1), the additional terms in the acceptance are treated under UCC § 2-207(2) as proposals for additions to the contract and, as between merchants, become part of the contract unless certain specified conditions render the proposals inoperative. UCC § 2-207(1) provides, however, that if an acceptance is expressly conditioned on the offeror's assent to the new terms and no assent is forthcoming, the entire transaction aborts. In other words, the consequence of a clause that conditions acceptance on assent to the additional or different terms is that, as of the writings, no contract exists. Nevertheless, under UCC § 2-207(3), if the parties' conduct recognizes the existence of a contract for sale by performance, it is sufficient to establish such a contract. In such case, the terms of the contract are those on which the writings of the parties agree, together with supplemental provisions of the code. Uniroyal, Inc. v. Chambers Gasket & Mfg. Co., 177 Ind. App. 508, 380 N.E.2d 571 (1978).

In action for breach of contract for sale of teletypewriters, where there was evidence from which trial court could have inferred under UCC § 2-207(3) that parties had reached agreement with respect to sale of two lots of teletypewriters, and where there was also evidence that no such agreement had been reached, trial court's finding that no agreement had been reached would be affirmed in absence of error of law by court in making such determination. Kleinschmidt Div. of SCM Corp. v. Futuronics Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 972, 363 N.E.2d 701 (1977).

12. —Conflicting terms.

In suit by gasket manufacturer for damages for defective materials furnished by defendant supplier, where (1) supplier's acceptance of manufacturer's purchase order was expressly conditioned on manufacturer's assent to new terms contained in supplier's acceptance, (2) manufacturer did not assent to such terms, and (3) both parties nevertheless performed what they believed to be their contractual obligations, as evidenced by the shipping and acceptance of the goods, conduct of parties was sufficient under UCC § 2-207(3) to establish a contract, and the terms of such contract were those on which writings of parties agreed, as supplemented by provisions of UCC § 2-314 dealing with implied warranty of merchantability. Uniroyal, Inc. v. Chambers Gasket & Mfg. Co., 177 Ind. App. 508, 380 N.E.2d 571 (1978).

Where buyer's written acceptance of offer to sell used steel pipe changed final delivery date from October 15, 1975 to December 15, 1975, but seller's confirmation of buyer's acceptance specified original final delivery date of October 15, 1975, such conflicting dates under UCC § 2-207(1) and (2), and Comment 6 thereto, cancelled each other out. In such case, time for final delivery under UCC § 2-309(1) was reasonable time under circumstances of situation. Southern Idaho Pipe & Steel Co. v. Cal-Cut Pipe & Supply, Inc., 98 Idaho 495, 567 P.2d 1246 (1977), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1056, 98 S. Ct. 1225, 55 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1978).

Where seller's acknowledgment form contained statement that seller's acceptance was expressly conditional on buyer's assent to arbitration provision and where buyer never expressly assented to challenged arbitration term, under UCC § 2-207(1), exchange of forms between seller and buyer did not result in formation of contract under UCC § 2-207(1) and seller's form became counteroffer; although there was no contract, both parties proceeded to performance, seller by delivering and buyer by paying for steel coils, which was sufficient under UCC § 2-207(3) to establish contract based on "conduct by both parties which recognizes the existence of a contract;" however, arbitration clause did not become part of contract since, under UCC § 2-207(3), parties did not agree on arbitration and it would not be brought back into contract as "supplementary term" within meaning of UCC § 2-207(3). C. Itoh & Co. (Am.) v. Jordan Int'l Co., 552 F.2d 1228 (7th Cir. Ill. 1977).

Under UCC 2-207, no contract to arbitrate was made where arbitration clauses contained in buyer's order form and seller's confirmation form were in hopeless conflict, one calling for arbitration under law of New York while other called for arbitration under law of Hong Kong. Lea Tai Textile Co. v. Manning Fabrics, Inc., 411 F. Supp. 1404 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Failure of plaintiff to object to purchase order for fewer containers than had previously been agreed upon did not limit plaintiff to actual out-of-pocket expenses following defendant's repudiation of contract; and reasonable cash value of lost profits on whole contract was proper measure of damages, where plaintiff was not merchant, but manufacturer and contractor, and there was evidence that defendant did not consider contract to be for number of containers specified in purchase order which was prepared by defendant's employee after some containers had already been delivered to plaintiff. LTV

§ 75-2-208. Course of performance or practical construction.

(1) Where the contract for sale involves repeated occasions for performance by either party with knowledge of the nature of the performance and opportunity for objection to it by the other, any course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection shall be relevant to determine the meaning of the agreement.

(2) The express terms of the agreement and any such course of performance, as well as any course of dealing and usage of trade, shall be construed whenever reasonable as consistent with each other; but when such construction is unreasonable, express terms shall control course of performance and course of performance shall control both course of dealing and usage of trade (Section 1-205) [Section 75-1-205].

(3) Subject to the provisions of Section 75-2-209 on modification and waiver, such course of performance shall be relevant to show a waiver or modification of any term inconsistent with such course of performance.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Where in 1969 United States, through Bureau of Indian Affairs ("BIA") on behalf of Indian tribe entered into timber sale contract with lumber company and, although contract was to have been fully performed before December 31, 1969, not all timber subject to contract was taken during 1969 and written extension of contract to December 31, 1970, was executed by lumber company and tribe with approval of BIA, where additional one-year extension was requested by lumber company in December, 1970, tribe agreed to extension and signed agreement was forwarded by BIA to lumber company on or about January 28, 1971, although extension was never executed by lumber company's surety, and where in December, 1971, lumber company requested additional extension of contract to December 31, 1972, but where no logging took place under contract after September 15, 1969, evidence showed that tribe intended to grant and BIA to approve second extension agreement and, thus, under UCC §§ 2-208(3) and 2-209(4) such attempted modification of contract operated as waiver of requirement that lumber company fully perform during one-year extension of contract. In re Humboldt Fir, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 292 (N.D. Cal. 1977), aff'd, 625 F.2d 330 (9th Cir. 1980).

Under UCC § 2-208(2), an ambiguous contract can be construed by reference to course of performance, prior course of dealing, and usage of trade (holding that provision to "import, grade, and compact clay fill $2.75 cu yd." was ambiguous, and that parol evidence was admissible to explain it). Riemer Bros. v. Marlis Constr. Co., 64 Ill. App. 3d 80, 380 N.E.2d 1160 (2d Dist. 1978).

Buyer purchased used truck "as is" and could not raise implied warranty claim against his seller where buyer insisted on closing sale without inspecting truck, although seller repeatedly advised buyer of risk he was taking by purchasing truck without inspection, and where buyer admitted that he purchased truck "as it was"; under UCC § 2-316(3)(c) implied warranty could be excluded or modified by course of performance and fact that exclusion in present case, raised by parties' course of performance, was oral did not vitiate its utility or relevance; under UCC § 2-202(a) parol evidence was admissible to explain and supplement lease-purchase agreement and to establish oral waiver of implied warranties. Robinson v. Branch Moving & Storage Co., 28 N.C. App. 244, 221 S.E.2d 81 (1976).

In action by buyer against seller arising out of nondelivery of wheat under oral sales contract, original oral contract was not rendered unenforceable by UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds, where seller admitted existence of contract. Nor was oral modification of contract as to delivery date due to unavailability of elevator space rendered unenforceable by statute of frauds requirement under UCC §§ 2-209 and 2-201 where pursuant to UCC §§ 1-103 and 2-209, seller waived statute of frauds defense through his course of performance under UCC §§ 2-208 and 1-205 in delivering 36 truckloads of wheat well after original delivery date without making timely objection. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Anderson, 170 Mont. 175, 552 P.2d 63 (1976).

Under UCC § 1-208, conditional vendor of automobile was justified in exercising its "insecurity clause" and accelerating payment of balance due under conditional sales contract where conditional purchaser was charged with illegally transporting controlled substances in violation of state law, thereby subjecting vehicle to possible forfeiture proceedings by state and federal governments. Blaine v. GMAC, 82 Misc. 2d 653 (1975).

Mere fact that lender accepted late payments from automobile purchaser on five different occasions did not operate as waiver of conditional sales contract provisions relating to timeliness of installment payments, in view of contract language to effect that waiver or indulgence of any default or failure to exercise any right under contract would not be construed as agreement to modify terms of instrument or to operate as waiver of any subsequent default, and particularly in view of fact that on one occasion purchaser obtained written 90-day extension of due date of note from lender; contract provision in question was not rendered inoperative by UCC § 2-209(2), even though contract provision was not separately set out and separately executed by borrower, since UCC provision applies only to merchants and there was no evidence in record that automobile purchaser was "merchant" as defined in UCC § 2-104(1). Trust Co. v. Montgomery, 136 Ga. App. 742, 222 S.E.2d 196 (1975).

Shipping instructions issued by buyer calling for delivery of 10,000 tons of fertilizer during first 25 working days of month, freight prepaid, to places other than buyer's plant, did not constitute anticipatory repudiation of contract under which seller agreed to sell and ship, and buyer agreed to buy and receive at its plant, 10,000 tons of fertilizer within eight-month period of time where (1) quantity requested in shipping instructions did not exceed quantity specified in contract; (2) evidence established that prepayment of freight and shipping to place other than buyer's plant were in accord with course of dealing between parties and, even without course of dealing, there was nothing in language of contract repugnant to place or manner of shipment specified in shipping instructions; (3) seller failed to demonstrate that buyer's demanding entire season's supply in one month was commercially unreasonable and not made in good faith as required by UCC § 2-311(1). Neal-Cooper Grain Co. v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., 508 F.2d 283 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

Under contract for delivery of peach brandy during 1968 and 1969 seasons, evidence supported finding that parties mutually terminated executory portion of contract for 1969 delivery, where both exchanged modification proposals eliminating this provision, both repeatedly referred to their "termination agreement", and seller neither offered to make nor made any brandy for buyer from 1969 peach crop. Pirrone v. Monarch Wine Co., 497 F.2d 25 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

Description of cotton covered by contracts for sale of future cotton crop, i. e., purchase of cotton grown on specified approximate acreage, was not so vague as to render contracts unenforceable under Code where it appeared, by contracts in question, that each seller intended to sell his entire cotton crop for the year to buyer. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. York, 379 F. Supp. 1075 (M.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd, 494 F.2d 41 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

In action by car dealer against buyer to recover alleged unpaid balance due on sale of car, dealer was not entitled to offer parole testimony under UCC § 2-202(a) that buyer had agreed to deliver insurance check covering wrecked trade-in vehicle as part of consideration where insurance check was not mentioned in contract and contract was, by its own terms, complete and exclusive statement of terms of agreement; nor did evidence disclose course of dealing and usage of trade as defined by UCC § 2-205 or course of performance as defined by UCC § 2-208 which would permit introduction of such evidence. Noble v. Logan-Dees Chevrolet-Buick, Inc., 293 So. 2d 14 (Miss. 1974).

In action by seller of rebuilt automobile parts against purchaser on open and stated account, trial court's refusal to allow purchaser's witness to testify as to seller's "custom and practice" when goods were returned was not reversible error where, inter alia, court permitted witness to answer as to what was done when goods were returned and this effectively answered question and complied with requirements of UCC § 2-208(1). Curry Motor Co. v. Rebuilt Parts Whse., Inc., 53 Ala. App. 719, 304 So. 2d 221 (Civ. App. 1974).

Where writings of parties to contract for sale of sand failed to supply any definition of term "truck measure," but buyer accepted and paid for large quantity of sand at price which had been computed in accordance with seller's understanding of disputed phrase, buyer's course of performance could be viewed as complete acquiescence in seller's interpretation of phrase "truck measure." Blue Rock Indus. v. Raymond Int'l, Inc., 325 A.2d 66 (Me. 1974).

Express terms of agreement governed when evidence of course of dealing or performance is offered but is inconsistent with agreement. Division of Triple T Serv., Inc. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 720 (1969), aff'd, 34 A.D.2d 618, 311 N.Y.S.2d 961 (2 Dep't 1970), stay denied, 26 N.Y.2d 1020 (1970), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 614 (1970).

Even in the absence of a written agreement with respect to every term of a contract, great weight attaches to the course of dealing of the parties, and where it appears from the conduct of the parties that their mode of calculating price, although not accepted formally by signature of a written instrument, was adhered to by both parties during an extensive course of dealing, during which the purchaser received, accepted, and paid for over $800,000 worth of merchandise, this course of dealing must be held applicable and governing with respect to remaining merchandise which was received, accepted, but not paid for. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 236 F. Supp. 879 (W.D. Pa. 1965), vacated on other grounds, 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

§ 75-2-209. Modification, rescission and waiver.

(1) An agreement modifying a contract within this chapter needs no consideration to be binding.

(2) A signed agreement which excludes modification or rescission except by a signed writing cannot be otherwise modified or rescinded, but except as between merchants such a requirement on a form supplied by the merchant must be separately signed by the other party.

(3) The requirements of the statute of frauds section of this chapter (Section 2-201) [Section 75-2-201] must be satisfied if the contract as modified is within its provisions.

(4) Although an attempt at modification or rescission does not satisfy the requirements of subsection (2) or (3) it can operate as a waiver.

(5) A party who has made a waiver affecting an executory portion of the contract may retract the waiver by reasonable notification received by the other party that strict performance will be required of any term waived, unless the retraction would be unjust in view of a material change of position in reliance on the waiver.

1. In general; scope.

Building subcontract for electrical work under which subcontractor had obligation to furnish exterior unit switchgear was not "contract for sale" within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); thus, UCC § 2-209(1) was inapplicable and alleged modification for which no consideration was given was ineffective. J & R Elec. Div. of J.O. Mory Stores, Inc. v. Skoog Constr. Co., 38 Ill. App. 3d 747, 348 N.E.2d 474 (4th Dist. 1976).

In action by seller against buyer seeking recovery under retail installment sales contract for purchase price of furniture which had been delivered to buyer and destroyed by fire, where contract provided that seller would procure insurance on property but where seller claimed that buyer had orally waived insurance provision, UCC § 2-209(4) relating to oral modification of sales contracts did not apply and contract was governed by Retail Installment Home Solicitation Sales Act. Cook-Davis Furn. Co. v. Duskin, 134 Ga. App. 264, 214 S.E.2d 565 (1975).

Where there has been anticipatory breach of prior agreements, UCC § 2-209 is, by its terms, inapplicable, and UCC § 2-610 becomes applicable to show what alternatives are available to the party aggrieved by an anticipatory breach. Gorge Lumber Co. v. Brazier Lumber Co., 6 Wash. App. 327, 493 P.2d 782 (1972).

2. Purpose.

The purpose of UCC § 2-209(2) is to protect against false claims of the oral modification of written contracts and, in effect, permits the parties to make their own statute of frauds with respect to future modifications. Inwood Knitting Mill Co. v. Budge Mfg. Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 462 (1962).

3. Consideration.

UCC § 2-209(1) unequivocally declares that consideration is not needed to modify a contract, (applying Georgia UCC; affg in part and revg in part on other grounds Fratelli Gardino, S.p.A. v. Caribbean Lumber Co. (1978, SD Ga) 447 F Supp 1337), reh den (CA5 Ga) 590 F.2d 333. Fratelli Gardino, S.p.A. v. Caribbean Lumber Co., 587 F.2d 204 (5th Cir. Ga. 1979), reh'g denied, 590 F.2d 333 (5th Cir. Ga. 1979).

Under UCC § 2-209(1), no consideration was required to support alleged oral waiver or modification of contract to sell cotton that was relied on by seller in buyer's action for damages for cotton that was not delivered under the contract. Barnwell & Hays, Inc. v. Sloan, 564 F.2d 254 (8th Cir. Ark. 1977).

Assuming all the furniture and fixtures situated in a liquor store were goods as defined in §§ 2-105(1) and 2-107(2), buyer's defense that there had been an oral modification, without consideration, of the written sales contract sued on would be a valid one under the provisions of subsec (1) of this section; but if on the trial the proof showed that some of the articles sold were not goods as defined in the UCC, subsec (1) would be inapplicable where the agreement sued on was an entire contract. Lunsford v. Wilson, 113 Ga. App. 602, 149 S.E.2d 515 (1966).

In view of the provision of subsection (1) of the instant section that an "agreement modifying a contract within this Article needs no consideration to be binding", a contention that an oral modification of a contract of purchase and sale was not supported by consideration cannot prevail. Skinner v. Tober Foreign Motors, Inc., 345 Mass. 429, 187 N.E.2d 669 (1963).

Under clause (1) of this section, if parties consent to a modification of a completed agreement, no problem as to consideration arises. Gateway Co. v. Charlotte Theatres, Inc., 297 F.2d 483 (1st Cir. Mass. 1961).

4. Requirements for valid modification.

In action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose of airplane purchased by plaintiff, summary judgment for defendant manufacturer-seller, on ground that defendant's written disclaimer of implied warranties under UCC § 2-316(2) precluded plaintiff's reliance on such warranties, was improperly granted because (1) disclaimer was not shown to have been part of contract of sale when contract was entered into, (2) plaintiff did not sign, as required by UCC § 2-209(1) and (3), any modification agreement accepting a modified warranty scheme, (3) postcard sent by plaintiff to defendant, which did not contain disclaimer or incorporate it by reference and which was also not signed by plaintiff, was ineffective to operate as signed modification of sale contract in accordance with UCC § 2-209(1) and (3), and (4) such postcard also did not operate as waiver by plaintiff of implied warranties sued on. Van Den Broeke v. Bellanca Aircraft Corp., 576 F.2d 582 (5th Cir. 1978).

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of Ferrari sports car of limited availability ordered for buyer from another dealer, where order form and bill of sale identified car by name, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number, and stated that car was "used" car and that buyer had made $15,000 deposit on purchase price of $17,500; where half of such deposit was paid by buyer's personal check (on which was written name of car, year of manufacture, and serial number) and other half by cashier's check issued by bank making loan to buyer, which check was payable to joint order of both buyer and seller and which contained restrictive indorsement requiring "payee" to record first lien on car in bank's favor; where car, when received by seller from other dealer, proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself; and where seller informed buyer that he would try to locate another Ferrari for him, sale was governed by UCC Art 2 and buyer was entitled to maintain replevin action, despite seller's contention that since car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered, since (1) under UCC § 2-209, parties had modified their prior oral agreement concerning sale of "used" car by entering into written agreement, evidenced by purchase order and bill of sale prepared by seller, which identified car sold by make, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number; (2) parties' modification of prior oral agreement also was evidenced by seller's acceptance of buyer's personal check and by negotiation by both seller and buyer of bank cashier's check bearing restrictive indorsement; (3) under UCC § 2-106(2), car delivered to seller conformed to modified contract; (4) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(b) and § 2-606(1)(a) to accept car that did not conform to purchase order, had delivery been tendered by seller; and (5) since car was identified to contract by purchase order and bill of sale which were in buyer's possession, title to car passed to buyer under UCC § 2-401(3)(a), even though seller retained vehicle. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

Where buyer and seller entered into oral contract for sale of cattle, without any disclaimer of warranty, prior to delivery, where buyer signed receipt for cattle upon delivery stating that cattle were in good condition and relieving seller of liability for loss due to "health, shipping fever or death of any cattle" which occurred after delivery, and where, when receipt was presented to buyer by seller for his signature, only few seconds elapsed, buyer signed receipt on hood or fender of truck used to haul last load of cattle, buyer did not read disclaimer clause, words were not conspicuous, seller did not read words to buyer, nor did seller tell buyer to read words before he signed receipt, there was no assent by buyer to subsequent modification of contract for sale. Cambren v. Hubbling, 307 Minn. 168, 238 N.W.2d 622 (1976).

Under contract for delivery of peach brandy during 1968 and 1969 seasons, evidence supported finding that parties mutually terminated executory portion of contract for 1969 delivery, where both exchanged modification proposals eliminating this provision, both repeatedly referred to their "termination agreement", and seller neither offered to make nor made any brandy for buyer from 1969 peach corp. Pirrone v. Monarch Wine Co., 497 F.2d 25 (5th Cir. Ga. 1974).

In action to recover for loss of ore shipment due to sinking of barge, original provision of contract by which title was to pass to buyer at port of discharge was effectively modified under UCC § 2-209 to provide that title would pass upon arrival, where letter between parties was clear written evidence of their agreement to modify contract. U.S. Ore Corp. v. Commercial Transp. Corp., 369 F. Supp. 792 (E.D. La. 1974).

Where conduct was unequivocally referable to oral understanding, modification of written contract by performance was effective. All-Year Golf, Inc. v. Products Investors Corp., 34 A.D.2d 246 (4th Dep't 1970), appeal denied, 27 N.Y.2d 485 (1970).

5. —Good faith.

Finding that extension of date for delivery of soybeans by purchaser was not made in good faith, and thus was ineffective under UCC § 2-209, was supported by substantial evidence where price of soybeans throughout period in question was rising, where severe weather conditions made it apparent that purchaser could not expect seller to fulfill contract quantities, and where seller offered to pay damages on original termination date, despite fact that seller delivered some soybeans to purchaser after original termination date and accepted payment at contract price, which was lower than current market price. Ralston Purina Co. v. McNabb, 381 F. Supp. 181 (W.D. Tenn. 1974).

In action by seller to recover unpaid balance allegedly due from buyer for purchase of 11 truck loads of lumber, where buyer claimed that some lumber was defective and that in compromise and settlement of disputed claim seller had issued credit to buyer for unpaid balance: under UCC § 2-209 seller's agreement to take less than whole amount of liquidated claim was enforceable notwithstanding there was no consideration for seller's promise; seller's letter confirming allowance of credit satisfied requirements of statute of frauds; and there was sufficient evidence to support finding that buyer did not act in bad faith with intent to coerce seller, but acted in good faith, and that there was bona fide controversy between parties as result of buyer's contention that 11 shipments included defective lumber. Ruble Forest Prods., Inc. v. Lancer Mobile Homes of Or., Inc., 269 Or. 315, 524 P.2d 1204 (1974).

6. Express agreement to limit modification.

An instalment purchase agreement which expressly provides that no waiver or change in the contract shall bind the holder of the security interest unless made in writing and signed by one of its officers cannot be orally, or otherwise modified or changed. C.I.T. Corp. v. Jonnet, 419 Pa. 435, 214 A.2d 620 (1965).

7. Waiver.

A "no-waiver" provision of a gas purchase contract did not preclude the seller from waiving the floor pricing provision of the contract by an oral modification agreement, since the word "waiver" was not used as a term of art which would bring the contract out from the operation of § 75-2-209(4), and thus the court properly concluded that the seller waived enforcement of the floor pricing provision, in view of the parties' oral agreement to modify, coupled with the course of performance wherein the seller accepted payments below the floor provisions for 4 ½ years. Exxon Corp. v. Crosby-Mississippi Resources, Ltd., 40 F.3d 1474 (5th Cir. 1995).

A stamped notation on the backs of checks purporting to reserve the seller's rights (§ 75-1-207), which was done in the ordinary course of business, did not preclude a finding that the seller waived enforcement of the floor pricing provision of the parties' contract. Exxon Corp. v. Crosby-Mississippi Resources, Ltd., 40 F.3d 1474 (5th Cir. 1995).

A party may waive the protection of the Statute of Frauds. Canizaro v. Mobile Communications Corp. of Am., 655 So. 2d 25 (Miss. 1995).

In action for balance due on purchase price of 15 miles of used railroad track, (1) defendant buyer's amendment of its original purchase order, which changed dimensions of materials described in original purchase order, supported conclusion that original purchase order was not intended to be final expression of parties, within meaning of UCC § 2-202, concerning quantities and sizes of materials purchased and thus did not bar admission of parol evidence to establish actual terms of agreement; (2) under UCC § 2-209(4), buyer by orally agreeing to pay for 110-pound materials at contract price waived contract requirement that such materials must be 90-pound materials; and (3) as result of buyer's inspection of purchased materials before delivery, there was under UCC § 2-316(3)(b) no implied warranty with regard to defects in materials that buyer's inspection should have disclosed. Durbano Metals, Inc. v. A & K R.R. Materials, Inc., 574 P.2d 1159 (Utah 1978).

Term "waiver" in UCC § 2-209(4) means intentional relinquishment of known right and may be shown by course of conduct or oral statements (holding that parol evidence was admissible to show waiver by seller under UCC § 2-209(4) of rights under written contract for sale of dry-cleaning machine). Lease Fin., Inc. v. Burger, 40 Colo. App. 107, 575 P.2d 857 (1977).

In action arising out of delivery of tile after time specified in contract, buyer waived performance date under UCC § 2-209 and, thus, seller had under UCC § 2-309 reasonable time beyond time specified in contract to perform where buyer acquiesced in repeated delays in performance by seller and elected not to terminate contract for non-performance when delivery was not made by final contract date. United States ex rel. Shankle-Clairday, Inc. v. Crow, 414 F. Supp. 160 (M.D. Tenn. 1976).

If UCC applied to licensing of motion picture for distribution, oral agreement to modify written agreement for distribution of movie could constitute under UCC § 2-209 waiver of "no modification unless in writing" and "entire agreement" clauses in written contract. The Savage Is Loose Co. v. United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 413 F. Supp. 555 (S.D.N.Y. 1976).

In action by buyer against seller arising out of nondelivery of wheat under oral sales contract, original oral contract was not rendered unenforceable by UCC § 2-201 statute of frauds, where seller admitted existence of contract. Nor was oral modification of contract as to delivery date due to unavailability of elevator space rendered unenforceable by statute of frauds requirement under UCC §§ 2-209 and 2-201 where pursuant to UCC §§ 1-103 and 2-209, seller waived statute of frauds defense through his course of performance under UCC §§ 2-208 and 1-205 in delivering 36 truckloads of wheat well after original delivery date without making timely objection. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Anderson, 170 Mont. 175, 552 P.2d 63 (1976).

Mere fact that lender accepted late payments from automobile purchaser on five different occasions did not operate as waiver of conditional sales contract provisions relating to timeliness of installment payments, in view of contract language to effect that waiver or indulgence of any default or failure to exercise any right under contract would not be construed as agreement to modify terms of instrument or to operate as waiver of any subsequent default, and particularly in view of fact that on one occasion purchaser obtained written 90-day extension of due date of note from lender; contract provision in question was not rendered inoperative by UCC § 2-209(2), even though contract provision was not separately set out and separately executed by borrower, since UCC provision applies only to merchants and there was no evidence in record that automobile purchaser was "merchant" as defined in UCC § 2-104(1). Trust Co. v. Montgomery, 136 Ga. App. 742, 222 S.E.2d 196 (1975).

Although UCC § 2-209(3) provides that statute of frauds (UCC § 2-201) must be satisfied if contract as modified is within its provisions, under UCC § 2-209(4) attempted oral modification may operate as waiver of statute of frauds and, once waived, there is no barrier to oral modification of terms of written contract; thus, trial court erred in granting summary judgment for defendant seller on ground that he had effectively terminated written sales agreement pursuant to cancellation provision where there was attempted oral modification of agreement to eliminate seller's right of cancellation which raised material issues of fact as to (1) whether there was waiver of statute of frauds, (2) whether there was oral modification of agreement removing seller's right of cancellation, and (3) whether seller's purported retraction of waiver pursuant to UCC § 2-209(5) met notice requirements. Double-E Sportswear Corp. v. Girard Trust Bank, 488 F.2d 292 (3d Cir. Pa. 1973).

Although attempt at modification does not satisfy statute of frauds, if contract as modified is within its provisions, it can operate as waiver. Ryder Truck Lines v. Scott, 129 Ga. App. 871, 201 S.E.2d 672 (1973).

Where in 1969 United States, through Bureau of Indian Affairs ("BIA") on behalf of Indian tribe entered into timber sale contract with lumber company and, although contract was to have been fully performed before December 31, 1969, not all timber subject to contract was taken during 1969 and written extension of contract to December 31, 1970, was executed by lumber company and tribe with approval of BIA, where additional one-year extension was requested by lumber company in December, 1970, tribe agreed to extension and signed agreement was forwarded by BIA to lumber company on or about January 28, 1971, although extension was never executed by lumber company's surety, and where in December, 1971, lumber company requested additional extension of contract to December 31, 1972, but where no logging took place under contract after September 15, 1969: (1) Evidence showed that tribe intended to grant and BIA to approve second extension agreement and, thus, under UCC §§ 2-208(3) and 2-209(4) such attempted modification of contract operated as waiver of requirement that lumber company fully perform during one-year extension of contract; (2) however, waiver of performance to December 31, 1970, did not operate as waiver of performance for 1971 and, under UCC §§ 2-209(5) and 2-609, letters from BIA to lumber company constituted sufficient notice that strict performance of contract would be required, upon receipt of which, lumber company was obligated to provide adequate assurance of performance. In re Humboldt Fir, Inc., N.D.Cal.1977, 426 F. Supp. 292, affirmed 625 F.2d 330.

Although a modification is not effective because oral, it may nevertheless be effective as a waiver. Inwood Knitting Mill Co. v. Budge Mfg. Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 462 (1962).

In view of the fact that UCC § 2-209(4) has not been judicially construed, judgment will not be entered on demurrer because the case is not clear due to the uncertainty as to the exact meaning of that section. Inwood Knitting Mill Co. v. Budge Mfg. Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 462 (1962).

8. Particular applications.

Under written contract for sale of machinery, executed oral modification evidenced by written memorandum which provided that payments would be changed from specified monthly amount to time-use amount with first payments made on open account, did not constitute novation and was not sufficient to convert seller-buyer relationship to one of lessor-lessee. Davies Mach. Co. v. Pine Mt. Club, Inc., 39 Cal. App. 3d 18 (5th Dist. 1974).

Providing of payment book amounted only to convenience to buyer and was not required under title retention contract in question, and since there was no evidence of excusal of payment, omission of coupons from payment book mailed to buyer at his request after original book was lost would not amount to such excusal and alteration of terms of contract. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Tremer, 48 Ala. App. 675, 267 So. 2d 467 (Civ. App. 1972).

§ 75-2-210. Delegation of performance; assignment of rights.

(1) A party may perform his duty through a delegate unless otherwise agreed or unless the other party has a substantial interest in having his original promisor perform or control the acts required by the contract. No delegation of performance relieves the party delegating of any duty to perform or any liability for breach.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in Section 75-9-406, unless otherwise agreed, all rights of either seller or buyer can be assigned except where the assignment would materially change the duty of the other party, or increase materially the burden or risk imposed on him by his contract, or impair materially his chance of obtaining return performance. A right to damages for breach of the whole contract or a right arising out of the assignor's due performance of his entire obligation can be assigned despite agreement otherwise.

(3) The creation, attachment, perfection, or enforcement of a security interest in the seller's interest under a contract is not a transfer that materially changes the duty of or increases materially the burden or risk imposed on the buyer or impairs materially the buyer's chance of obtaining return performance within the purview of subsection (2) unless, and then only to the extent that, enforcement actually results in a delegation of material performance of the seller. Even in that event, the creation, attachment, perfection, and enforcement of the security interest remain effective, but (i) the seller is liable to the buyer for damages caused by the delegation to the extent that the damages could not reasonably be prevented by the buyer, and (ii) a court having jurisdiction may grant other appropriate relief, including cancellation of the contract for sale or an injunction against enforcement of the security interest or consummation of the enforcement.

(4) Unless the circumstances indicate the contrary a prohibition of assignment of "the contract" is to be construed as barring only the delegation to the assignee of the assignor's performance.

(5) An assignment of "the contract" or of "all my rights under the contract" or an assignment in similar general terms is an assignment of rights and unless the language or the circumstances (as in an assignment for security) indicate the contrary, it is a delegation of performance of the duties of the assignor and its acceptance by the assignee constitutes a promise by him to perform those duties. This promise is enforceable by either the assignor or the other party to the original contract.

(6) The other party may treat any assignment which delegates performance as creating reasonable grounds for insecurity and may without prejudice to his rights against the assignor demand assurances from the assignee (Section 75-2-609).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action by assignee of account of buyer of carpeting for balance due on such account, where (1) buyer ordered carpeting from seller-assignor on discount terms specified by buyer, (2) invoice mailed after goods were shipped contained different discount terms, (3) buyer continued to hold goods, although claiming that it had rejected them, and (4) entire shipment of goods was later destroyed by fire at buyer's warehouse, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-206(1)(b), when seller-assignor shipped goods to buyer, it accepted buyer's offer to purchase goods, (2) that even if UCC § 2-207 superficially applied to alter terms of parties' contract, buyer properly objected under UCC § 2-207(2)(c) to different credit terms on seller-assignor's invoice and such terms did not apply, (3) that contract therefore was on buyer's own credit terms, (4) that there was nothing that buyer could reject as nonconforming, since goods were admittedly satisfactory, (5) that contract had not been breached by either party, (6) that since there had been no breach, risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3) passed to buyer on his receipt of goods, and buyer thus had to bear loss of goods by fire, and (7) that under UCC § 2-210(2), assignment of buyer's account to plaintiff was valid. Trust Co. Bank v. Barrett Distribs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 959 (S.D. Ind. 1978).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of merchantability of houseboat that defendant boat company contracted to build for plaintiffs, defendant's subsequent assignment of contract to another boat company before completing houseboat's construction did not, where defendant failed to establish that novation had taken place among the parties, relieve defendant under UCC § 2-210(1) of its duty to perform contract or its liability for nonperformance. Tarter v. MonArk Boat Co., 430 F. Supp. 1290 (E.D. Mo. 1977), aff'd, 574 F.2d 984 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

Bank to which seller had assigned installment contract for purchase of used car, and not seller, was real party in interest and proper party to sue for balance owed on car, since (1) UCC § 2-210(2) provides that contract can be assigned by buyer or seller unless otherwise agreed, (2) contract in suit did not prohibit assignment by seller, and (3) assignment was supported by valid consideration. First Nat'l Bank v. Schrader, 176 Ind. App. 391, 375 N.E.2d 1124 (1st Dist. 1978).

Provisions found in UCC §§ 2-210(2) and 9-318(4), nullifying effects of anti-assignment provisions, had no application to contract for installation of heating and air conditioning systems in apartment complex which contained clause prohibiting assignment of contract “or any part thereof” without written consent of other party, since contract was not one for sale of goods but was contract for services and labor with incidental furnishing of equipment and materials. Mingledorff's, Inc. v. Hicks, 133 Ga. App. 27, 209 S.E.2d 661 (1974).

In an action by a Massachusetts collecting bank against a Puerto Rican firm with offices in New York, which had bought yarn from an Italian corporation, and its New York guarantor, to recover the amount credited to the depository bank in Italy upon receipt of a check drawn on a Tennessee bank, which check was lost after the collecting bank had taken steps to present the check for payment to the Tennessee bank, it was held that since the Puerto Rican firm because of the non-payment of the check never discharged its obligation under its contract of sale with the Italian firm, the Italian firm had a cause of action against the Puerto Rican firm and its guarantor, which cause of action was assignable to the collecting bank. National Shawmut Bank v. International Yarn Corp., 322 F. Supp. 116 (S.D.N.Y. 1970).

Failure of consideration can be raised as a defense either against the assignee or assignor of a lease or sales contract, in the absence of a specific waiver of such defense on the part of the buyer or lessor.

Noblett v. GECC, 400 F.2d 442 (10th Cir. Okla. 1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 935, 89 S. Ct. 295, 21 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1968).

The mere transfer by a buyer of his rights in merchandise purchased under an instalment purchase contract does not under the provisions of subdivision (1) of this section, relieve him of his liability to pay. C.I.T. Corp. v. Jonnet, 419 Pa. 435, 214 A.2d 620 (1965).

Subsection (4) of the instant section was referred to as not governing an assignment made before the effective date of the instant section, in a case in which it was held that whether the assignee of a contract undertook to perform the duties of the assignor under the contract depended, in the absence of an express contract provision, upon an interpretation of the entire assignment read in the context of the circumstances. Chatham Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Angier Chem. Co., 347 Mass. 208, 196 N.E.2d 852, 141 U.S.P.Q. 145 (1964).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In seller's action for buyer's breach of contract to buy specified quantity of potatoes suitable for processing into potato chips, in which potatoes were to be delivered to buy "as needed," trial court correctly concluded (1) that contract, pursuant to UCC § 1-102(3), varied normal rules for tender contained in Uniform Commercial Code in that contract required buyer to request delivery of quantity of potatoes, which buyer at no time did, before seller would become obligated to tender delivery, and (2) that as a result, seller's failure to tender delivery of any potatoes at all during entire contract period did not relieve buyer of liability for payment under UCC § 2-301 and § 2-507(1) (also holding that even if potatoes in seller's warehouse were not suitable for buyer's use throughout entire contract period, buyer still breached contract by not requesting any deliveries at all during such period). Halverson v. Pet, Inc., 261 N.W.2d 887 (N.D. 1978).

Seller neither tendered delivery nor delivered concrete forms to buyer pursuant to UCC §§ 1-201(14), 2-301 and 2-503(1), and seller breached express warranties under UCC § 2-313 that forms were free from encumbrance and that seller would warrant and defend against demands of all other persons, where third party claimed storage lien on forms, refused to allow buyer to take possession, and seller was unsuccessful in securing release from third party of his claimed lien. Goosic Constr. Co. v. City Nat'l Bank, 196 Neb. 86, 241 N.W.2d 521 (1976).

In an auction sale, particularly of farm crops, a tender of the goods is not a condition precedent to the obligation to pay. Diefenbach v. Gorney, 93 Ill. App. 2d 51, 234 N.E.2d 813 (3d Dist. 1968).

Where supplier in New York proved it shipped goods to a manufacturer in Louisville, and manufacturer did not affirmatively plead that the goods were not received, supplier had fulfilled its duty and established a prima facie case of debt. Permalum Window & Awning Mfg. Co. v. Permalum Window Mfg. Corp., 412 S.W.2d 863 (Ky. 1967).

The cost of meals which an airline furnishes its passengers during flight being included in the cost of the ticket, a sale of the meals occurs when and where the ticket is purchased, and when the ticket is purchased in Georgia a sale occurs in that state, regardless of where the aircraft is when the meal is served. Undercofler v. Eastern Air Lines, 221 Ga. 824, 147 S.E.2d 436 (1966).

The fact that the actual delivery of meals furnished by an airline to its in-flight passengers does not occur until later does not prevent perfection of its sale of the meals at the time of the purchase of the passenger ticket, for the passenger at the time the ticket is purchased impliedly consents for delivery of the meal to be made during the flight. Undercofler v. Eastern Air Lines, 221 Ga. 824, 147 S.E.2d 436 (1966).

Where a seller had agreed for a certain price to sell, deliver, and install a machine, and to provide an instructor to show the purchaser the way to operate the machine, the seller was not entitled to recover the balance of the purchase price of the machine before its delivery and installation, and the supplying of the instructor. Boehnke v. C.H. Babb Co., 38 Mass. App. Dec. 33 (1967).

Where a seller failed to perform his contract of sale at the time specified in the agreement of sale, the buyer became entitled to a return of the deposit given at the time the contract was made. Boehnke v. C.H. Babb Co., 38 Mass. App. Dec. 33 (1967).

§ 75-2-302. Unconscionable contract or clause.

(1) If the court as a matter of law finds the contract or any clause of the contract to have been unconscionable at the time it was made the court may refuse to enforce the contract, or it may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable clause, or it may so limit the application of any unconscionable clause as to avoid any unconscionable result.

(2) When it is claimed or appears to the court that the contract or any clause thereof may be unconscionable the parties shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity to present evidence as to its commercial setting, purpose and effect to aid the court in making the determination.

29. Other matters as unconscionable.

A. In general.

1. Generally.

The Uniform Commercial Code merely codified, in UCC § 2-302(1), the doctrine of unconscionability which was used by the common-law courts to invalidate contracts under certain circumstances. At common law, an unconscionable contract was one that "no man in his senses and not under delusion would make on the one hand," and one that "no honest and fair man would accept on the other." In re Estate of Friedman, 64 A.D.2d 70 (2d Dep't 1978).

A reading of the Uniform Commercial Code and many cases discussing unconscionability indicates that there never was an intent on the part of the legislature to give a definition of the term unconscionable, since to do so would limit its application. Nu Dimensions Figure Salons v. Becerra, 73 Misc. 2d 140 (1973).

The purpose of UCC Sec 2-302 is to extend equity practice to the field of the law merchant. Fairfield Lease Corp. v. Colonial Aluminum Sales, Inc., 3 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 858 (1966, NY Sup).

2. Scope.

UCC § 2-302, which deals with unconscionable contracts or clauses therein, is part of the Uniform Commercial Code and has no relevancy to proceedings for dissolution of a marriage. Wilkerson v. Wilkerson, 555 S.W.2d 689 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Statutory standards to avoid unconscionability in the law of contracts is set forth in article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code and is restricted to sales contracts. Wasserbauer v. Marine Midland Bank, 92 Misc. 2d 388 (1977).

UCC § 2-302 did not apply to provision in commodities signature card permitting liquidation of customer's account without demand or notice since commodities signature card standing alone was not contract for sale of "goods" within meaning of UCC §§ 2-102 and 2-105(1). Geldermann & Co. v. Lane Processing, Inc., 527 F.2d 571 (8th Cir. Ark. 1975).

"Exclusive right to sell" contract giving realtor exclusive right to sell property for 30 days from date of contract and commission on sale of property by vendor for 90 days thereafter, if buyer's attention had been called to property during 30-day period, was not unconscionable. Kaye v. Coughlin, 443 S.W.2d 612 (Civ. App. 1969).

The statute is intended to encompass the price term of an agreement. Jones v. Star Credit Corp., 59 Misc. 2d 189 (1969).

In view of the expressed exclusion of security transaction made by § 2-201, the unconscionability provision of Article 2 does not apply to a secured transaction. In re Advance Printing & Litho Co., 277 F. Supp. 101 (W.D. Pa. 1967), aff'd, 387 F.2d 952 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

Contract executed prior to enactment of U.C.C.—That this section was enacted subsequent to the execution of a contract which the court feels may be unconscionable does not mean that the common law of the jurisdiction was otherwise prior to the time of its enactment, nor does it preclude the court from adopting a similar rule in the exercise of its powers to develop the common law. Williams v.

Walker-Thomas Furn. Co., 350 F.2d 445, 18 A.L.R.3d 1297, 121 U.S. App. D.C. 315 (1965).

3. —Bills and notes.

Prohibition of unconscionability in § 75-2-302 literally applies only to transactions in goods, not to secured transactions. OMP v. Security Pac. Bus. Fin., Inc., 716 F. Supp. 239 (N.D. Miss. 1988).

Statutory standards to avoid unconscionability in the law of contracts are set forth in UCC Art 2 and are restricted to sales contracts (action attacking formula used by banks to recover attorneys' fees in cases involving default judgment obtained on promissory note or other instrument evidencing individual loan). Wasserbauer v. Marine Midland Bank, 92 Misc. 2d 388 (1977).

In addition to fact that execution of promissory note is not covered by Article 2 of UCC, creditor's conduct in attempting to collect 4-year-old debt represented by note was not unreasonable or unconscionable under UCC § 2-302. American Express Co. v. Brown, 392 F. Supp. 235 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Unconscionability clause of UCC § 2-302 applies to transactions in goods, and was therefore inapplicable to agreement guaranteeing payment on promissory note. Bankers Trust Co. v. Walker, 49 A.D.2d 670 (4th Dep't 1975).

Contractual term asking guaranty of faithful performance of undertakings of principal obligor before promissory notes would be taken, held not unconscionable. Blount v. Westinghouse Credit Corp., 432 S.W.2d 549 (Tex. Civ. App. 1968).

4. —Damages.

UCC § 2-302 merely gives court right of refusal to enforce unconscionable contract; it makes no provision for damages and none may be recovered thereunder. Thus, although it was unconscionable for seller of jade carvings to charge buyers $67,000 for carvings worth only $14,750, buyers could not assert cause of action for damages against seller. However, seller's counterclaim for $18,000, unpaid balance of purchase price represented by two post-dated checks, would be dismissed since court would not enforce contract by requiring buyers to pay balance of purchase price which was unconscionable. Vom Lehn v. Astor Art Galleries, Ltd., 86 Misc.2d 1 (1976).

This section does not provide any damages to a party who enters into an unconscionable contract. This section gives the court the power to refuse to enforce such an unconscionable contract or it may enforce the remainder of the contract without the unconscionable clause or it may so limit the application of any unconscionable clause as to avoid any unconscionable result. Pearson v. National Budgeting Sys., 31 A.D.2d 792 (1st Dep't 1969).

B. Procedure.

5. In general; question of law or fact.

Issue of unconscionability presented question of law for court, not question of fact for jury. Schroeder v. Fageol Motors, Inc., 86 Wash. 2d 256, 544 P.2d 20 (1975).

UCC § 2-719(3), by its use of work "unconscionable," incorporates standards set forth in UCC § 2-302(1) and (2), and finding of unconscionability was matter of law to be determined by court, without jury, although there might be taking of evidence under UCC § 2-302(2) as to contract's commercial setting, purpose, and effect. Monsanto Co. v. Alden Leeds, Inc., 130 N.J. Super. 245, 326 A.2d 90 (1974).

Unconscionability is question of law for court to decide in light of background and commercial setting of contractual provision being considered. R.C. Craig, Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 1066 (S.D. Ga. 1972).

6. [Reserved for future use].

7. Reasonable opportunity to present evidence.

In every trial when unconscionability of contractual provision is viable issue, either party should be permitted right granted by UCC § 2-302(2), reasonable opportunity to present evidence as to commercial setting, purpose and effect of contract or any clause thereof to aid court in making determination as to unconscionability. C & J Fertilizer, Inc. v. Allied Mut. Ins. Co., 227 N.W.2d 169, 86 A.L.R.3d 839 (Iowa 1975).

Trial court erred in declaring output-requirements contract between tenant of farmland and buyer of cotton unconscionable, and therefore void as against one-fourth interest in cotton which landlord held as rent, since UCC § 2-306(1) expressly authorized such contracts; moreover, § 2-302 required trial court to provide parties opportunity to present evidence on issue of unconscionability prior to declaring clause unconscionable. Darden v. Ogle, 293 Ala. 699, 310 So. 2d 182 (1975).

In action to enforce contracts for advance sale of cotton fiber, motion to dismiss on ground that contracts were unconscionable on their faces was dismissed where statute expressly provided for evidentiary hearing before contract, or some clause thereof, could be found unconscionable under UCC § 2-302. Cone Mills Corp. v. Hurdle, 369 F. Supp. 426 (N.D. Miss. 1974).

UCC § 2-719(3), by its use of word "unconscionable," incorporates standards set forth in UCC § 2-302(1) and (2), and finding of unconscionability was matter of law to be determined by court, without jury, although there might be taking of evidence under UCC § 2-302(2) as to contract's commercial setting, purpose, and effect. Monsanto Co. v. Alden Leeds, Inc., 130 N.J. Super. 245, 326 A.2d 90 (1974).

A contract not unconscionable on its face may in fact be unconscionable in light of its commercial setting, purpose and effect; a hearing must be held, in this case, to make this fact determination. Central Ohio Co-op. Milk Producers v. Rowland, 29 Ohio App. 2d 236, 281 N.E.2d 42 (1972).

Court's determination of issue of unconscionability of limiting recovery to purchase price of seeds could not be made without hearing. Zicari v. Joseph Harris Co., 33 A.D.2d 17 (4th Dep't 1969), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 610 (1970).

Courts have the power to determine the issue of unconscionability and may limit the application of a clause found to be so in order to avoid an unconscionable result, and such a hearing is mandatory rather than discretionary once the court has initially accepted a possibility of unconscionability. Sinkoff Beverage Co. v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 51 Misc. 2d 446 (1966).

Where at the trial the parties were not afforded an opportunity to present evidence as required by paragraph (2) of this section, the judgment of the trial court for the defendant, on the ground that the provision of a truck rental agreement which made the lessee absolutely liable for all loss regardless of fault, was unconscionable, must be vacated and a new trial ordered. E.F. Lynch, Inc. v. Piccirilli, 28 Mass. App. Dec. 49, 5 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 830 (1964).

8. —Summary judgment precluded.

In light of UCC § 2-302(2), providing that parties shall be given an opportunity to present evidence as to whether a contract is unconscionable, a court is not authorized to dispose of an issue concerning the alleged unconscionability of a contract under the rules governing summary judgments (stating that since disclaimer clauses in purely commercial transactions are prima facie conscionable, burden of establishing that such a clause is unconscionable lies on party attacking it). Butcher v. Garrett-Enumclaw Co., 20 Wash. App. 361, 581 P.2d 1352 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1004 (1978).

In action brought by buyer of automobile against manufacturer for loss of automobile by fire allegedly caused by defective fuel line, summary judgment determination that disclaimer clause in Basic Warranty excluding liability for loss by fire was not unconscionable was improper; finding as to unconscionability under UCC § 2-302 must be by hearing affording parties reasonable opportunity to present evidence as to commercial setting, purpose, and effect of contract or clause thereof to aid court in making determination. Haugen v. Ford Motor Co., 219 N.W.2d 462 (N.D. 1974).

Buyer who paid $939.75 plus a credit service charge of $242.47 for a 1959 Buick and expended $570 repairing defects existing at the time of purchase, and who contended as a defense to an action on the sales contract that the price was unconscionable, was entitled to a reasonable opportunity, as provided by subsec (2), to present evidence to aid the court in determining the issue of unconscionability, and plaintiff's motion for summary judgment was accordingly denied. Central Budget Corp. v. Sanchez, 53 Misc. 2d 620 (1967).

9. —Summary judgment not precluded.

UCC § 2-302(2) relating to unconscionability does not preclude granting of summary judgment. Block v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 286 A.2d 228, 63 A.L.R.3d 1 (D.C. 1972).

10. Appellate review.

Where trial court's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and memorandum did not find that contract for sale of potatoes was oppressive and unconscionable, appellate court would not conclude from mere comment made by trial court at time of hearing that such contract was unconscionable. Halverson v. Pet, Inc., 261 N.W.2d 887 (N.D. 1978).

Where contract for sale of popcorn provided that buyer was to pay for shipments of popcorn when delivered and seller repudiated contract after delivering two shipments to buyer's processing plant (for which shipments seller did not demand on-the-spot payment and buyer did not offer to pay at such place, since it customarily paid its obligations from its business office in another city), seller breached his obligation of good faith under UCC § 1-203 in performance of contract, as "good faith" is defined by UCC § 1-201(19), by failing to demand payment after delivery of each shipment and by hastily reselling undelivered part of popcorn crop to another buyer at nearly twice the contract price; trial court, in finding absence of good faith by seller, did not err in employing unconscionability concept of UCC § 2-302 in interpreting contract, since court's statement as to unconscionability was only dictum. Baker v. Ratzlaff, 1 Kan. App. 2d 285, 564 P.2d 153 (1977).

C. Unconscionability of Particular Matters.

11. In general.

Provisions of contract for sale of certain machinery were not unconscionable, since they were provisions which Code itself specifically permitted. Avery v. Aladdin Prods. Div., Nat'l Serv. Indus., Inc., 128 Ga. App. 266, 196 S.E.2d 357 (1973).

12. Bargaining position.

Viewed as a contract of sale rather than a consignment, a contract between the widow of an artist and an art dealer is unconscionable on its face, where, by its terms, she made an absolute conveyance to him of title to more than 300 works of the artist, in return for which she received neither the payment of a purchase price at the time of the contract nor the right to receive a fixed price within a definite time in the future, but only a promise by him to use his best efforts to sell the art works and to give her 50% of the proceeds if and when sales were effected, with complete control over the timing of any future sales being placed in his hands; in addition to the substantive unconscionability of this contract when viewed as a contract of sale, there are elements of procedural unconscionability attendant upon its execution, including the age of the artist's widow at the time, her limited formal education, her lack of business experience, the fact that she was not represented by counsel and, in contrast, the art dealer's experience and the fact that he was represented by his own attorney, who drafted the agreement and explained it to the widow. Matter of Friedman (2 Dept. 1978) 64 A.D.2d 70, 407 N.Y.S.2d 999 In re Estate of Friedman, 64 A.D.2d 70 (2d Dep't 1978).

In action arising out of grain contract, clause which permitted buyer to extend time of shipment if shipments were not made as otherwise specified in contract was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302, where seller and buyer were both merchants, oppressive tactics were not shown, it was not shown that inequality of bargaining positions resulted in seller being compelled to accept extension clause, seller was familiar with such clauses which were normally employed in the grain business, and clause was not extreme under mores and business practices considered in light of needs of grain business. Jamestown Farmers Elevator, Inc. v. General Mills, Inc., 413 F. Supp. 764 (D.N.D. 1976), rev'd on other grounds, 552 F.2d 1285 (8th Cir. N.D. 1977).

In action by assignee of computer-equipment lease for rent due under lease, (1) although applicable provisions of UCC Article 2 should be applied to equipment leases, entire article would not be applied on theory that equipment lease is transaction in goods under UCC § 2-102; (2)

lease in issue was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302, since it conferred rights and imposed duties on both lessor and lessee, and parties to lease had virtually equal bargaining power; (3) language in lease disclaiming implied warranties of merchantability and fitness were sufficiently conspicuous under UCC § 2-316(2); and (4) since defense that plaintiff was not assignee in good faith within meaning of UCC § 9-206(1) presented fact issue that could not be resolved solely as issue of law, trial court erred in dismissing defendant's amended answer on ground that it raised insufficient defense as matter of law. Walter E. Heller & Co. v. Convalescent Home of First Church of Deliverance, 49 Ill. App. 3d 213, 365 N.E.2d 1285 (1st Dist. 1977).

Where railroad car went off end of siding track and damaged storage bins that grain company maintained on land leased from railroad, indemnity clause in lease agreement saving railroad harmless from liability for damage to grain company was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 given business experience of grain company and comparative simplicity of contract terms, even though railroad possessed superior bargaining power. Lamoille Grain Co. v. St. Johnsbury & L.C.R.R., 135 Vt. 5, 369 A.2d 1389 (1976).

Provision in contract for sale of building supplies requiring payment of attorney's fees liquidated in amount of 30 per cent of amount recovered on breach was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 where parties were commercial entities dealing at arm's length with relative equality of bargaining power, where buyer did not show that contract terms were unfair or nonnegotiable or that it would have been unable to obtain building supplies from another seller without being subject to provision for attorney's fees, and where buyer knew of attorney's fees provision. Equitable Lumber Corp. v. IPA Land Dev. Corp., 38 N.Y.2d 516, 344 N.E.2d 391, 98 A.L.R.3d 577 (1976).

The fact that one party makes a large profit and that the other runs risks does not make the contract unconscionable where the contract was freely entered into, after much negotiation, and the parties had equal bargaining power, and the contract was not a contract of adhesion. Vitex Mfg. Corp. v. Caribtex Corp., 377 F.2d 795 (3d Cir. V.I. 1967).

13. —Adhesion contracts.

Contract for sale of gas burner and related equipment was unconscionable and unenforceable under UCC § 2-302 where seller induced buyer to enter agreement through use of high-pressure sale tactics, and where seller did not provide Spanish-speaking interpreter to explain matters to buyers, who spoke and wrote only Spanish. Brooklyn Union Gas Co. v. Jimenez, 82 Misc. 2d 948 (1975).

Where sellers entered into three grain contracts calling for delivery of wheat and durum to elevator company on or before April 30 and May 15, 1973, where each contract provided in part that in case of default in delivery of grain, sellers agreed to pay elevator company "as liquidated damages" difference between contract price and market price on specified date (i.e., April 30, May 15, and May 30, respectively), where, pursuant to contract, deliveries of part of grain called for were made and accepted periodically from January through July 11, 1973, but where on July 12 sellers notified elevator company they would make no further deliveries pursuant to contracts, elevator company was bound by liquidated damages clause in contract: (1) liquidated damage clause, without evidence to contrary, was so inconsistent with any other damage remedy as to require conclusion that it contemplated exclusiveness within meaning of UCC § 2-719(1)(b); (2) furthermore, clause would not be held unconscionable particularly where contract was one of "adhesion" and challenger was drafter of contract. Ray Farmers Union Elevator Co. v. Weyrauch, 238 N.W.2d 47 (N.D. 1975).

Contract for tuition and fees for a "data processing technician course" was unconscionable, where defendant enrollee had an inferior education and limited comprehension of the English language, and where plaintiff school engaged in deceptive practices, including an unproven "aptitude" test to determine eligibility, giving passing grades to virtually all applicants, and encouraging defendant to continue the course despite failing grades. Albert

Merrill Sch. v. Godoy, 78 Misc. 2d 647 (1974).

Lack of equality between bargaining parties (car buyer had limited command of English language), contract clauses under which buyer unwittingly and unknowingly waived both warranty of merchantability and warranty of fitness for purpose, and defective condition of auto, are sufficient to render contract unconscionable and unenforceable as between buyer and seller. Jefferson Credit Corp. v. Marciano, 60 Misc. 2d 138 (1969).

14. Consent provisions.

Provision in loan agreement providing that borrower would not incur other indebtedness for borrowed money without consent of lender was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302, since this § 2-302 is applicable only to sales transactions. Nor was clause a breach of obligation of good faith imposed by UCC § 1-203 where loan agreement was negotiated at arm's length between sophisticated commercial parties. Interstate Sec. Police, Inc. v. Citizens & S. Emory Bank, 237 Ga. 37, 226 S.E.2d 583 (1976).

Provision of security agreement requiring that debtor would not sell collateral without prior written consent of secured party was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 where debtor was required to make $10,000 cash payment on outstanding principal from original sale as condition of consent to resale. O'Brien v. Larson, 11 Wash. App. 52, 521 P.2d 228 (1974).

15. Disclaimer of warranties; unconscionable.

Where operator of picnic grounds leased two incinerators from manufacturer under lease providing for 60 monthly rental payments and option to lessee to purchase units at end of lease by payment of additional sum; where original lease was hastily replaced by second lease signed by lessee at lessor's insistence because original lease was "no good"; and where second lease contained unqualified disclaimer in bold print of all express and implied warranties concerning such equipment, (1) transaction, although made in form of lease, was actually sale that caused rights of parties to be governed by UCC Art 2; and (2) in view of circumstances under which second lease was entered into and total failure of both units to function from time they were installed on lessee's premises, disclaimer provision in second lease was unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 and could not be enforced by lessor. Industrialease Automated & Scientific Equip. Corp. v. R.M.E. Enters., Inc., 58 A.D.2d 482 (2d Dep't 1977).

In action by purchaser of truck against seller for damages resulting from seller's failure to properly effectuate repairs in accordance with its warranty, where there was exclusionary clause contained in warranty, which stated in normal size print that seller was not liable for special or consequential damages, but where there were no discussions nor explicit negotiations between seller and buyer regarding limitations or disclaimers of liability and where clause was not conspicuous: (1) by its use of word "unconscionable," UCC § 2-719(3) conditions validity of exclusionary clause on one factor, the standards set forth in UCC § 2-302, and clause would be conscionable, in spite of lack of "negotiations" or its "inconspicuousness," if buyer and seller, through prior contracts had established consistently adhered to policy of excluding consequential damages, or if it was recognized practice within trade to exclude consequential damages; (2) issue of unconscionability presented question of law for court, not issue of fact for jury, and since exclusionary clauses in clearly commercial transactions were prima facie conscionable, burden of establishing that clause was unconscionable was upon seller. Schroeder v. Fageol Motors, Inc., 86 Wash. 2d 256, 544 P.2d 20 (1975).

Where strict language of express warranty and disclaimer placed purchaser of automobile in position such that his defective vehicle was incapable of repair pursuant to such express warranty and disclaimer because he could not identify any part, replacement of which would remedy defect, such result made disclaimer unconscionable and void within meaning of UCC 2-302. Furthermore, where seller was unable to cure defect in purchaser's automobile, express warranty and its disclaimer which provided for contractual modification and limitation of rights and remedies of purchaser, failed of its essential purpose and, thus, "circumstances caused an exclusive or limited remedy to fail of its essential purpose" within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), and could not be deemed exclusive remedy. Eckstein v. Cummins, 41 Ohio App. 2d 1, 321 N.E.2d 897 (1974).

The court assumed without question that a waiver of warranties contained in an equipment lease was subject to the limitation of the prohibition against unconscionability. Electronics Corp. of Am. v. Lear Jet Corp., 55 Misc. 2d 1066 (1967).

16. —Enforceable.

In action against manufacturer for damages for breakdown and failure of two air-conditioning units to function properly, plaintiff's claim of breach of warranty could not be sustained where (1) manufacturer's express warranty covered such equipment for 12 months after "start-up" or 18 months after shipment, whichever came first, and such warranty period had expired with respect to both units; (2) express warranty also contained effective disclaimer under UCC § 2-316(2) of any implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose; and (3) plaintiff did not contend that such disclaimer was unconscionable under UCC § 2-302. Alfred N. Koplin & Co. v. Chrysler Corp., 49 Ill. App. 3d 194, 364 N.E.2d 100 (2d Dist. 1977).

Provision on face of one page contract for sale of cabbage seed disclaiming warranties, express or implied, of merchantability and fitness for purpose and limiting seller's liability for breach of warranty or contract to purchase price of seeds, which was set off from other provisions on form and appeared in boldface print, was conspicuous within meaning of UCC § 1-201(10) and was effective to disclaim implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-316(2); given inherent element of risk present in all agricultural enterprises, clause limiting liability to purchase price of seeds was valid under UCC § 2-719 and was not unconscionable under UCC # 2-302; inasmuch as buyer was commercial farmer, he was subject to standards of marketplace wherein he sought to operate and would be bound by order form which he signed notwithstanding claim that he was illiterate. Billings v. Joseph Harris Co., 27 N.C. App. 689, 220 S.E.2d 361 (1975), review allowed, 289 N.C. 296, 222 S.E.2d 695 (1976), aff'd, 290 N.C. 502, 226 S.E.2d 321 (1976).

Even though seller effectively disclaimed implied warranties under UCC § 2-316 and warranted only that products were in accordance with published specifications and that obligation under such warranties was limited to repairing or replacing nonconforming products, buyer was not precluded from consequential damages under UCC § 2-719 where seller allegedly failed to repair or replace as provided in contract; but conduct of seller was not such as would render disclaimer of warranties unconscionable under UCC § 2-302. Koehring Co. v. A.P.I., Inc., 369 F. Supp. 882 (E.D. Mich. 1974).

Provisions in purchase money contract disclaiming all warranties unless they appeared in writing signed by seller and waiving defenses against assignees were not unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302. Westinghouse Credit Corp. v. Chapman, 129 Ga. App. 830, 201 S.E.2d 686 (1973).

Buyer of equipment covered by purchase money security interest could not assert defenses of breach of warranty and failure of consideration against seller's assignee where, after default, assignee repossessed and sold equipment and brought action for balance due on contract, and where contract contained provisions disclaiming warranties and waiving defenses against assignees: (1) provision disclaiming warranties was not unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302; (2) provision waiving defenses against assignees was not unconscionable and, in fact, was expressly authorized by UCC § 9-206(1); (3) evidence that assignee paid full value for note, that at time of assignment assignee had no knowledge that equipment was defective, that none of seller's employees or officers were officers or employees of assignee and that seller and assignee were two separate and distinct companies, established assignee's right to enforce provision waiving defenses and, since defenses raised by buyer could not be raised against holder in due course, they could not be raised by buyer in present action. Westinghouse Credit Corp. v. Chapman, 129 Ga. App. 830, 201 S.E.2d 686 (1973).

17. Exculpatory clauses; unconscionable.

In buyer's action for breach of warranty in sale of computer and computer programs, (1) trial court properly admitted parol evidence under UCC § 2-202(b) to show that parties had entered into contract of sale, rather than security agreement; (2) seller's claim that admission of extrinsic evidence as to oral warranties contradicted warranty-disclaimer clause on reverse side of contract violated parol evidence rule codified in UCC § 2-202(b) was immaterial because warranty-disclaimer clause was not part of sale contract; (3) since limitation-of-damages provision also was not part of sale contract, whether trial court was correct in holding such provision unconscionable under UCC § 2-302(1) was also immaterial; and (4) trial court's finding that seller did not supply goods as promised and warranted was supported by ample evidence in record. Burroughs Corp. v. Chesapeake Petro. & Supply Co., 282 Md. 406, 384 A.2d 734 (1978).

Buyer of fire protection system who sought damages for injuries caused by system's discharging white powder throughout kitchen of buyer's restaurant was not bound by limitation-of-liability clause contained in paragraph in sales contract setting forth seller's express warranty with respect to system's performance, since nothing in such limitation-of-liability clause, express warranty, or sales contract suggested that seller had waived implied warranties of merchantability or fitness for use, which waiver is required by UCC § 2-316 to be in writing. In such case, limitation-of-liability clause contained in seller's express warranty applied only to claims based on such warranty and had no application to claim based on breach of implied warranty of fitness for use. Furthermore, since limitation-of-liability clause was concealed in paragraph which clearly suggested that benefit in form of guarantee was being conferred on buyer, and since nothing in heading of such paragraph indicated existence of sharp limitation on seller's overall liability, such limitation-of-liability clause was unconscionable and unenforceable under UCC § 2-302. Jutta's, Inc. v. Fireco Equip. Co., 150 N.J. Super. 301, 375 A.2d 687 (App. Div. 1977).

Limitations of remedy to return of purchase price of soybean inoculant, contained in manufacturer's promotional brochure and stamped on inoculant packages, and provisions of manufacturer's contract with retailer limiting damages to return of purchase price of inoculant and requiring any claim to be filed with manufacturer within 120 days after receipt of allegedly defective inoculant were unconscionable, both as to buyer of product and as between retailer and manufacturer, within meaning of UCC §§ 2-719(3) and 2-302, where alleged defect was latent, manufacturer knew that effectiveness of product was questionable, and exclusion would have had effect of foreclosing any recovery by buyer, a farmer, for large and foreseeable consequential damages for crop failure. Majors v. Kalo Lab., Inc., 407 F. Supp. 20 (M.D. Ala. 1975).

In action by buyers of automobile tires against seller and manufacturer for personal injuries allegedly resulting from blowout of tire, clause purporting to limit buyers' remedy solely to replacement tire and purporting to exclude liability for both personal injury and property damage was unconscionable under UCC § 2-719(3), in absence of any evidence to contrary, and was ineffective. McCarty v. E.J. Korvette, Inc., 28 Md. App. 421, 347 A.2d 253 (1975).

Contract for basement waterproofing which contained 4 disclaimers of liability denying responsibility for work performed unless customer would agree to additional work at added cost was unconscionable in its entirety as being against public policy. Nosse v. Vulcan Basement Waterproofing, Inc., 35 Ohio Misc. 1, 299 N.E.2d 708 (1973).

18. —Enforceable.

In action by advertiser against telephone company for damages by reason of omission of advertising contracted for in yellow pages directory, contract which limited company's liability for errors and omission to amount equal to cost of advertising was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 in that (1) plaintiff was no worse off by reason of omission of ad in yellow pages than if he had made no contract at all and (2) plaintiff was experienced businessman for whom it was reasonable to assume was familiar with printed form contracts, the terms of which were not one-sided or oppressive. Wille v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 219 Kan. 755, 549 P.2d 903 (1976).

In light of facts and commercial background of transaction involving purchase and sale of machinery for unproven manufacturing process, both parties realized that purpose of contract was to allocate risks associated with this type of transaction, so that limitation clauses contained in contract were neither oppressive nor unfair. U.S. Fibres, Inc. v. Proctor & Schwartz, Inc., 358 F. Supp. 449 (E.D. Mich. 1972), aff'd, 509 F.2d 1043 (6th Cir. Mich. 1975).

In action by seller of sectional steel plate against buyer for balance due under contract of sale, in which contract contained provision limiting seller's warranty liability for defective material to replacement or refund of purchase price at seller's option, limitation of liability clause was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302, where contract was not made under circumstances involving oppression and unfair surprise, there was no great disparity of bargaining power between parties, and buyer was aware of at least one other company capable of supplying it with required plates. Earl M. Jorgensen Co. v. Mark Constr., Inc., 56 Haw. 466, 540 P.2d 978 (1975).

UCC § 2-302 would not be applied to disclaimer of liability contained in repairman's work order form to effect that repairman was not responsible for loss or damages to vehicles or articles left in vehicles in case of fire, theft or any other cause beyond repairman's control, which was signed by owner of trailer when he left it with repairman for repairs, and, thus, repairman was not liable to owner for loss of trailer which was stolen from repairman's premises. Haynie v. A & H Camper Sales, Inc., 132 Ga. App. 509, 208 S.E.2d 354 (1974), rev'd on other grounds,

Provisions in contract between electric utility and manufacturer of turbine generator whereby manufacturer limited its liability for breach of contract in connection with sale and installation of generator were not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302(1) where terms of agreement were subject of extensive negotiations over three-year period and parties were of equal bargaining power. Royal Indem. Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 385 F. Supp. 520 (S.D.N.Y. 1974).

In action by door manufacturing company against electronics manufacturer for breach of contract and negligence in manufacture and installation of electronic system for curing glue in production of plaintiff's hollow-core wooden doors, provision in contract limiting defendant's liability for any consequential damages caused by failure of its equipment to produce in accordance with contract was not unconscionable and was enforceable where, inter alia, both parties anticipated machine in question might not produce in accord with plaintiff's requirements and where defendant specially agreed that if equipment did not produce in accord with terms of contract, plaintiff could return part of equipment and get two-thirds of its money back. Raybond Elecs., Inc. v. Glen-Mar Door Mfg. Co., 22 Ariz. App. 409, 528 P.2d 160 (1974).

Clause in which airplane manufacturer stated that it "shall not be liable for failure or delay in making delivery for any cause whatsoever" and allowing buyer to cancel order with full deposit refunded, is not unconscionable when judged, not in abstract, but in commercial setting as to prototype airplane construction and industry practice as to delivery dates and remedies for failure to deliver. Dow Corning Corp. v. Capitol Aviation, Inc., 411 F.2d 622 (7th Cir. Ill. 1969).

In commercial context, contractual exclusion of liability for special or consequential damages is not unconscionable. K. & C., Inc. v. Ald, Inc., 117 Pitts. Legal J. 396 (Pa. 1969).

19. Finance charges.

Automobile sales contract could not be held "unconscionable" in absence of any evidence concerning availability of alternative forms of financing from banks, other automobile dealers, credit unions, etc. Block v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 286 A.2d 228, 63 A.L.R.3d 1 (D.C. 1972).

Retail instalment contracts charging from two to six times the cost per unit to the sellers were "unconscionable" within the meaning of this section, and were therefore unenforceable. State ex rel. Lefkowitz v. ITM, Inc., 52 Misc. 2d 39 (1966).

A contract is unconscionable under this section where a person engaged in the business of extending credit fails to furnish concurrently with the consummation of the transaction a clear statement in writing setting forth the finance charges and rate of interest, where the homeowner was paying in excess of $2500 for goods and services worth less than $1000. American Home Imp., Inc. v. MacIver, 105 N.H. 435, 201 A.2d 886, 14 A.L.R.3d 324 (1964).

20. Price; unconscionable.

Where (1) buyer purchased right to cut and remove timber under timber deed granted by seller of such right, (2) buyer represented to seller that buyer was experienced as to value of timber and informed seller that timber in question was worth about $20,000, and (3) evidence showed that timber was worth more than $50,000, court under unconscionable-contract provision of UCC § 2-302(1) affirmed chancellor's setting aside of buyer's timber deed. Davis v. Kolb, 263 Ark. 158, 563 S.W.2d 438 (1978).

Where freezer, which expert witness testified had maximum value of $300, was sold for over $1000, exorbitant price made contract unconscionable and therefore unenforceable. Toker v. Perl, 103 N.J. Super. 500, 247 A.2d 701 (L. Div. 1968), aff'd, 108 N.J. Super. 129, 260 A.2d 244 (1970).

The sale of a freezer unit having a retail value of $300 for $900 ($1439.69 including credit charges and $18 sales tax) held unconscionable as a matter of law (holding that where more than $600 had been paid toward the purchase of the $300 freezer, the application of the payment provision should be limited to amounts already paid and the contract be reformed and amended by changing the payments called for to equal the amount of payment actually so paid by the purchaser). Jones v. Star Credit Corp., 59 Misc. 2d 189 (1969).

Excessively high prices may constitute unconscionable contractual provisions within the meaning of this section. Central Budget Corp. v. Sanchez, 53 Misc. 2d 620 (1967).

Where prices charged in retail installment contracts executed in connection with sales of appliances were from two to six times the cost of the goods to the seller, the contracts were unconscionable under the provisions of this section; and sellers should be enjoined both from inducing customers to execute such contracts and from enforcing them, either directly or indirectly. State ex rel. Lefkowitz v. ITM, Inc., 52 Misc. 2d 39 (1966).

21. —Enforceable.

Where forward contracts for sale of cotton crop made at or before planting time provided for payment at price less than half of market value of cotton at delivery time, which increase was unexpected and unforeseeable, and where buyer of cotton made immediate re-sale of 75 percent of cotton purchased under forward contracts, dispelling any inference that expertise of buyer enabled it to foresee future price increase, contracts were not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302. Bradford v. Plains Cotton Coop. Ass'n, 539 F.2d 1249 (10th Cir. Okla. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1042, 97 S. Ct. 743, 50 L. Ed. 2d 754 (1977).

Clause in contract between publisher and author providing that "in no event" should amount payable by publisher to author in any one calendar year exceed $3,000 in respect to three books, and $4,000 in respect to fourth book, under which approximately $50,000 remained in hands of publisher as credit to account of author's estate, would not be set aside as unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 where, upon publication, publisher assumed risk of being unable to sell first printing thereby subjecting itself to loss of advance payment as well as much of cost of editing, printing, distribution, promotion and selling costs, and where at time of contracting, date of death was unknown, and success or failure of book matter of conjecture; under these circumstances, lack of interest payments, despite possible accumulation of royalties in hands of publisher, could not be deemed unconscionable. In re Young's Estate, 81 Misc. 2d 920 (1975).

Contract for sale of cotton, including its provisions relating to price, production, harvesting or ginning of cotton, was not so unreasonable and onesided as to make it unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 where, in light of commercial needs of cotton business, contract was normal and could inure to benefit of producer by assuring him not only of market for his cotton but at guaranteed price for fluctuating commodity, where price at which contracts were executed was fair price at time, where meteoric rise in price of cotton between planting and harvest could hardly have been anticipated by parties, and where buyer sold most of contracted cotton several months later at prices substantially below highest point reached by market later in year. R.L. Kimsey Cotton Co. v. Ferguson, 233 Ga. 962, 214 S.E.2d 360 (1975).

Contract between cotton grower and textile manufacturer for sale of cotton at 32 cents per pound was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 although, at time of delivery, price of cotton had risen to approximately 80 cents per pound. West Point-Pepperell, Inc. v. Bradshaw, 377 F. Supp. 154 (M.D. Ala. 1974).

In action for declaratory judgment by cotton growers seeking determination that contracts providing that growers would plant and deliver certain cotton acreage for stipulated price were unconscionable under UCC § 2-302(1), contracts when reviewed under circumstances that existed at time they were made, were not unconscionable where growers considered prices offered for cotton to be good based on prior years, there was no claim that merchants knew of drastic price increases which were to occur later, and prices could have fallen as easily as they could have risen. J.L. McEntire & Sons v. Hart Cotton Co., 256 Ark. 937, 511 S.W.2d 179 (1974).

22. Procedural limitations.

Although confession of judgment clauses are not unconscionable per se, this confession of judgment clause was unconscionable within UCC § 2-302(1) where it was not separated from other portions of agreement and was not placed in a way so as to note special attention; in short, it was unconscionable because it caused unfair surprise by manner in which it appeared. Architectural Cabinets, Inc. v. Gaster, 291 A.2d 298 (Del. Super. 1971).

It was stipulated that defendant had appeared generally and waived service of summons, that debt would be paid, and that in the event of non-payment plaintiff might file summons and enter judgment without further notice; held, stipulation was not unconscionable on its face. Gimbel Bros. v. Swift, 62 Misc. 2d 156 (1970).

Terms set forth in a signature card executed by plaintiff-depositor and the statements of account which were referred to therein constituted a valid contract between the depositor and defendant-bank, and a clause whereby both parties waived a jury trial was effective. The agreement was neither unconscionable nor offensive to public policy which imposes no limitation or restriction on the freedom of contract between a bank and its depositor. David v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 59 Misc. 2d 248 (1969).

23. —Form of action; election of remedies.

If party can bring arbitration clause within unconscionability provisions of UCC § 2-302, this indicates lack of meaningful bargaining with regard to such clause and should invalidate it. Board of Educ. v. Western Harley Miller, Inc., 160 W. Va. 473, 236 S.E.2d 439 (1977).

In action for damages by buyer of meat containing excess fat content, settlement formula in purchase contract was exclusive remedy of buyer within meaning of UCC § 2-719(1), even though word "exclusive" was not used, where parties had numerous previous transactions and on one such occasion had utilized the settlement formula as the measure of damages and where the formula was not unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302(1) in light of parties prior dealings and status as professional traders. J.D. Pavlak, Ltd. v. William Davies Co., 40 Ill. App. 3d 1, 351 N.E.2d 243 (1st Dist. 1976).

Contractual limitations upon remedies are generally to be enforced unless unconscionable. Wilson Trading Corp. v. David Ferguson, Ltd., 23 N.Y.2d 398, 244 N.E.2d 685 (1968).

24. —Forum selection.

In action by buyer against sellers to compel arbitration in accord with arbitration provisions located on reverse side of soy bean sales contract which sellers signed, there was nothing about contracts or facts surrounding their execution that could reasonably be characterized as fraudulent or unconscionable in either design of forms or conduct of buyer's agents, notwithstanding sellers' claims that buyers' agent did not call their attention to arbitration provisions, that they did not read provisions, and that they did not intend by signing contracts to agree to arbitration, where, inter alia, each seller had been party to contract to sell grain to buyer on at least one prior occasion and contracts had been made on identical forms containing identical arbitration provisions, where sellers were experienced farmers who annually farmed from 800 to 2,000 acres, where sellers had ample opportunity to read contracts and to know their every term, and where there was notice on front of contract near signature line in large bold-face capital letters that terms appearing on back of form were part of contract. Bunge Corp. v. Williams, 45 Ill. App. 3d 359, 359 N.E.2d 844 (5th Dist. 1977).

Where a contract was made and breached in Massachusetts between a corporation licensed to do business in that state and a Massachusetts consumer, a provision included by the seller in its contract that any law suit under the contract would be brought in New York is clearly designed to harass the buyer who does not stand in a position of bargaining equality and will therefore be deemed not binding because unconscionable. Paragon Homes of New England, Inc. v. Langlois, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 16 (1967, NY Sup); Paragon Homes of Midwest, Inc. v. Crace, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 19 (1967, NY Sup).

In an action by a New York corporation as assignee of a contract made by a Maine corporation to make improvements to defendant's home in Brockton, Massachusetts, defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the court lacked jurisdiction over the person of the defendants was granted, notwithstanding a contract clause reciting that the agreement shall be deemed to have been made in Nassau County and that the parties submitted to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in that county to adjudicate their rights and liabilities under the contract, since the clause was deemed grossly unfair and unconscionable. Paragon Homes, Inc. v. Carter, 56 Misc. 2d 463 (1968), aff'd, 30 A.D.2d 1052, 295 N.Y.S.2d 606 (2d Dep't 1968).

25. —Waiver of defenses.

Buyer of equipment covered by purchase money security interest could not assert defenses of breach of warranty and failure of consideration against seller's assignee where, after default, assignee repossessed and sold equipment and brought action for balance due on contract, and where contract contained provisions disclaiming warranties and waiving defenses against assignees: (1) provision disclaiming warranties was not unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302; (2) provision waiving defenses against assignees was not unconscionable and, in fact, was expressly authorized by UCC § 9-206(1); (3) evidence that assignee paid full value for note, that at time of assignment assignee had no knowledge that equipment was defective, that none of seller's employees or officers were officers or employees of assignee and that seller and assignee were two separate and distinct companies, established assignee's right to enforce provision waiving defenses and, since defenses raised by buyer could not be raised against holder in due course, they could not be raised by buyer in present action. Westinghouse Credit Corp. v. Chapman, 129 Ga. App. 830, 201 S.E.2d 686 (1973).

Provisions in purchase money contract disclaiming all warranties unless they appeared in writing signed by seller and waiving defenses against assignees were not unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302. Westinghouse Credit Corp. v. Chapman, 129 Ga. App. 830, 201 S.E.2d 686 (1973).

A provision in a conditional sale agreement whereby the buyer agreed to waive, as against an assignee of the seller, any defenses which the buyer might have against the seller is void as against public policy. Quality Fin. Co. v. Hurley, 337 Mass. 150, 148 N.E.2d 385 (1958).

26. Repossession.

Where retail purchaser bought several appliances from seller at different times, financing each purchase under seller's time sales plan, and where seller replevied all appliances bought by purchaser after purchaser failed to make scheduled monthly payments under plan, time sales agreement giving seller security interest in all goods sold was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302; even assuming cross-collateral security agreements are unconscionable, seller's time sales agreement did not create such collateral since each payment was applied against cost of items in order purchased and all items were replevied only because first, being most expensive, had not yet been paid off. Singer Co. v. Gardner, 65 N.J. 403, 323 A.2d 457 (1974).

It is unconscionable for a contract to permit the seller to retain possession of repossessed goods after the buyer has made good the installments due, because of which default the goods had been repossessed, and also pays a "repossession fee" although the seller claims that it has the right to do so because of the feeling of insecurity arising out of the inability to locate the buyer's place of employment and because of the buyer's failure to produce adequate co-signers on the contract. Robinson v. Jefferson Credit Corp., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 15 (1967, NY Sup).

27. Termination or cancellation; unconscionable.

Provision in contract between plaintiffs and catering establishment which called for "full amount due under this contract" in event of cancellation by plaintiffs was unenforceable as a matter of public policy. Bogatz v. Case Catering Corp., 86 Misc. 2d 1052 (1976).

Termination provision in contract between service station operator and oil company which gave oil company alone right to terminate at any time upon ten days' written notice to operator when, in oil company's sole judgment, operator had indulged in practices which tended to impair quality, good name, good will or reputation of products of oil company, but which set forth no standard by which oil company's judgment on such matters was to be determined or circumscribed and which gave no such reciprocal right of termination to operator was unconscionable on its face under UCC § 2-302. Ashland Oil, Inc. v. Donahue, 159 W. Va. 463, 223 S.E.2d 433 (1976).

Agreement between industrial catering company and its contractor-drivers under which many obligations were imposed on contractor-drivers, company agreed to do little and reserved right to change its terms as it pleased, duration of contract was of ephemeral nature, contractor could be discharged and deprived of his means of earning living by frivolous behavior on part of company, so that company had squeezed out of instrument whatever equity there was, was unconscionable, and thus unenforceable under Code § 2-302. Triple D & E, Inc. v. Van Buren, 72 Misc. 2d 569 (1972), aff'd, 42 A.D.2d 841, 346 N.Y.S.2d 737 (2d Dep't 1973).

Unconscionability of contract clause is to be judged not in abstract but rather in its commercial setting; and in order to prove unconscionableness in termination clause of milk marketing agreement, there must be showing not only that terms thereof are onerous, oppressive or one-sided, but also that terms bear no reasonable relation to business risks, as evident in commercial environment and not merely on face of contract alone. Central Ohio Co-op. Milk Producers v. Rowland, 29 Ohio App. 2d 236, 281 N.E.2d 42 (1972).

It was unreasonable, unfair, and even unconscionable for reception hall to hold plaintiff's deposit for 19 months after plaintiff had attempted to cancel contract reservation for son's Bar Mitzvah. Lazan v. Huntington Town House, Inc., 69 Misc. 2d 1017 (1969), aff'd, 69 Misc. 2d 1019, 330 N.Y.S.2d 751 (1972).

28. —Enforceable.

Termination provisions in whiskey distributorship contracts which provided for termination upon three months notice in one case, and 60 days notice in the other, were not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302 where contracts were entered into by respective corporations pursuant to substantial negotiations, where there was no showing of exceptional circumstances such as would justify departure from general rule of non-application of unconscionability doctrine to contracts formed in commercial setting and where there was no showing that termination provisions and their notice periods were substantively unconscionable. Fleischmann Distilling Corp. v. Distillers Co., 395 F. Supp. 221 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Wholesale parts distributor was not entitled to recover damages from manufacturer resulting from termination of distributorship contract where contract provided that either party could terminate at any time on written notice of 90 days, where, although distributor was required to carry "adequate" inventory of manufacturer's parts, contract also gave manufacturer option to refuse to repurchase inventory upon termination, and where manufacturer terminated contract and refused to repurchase distributor's inventory. Distributor failed to show that repurchase provision was unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302 at time of formation of contract: there was no showing that manufacturer's reasons for reserving repurchase option in its distributorship agreements were not reasonably related to business risks involved; it was not unreasonable per se for manufacturer to reserve right to refuse to repurchase at least portions of distributor's inventory upon termination; and, although manufacturer may have had superior bargaining power, under Code, bona fide allocation of risks would not be disturbed merely because one party had superior bargaining position, particularly where both parties were sophisticated business people. Furthermore, repurchase provision was not unduly one-sided or oppressive; although provision appeared to be unqualified, on its face, any exercise of repurchase election by manufacturer was restricted by manufacturer's obligation to act in good faith pursuant to UCC § 1-203, and, although proof that manner in which repurchase election was exercised at time of termination amounted to breach of manufacturer's implied obligation of good faith and fair dealing would have been independent basis for recovery of damages, neither distributor's complaint nor theory under which case was tried supported findings for distributor based on breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. W.L. May Co. v. Philco-Ford Corp., 273 Or. 701, 543 P.2d 283 (1975).

Provision in truck franchise agreement giving either party right to terminate contract without cause was specifically sanctioned by Pennsylvania Uniform Commercial Code, and was not unconscionable practice within meaning of Code § 2-302. Artman v. International Harvester Co., 355 F. Supp. 482 (W.D. Pa. 1973).

Termination clause providing for termination at end of any three-year period of contract (original or renewal) by 90-day notice from either party to other is not unconscionable per se. Division of Triple T Serv., Inc. v. Mobil Oil Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 720 (1969), aff'd, 34 A.D.2d 618, 311 N.Y.S.2d 961 (2 Dep't 1970), stay denied, 26 N.Y.2d 1020 (1970), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 614 (1970).

Contract for wholesale purchase of beer between brewery and local beverage company providing that the agreement could be terminated by either party at any time without cause or notice was not unconscionable, considering only factors at time contract was made, and 10-day notice of cancellation by brewery was valid. Sinkoff Beverage Co. v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 51 Misc. 2d 446 (1966).

29. Other matters as unconscionable.

In action by buyer of portable sawmill against manufacturer-seller for latter's breach of express and implied warranties, trial court properly excluded from evidence purchase order for sawmill which (1) stated that it was integrated contract that contained entire agreement of parties, (2) contained disclaimer of all warranties, express or implied, and (3) also referred to goods sold as a "motor vehicle," where such statements were unreasonable and unconscionable under UCC § 2-302(1) in light of evidence which showed (1) that buyer had actually purchased first production model of new type of sawmill designed by defendant, and (2) that defendant, instead of delivering its "first production model," actually delivered a second prototype that differed greatly from first prototype that buyer had previously inspected (also holding that purchase order could not be an integrated contract because of its inaccurate description of sawmill as a "motor vehicle"). Butcher v. Garrett-Enumclaw Co., 20 Wash. App. 361, 581 P.2d 1352 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1004 (1978).

Clause in contract for sale of sailing vessel requiring buyer to furnish recordable United States preferred ship mortgage was not unconscionable in law or in fact under UCC § 2-302, notwithstanding buyer was unable to furnish such mortgage due to fact that he was resident alien and, therefore, was unable to obtain United States documentation for vessel, where requirement of recordable United States preferred ship mortgage was reasonably related to business risks involved and necessary to protect seller's interest, where contract of sale was negotiated at arm's length, and where, although corporate buyer was not represented by counsel, its principal officer was knowledgeable in documentation of foreign vessels. R.C. Craig, Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea, Inc., 401 F. Supp. 1051 (S.D. Ga. 1975).

With respect to contract for sale of ship, it would be difficult to find "oppression" in requiring United States Preferred Ship Mortgage as security for purchase price on which no downpayment was to be made by foreign buyer. R.C. Craig, Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 1066 (S.D. Ga. 1972).

In absence of any evidence as to actual value of freezer or food purchased, contracts for purchase might be regarded as improvident but cannot be held unconscionable. Star Credit Corp. v. Molina, 59 Misc. 2d 290 (1969).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Warranty provisions of UCC §§ 2-313 and 2-315 are clearly limited to sales of goods; thus, by enacting UCC, legislature did not preempt field as to bailments and leases, and court was free, notwithstanding UCC, to apply doctrine of strict tort liability to bailment-lease situations. Martin v. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc., 353 A.2d 581 (Del. 1976).

In an action by a bank which had accepted certain checks against the drawer who had stopped payment, the failure of the court to instruct the jury on the elements essential to the status of a holder in due course, or that the plaintiff bank had taken the checks for value and had a security interest therein was error. Peoples Bank v. Haar, 421 P.2d 817 (Okla. 1966).

(1) The price can be made payable in money or otherwise. If it is payable in whole or in part in goods each party is a seller of the goods which he is to transfer.

(2) Even though all or part of the price is payable in an interest in realty the transfer of the goods and the seller's obligations with reference to them are subject to this chapter, but not the transfer of the interest in realty or the transferor's obligations in connection therewith.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Where (1) under Texas pre-UCC law, transfer of properties lacking agreed values was an exchange of property and transfer of properties at agreed values was a sale, and where (2) horses involved in suit were traded at agreed values, court would refrain from deciding whether Texas UCC § 2-304(1) should be interpreted to retain pre-UCC distinction between sale and exchange of property (applying Texas law; denying plaintiff recovery for defendant's alleged breach of express and implied warranties provided for by UCC § 2-313(1) and § 2-314(1)). Calloway v. Manion, 572 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

Since trade-in of boat constituted sale under UCC § 2-304(1), seller, although he did not expressly warrant title to boat, nevertheless impliedly warranted title thereto under UCC § 2-312(1) by virtue of his failure to show, as required by UCC § 2-312(2), that such implied warranty was excluded or modified by specific language or by circumstances that gave buyer reason to know that seller did not claim title in himself and that he purported to sell only such right or title as he had. Gunderland Marine Supply, Inc. v. Bray, 570 S.W.2d 542 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Nov. 29, 1978).

Plaintiff's purchase of stock from a named individual at the request of defendant would serve as consideration for defendant's agreement to transfer common stock purchase warrants to the plaintiff; and the transaction between plaintiff and defendant constituted a "sale" within the meaning of the Uniform Commercial Code, which to be enforceable must be in writing. Mortimer B. Burnside & Co. v. Havener Sec. Corp., 25 A.D.2d 373 (1st Dep't 1966).

§ 75-2-305. Open price term.

(1) The parties if they so intend can conclude a contract for sale even though the price is not settled. In such a case the price is a reasonable price at the time for delivery if

- (a) nothing is said as to price; or
- (b) the price is left to be agreed by the parties and they fail to agree; or
- (c) the price is to be fixed in terms of some agreed market or other standard as set or recorded by a third person or agency and it is not so set or recorded.

(2) A price to be fixed by the seller or by the buyer means a price for him to fix in good faith.

(3) When a price left to be fixed otherwise than by agreement of the parties fails to be fixed through fault of one party the other may at his option treat the contract as cancelled or himself fix a reasonable price.

(4) Where, however, the parties intend not to be bound unless the price be fixed or agreed and it is not fixed or agreed there is no contract. In such a case the buyer must return any goods already received or if unable so to do must pay their reasonable value at the time of delivery and the seller must return any portion of the price paid on account.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Conduct "sufficient to show agreement" (§ 75-2-204) was shown by the acts of agents of a railroad who accepted diesel fuel from a supplier and signed an invoice which omitted price but included quantity; the law would supply a reasonable price in the absence of an agreement. However, judgment in favor of the supplier pursuant to a motion for a peremptory instruction would be reversed where a triable issue of fact existed as to the supplier's status as an agent of an oil company. Alabama G.S.R.R. v. McVay, 381 So. 2d 607 (Miss. 1980).

In airline's suit against oil company for breach of contract to supply aviation fuel under contract containing escalation clause that provided for price adjustments for aviation fuel based on posted prices for crude oil from which such fuel was refined, court held (1) that agreed pricing standard in parties' contract, which consisted of "arithmetic average price" computed from two posted prices for "Wyoming Sweet Crude Oil," no longer existed as result of 1973 oil crisis and oil embargo against United States by Arab oil-producing nations, (2) that as a consequence, price of aviation fuel to be supplied to plaintiff was not set by such agreed standards, (3) that when such standard failed, price for aviation fuel to be supplied to plaintiff was "reasonable price," as required by UCC § 2-305(1)(c), and (4) that such "reasonable price" should be determined by district court on remand of case. North Cent. Airlines v. Continental Oil Co., 574 F.2d 582, 187 U.S. App. D.C. 371 (1978).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of requirements contract under which buyer was to purchase from seller all acid, brine, and fresh water that buyer needed, (1) contract was enforceable under UCC § 2-305(1), even though price of goods had never been agreed on by parties; (2) omission of contract's duration from parties' written agreement did not invalidate contract because it was valid for reasonable time under UCC § 2-309(2); and (3) although contract was terminable at will under UCC § 2-309(2) and (3) on reasonable notification, buyer had burden of asserting that contract had been terminated because seller had been given notice, and seller's failure to allege lack of notice in no way signified failure to state claim on which relief could be granted. McCasland v. Prather, 92 N.M. 192, 585 P.2d 336 (Ct. App. 1978).

Contracts under which farmers delivered soybeans to warehouseman for storage and subsequent sale at price to be agreed on at later date, and pursuant to which weight tickets or statement sheets were issued as receipts with words "hold," "stored," or "on storage" appearing on such receipts together with name of individual farmer, were bailments and not present sales with price to be fixed in the future within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1), UCC § 2-204(3), and UCC § 2-305(1), since such code sections did not contemplate farmers' right at their discretion to require a return of the same or equivalent fungible goods (stating that fact that weight tickets and statement sheets issued as receipts had words indicating that soybeans were being stored also refuted contention that transactions were sales). NYTCO Servs., Inc. v. Wilson, 351 So. 2d 875, 23 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 25 (Ala. 1977).

UCC § 2-305(1) is not by the terms of the Uniform Commercial Code applicable to a lease of real estate (applying principle incorporated in UCC § 2-305(1) to renewal option in lease of realty which was allegedly unenforceable because option did not specify amount of rental for renewal term). Aycock v. Vantage Mgt. Co., 554 S.W.2d 235 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Dec. 7, 1977).

Open price provisions are enforceable in contracts for sale of goods, provided party that is to set price does not have power to act arbitrarily. American Trading & Prod. Corp. v. Fairfax County Bd. of Supvrs., 214 Va. 382, 200 S.E.2d 529 (1973).

In open price term contract, where only evidence of reasonable price for equipment was expert's testimony that the fair price for a consumer sale was "approximately $9,000," it was error to award a sum in excess of that figure. Morris Co. v. Athas, 221 Pa. Super. 239, 289 A.2d 758 (1972).

Where seller had paid $6,178 for equipment and charged buyer $9,715 therefor under open-price term agreement, and where only evidence of "reasonable price" was $9,000, lower court erred in awarding $9,715, and judgment should be modified by $715. Morris Co. v. Athas, 221 Pa. Super. 239, 289 A.2d 758 (1972).

In a case involving an exchange of unlisted securities for shares in an open-end investment company, where it was contended by owners of the securities that the valuation placed upon their securities was not a proper one and that the investment company did not make proper payment for their securities, relying in part on the provisions of subsection (3) of the instant section that "When a price left to be fixed otherwise than by agreement of the parties fails to be fixed through fault of one party the other may...himself fix a reasonable price", it was held that the instant section was inapplicable because the prospectus under which the exchange was made provided that the price of the securities would be "the last quoted bid price...known to the person...making such determination", and because there was nothing in the record to show that there was any failure to fix the price because of the fault of the investment company or of its custodian. Saphier v. Devonshire St. Fund, Inc., 352 Mass. 683, 227 N.E.2d 714 (1967).

A buyer who was quoted sand at 45 cents per ton and waited two years after the quotation to order the same, during which time the price had increased to 55 cents per ton, had waited an unreasonable length of time to accept the lower price and was required to pay the reasonable value of the sand at the time of its delivery which was 55 cents per ton, as if nothing had been said as to price originally. Ameri- can Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. Clark & Fray Constr. Co., 2 Conn. Cir. Ct. 284, 198 A.2d 68 (1963).

Where there has been a series of transactions between the buyer and seller with an "understanding" that prices would be charged according to the current catalogue listing, the seller is entitled to recover the reasonable value of the goods at the time of delivery (note that the court did not refer to the catalogue price). Republic-Odin Appliance Corp. v. Consumers Plumbing & Heating Supply Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 307 (1961).

Account alleging that a buyer of goods delivered to and accepted by him orally agreed to pay for them, without alleging what charge was agreed upon was, in view of this section, not subject to a motion for a more specific complaint. Elray Tool & Die Corp. v. Knox, 68 Dauph. Co. 7 (Pa. 1955).

§ 75-2-306. Output, requirements and exclusive dealings.

(1) A term which measures the quantity by the output of the seller or the requirements of the buyer means such actual output or requirements as may occur in good faith, except that no quantity unreasonably disproportionate to any stated estimate or in the absence of a stated estimate to any normal or otherwise comparable prior output or requirements may be tendered or demanded.

(2) A lawful agreement by either the seller or the buyer for exclusive dealing in the kind of goods concerned imposes unless otherwise agreed an obligation by the seller to use best efforts to supply the goods and by the buyer to use best efforts to promote their sale.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general; output contracts.
2. Requirements contracts.
3. Good faith.
4. Unreasonably disproportionate quantity.

1. In general; output contracts.

Contracts for sale of cotton under which buyer agreed to buy all cotton produced by seller on specified acreage at specified price for specified grades were "output" contracts, as defined in UCC § 2-306(1), for sale of all of farmers' cotton produced by them during crop year 1973, were not vague and indefinite as to quantity and subject matter, and were sufficient to satisfy requirements of statute of frauds, UCC § 2-201(1). Furthermore, specific performance of contracts was available to buyers since parties stipulated that cotton involved was unique. R.L. Kimsey Cotton Co. v. Ferguson, 233 Ga. 962, 214 S.E.2d 360 (1975).

Trial court erred in declaring output-requirements contract between tenant of farmland and buyer of cotton unconscionable, and therefore void as against one-fourth interest in cotton which landlord held as rent, since UCC § 2-306(1) expressly authorized such contracts, moreover, § 2-302 required trial court to provide parties opportunity to present evidence on issue of unconscionability prior to declaring clause unconscionable. Darden v. Ogle, 293 Ala. 699, 310 So. 2d 182 (1975).

"Outputs" contract under which bakery agreed to sell all breadcrumbs produced by it to promisee did not carry with it implication that bakery was obligated to manufacture breadcrumbs for full term of contract; rather, good faith termination of production of breadcrumbs was permissible under contract. Thus, summary judgment could not be entered in favor of either party to suit for breach of contract where unresolved issues of fact remained as to whether bakery acted in good faith in ceasing production of crumbs because of alleged economic unfeasibility. Feld v. Henry S. Levy & Sons, 37 N.Y.2d 466, 335 N.E.2d 320 (1975).

In contract for sale of growing cotton, quantity was sufficiently shown for "output" contract for sale of all defendants' cotton produced on their 825 acres under UCC § 2-306(1). Harris v. Hine, 232 Ga. 183, 205 S.E.2d 847 (1974).

City may not take undue advantage of its favorable contract with oil supplier and increase its wholesale exchange of energy with neighboring system; such increases must be regarded as beyond contemplation of parties and scope of contract, and must be taken into account as limiting factor in determining damages to be awarded city for breach of oil supply contract. City of Lakeland v. Union Oil Co., 352 F. Supp. 758 (M.D. Fla. 1973).

2. Requirements contracts.

In action by supplier against subcontractor for latter's alleged breach of contract to purchase limestone, which district court had ruled was contract to purchase specific quantity of limestone, court held (1) that contract was supported by consideration and thus was enforceable, (2) that contract satisfied statute-of-frauds requirement in UCC § 2-201(1) as to presence of "quantity term" in the agreement, since by incorporating certain bid documents by reference, it obligated supplier to furnish limestone "of a grade and quality to conform to specified requirements" in such bid documents, (3) that as a result of provisions in incorporated bid documents, the contract, instead of being agreement for fixed amount of limestone, was a requirements contract within meaning of UCC § 2-306(1), (4) that subcontractor did not breach such contract by directing supplier not to supply any limestone at all, since subcontractor had no requirements as result of decision by National Parks Service not to use limestone on project that subcontractor was working on, and (5) that although limiting language of UCC § 2-306(1) would seem to prevent subcontractor from reducing its requirements to zero, such language did not in fact preclude a good-faith reduction in a party's requirements that was highly disproportionate to such party's normal prior requirements or stated estimates (applying District of Columbia UCC). R.A. Weaver & Assocs. v. Asphalt Constr., Inc., 587 F.2d 1315, 190 U.S. App. D.C. 418 (1978).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of contract to purchase seller's product line of floor sweepers and also, on "pay-as-used basis," inventory for such product line, (1) seller's oral acceptance by telephone of buyer's written offer, in conjunction with seller's written confirmation of its acceptance and buyer's failure to object in writing to contents of confirmation within ten days after it was received, satisfied exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2) and rendered contract enforceable, (2) contract was binding, even though both parties expected that it would be reduced to formal writing by their attorneys, (3) seller was entitled to recover contract price under UCC § 2-709(1)(b) because seller, after buyer refused to perform, was unable to resell sweeper line at reasonable price to another person, and (4) buyer's liability for sweeper-line inventory, which buyer had purchased on "pay-as-used basis," was analogous to good-faith liability of a buyer under a requirements contract provided for in UCC § 2-306(1) (applying Wis law). Lambert Corp. v. Evans, 575 F.2d 132 (7th Cir. Wis. 1978).

Generally, the buyer in a requirements contract is merely required to exercise good faith in determining his requirements, and the seller assumes the risk of all good-faith variations in the buyer's requirements, even to the extent of a determination to liquidate or discontinue the business (construing Wis law). Lambert Corp. v. Evans, 575 F.2d 132 (7th Cir. Wis. 1978).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of alleged oral contract under which seller was to supply all potatoes required by buyer's chain of restaurants, (1) contract was sufficiently definite in quantity to be enforceable under UCC § 2-306(1), but (2) since buyer in its pleading did not admit making of contract within meaning of UCC § 2-201(3)(b), and since deposition testimony of buyer's former employees, which admitted existence of oral contract sued on, did not constitute binding admission against buyer under UCC § 2-201(3)(b) because of witnesses' lack of authority at time depositions were taken, contract was unenforceable under statute of frauds set forth in UCC § 2-201(1). Miller v. Sirloin Stockade, 224 Kan. 32, 578 P.2d 247 (1978).

Purchase order "To cover a possible requirement of (500,000) gallons of propane" did not constitute binding requirements contract under UCC § 2-306 where buyer made no express or implied promise to purchase propane exclusively from seller (applying Kentucky law). Propane Indus., Inc. v. GMC, 429 F. Supp. 214 (W.D. Mo. 1977).

Letter from subcontractor to contractor by which subcontractor proposed to furnish contractor with specified type of readymix concrete at $21 per yard, net, in such quantity as contractor required for specified project constituted definite and certain offer with intent that, if accepted, it would result in contract; language in letter asserting that price would be guaranteed to hold throughout job could be considered as measuring quantity of concrete by requirement of buyer as recognized in UCC § 2-306(1). Maryland Supreme Corp. v. Blake Co., 279 Md. 531, 369 A.2d 1017 (1977).

Letter signed by president of plastics supplier which provided that supplier would maintain supply of certain plastics "in sufficient amounts to supply all of the plastic" for furniture manufacturer's use, satisfied requirements of statute of frauds and was binding on supplier. Fortune Furn. Mfg. Co. v. Mid-South Plastic Fabric Co., 310 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1975).

In action between general contractor for construction of housing project and subcontractor who had agreed to supply all concrete needed on project arising when labor dispute caused general contractor to purchase balance of concrete requirements elsewhere, under UCC §§ 2-306(1) and 2-309(1) agreement was enforceable requirements contract where duration of contract was sufficiently determined by occurrence of completion of project; depending on circumstances, labor dispute may give rise to defense of impossibility of performance under UCC § 2-615. Mishara Constr. Co. v. Transit-Mixed Concrete Corp., 365 Mass. 122, 310 N.E.2d 363, 70 A.L.R.3d 1259 (1974).

In taxpayer suit challenging authority of Department of Property and Supplies to accept and open bids for school buses in kinds and numbers to meet estimated requirements of certain school districts and intermediate units, fact that school districts were not bound by contract to purchase their requirements from successful bidder did not preclude existence of valid requirements contract under UCC § 2-306 between Department and vendor. Schaefer v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. Commw. 349, 318 A.2d 365 (1974).

Under Code 2-306(1), municipal "requirement" is not too indefinite a term in contract for purchase of parking meters, since it is held to mean actual good faith requirements of city when dealing according to commercial standards of fairness; and further contract provision for furnishing "part" of city's requirements likewise does not render agreement illusory or lacking in mutuality, in light of further contract provision for furnishing "approximately 7650" parking meters, word "approximately" being used in this contract merely to indicate that precision in quantity is not intended (applying Kentucky law). City of Louisville v. Rockwell Mfg. Co., 482 F.2d 159 (6th Cir. Ky. 1973).

Where unavailability of certified seed was known to potato seller before modification of contract, including identification of seller's grower, the unavailability of seed did not excuse seller's failure to fully perform under UCC § 2-306(1) relating to quantity requirement contracts, unless seller notified buyer of expected shortage prior to such modification. Deardorff-Jackson Co. v. National Produce Distribs., Inc., 447 F.2d 676 (7th Cir. Ill. 1971).

3. Good faith.

In action by supplier against subcontractor for latter's alleged breach of contract to purchase limestone, which district court had ruled was contract to purchase specific quantity of limestone, court held (1) that contract was supported by consideration and thus was enforceable, (2) that contract satisfied statute-of-frauds requirement in UCC § 2-201(1) as to presence of "quantity term" in the agreement, since by incorporating certain bid documents by reference, it obligated supplier to furnish limestone "of a grade and quality to conform to specified requirements" in such bid documents, (3) that as a result of provisions in incorporated bid documents, the contract, instead of being agreement for fixed amount of limestone, was a requirements contract within meaning of UCC § 2-306(1), (4) that subcontractor did not breach such contract by directing supplier not to supply any limestone at all, since subcontractor had no requirements as result of decision by National Parks Service not to use limestone on project that subcontractor was working on, and (5) that although limiting language of UCC § 2-306(1) would seem to prevent subcontractor from reducing its requirements to zero, such language did not in fact preclude a good-faith reduction in a party's requirements that was highly disproportionate to such party's normal prior requirements or stated estimates. R.A. Weaver & Assocs. v. Asphalt Constr., Inc., 587 F.2d 1315, 190 U.S. App. D.C. 418 (1978).

Buyer of premixed concrete, under contract requiring seller to furnish all concrete to be used by buyer in construction of state hospital, had no good-faith need under UCC § 2-306(1) for such concrete after state terminated hospital construction project and thus was not obligated, after project's termination, to buy any more concrete pursuant to terms of buyer's requirements contract with seller. Wilsonville Concrete Prods. v. Todd Bldg. Co., 281 Or. 345, 574 P.2d 1112 (1978).

In utility company's action for damages for supplier's breach of fuel-oil supply contract, demand by plaintiff for more than double its contract estimates was, as matter of law, unreasonably disproportionate to such estimates under UCC § 2-306(1), and supplier was justified in refusing to meet demand where plaintiff's requirements were not incurred in good faith (applying NJ law pursuant to provision in contract sued on, and expressly refusing to adopt factor of more than twice the contract estimates as an inflexible yardstick). Orange & Rockland Utils., Inc. v. Amerada Hess Corp., 59 A.D.2d 110, 96 A.L.R.3d 1263 (2d Dep't 1977).

Where the seller could terminate a supply contract on thirty-day's notice, at the expiration of which period the buyer was required to return any unsold merchandise, the seller was not required to fill an order for more than the ordinary thirty-day supply, where the order in fact was more than the supply for half a year, which large order was explainable only on the ground that the buyer was in bad faith trying to evade the power of the seller to terminate on thirty-days notice. Massachusetts Gas & Elec. Light Supply Corp. v. V-M Corp., 387 F.2d 605 (1st Cir. Mass. 1967).

4. Unreasonably disproportionate quantity.

Term "unreasonably disproportionate" in UCC § 2-306(1) is not equivalent of term "lack of good faith." Term "unreasonably disproportionate" is keyed to stated estimates or, if there are no stated estimates, to "normal or otherwise comparable prior requirements." Orange & Rockland Utils., Inc. v. Amerada Hess Corp., 59 A.D.2d 110, 96 A.L.R.3d 1263 (2d Dep't 1977).

It is unwise to define the phrase "unreasonably disproportionate" in UCC § 2-306(1) in terms of rigid quantities. Instead, when construing the phrase, the following factors should be considered: (1) the amount by which the requirements exceeded the contract estimate; (2) whether the seller had any reasonable basis on which to forecast or anticipate the requested increase; (3) the amount, if any, by which the market price of the goods exceeded the contract price; (4) whether such an increase in market price was itself fortuitous; and (5) the reason for the increase in requirements. Orange & Rockland Utils., Inc. v. Amerada Hess Corp., 59 A.D.2d 110, 96 A.L.R.3d 1263 (2d Dep't 1977).

Contract requiring seller to sell specified products from time to time when ordered by buyer during term of agreement did not constitute "requirements" agreement obliging seller to fill all orders placed by buyer; even assuming that provision was "term which measures the quantity by...the requirements of the buyer," seller could not be called upon to furnish buyer "quantity unreasonably disproportionate...to any normal or otherwise comparable prior...requirements" since contract contained no "stated estimate" within meaning of UCC § 2-306(1). Copylease Corp. of Am. v. Memorex Corp., 397 F. Supp. 853 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

A contract which obligated a contractor to furnish his subcontractor all concrete aggregate and sand material "necessary to the preparation" of a definite amount of highway paving amounts to a "requirement contract" within the meaning of subdivision (1) of this section, and whether the contractor in good faith delivered a quantity of material not unreasonably disproportionate to normal requirements for the purpose for which it was delivered is a question of fact to be determined. Gruschus v. C.R. Davis Contracting Co., 75 N.M. 649, 409 P.2d 500 (1965).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Contracts for sale of fall cotton crops at specified price were not uncertain and indefinite, but were sufficient in that they contained all material details necessary for contract to buy and sell; even if contracts were insufficient as to time or place for performance, such deficiencies would be remedied by UCC §§ 2-308 and 2-309 (applying Georgia law). Taunton v. Allenberg Cotton Co., 378 F. Supp. 34 (M.D. Ga. 1973).

UCC § 2-308, being silent as to computation of time for notice of rejection, non-Code statute will be looked to, which, in this case dictates that day of sending of notice will not be counted in computing time specified in Code, so that objection which was mailed on tenth day after confirmation was timely. *Tiffany, Inc. v. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Absence of specific time provisions.
3. Duration of contract.
4. Termination of contract.
5. —Reasonable notification.

1. In general.

In action by buyer, a manufacturer of cup boosters, against seller of aluminum blanks used in manufacture of cup boosters for breach of option authorizing buyer to increase original order by 100 per cent, buyer was entitled to consequential damages pursuant to UCC § 2-715 for costs attributable to extra freight for blanks obtained from substitute supplier, and loss of profits in connection with contract for sale of finished cup boosters to United States which resulted from change in delivery schedule caused by seller's breach; however, buyer could not recover under UCC § 2-715 for transportation of its agent in seeking substitute blanks, and for down time of machinery due to seller's breach, where those damages were not satisfactorily proved (applying Missouri law). R.L. Pohlman Co. v. Keystone Consol. Indus., Inc., 399 F. Supp. 330 (E.D. Mo. 1975).

Auctioneer must be held to obligation of implied warranty of title in connection with sale of automobile, where bidder was not told, and could not ascertain, name of selling dealer until after sale had already been consummated. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 493 S.W.2d 385 (Mo. Ct. 1973).

Although seller of automobile believed that auctioneer who had conducted public auction at which seller had purchased automobile had had good title to automobile, and even though seller checked visible apparent identification number with police and was told that automobile was not stolen, seller was still liable to buyer for breach of both express and implied warranty of title, when automobile was identified as stolen vehicle and taken from buyer by police. Itoh v. Kimi Sales, Ltd., 74 Misc. 2d 402 (1973).

2. Absence of specific time provisions.

Contract under which seller agreed to manufacture cooling systems for incorporation into electronic countermeasure (ECM) pods for United States Air Force was breached by buyer when it failed to furnish seller with source-control drawings for such systems within commercially reasonable time implied in contract by UCC § 2-309(1) and UCC § 1-204(2) (applying Md. law). Westinghouse Elec. Corp.

v. Garrett Corp., 437 F. Supp. 1301 (D. Md. 1977), aff'd, 601 F.2d 155 (4th Cir. Md. 1979).

Where (1) seller and manufacturer, in their "New Equipment Warranty," expressly warranted that buyer of tractor would receive machine "free from defects in material and workmanship under normal use and service," but limited their liability, under UCC § 2-719(1)(a), for breach of such warranty to repair or replacement of parts shown to be defective within specified period, and (2) where defendants' warranty did not state time for performance of their repair-or-replacement obligation, court held that defendants, under UCC § 2-309(1), were obligated to repair or replace defective parts within reasonable time in order to prevent limited remedy from failing in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2). Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of requirements contract under which buyer was to purchase from seller all acid, brine, and fresh water that buyer needed, (1) contract was enforceable under UCC § 2-305(1), even though price of goods had never been agreed on by parties; (2) omission of contract's duration from parties' written agreement did not invalidate contract because it was valid for reasonable time under UCC § 2-309(2); and (3) although contract was terminable at will under UCC § 2-309(2) and (3) on reasonable notification, buyer had burden of asserting that contract had been terminated because seller had been given notice, and seller's failure to allege lack of notice in no way signified failure to state claim on which relief could be granted. McCasland v. Prather, 92 N.M. 192, 585 P.2d 336 (Ct. App. 1978).

Where buyer's written acceptance of offer to sell used steel pipe changed final delivery date from October 15, 1975 to December 15, 1975, but seller's confirmation of buyer's acceptance specified original final delivery date of October 15, 1975, such conflicting dates under UCC § 2-207(1) and (2), and Comment 6 thereto, cancelled each other out. In such case, time for final delivery under UCC § 2-309(1) was reasonable time under circumstances of situation. Southern Idaho Pipe & Steel Co. v. Cal-Cut Pipe & Supply, Inc., 98 Idaho 495, 567 P.2d 1246 (1977), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1056, 98 S. Ct. 1225, 55 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1978).

In buyer's suit for specific performance, where seller, after agreeing to sell all cotton produced by him during 1973 crop year, cancelled contract two months later for buyer's failure to furnish required performance bond within two-week deadline set by seller and buyer thereafter furnished seller with letter of credit (which would expire before cotton was picked) in amount of such bond before buyer finally sent bond itself, (1) since written contract between parties did not specify time bond was to be furnished, UCC § 2-309(1) applied and required that bond be furnished within reasonable time; (2) in determining what was reasonable time, Comment 6 to UCC § 2-309(1) would be followed; (3) under Comment 6, effective communication of proposed time limit calls for response, and failure to reply constitutes acquiescence in such time limit; (4) although buyer did not acquiesce in seller's proposed time limit which was sufficient for answering, new trial would be necessary on issue as to whether buyer furnished bond within reasonable time because buyer's response communication did not answer such issue; and (5) if at new trial buyer should be found to have furnished bond within reasonable time, buyer's remedy would not be suit for specific performance under UCC § 2-716(1), but would be suit under UCC § 2-712(2) for damages for breach of contract, since buyer could have purchased other cotton on open market as cover for cotton not furnished by seller (applying Miss. law). Weathersby v. Gore, 556 F.2d 1247 (5th Cir. 1977).

Although UCC § 2-309(1) did not apply where contracts for sale of grain contained specified delivery times, in absence of express statement that time was of essence or unless there were special circumstances, time was not necessarily of essence, since therefore reasonable delay in delivery or acceptance of grain did not constitute breach of contract. Farmers Union Grain Term. Ass'n v. Hermanson, 549 F.2d 1177 (8th Cir. N.D. 1977).

Even though terms of contract may be indefinite and incomplete as to time of performance, UCC § 2-309(1) mandates that such incomplete provisions be settled according to standard of reasonableness (holding that contract for sale of used car, which was indefinite only as to time for making payment, valid since such time could reasonably be determined under guidelines contained in parties' tentative understanding). Acuri v. Figliolli, 91 Misc. 2d 831 (1977).

In action arising out of delivery of tile after time specified in contract, buyer waived performance date under UCC § 2-209 and, thus, seller had under UCC § 2-309 reasonable time beyond time specified in contract to perform where buyer acquiesced in repeated delays in performance by seller and elected not to terminate contract for non-performance when delivery was not made by final contract date (applying Tennessee law). United States ex rel. Shankle-Clairday, Inc. v. Crow, 414 F. Supp. 160 (M.D. Tenn. 1976).

Under UCC §§ 2-204(1) and 1-201(3), buyer was not justified in terminating orders of submarine valves for alleged failure to meet delivery dates specified in contracts, notwithstanding alleged promise by seller to meet or improve upon delivery dates originally requested by buyer, where buyer requested certain delivery dates when it placed orders, seller clearly and unequivocally rejected buyer's requested dates and promised delivery at later dates, buyer merely appealed to seller to conform to requested dates and later appealed to seller to expedite one shipment, and buyer gave no notice to seller that seller breached contract by failing to meet required delivery dates. Crane Co. v. Roberts Supply Co., 196 Neb. 67, 241 N.W.2d 516 (1976).

Where contract between manufacturer and distributor for sale of certain product was to run for "initial term," defined to commence on date of execution and to "continue for a period of 12 months from the date of the first shipment" of specified product, and granted distributor right to renew for successive 12-month periods provided distributor maintained certain level of purchases, but where no such specified product was shipped or ordered prior to manufacturer's repudiation of contract a little more than one year after execution of contract, "initial term," and thus contract, did not expire one year after date of execution; question as to what constituted "reasonable time" for distributor's performance under contract depended upon circumstances of transaction and course of performance and, in view of dispute which had arisen between parties, it was not unreasonable for distributor to refrain from ordering specified product until contract renegotiations were resolved (applying California law). Copylease Corp. of Am. v. Memorex Corp., 403 F. Supp. 625 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Under UCC §§ 2-201(1) and 2-309, oral contract to supply plastic pipe which did not include times for delivery was enforceable beyond extent to which it had been performed (applying Alabama law). Owens v. Clow Corp., 491 F.2d 101 (5th Cir. Ala. 1974).

Contracts for sale of fall cotton crops at specified price were not uncertain and indefinite, but were sufficient in that they contained all material details necessary for contract to buy and sell; even if contracts were insufficient as to time or place for performance, such deficiencies would be remedied by UCC §§ 2-308 and 2-309 (applying Georgia law). Taunton v. Allenberg Cotton Co., 378 F. Supp. 34 (M.D. Ga. 1973).

In action arising out of agreement to provide city with municipal personnel ordinance for fixed fee, necessary elements of valid, binding contract, whether in terms of services contract or one for sale of goods, were present where UCC § 2-201(1) requirement that there be writing sufficient to indicate that contract has been made was met and where plaintiff commenced performance of its obligations within reasonable time as required by UCC § 2-309 (applying New Mexico law). National Civil Serv. League v. City of Santa Fe, 370 F. Supp. 1128 (D.N.M. 1973).

3. Duration of contract.

In seller's action for buyer's breach of requirements contract under which buyer was to purchase from seller all acid, brine, and fresh water that buyer needed, (1) contract was enforceable under UCC § 2-

305(1), even though price of goods had never been agreed on by parties; (2) omission of contract's duration from parties' written agreement did not invalidate contract because it was valid for reasonable time under UCC § 2-309(2); and (3) although contract was terminable at will under UCC § 2-309(2) and (3) on reasonable notification, buyer had burden of asserting that contract had been terminated because seller had been given notice, and seller's failure to allege lack of notice in no way signified failure to state claim on which relief could be granted. McCasland v. Prather, 92 N.M. 192, 585 P.2d 336 (Ct. App. 1978).

Contract between city water authority and utility company to provide water and sewer service to landowners within certain area contemplated continuing or successive performance, making it indefinite in duration and terminable at will of either party under UCC § 2-309. Clear Lake City Water Auth. v. Clear Lake Utils. Co., 549 S.W.2d 385 (Tex. 1977).

In action between general contractor for construction of housing project and subcontractor who had agreed to supply all concrete needed on project arising when labor dispute caused general contractor to purchase balance of concrete requirements elsewhere, under UCC §§ 2-306(1) and 2-309(1) agreement was enforceable requirements contract where duration of contract was sufficiently determined by occurrence of completion of project; depending on circumstances, labor dispute may give rise to defense of impossibility of performance under UCC § 2-615. Mishara Constr. Co. v. Transit-Mixed Concrete Corp., 365 Mass. 122, 310 N.E.2d 363, 70 A.L.R.3d 1259 (1974).

In action for breach of implied franchise agreement, question of reasonable duration of agreement should have been submitted to jury, in view of evidence regarding difficulty in building sales in early years, losses during those early years, and investment by plaintiff dealer in time and money in building franchise (applying Minnesota law). McGinnis Piano & Organ Co. v. Yamaha Int'l Corp., 480 F.2d 474 (8th Cir. Minn. 1973).

Plaintiffs who agreed to purchase defendant's beer for cash, only as long, and in such quantities as they wished were bound to nothing, and the agreement, at most, was one at will terminable by either party. Weilersbacher v. Pittsburgh Brewing Co., 421 Pa. 118, 218 A.2d 806 (1966).

4. Termination of contract.

In seller's action for buyer's breach of requirements contract under which buyer was to purchase from seller all acid, brine, and fresh water that buyer needed, (1) contract was enforceable under UCC § 2-305(1), even though price of goods had never been agreed on by parties; (2) omission of contract's duration from parties' written agreement did not invalidate contract because it was valid for reasonable time under UCC § 2-309(2); and (3) although contract was terminable at will under UCC § 2-309(2) and (3) on reasonable notification, buyer had burden of asserting that contract had been terminated because seller had been given notice, and seller's failure to allege lack of notice in no way signified failure to state claim on which relief could be granted. McCasland v. Prather, 92 N.M. 192, 585 P.2d 336 (Ct. App. 1978).

Distributorship agreement between paper manufacturer and paper distributor, which contained no express provision regarding its duration, was terminable at will of either party under UCC § 2-309(3) (applying Michigan law). Aaron E. Levine & Co. v. Calkraft Paper Co., 429 F. Supp. 1039 (E.D. Mich. 1976).

Under UCC § 2-309(2), in absence of any controlling contractual provisions, agreement with plaintiff to operate retail gasoline service station could be terminated by oil company without cause (applying Pennsylvania law). Goldinger v. Boron Oil Co., 375 F. Supp. 400 (W.D. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 511 F.2d 1393 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 834, 96 S. Ct. 59, 46 L. Ed. 2d 52 (1975).

Grain elevator breached agreement to purchase 4,000 bushels of wheat for March delivery where elevator purchased more grain for cash during contract delivery period than amount involved in contract with seller, but refused to accept delivery of seller's grain during contract period and for 2 months thereafter; thus, seller was entitled to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703(6) and resell wheat at private sale; since seller exercised his right to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703, and since he was not seeking to recover damages, he was not required to give notice of his intent to resell under UCC § 2-706, nor was he required to notify elevator under UCC § 2-309 that he was “terminating” contract. Mott Equity Elevator v. Svihovec, 236 N.W.2d 900 (N.D. 1975).

Provision in truck franchise agreement giving either party right to terminate contract without cause was specifically sanctioned by Pennsylvania Uniform Commercial Code, and was not unconscionable practice within meaning of Code § 2-302 (applying Pennsylvania law). Artman v. International Harvester Co., 355 F. Supp. 482 (W.D. Pa. 1973).

The requirement of good faith of the Code is an overriding provision that applies to the termination provision. TeleControls, Inc. v. Ford Indus., Inc., 388 F.2d 48 (7th Cir. Ill. 1967).

Contract for wholesale purchase of beer between brewery and local beverage company providing that the agreement could be terminated by either party at any time without cause or notice was not unconscionable, considering only factors at time contract was made, and 10-day notice of cancellation by brewery was valid. Sinkoff Beverage Co. v. Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co., 51 Misc. 2d 446 (1966).

5. —Reasonable notification.

A distributorship agreement is an agreement for the sale of goods and is subject to the provisions of Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code. Therefore, under UCC § 2-309(3), reasonable notification is required to terminate an on-going oral agreement for the sale of goods in a manufacturer-supplier or dealer-distributor relationship. Leibel v. Raynor Mfg. Co., 571 S.W.2d 640 (Ky. Ct. App. 1978).

UCC § 2-309(3) recognizes that the application of the principles of good faith and sound commercial practice normally call for such notification of the termination of a going contract relationship as will give the other party reasonable time to seek a substitute arrangement. An arrangement that dispenses with notification or limits the time for seeking a substitute arrangement is, of course, valid under UCC § 2-

309(3), unless the result of putting it into operation would create an unconscionable state of affairs. Leibel v. Raynor Mfg. Co., 571 S.W.2d 640 (Ky. Ct. App. 1978).

The requirement of reasonable notification under UCC § 2-309(3) does not relate to the method of giving notice. Instead, it relates to the circumstances under which notice is given and the extent of advance warning of termination that it provides. What length of time constitutes reasonable notice, however, is a question of material fact to be decided in each case. Leibel v. Raynor Mfg. Co., 571 S.W.2d 640 (Ky. Ct. App. 1978).

Where seller did not give buyer notice of change in price of egg feed, difference between prices stated on feed invoices sent to buyer and prices listed on wholesale price lists, which seller had stopped sending to buyer, did not constitute all notice of price changes that buyer could reasonably expect to receive under UCC § 2-309(3), requiring that reasonable notification of termination of contract by one party must be received by the other party. Agway, Inc. v. Ernst, 394 A.2d 774 (Me. 1978).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of requirements contract under which buyer was to purchase from seller all acid, brine, and fresh water that buyer needed, (1) contract was enforceable under UCC § 2-305(1), even though price of goods had never been agreed on by parties; (2) omission of contract's duration from parties' written agreement did not invalidate contract because it was valid for reasonable time under UCC § 2-309(2); and (3) although contract was terminable at will under UCC § 2-309(2) and (3) on reasonable notification, buyer had burden of asserting that contract had been terminated because seller had been given notice, and seller's failure to allege lack of notice in no way signified failure to state claim on which relief could be granted. McCasland v. Prather, 92 N.M. 192, 585 P.2d 336 (Ct. App. 1978).

Oral contract under which plaintiff acted as defendant's sales representative in specified territory from April, 1972 to May 15, 1975 lasted “for a reasonable time” under UCC § 2-309(2), and plaintiff received “reasonable notification” of con-tract's termination under UCC § 2-309(3) when defendant gave plaintiff written notification of such termination on April 17, 1975. In such case, moreover, since defendant was entitled under state law to terminate arbitrarily its relationship with plaintiff, a third party who was joined as a codefendant also was not liable to plaintiff for inducing such breach of contract (applying Ind law and holding that UCC governed agency agreements like contract in issue). Rockwell Eng'g Co. v. Automatic Timing & Controls Co., 559 F.2d 460 (7th Cir. Ind. 1977).

Distributorship agreement between paper manufacturer and paper distributor, which contained no express provision regarding its duration, was terminable at will of either party upon giving reasonable notice in accord with § 2-309(3); reasonable notice was given where, inter alia, distributor has sufficient notice to enable him to find new source of supply, even in tight market conditions existing at time of termination (applying Michigan law). Aaron E. Levine & Co. v. Calkraft Paper Co., 429 F. Supp. 1039 (E.D. Mich. 1976).

Unless otherwise agreed

(a) payment is due at the time and place at which the buyer is to receive the goods even though the place of shipment is the place of delivery; and

(b) if the seller is authorized to send the goods he may ship them under reservation, and may tender the documents of title, but the buyer may inspect the goods after their arrival before payment is due unless such inspection is inconsistent with the terms of the contract (Section 2-513) [Section 75-2-513]; and

(d) where the seller is required or authorized to ship the goods on credit the credit period runs from the time of shipment but postdating the invoice or delaying its dispatch will correspondingly delay the starting of the credit period.

§ 75-2-311. Options and cooperation respecting performance.

(1) An agreement for sale which is otherwise sufficiently definite (subsection (3) of Section 2-204) [Section 75-2-204(3)] to be a contract is not made invalid by the fact that it leaves particulars of performance to be specified by one of the parties. Any such specification must be made in good faith and within limits set by commercial reasonableness.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed specifications relating to assortment of the goods are at the buyer's option and except as otherwise provided in subsections (1)(c) and (3) of Section 2-319 [Section 75-2-319(1)(c) and (3)] specifications or arrangements relating to shipment are at the seller's option.

(3) Where such specification would materially affect the other party's performance but is not seasonably made or where one party's cooperation is necessary to the agreed performance of the other but is not seasonably forthcoming, the other party in addition to all other remedies

(a) is excused for any resulting delay in his own performance; and,

(b) may also either proceed to perform in any reasonable manner or after the time for a material part of his own performance treat the failure to specify or to cooperate as a breach by failure to deliver or accept the goods.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Where contract for sale of sailing vessel required buyer to obtain new documents for ship and buyer's inability to perform was not caused by seller's failure to obtain United States documentation for ship, but rather buyer's alien status precluded documenting vessel in United States, and want of United States documentation prevented performance as to buyer's furnishing preferred ship mortgage, buyer's breach was not excused under UCC § 2-311 on grounds that seller failed to cooperate in obtaining proper documents of title (applying Georgia law). R.C. Craig, Ltd. v. Ships of the Sea, Inc., 401 F. Supp. 1051 (S.D. Ga. 1975).

Shipping instructions issued by buyer calling for delivery of 10,000 tons of fertilizer during first 25 working days of month, freight prepaid, to places other than buyer's plant, did not constitute anticipatory repudiation of contract under which seller agreed to sell and ship, and buyer agreed to buy and receive at its plant, 10,000 tons of fertilizer within eight-month period of time where (1) quantity requested in shipping instructions did not exceed quantity specified in contract; (2) evidence established that prepayment of freight and shipping to place other than buyer's plant were in accord with course of dealing between parties and, even without course of dealing, there was nothing in language of contract repugnant to place or manner of shipment specified in shipping instructions; (3) seller failed to demonstrate that buyer's demanding entire season's supply in one month was commercially unreasonable and not made in good faith as required by UCC § 2-311(1) (apparently applying Illinois law). Neal-Cooper Grain Co. v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., 508 F.2d 283 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

§ 75-2-312. Warranty of title and against infringement; buyer's obligation against infringement.

(1) Subject to subsection (2) there is in a contract for sale a warranty by the seller that

(a) the title conveyed shall be good, and its transfer rightful; and

(b) the goods shall be delivered free from any security interest or other lien or encumbrance of which the buyer at the time of contracting has no knowledge.

(2) A warranty under subsection (1) will be excluded or modified only by a specific language or by circumstances which give the buyer reason to know that the person selling does not claim title in himself or that he is purporting to sell only such right or title as he or a third person may have.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed a seller who is a merchant regularly dealing in goods of the kind warrants that the goods shall be delivered free of the rightful claim of any third person by way of infringement or the like but a buyer who furnishes specifications to the seller must hold the seller harmless against any such claim which arises out of compliance with the specifications.

Since trade-in of boat constituted sale under UCC § 2-304(1), seller, although he did not expressly warrant title to boat, nevertheless impliedly warranted title thereto under UCC § 2-312(1) by virtue of his failure to show, as required by UCC § 2-312(2), that such implied warranty was excluded or modified by specific language or by circumstances that gave buyer reason to know that seller did not claim title in himself and that he purported to sell only such right or title as he had. Gunderland Marine Supply, Inc. v. Bray, 570 S.W.2d 542 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Nov. 29, 1978).

Where substantial evidence of fraud was introduced in that (a) the defendant represented to the plaintiff that he was the owner of the automobile in question; (b) that the plaintiff had purchased the automobile from the defendant for the sum of $1,650; and that (c) the automobile was ultimately impounded as a stolen vehicle, the evidence established as a matter of law a right on the part of plaintiff to rescind his automobile purchase transaction and to recover the purchase price which he had paid to the defendant. Sarad v. Tatum, 492 P.2d 882 (Colo. Ct. App. 1971).

A corporation's sale of an aircraft while it was encumbered by a chattel mortgage was a breach of its implied warranty that the plane was free from encumbrances. Marine Midland Trust Co. v. Halik, 28 A.D.2d 1077 (4th Dep't 1967), aff'd, 23 N.Y.2d 789, 297 N.Y.S.2d 297, 244 N.E.2d 868 (1968).

A petition alleging that Zoysia lawn grass was warranted by the seller to survive winter weather, and that the grass subsequently died of the cold, states a cause of action, for the decisive test, in determining whether language used is a mere expression of opinion or a warranty, is whether it purports to state a fact upon which it may fairly be presumed the seller expects the buyer to rely, and upon which the buyer would ordinarily rely, and no particular form of words is necessary to constitute a warranty. Bell v. Menzies, 110 Ga. App. 436, 138 S.E.2d 731 (1964).

2. Warranty of title.

Even though seller may have acted innocently in sale of truck which turned out to be stolen, he is liable to buyer for breach of warranty of title. Crook Motor Co. v. Goolsby, 703 F. Supp. 511 (N.D. Miss. 1988).

In action by wholesale seller against retailer-buyer for conversion of carpeting, in which (1) seller's salesman validly sold buyer carpeting worth $24,000 and buyer made payment with four checks, one of which was returned for insufficient funds, (2) salesman improperly obtained buyer's returned check and one of buyer's four other checks, instructed buyer to issue two checks for $10,000 to corporation that was salesman's alter ego, and appropriated proceeds of such checks, (3) salesman later diverted shipment of carpeting worth $76,000 from party to whom wholesaler had sold it, delivered such shipment to buyer, and appropriated $10,000 downpayment that buyer made on such shipment, (4) buyer eventually returned part of diverted shipment to wholesaler and sold remainder, which was worth $30,000, and (5) wholesaler sought (a) $5,000 spent to recover returned carpeting, (b) $30,000 for carpeting that buyer had sold from diverted shipment, and (c) $10,000 balance still due on carpeting that buyer had bought under valid contract with wholesaler's salesman, court held (1) that buyer, although misled by salesman into giving salesman two checks made out to corporation that was salesman's alter ego, nevertheless knew at that time that wholesaler was party to which buyer owed $10,000 balance on buyer's valid carpet purchase from wholesaler, (2) that salesman had stolen diverted carpeting shipment from wholesaler, (3) that buyer had not acquired valid title to diverted carpeting, under UCC § 2-403(1)(d), since wholesaler had not dealt with its salesman in transaction of purchase, (4) that buyer also had not obtained valid title to diverted carpeting shipment, under entrustment provisions of UCC § 2-403(2) and (3), since wholesaler had not entrusted its salesman with such shipment, (5) that salesman's theft of diverted carpeting gave him void, instead of voidable, title to such carpeting which he could not pass on to even bona-fide purchaser, with result that wholesaler still had title to such carpeting, (6) that since buyer had converted part of diverted carpeting shipment by selling it, buyer was liable to wholesaler for such conversion, together with sum that wholesaler had spent to recover carpeting that buyer returned, and (7) that buyer's remedy, if any, was against salesman or his alter-ego corporation, in action under UCC § 2-312, for breach of implied warranty of title to carpeting in diverted shipment. Textile Supplies, Inc. v. Garrett, 687 F.2d 123 (5th Cir. 1982).

In action for seller's breach of warranty of good title to motor home purchased by plaintiff, where (1) original owner of home rented it for 13 days to thief who "drove off into the sunset" and was never again seen by owner, (2) thief thereafter obtained Alabama registration for home, and also Nebraska and Indiana certificates of title therefor, before trading it in to defendant dealer in Indiana as part payment for truck and trailer, (3) plaintiff purchased home from defendants, who gave plaintiff certificate of title thereto, (4) Indiana state police seized home from plaintiff and surrendered it to original owner's insurer, (5) home's serial number proved to have been stolen, and (6) such false identification number appeared on all documents respecting home that thief had obtained in Alabama, Nebraska, and Indiana, court held (1) that rental transaction between original owner and thief constituted a "purchase" under UCC §§ 2-403(1) and § 1-201(32), since thief had acquired possessory interest in home by renting it, (2) thief did not transfer good title to defendant, as good-faith purchaser for value, since thief's title to home was void and not voidable under UCC § 2-403(1), (4) since defendant had no good title to convey to plaintiff, defendant breached its warranty of title under UCC § 2-312 and (5) evidence supported damages awarded plaintiff under UCC § 2-714(2) and (3). McDonald's Chevrolet, Inc. v. Johnson, 176 Ind. App. 399, 376 N.E.2d 106 (1978).

Where boat owner's broker-agent accepted seller's offer to purchase owner's boat, free and clear of all liens, owner warranted that he was owner of boat and that he was conveying warranted title free and clear of all liens or any security interest. Allen v. Carlotti, 400 F. Supp. 1037 (S.D. Fla. 1975), aff'd, 552 F.2d 1086 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

In suit by buyer of antique pistol against seller under UCC § 2-312(1) for breach of warranty of title, evidence that pistol was taken from buyer's possession by police on information that it was stolen property and that it was never returned to buyer was sufficient to show breach of warranty of title, and proof of theft was not required. Trial v. McCoy, 553 S.W.2d 199 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Dealer's implied warranty of good title to modular home, or house trailer, under UCC § 2-312(1)(a) was not binding on manufacturer of home, on alleged ground that dealer was sales agent for manufacturer, where evidence showed that dealer's relationship with manufacturer was actually that of buyer and seller on credit. Fuqua Homes, Inc. v. Evanston Bldg. & Loan Co., 52 Ohio App. 2d 399, 370 N.E.2d 780 (1977).

Seller of packinghouse waste processing plant was liable to buyer for labor and materialmen liens, notwithstanding that the contract did not include specific hold-harmless clause as to such liens and notwithstanding that buyer did not insist on laborer and materialmen's bond specified in contract, where contract did require that seller furnish all tools, equipment, labor and material and perform all work in accordance with plans and specifications and warranty existed under UCC § 2-312 that title of plant would be good and its transfer rightful. Omaha Pollution Control Corp. v. Carver-Greenfield Corp., 413 F. Supp. 1069 (D. Neb. 1976).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of title, brought by buyer of stolen automobile against seller wherein buyer had undisturbed possession of automobile for period of approximately nine months, value of automobile at time buyer's possession was disturbed so that he lost use of automobile was proper measure of damages. Ricklefs v. Clemens, 216 Kan. 128, 531 P.2d 94, 94 A.L.R.3d 572 (1975).

Except as limited by UCC § 2-102, provisions of sales of goods chapter of UCC are applicable to sale of motor vehicle and, under UCC § 2-312(1), dealer in motor vehicles warrants he will convey good title free from any security interest or other lien or encumbrance of which buyer is without knowledge when contract of sale is made; absent express contractual language or circumstances under which person buying motor vehicle knows or should have known that only limited warranty is intended in accord with UCC § 2-312(2) (but only to extent that such warranty can be limited), automobile dealer having authority to expose floor-planned cars for sale in ordinary course of business binds his mortgagee to deliver title to any vehicle so sold when payment is made to dealer and whether or not dealer remits proceeds to his mortgagee. Levin v. Nielsen, 37 Ohio App. 2d 29, 306 N.E.2d 173 (1973).

Breach of warranty of good title; held, this constitutes failure of consideration and generally gives buyer right to rescind transaction. American Container Corp. v. Hanley Trucking Corp., 111 N.J. Super. 322, 268 A.2d 313 (1970).

Where the defendant insurance company had made payment to its insured and received title to an automobile that had been involved in a collision, and subsequently sold that car to plaintiff, there was attached to the sale an implied warranty of title and upon seizure of the automobile as a stolen vehicle by police, that warranty was breached rendering defendant liable for normal damages for breach or warranty of title. John St. Auto Wrecking v. Motors Ins. Corp., 56 Misc. 2d 232 (1968).

Where a motor car company, warranting good title, sold a stolen automobile to another company which, also warranting good title, sold automobile to plaintiffs, and subsequently an insurance company, as assignee of owner, maintained a successful replevin action against plaintiffs, plaintiffs were entitled to maintain breach of warranty action against the sellers who, although notified, failed to appear and defend the replevin action against plaintiff. Frank v. McCafferty Ford Co., 192 Pa. Super. 435, 161 A.2d 896 (1960).

3. Exclusion or modification of warranty.

Since trade-in of boat constituted sale under UCC § 2-304(1), seller, although he did not expressly warrant title to boat, nevertheless impliedly warranted title thereto under UCC § 2-312(1) by virtue of his failure to show, as required by UCC § 2-312(2), that such implied warranty was excluded or modified by specific language or by circumstances that gave buyer reason to know that seller did not claim title in himself and that he purported to sell only such right or title as he had. Gunderland Marine Supply, Inc. v. Bray, 570 S.W.2d 542 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Nov. 29, 1978).

Provision in contract for sale of recreation equipment located in seller's theater building which provided that seller should in no way be deemed to be liable under any guarantees or warranties concerning such equipment, including any implied warranties of title, was ineffective to disclaim warranty of title under UCC § 2-312(2), since such provision did not make disclaimer in specific language required by UCC § 2-312(2), but was couched in negative terminology that stated what seller would not be liable for, rather than what buyer was not receiving. Moreover, in such case testimony that manager of seller's theater had told buyer prior to sale that seller owned such equipment was not precluded by parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202, since party may not invoke parol evidence rule to shield his own fraud. Sunseri v. RKO-Stanley Warner Theatres, Inc., 248 Pa. Super. 111, 374 A.2d 1342 (1977).

Warranty of title, arising in connection with transfer of motor vehicle, may not be modified or waived; Uniform Motor Vehicle Certificate of Title and Anti-Theft Act controlled vehicle transfer, rather than UCC § 2-312, whose warranty of title may be modified or excluded. Mulvaney v. Tri State Truck & Auto Body, Inc., 70 Wis. 2d 760, 235 N.W.2d 460 (1975).

Where the seller transferred all of his right, title, and interest in an antique car, stated that no other title existed to his knowledge and that the bill of sale was the original evidence of title, such language, as a matter of law, is not sufficient to exclude the warranty of title. Jones v. Linebaugh, 34 Mich. App. 305, 191 N.W.2d 142 (1971).

§ 75-2-313. Express warranties by affirmation, promise, description, sample.

(1) Express warranties by the seller are created as follows:

(a) Any affirmation of fact or promise made by the seller to the buyer which relates to the goods and becomes part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the goods shall conform to the affirmation or promise.

(b) Any description of the goods which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the goods shall conform to the description.

(c) Any sample or model which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model.

(2) It is not necessary to the creation of an express warranty that the seller use formal words such as “warrant” or “guarantee” or that he have a specific intention to make a warranty, but an affirmation merely of the value of the goods or a statement purporting to be merely the seller’s opinion or commendation of the goods does not create a warranty.

1. In general; scope.

Three warranties recognized by Mississippi law applicable to a chicken feeder system purchased by defendants from plaintiff on an open account are express warranties, implied warranty of merchantability, and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose. McLaurin v. Smith's Poultry & Farm Supply, Inc., 499 So. 2d 1361 (Miss. 1986).

Although UCC § 2-313(1) is limited in its scope and direct purpose to warranties made by the seller to the buyer as part of a contract of sale, the warranty sections of UCC Article 2 are not designed in any way to disturb those lines of case law growth which have recognized that warranties need not be confined either to sales contracts or to the direct parties to such a contract (quoting Comment 2 to UCC § 2-313, and holding that that section did not inhibit finding that non-UCC express warranty attached to rebuilt transmission that had been installed in automobile by company to which defendant had granted franchise to perform such service). Scheuler v. Aamco Transmissions, Inc., 1 Kan. App. 2d 525, 571 P.2d 48 (1977).

Express warranty has to do with title, character, quantity, quality, identity or condition of goods; a delay in delivery is not a breach of warranty. A.A. Baxter Corp. v. Colt Indus., Inc., 10 Cal. App. 3d 144 (4th Dist. 1970).

2. —Lease or bailment.

UCC § 2-313 would be applied to lease of three motor scraper units by analogy; thus, assuming that representation made by lessor prior to written agreement created express warranties as to mechanical condition of units and position of tires, lessee waived any contractual rights arising from such express warranties upon entering into modification of lease agreement with knowledge of mechanical and tire problems. Glenn Dick Equip. Co. v. Galey Constr., Inc., 97 Idaho 216, 541 P.2d 1184 (1975).

Contract was lease arrangement and was not covered by Uniform Commercial Code provisions relating to warranties where one party agreed to lease certain hens, known as "Parent Stock," and eggs therefrom, known as "Hatching Eggs," to other party for purpose of producing offspring, where contract provided that first party retained title to "Parent Stock" and "Hatching Eggs" and other party was precluded from selling or otherwise disposing of same without express written consent of first party, and where contract additionally provided for termination by either party on written notice at least 30 days in advance. DeKalb Agresearch, Inc. v. Abbott, 391 F. Supp. 152 (N.D. Ala. 1974), aff'd, 511 F.2d 1162 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

3. —Service contracts.

Contract for installation and maintenance by defendant of burglar alarm system on plaintiff's premises, which provided that equipment installed should remain property of defendant, did not constitute sale of equipment so as to be basis of cause of action for breach of either express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1) or implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and UCC § 2-315 (also stating that implied warranties do not attach to performance of a service). Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

Warranties are limited to the sales of goods, and no warranty attaches to the performance of a service. Aegis Prods., Inc. v. Arriflex Corp. of Am., 25 A.D.2d 639 (1st Dep't 1966).

4. —Mixed sales and service contracts.

Where complaint showed that furnishing of allegedly unsafe drug to decedent was incidental feature of professional services rendered by defendant physicians, no sale of such drug occurred within meaning of Uniform Commercial Code that could give rise to cause of action for breach of any express or implied warranties under UCC § 2-313(1), § 2-314(1), and § 2-315. Osborn v. Kelley, 61 A.D.2d 367 (3d Dep't 1978).

Even if installation of burglar alarm equipment, with the equipment to remain the property of the installer, was a lease of the burglar alarm equipment, no express or implied warranty could attach to the service portion of the contract. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

Insofar as applicability of implied warranty provisions of Uniform Commercial Code to sale of product under hybrid sales-service contract is concerned, if service aspect of such contract is predominant and transfer of personal property is merely incidental feature of transaction, exacting warranty standards in Uniform Commercial Code for imposing liability without proof of fault will not be imported from law of sales to render liable those who perform trade or professional services, such as building services under construction contract. Those who hire experts for predominant purpose of rendering services and who rely on their special skills cannot expect infallibility. Therefore, unless the parties have contractually bound themselves to a higher standard of performance, reasonable care and competence owed generally by practitioners in the particular trade or profession define the limits of an injured party's justifiable demands (also stating that since express warranty provisions of UCC § 2-313(1)(a) apply only to contracts for sale of goods, that section would be no more applicable to contract for rendition of services than the code's implied warranty provisions). Milau Assocs. v. North Ave. Dev. Corp., 42 N.Y.2d 482, 368 N.E.2d 1247 (1977).

5. Persons protected; privity.

In action by purchaser of rifle against manufacturer's distributor for breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of rifle for ordinary purposes for which it was to be used, (1) distributor was remote seller who could be held liable under Uniform Commercial Code for breach of either express or implied warranty; (2) unlike Uniform Commercial Code, Georgia law required existence of privity of contract before liability could be imposed on distributor or remote seller under theory of express or implied warranty; (3) requirement of privity was complied with because distributor, by written statement accompanying rifle, "fully guaranteed" its use by ultimate consumer, and such express warranty was part of bargain of sale; and (4) since distributor's express warranty contained no limitation on its provisions and also did not exclude any implied warranties attaching to rifle, distributor could be held liable under either UCC § 2-313(1)(a) for breach of express warranty or UCC § 2-314(2)(c) for breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of rifle for ordinary purposes for which it was to be used (holding that distributor failed to discharge its burden of establishing nonexistence of plaintiff's right to recover). Jones v. Cranman's Sporting Goods, 142 Ga. App. 838, 237 S.E.2d 402 (1977).

In products liability action by purchaser of automobile against manufacturer for injuries allegedly resulting from manufacturer's breach of express and implied warranties of fitness: (1) cause of action was governed by UCC four-year statute of limitations, § 2-725, rather than general three-year statute; (2) action was not barred under UCC by lack of privity. Reid v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 512 F.2d 1294 (6th Cir. Mich. 1975).

Express and implied warranties rest upon sales and the existence of a buyer-seller relationship, insofar as the UCC deals with the subject. Cheshire v. Southampton Hosp. Ass'n, 53 Misc. 2d 355 (1967).

No privity of contract is required where there is an express warranty to the purchaser. Seely v. White Motor Co., 63 Cal. 2d 9, 403 P.2d 145 (1965), overruled on other grounds, Huang v. Garner, 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 (1st Dist. 1984).

The instant section was referred to in a case in which it was held that plaintiff's declaration in contract for breach of warranty failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a claim against the defendant, in connection with the proposition that the declaration also showed affirmatively that there was no privity between the parties. Spring Valley Country Club, Inc. v. Malden Supply Co., 349 Mass. 764, 208 N.E.2d 230 (1965).

5.5. Persons liable.

An automobile dealer was entitled to summary judgment in a breach of warranty action, notwithstanding that there was no question that the dealer used the warranty as an inducement to the purchase of a car by the plaintiff, as there was no evidence to suggest that the dealer embraced that warranty in any capacity other than as an agent of the manufacturer, which refused to honor the warranty. Wright v. Paul Moak Pontiac, Inc., — So. 2d —, 2001 Miss. App. LEXIS 172 (Miss. Ct. App. May 1, 2001).

6. Pleading.

To plead properly cause of action for breach of warranty under Uniform Commercial Code, complaint should at least allege the following: (1) facts respecting sale of the goods; (2) identification of warranty created as being express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1), implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1), or implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; (3) facts respecting creation of such warranty; (4) facts respecting its breach; (5) giving to seller of notice of breach required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (6) injuries sustained by buyer as result of breach (holding that third-party complaint failed to state cause of action because it did not comply with above list of essential allegations). Dunham-Bush, Inc. v. Thermo-Air Serv., Inc., 351 So. 2d 351 (Fla. App. 1977).

In products liability action against, inter alia, manufacturer and dealer of automobile, for purpose of evaluating sufficiency of plaintiff's allegations to effect that manufacturer was liable for "secondary impact" injuries caused by design defects, based on breach of warranty, although breach of both implied and express warranties was alleged, warranties would be treated as one since both warranted automobile as being suitable for its intended purpose, i.e., provision of reasonably safe transportation. Frericks v. GMC, 274 Md. 288, 336 A.2d 118 (1975).

In order for a plaintiff to recover in action based on a breach of an express warranty, the plaintiff must allege and prove that the product failed to perform in accordance with the express warranties (affirmations or promises relating to the goods which were a basis of the bargain) and that such failure was not caused by its use contrary to the express warranty terms. Elanco Prods. Co. v. Akin-Tunnell, 474 S.W.2d 789 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971), writ ref'd n.r.e., (May 3, 1972).

UCC does not change common-law rule that in action for breach of express warranty it is unnecessary to allege or prove scienter. Kensair Corp. v. Peltier, 28 Colo. App. 290, 472 P.2d 700 (1970).

The buyer will not be required to aver the name of the person making the warranty as the seller's agent since the defendant should have as good or better knowledge thereof than the plaintiff. Santai v. Seitzinger Bros., Ford, 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 42 (Pa. 1962).

7. Choice of law.

In wrongful death action involving claims based on breach of both express warranties and implied warranty of merchantability attaching to defendant's sale of radial tires to plaintiff and her deceased husband, court held (1) that under UCC § 1-105(1), since significant part of transaction, including sale, service, and use of the tires, had occurred in Florida, plaintiff's cause of action arose in Florida and was guaranteed by Florida Wrongful Death Act, (2) that plaintiffs' theory of recovery was governed by Florida's interpretation of Florida Uniform Commercial Code provisions governing actions for breach of express and implied warranties, and (3) that under Florida law, contributory negligence, assumption of the risk, and misuse were available defenses to action for breach of warranty. Westerman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 577 F.2d 873 (5th Cir. Fla. 1978).

Where (1) under Texas pre-UCC law, transfer of properties lacking agreed values was an exchange of property and transfer of properties at agreed values was a sale, and where (2) horses involved in suit were traded at agreed values, court would refrain from deciding whether Texas UCC § 2-304(1) should be interpreted to retain pre-UCC distinction between sale and exchange of property (applying Texas law; denying plaintiff recovery for defendant's alleged breach of express and implied warranties provided for by UCC § 2-313(1) and § 2-314(1)). Calloway v. Manion, 572 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

8. Evidence and burden of proof.

In action by operator of hog farm for breach of express and implied warranties attaching under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) and 2-314(1) to corn purchased by plaintiff to feed his hogs, evidence was sufficient to support verdict and judgment in plaintiff's favor where it showed (1) that plaintiff's hogs became ill after eating contaminated corn purchased from defendant, (2) that samples of other corn that plaintiff at that time had also fed to his hogs, which corn was purchased from other sources, proved on analysis to be completely negative for toxins, while samples of corn sold by defendant were positive for toxins, and (3) that plaintiff's hogs had not been sick before eating corn purchased from defendant, but had become sick thereafter. Tillman & Deal Farm Supply, Inc. v. Deal, 146 Ga. App. 232, 246 S.E.2d 138 (1978).

In action by purchaser of stove from defendant seller for damages for destruction of plaintiff's home in fire allegedly caused by defect in stove, directed verdict for defendant was proper where plaintiff failed to introduce evidence from which jury could have found that destruction of her home had resulted from stove's alleged defect. Moreover, such verdict was proper, regardless of whether plaintiff's action was based on implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, an express warranty governed by UCC § 2-313, or tort theory of products liability, since plaintiff under any of these theories was still required to prove that alleged defect in stove caused destruction of home. Crocker v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 346 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 1977).

Evidence was sufficient to support finding that seller breached implied warranty that feed was of merchantable quality and reasonably fit for commercial feeding of dairy cattle, where, inter alia, veterinarian testified that cows often back away from quality of mix which defendant sold plaintiff; although buyer was obligated under UCC § 2-607 to pay for goods accepted at a contract rate, he was not barred thereby from recovering damages resulting from defects in such goods. Jorritsma v. Farmers' Feed & Supply Co., 272 Or. 499, 538 P.2d 61 (1975).

Where prior to using artificial insemination rancher got 95 percent calf crop via natural service, and obtained 70 percent calf crop during first year of artificial insemination, but obtained only 7 percent calf crop during second year using semen from same bull under almost identical conditions, only logical inference was that something was wrong with semen purchased in second year and that express warranties made by breeding service company to rancher were not met, nor were implied warranties of merchantability and fitness met. Waddell v. American Breeders Serv., Inc., 161 Mont. 221, 505 P.2d 417, 61 A.L.R.3d 801 (1973).

A cause of action grounded on breach of an express warranty under UCC § 2-313 does not fail because the plaintiff fails to prove a "defect" in the product—a breach of an express warranty is the failure of a product to comply with a definite warranty established by competent evidence. Elanco Prods. Co. v. Akin-Tunnell, 474 S.W.2d 789 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971), writ ref'd n.r.e., (May 3, 1972).

It is clear that plaintiff has not met his burden of proof of proving a cause of action under UCC § 2-313 (Express Warranty), UCC § 2-314 (Implied Warranty of Merchantability), and UCC § 2-315 (Implied Warranty of Fitness for a Particular Purpose), where no evidence was submitted by the plaintiff on the existence of such warranties or on any defect in the chemical at issue, and none is apparent from the testimony. Toppi v. United States, 332 F. Supp. 513 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

A statutory shift in the burden of proof from the purchaser to the seller in a breach of warranty action does not change the substantive character of the action, but is merely a change in evidentiary procedure. Lewis v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., John Bean Div., 245 F. Supp. 195 (W.D. Mich. 1965).

9. Submission to jury.

In an action to recover the purchase price of a bulldozer sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, the trial court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff where there was evidence that, although the plaintiff had represented that the bulldozer was in "A-1 condition" and knew the purposes for which the vehicle was intended to be used by the defendant, the bulldozer would not properly function. Taylor v. Ward, 393 So. 2d 1342 (Miss. 1981).

In action to recover balance of purchase price due on sale of herd of breeding cows which were later determined to be in-fectured with disease of brucellosis, trial court's refusal to submit issue of express warranty to jury was error where there was evidence in record from which jury could have found that herd was expressly warranted to be free or reasonable free of brucellosis and where there was evidence from which jury could have found that herd was not as expressly warranted. Young & Cooper, Inc. v. Vestring, 214 Kan. 311, 521 P.2d 281 (1974).

Whether a person is the agent of the seller so that he has authority to bind the seller by a warranty, charge the seller with notice of a particular purpose for which the goods are desired by the buyer, or charge the seller with notice of non-conformity of the goods, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury when conflicting issues of evidence are involved. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

10. Damages.

In action for breach of express and implied warranties attaching to contract to trade horses at agreed values, (1) although all elements of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1) were established, plaintiff's sole remedy, under contract provision permitted by UCC § 2-719(1)(b), was to return his horse in exchange for specified monetary credit on another, and higher-priced, horse, and (2) under UCC § 2-316(3)(b), plaintiff's refusal to examine horse traded to him precluded any recovery for breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Calloway v. Manion, 572 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

Where buyer of materials for needle point rug discovered that yarn incorporated into background varied in color, seller was liable for breach of express and implied warranties for difference in value of rug as warranted and value as made. Barrows v. Mazaltov's, Inc., 312 Minn. 586, 252 N.W.2d 130 (1977).

In action against manufacturer of poultry meal for damages resulting from injury to poultry producer's chickens in that chickens fed with feed that included meal manufactured by defendant failed to achieve normal growth, gravamen of cause of action was breach of warranty of sale under UCC §§ 2-313 and 2-314 and damages sought were permissible under and governed by UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, even though tortious breach on part of defendants was alleged. Mid-South Milling Co. v. Loret Farms, Inc., 521 S.W.2d 586 (Tenn. 1975).

11. Affirmation of fact or promise.

New York publishing company breached express warranty, in contract for sale of publisher's business, that publisher "had not been notified of any claims which could give rise to litigation," where publisher was well aware, through oral and written communications, that author was contesting publisher's ownership interest in book series which formed substantial basis of bargain with buyer corporation, and where, after consummation of sale, author brought copyright action against resulting corporation. Ainger v. Michigan Gen. Corp., 476 F. Supp. 1209 (S.D.N.Y. 1979), aff'd, 632 F.2d 1025 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1980).

General Business Law § 219-c was enacted at least in part to eliminate question whether art dealer's representations with respect to authorship of particular work were to be considered affirmation of fact, in which event description would create express warranty under Uniform Commercial Code § 2-313, or merely expression of dealer's opinion not giving rise to such warranty. Dawson v. G. Malina, Inc., 463 F. Supp. 461 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

In action to rescind contract for fraud, where (1) buyer purchased baler from seller for $2,995, based on offer in seller's letter which represented that baler was two years old and was worth $4,250, and (2) buyer alone signed purchase agreement, court held (1) that purchase agreement did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of contract, (2) that seller's letter offering baler for sale and making certain representations about it, including representations as to its age, was admissible supplementary evidence of consistent additional terms within meaning of UCC § 2-202(b), and (3) that in absence of any specification in purchase agreement about baler's age or model year, its age as set forth in seller's letter became both a consistent additional term of the purchase agreement and, by operation of law, an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) (also holding that warranty disclaimer found inferentially by trial court was inconspicuous and therefore ineffective). Mill Printing & Lithographing Corp. v. Solid Waste Mgt. Sys., 65 A.D.2d 590 (2d Dep't 1978).

Supplier of natural gas which unconditionally warranted availability of large quantities of gas contracted to be delivered on basis of its expectation that most of gas would be obtained from its reserves in particular field, and which did not base contract on actual reserves in such field despite inherent uncertainty as to quantities of gas that would ultimately prove to be available therein, was not entitled to equitable relief from its contractual delivery obligations because of its mistake in overestimating quantity of gas reserves in such field (observing that same result would also obtain under UCC Art 2, which court assumed to be applicable to contract in suit, since express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1) may extend to quantity of goods to be sold). Gulf Oil Corp. v. F.P.C., 563 F.2d 588 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1062, 98 S. Ct. 1235, 55 L. Ed. 2d 762 (1978), reh'g denied, 435 U.S. 981, 98 S. Ct. 1632, 56 L. Ed. 2d 74 (1978), cert. dismissed, 435 U.S. 911, 98 S. Ct. 1462, 55 L. Ed. 2d 502 (1978).

In action for injuries suffered by plaintiff while using golf training device made by defendants, trial court properly concluded that defendants expressly warranted safety of device and that they were liable for plaintiff's injuries, where plaintiff's evidence indicated that before using device, he read and relied on words "Completely Safe Ball Will Not Hit Player", printed on container, but that when his golf club hit under ball, ball looped over club and hit him on head, and where defendants presented no evidence which could remove their assurance of safety from basis of bargain. Furthermore, trial court properly held for plaintiff on theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability, where device failed to conform to words on container "Completely Safe Ball Will Not Hit Player", and was not fit for ordinary purposes for which such goods are normally used, and where defendants' attempt to limit scope of their warranties failed to meet requirements of UCC § 2-316 governing disclaimer and

Cotton merchant made express warranties of quantity by stating on its 3 invoices number of bales of cotton sold thereby; and when merchant sold nonexistent cotton to broker, it breached both express and implied warranties and thereby rendered itself liable to broker for at least amount he paid therefor. Simon v. Estate of Allen, 497 S.W.2d 800 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e., cert. denied, 419 U.S. 843, 95 S. Ct. 76, 42 L. Ed. 2d 71 (1974).

A complaint which alleges the breach of an express or implied warranty of fitness arising as a consequence of the breaking of an intramedullary pin, warranted as properly manufactured and free of defects, which was surgically inserted in the plaintiff, stated a cause of action; for it might be possible for the plaintiff to prove a sale of the pin as opposed to an overall contract for hospital and medical services. Cheshire v. Southampton Hosp. Ass'n, 53 Misc. 2d 355 (1967).

12. —Aircraft.

Where (1) seller of used airplane told buyer that plane's engine had recently been completely overhauled and that new parts had been placed therein, (2) seller showed buyer entries in plane's engine and propeller logbook which reflected such overhaul and insertion of new parts in conformity with manufacturer's manual, (3) entries in engine logbook were false, although certified by Federal Aviation Administration inspector, and (4) buyer relied on seller's representations and logbook entries in buying plane, logbook constituted description of goods and part of basis of bargain between parties, and seller expressly warranted accuracy of information contained in logbook within meaning of UCC § 2-313(1)(b). Miles v. Kavanaugh, 350 So. 2d 1090 (Fla. App. 1977).

In action brought by buyer against seller of aircraft, if buyer's contention that 1968 aircraft was represented as 1969 aircraft were true, such would create express warranty under UCC § 2-313. Crane v. Wood Motors, Inc., 53 Mich. App. 17, 218 N.W.2d 420 (1974).

Seller's assertions as to airplane's mechanical condition and the manner in which the aircraft had been maintained constituted express warranty and not merely casual expression intended to be understood as his opinion. Downs v. Shouse, 18 Ariz. App. 225, 501 P.2d 401 (1972).

13. —Boats and ships.

In action by buyer of four oil tankers against shipbuilder-seller for consequential damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2) for losses incurred when tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures, in which shipbuilder filed third-party complaint against manufacturer of defective cargo pumps and manufacturer of pumps filed fourth-party complaint against manufacturer of defective expansion joints, (1) shipbuilder-seller breached express warranty to buyer under UCC § 2-313(1) that tankers would be built to operate efficiently and also implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 of merchantability and fitness of tankers for particular purpose (transportation of aviation fuels); (2) buyer of tankers was entitled only to consequential damages caused by defects in design and was not entitled to damages caused by defects in materials or workmanship; (3) shipbuilder-seller's foreseeable liability to buyer was $500,000, which was amount of adjusted revenues lost by buyer when two of its tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures due to defective design; (4) manufacturer of defective cargo pumps breached its express and implied warranties to shipbuilder and was liable, in amount of $2,000,000, for losses sustained by shipbuilder as result of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures in tankers sold to buyer (including shipbuilder's liability to buyer for lost revenues during period tankers were inoperative), but was not liable to shipbuilder for cost of installing separate stripping on each tanker; and (5) manufacturer of defective expansion joints, which were used in connection with cargo pumps, breached its express and implied warranties concerning such joints and was liable to manufacturer of pumps for costs of replacing all defective joints.

Falcon Tankers, Inc. v. Litton Sys., 380 A.2d 569 (Del. Super. 1977).

In buyer's action to rescind sale of sloop, oral assurances made by seller during course of parties' negotiations that sloop would become watertight after it had been placed into the water and allowed sufficient time to swell created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) and (b), and evidence of such warranty was not barred by UCC § 2-202(b) since writings involved in case, which consisted of written notice of intent to purchase, bill of sale, and seller's advertisement incorporated by reference into bill of sale, did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of parties' agreement (also holding that such express warranty did not merely relate to condition of sloop at time of sale, but of necessity related to time when sloop would be put into water and prepared for sailing). Werner v. Montana, 117 N.H. 721, 378 A.2d 1130 (1977).

The statement by the seller of a boat to the effect that it was fit, would not leak, and that he would personally guarantee that he would take care of it was an express warranty under GL c 106, § 2-313. Luongo v. Zimmerman, 47 Mass. App. Dec. 126 (1971).

14. —Building materials.

In action by buyer against paint manufacturer for damages for breach of warranty in sale of red barn paint, where evidence showed (1) that plaintiff was professional barn painter, (2) that he had not followed defendant's instructions when adding linseed oil to paint purchased, (3) that paint on customers' barns painted by plaintiff had faded within one to four months after its application, (4) that plaintiff had had many complaints, and (5) that defendant had admitted that a "fade problem" existed with respect to paint purchased by plaintiff, which was of "bottom-of-the-line" quality, court held, on affirming judgment for plaintiff, (1) that although plaintiff's proof of causation was not direct, jury could still infer from fact that fading of paint was quite uniform that presence or absence of linseed oil had had no effect on paint's fading; (2) that since defendant had admitted that paint had a "fade problem" which was to be expected with that brand of paint, jury could therefore infer that paint was not "good barn paint" and that it violated defendant's express warranty made under UCC § 2-313(1)(a); (3) that jury could also infer that paint was not of merchantable quality in violation of implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); (4) that, moreover, it was not fit for plaintiff's particular purpose in violation of implied warranty of fitness contained in UCC § 2-315; and (5) that trial court correctly instructed jury that it could consider whether plaintiff had complied with defendant's directions in determining whether plaintiff had been negligent, and whether such negligence had been a cause of his consequential damages (declining, since issue was first presented on appeal, to consider whether plaintiff's consequential damages should have reduced by 15 per cent to reflect proportion of fault that jury attributed to plaintiff's negligence, and stating that Minnesota courts had not determined whether comparative-fault principle should be applied in breach-of-warranty actions, although its application seemed equitable and appropriate under UCC § 2-715(2)(b)). Chatfield v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 266 N.W.2d 171 (Minn. 1978).

Statement in catalogue that floor covering would absorb considerable flex without cracking was affirmation of fact constituting express warranty under UCC § 2-313, but rapid deterioration of floor covering did not constitute breach of such warranty where jury could have reasonably found that flex or movement in floor was more than considerable and more than floor material was designed to accommodate. Interco, Inc. v. Randustrial Corp., 533 S.W.2d 257, 94 A.L.R.3d 720 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

Where record indicated that supplier of roofing material for greenhouses made several affirmations of fact relating to quality of roofing panels, jury was warranted in finding breach of express warranty when panel proved defective. General Supply & Equip. Co. v. Phillips, 490 S.W.2d 913 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 13, 1973).

Where buyer's particular project required homogeneous sheetrock, but in ordering "one inch" sheetrock buyer did not specify whether it wished homogeneous or laminated type, either would comply with express warranty imposed by that description. Tracor, Inc. v. Austin Supply & Drywall Co., 484 S.W.2d 446 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), ref. n.r.e (Jan. 31, 1973).

15. —Drugs and cosmetics.

In an action for injuries sustained by plaintiff as the result of the application to her fingernails of a product sold to her by the defendant, the court erred in refusing to charge, as requested, that if the jury found that defendant had expressly warranted that the product was safe for anyone who purchased it, then the existence of the allergic reaction thereto was no defense where there was evidence from which the jury might have found an express warranty. Drake v. Charles of Fifth Ave., Inc., 33 A.D.2d 987 (4th Dep't 1970).

16. —Farm goods; feed.

In action to rescind contract for fraud, where (1) buyer purchased baler from seller for $2,995, based on offer in seller's letter which represented that baler was two years old and was worth $4,250, and (2) buyer alone signed purchase agreement, court held (1) that purchase agreement did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of contract, (2) that seller's letter offering baler for sale and making certain representations about it, including representations as to its age, was admissible supplementary evidence of consistent additional terms within meaning of UCC § 2-202(b), and (3) that in absence of any specification in purchase agreement about baler's age or model year, its age as set forth in seller's letter became both a consistent additional term of the purchase agreement and, by operation of law, an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) (also holding that warranty disclaimer found inferentially by trial court was inconspicuous and therefore ineffective). Mill Printing & Lithographing Corp. v. Solid Waste Mgt. Sys., 65 A.D.2d 590 (2d Dep't 1978).

tablish breach of both express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where there was express representation that use of feed supplement would increase milk production and where there was decrease in milk production resulting from wrong instructions about proper way to use feed supplement. However, farmer was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2): (1) considering that there were many factors which could affect production of milk, to permit use of difference between total milk production figures for whole of year during which feed supplement was used for approximately 2 months, and total production figures for whole of preceding year, as measure of damages, would constitute rankest form of speculation and conjecture; (2) with respect to damages for decrease in market value of cows affected by feed, it could not reasonably be determined how much of decline in valuation of cattle between date of injury and day on which they were sold was attributable to injury and how much to changes, if any, in market value between those dates. Shotkoski v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 195 Neb. 22, 237 N.W.2d 92 (1975).

In action by livestock owner against feed company for breach of express warranty, there was sufficient evidence to support finding of express warranty based on alleged representations of defendant company where there was evidence that employees of company verbally stated that their feed mixture would cause two-pound weight gain per day on calves belonging to livestock owner; however, there was insufficient evidence to support finding that it was this breach of warranty and not combination of number of other factors which proximately caused calves' failure to gain weight as expected. Heil v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 301 Minn. 315, 223 N.W.2d 37 (1974).

In action against feed company for damages to dairy herd resulting from use of feed additive, evidence that defendant's salesman told plaintiff dairy farmer that feed additive would not hurt his cattle was sufficient for jury to find express warranty. Boehm v. Fox, 473 F.2d 445 (10th Cir. Kan. 1973).

17. —Farm goods; fertilizer and soil conditioners.

In action brought by buyer of fertilizer against seller for damages resulting when use of fertilizer on tobacco plants, represented by sellers to be appropriate and safe for tobacco, caused plants to wither and die, buyer's pleadings stated cause of action under UCC § 2-313 for breach of express warranty rather than breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-315. Potter v. Tyndall, 22 N.C. App. 129, 205 S.E.2d 808 (1974), cert. denied, 285 N.C. 661, 207 S.E.2d 762 (1974).

Evidence of demonstrations and assurances that soil compaction substance would meet customer's needs supported finding that manufacturer of substance and its area dealer made express and implied warranties which were breached by manufacturer and dealer when application of substance to customer's premises proved ineffective. Larutan Corp. v. Magnolia Homes Mfg. Co., 190 Neb. 425, 209 N.W.2d 177 (1973).

18. —Farm goods; herbicides and pesticides.

Where farmer purchased herbicide to control weeds in soybean field and seller agreed to mix herbicide with fertilizer and apply it to buyer's field, seller was liable for damages for low soybean yield on express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) that mixture would be properly mixed and applied, even though jury found no defect in herbicide but that mixture of herbicide and fertilizer was defective or that it was not properly applied. Larson v. Meckling Fertilizer Co., 90 S.D. 521, 243 N.W.2d 167 (1976).

Under UCC § 2-313, where label on sack of insecticide, taken as a whole, not only listed chemical ingredients but also promised to potential buyer that insecticide sack contained 50 pounds of material which was insecticide developed especially for control of corn rootworm larvae, words expressing capacity of chemicals for corn rootworm larvae control were not mere words of opinion or puffing but rather there was express warranty as to effectiveness of insecticide to control corn rootworm larvae. Swenson v. Chevron Chem. Swenson v. Chevron Chem. Co., 89 S.D. 497, 234 N.W.2d 38 (1975).

While damages for loss of cattle and hay, services of veterinarian, and damage to land could and would have been prevented if plaintiff farm's employees had followed direction on container of weed killer and had not permitted cattle to graze pasture after application of weed killer, instructions on label or container were not relevant in determining breach of express warranty in action against supplier of weed killer, unless they were made "basis of bargain." W.G. Tufts & Son v. Herider Farms, Inc., 485 S.W.2d 300 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), ref. n.r.e (Feb. 7, 1973).

19. —Farm goods; livestock.

Although seller was liable under UCC § 2-313 for breach of express warranty that cows had been vaccinated for shipping fever when in fact cattle had not been vaccinated within time period needed to develop adequate immunity, and shipping fever epidemic spread throughout newly purchased herd and some of buyer's cows in old herd, buyer did not sustain burden of proving additional consequential damages as allowed under UCC § 2-715, for lost calf crop and cost of feeding and maintaining nonproductive heifers where (1) spread of shipping fever could have been significantly reduced by separating sick animals from healthy ones, (2) buyer, an experienced rancher, knew of this precautionary measure but only wooden fence separated two herds, and (3) there was conflicting expert testimony as to whether heifers could have been successfully bred at an earlier period. Bemidji Sales Barn, Inc. v. Chatfield, 312 Minn. 11, 250 N.W.2d 185 (1977).

In action by livestock owner against feed company for breach of express warranty, there was sufficient evidence to support finding of express warranty based on alleged representations of defendant company where there was evidence that employees of company verbally stated that their feed mixture would cause two-pound weight gain per day on calves belonging to livestock owner; however, there was insufficient evidence to support finding that it was this breach of warranty and not combination of number of other factors which proximately caused calves' failure to gain weight as expected. Heil v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 301 Minn. 315, 223 N.W.2d 37 (1974).

Statement by seller of cow herd that cows were "bred to calve by June 1" by which buyers were induced to purchase cow herd at price per head equal to established price of cows with calf, coupled with seller's refusal to permit pregnancy test, supported finding that there was express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1) that cows in question would calve on or before date in question. Brunner v. Jensen, 215 Kan. 416, 524 P.2d 1175 (1974).

Whether oral assertions by seller of chickens that "the chickens would bloom out" and that buyer "would only get the good ones" constituted express warranties and whether buyer relied upon these assertions were material issues of fact to be determined by trier of fact. Woodruff v. Clark County Farm Bureau Coop. Ass'n, 153 Ind. App. 31, 286 N.E.2d 188 (1972).

20. —Farm goods; seed.

Certification tags required by law on bags of seed expressly warrant the contents of the bag to be as stated thereon, within reasonable and recognized tolerances, and are a warranty made by the vendor who causes the certification to be attached. An attempt to modify this express warranty by "unbargained language of disclaimer" at the bottom of the shipping invoice was inconsistent with this express warranty and to that extent was unreasonable. Walcott & Steele, Inc. v. Carpenter, 246 Ark. 95, 436 S.W.2d 820 (1969).

21. —Machinery and equipment.

In action to rescind contract for fraud, where (1) buyer purchased baler from seller for $2,995, based on offer in seller's letter which represented that baler was two years old and was worth $4,250, and (2) buyer alone signed purchase agreement, court held (1) that purchase agreement did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of contract, (2) that seller's letter offering baler for sale and making certain representations about it, including representations as to its age, was admissible supplementary evidence of consistent additional terms within meaning of UCC § 2-202(b), and (3) that in absence of any specification in purchase agreement about baler's age or model year, its age as set forth in seller's letter became both a consistent additional term of the purchase agreement and, by operation of law, an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) (also holding that warranty disclaimer found inferentially by trial court was inconspicuous and therefore ineffective). Mill Printing & Lithographing Corp. v. Solid Waste Mgt. Sys., 65 A.D.2d 590 (2d Dep't 1978).

Allegations that plaintiff purchased burglar alarm system from defendant, that the system was to remain the property of the defendant, that plaintiff was told that defendant was reliable firm, had an excellent staff, that the system was foolproof, and that the system was a substantial deterrent to burglaries, that plaintiff's premises were burglarized, and that defendant had breached an express warranty and an implied warranty, and had been guilty of gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and intentional tort did not state a claim upon which relief could be granted where it contained no allegations of facts stating in what respect any warranty was breached or that any breach was a proximate cause of the burglary. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

In action against manufacturer of mixed nuts by purchaser who suffered tooth injury when biting down on unshelled nut, directed verdict in favor of manufacturer was proper since: (1) evidence did not support purchaser's claim of express warranty within meaning of UCC § 2-313(1), where no statement on label indicated that nuts were shelled and where use of clear glass jar revealing only shelled nuts was mere passive marketing tool and not affirmative representation sufficient to give rise to express warranty; and (2) manufacturer did not breach implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, since presence of limited quantities of unshelled nuts was not sufficient to render jar of nuts unmerchantable, or unfit for ordinary purposes. Coffer v. Standard Brands, Inc., 30 N.C. App. 134, 226 S.E.2d 534 (1976).

Seller neither tendered delivery nor delivered concrete forms to buyer pursuant to UCC §§ 1-201(14), 2-301 and 2-503(1), and seller breached express warranties under UCC § 2-313 that forms were free from encumbrance and that seller would warrant and defend against demands of all other persons, where third party claimed storage lien on forms, refused to allow buyer to take possession, and seller was unsuccessful in securing release from third party of his claimed lien. Goosic Constr. Co. v. City Nat'l Bank, 196 Neb. 86, 241 N.W.2d 521 (1976).

In action by purchaser of bulk curing tobacco barn against its manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties, although some of manufacturer's promises and descriptions constituted mere "sales puffing" or commendations of barn, there was sufficient testimony to support finding that manufacturer made express oral warranties by promise and description that barns were of first-rate quality and that necessary parts and prompt service would be available, if needed, where manufacturer's agent represented: (1) that barn was of first quality materials and workmanship, (2) that it carried blower system which would furnish more air and dry and cure tobacco more efficiently and with less cost, (3) that it operated electronically and had automatic firing system which would automatically advance itself through range of temperatures after being manually set for each range, (4) that barn was the most well constructed, most durable barn on market, (5) that competent men at all times would be on the spot within two hours to correct anything that might go wrong, (6) that there would be plenty of parts available, if needed, and (7) that manufacturer had been constructing, selling, and distributing barns long enough so that all bugs and defects were ironed out. There was sufficient evidence to support finding that manufacturer breached both oral express warranties as to superior craftsmanship and first-rate quality and implied warranty of merchantability where there was evidence that upon delivery of bulk barn, angle iron that held steel floor was loose and sliding, corner boards were loose, causing cracks, doors would not close, roof was buckled, tobacco racks did not fit, and sides of barn buckled inward when barn was filled with tobacco, notwithstanding evidence that manufacturer sent its servicemen who remedied defects to satisfaction of purchaser, with exception of doors and caving in of sides. Bell v. Harrington Mfg. Co., 265 S.C. 468, 219 S.E.2d 906 (1975).

Evidence that motors did not conform to the requirements of "squirrel cage" motors is irrelevant where there is nothing in the contract which describes the motors as of the "squirrel cage" variety. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

22. —Machinery and equipment; cleaning equipment.

Express warranty under UCC 2-313 was created by information sheet for automatic car washing equipment which stated that pivoted safety hood, by covering opening in floor, "eliminates all possibility of persons stepping into an open pit." Hensley v. Sherman Car Wash Equip. Co., 33 Colo. App. 279, 520 P.2d 146 (1974).

An oral statement by the seller that certain coin-operated dry cleaning machines purchased by the buyer would last at least 10 years without a major breakdown is an express warranty under this section. Earp v. Hunt, 238 Ark. 936, 386 S.W.2d 492 (1965).

23. —Machinery and equipment; construction equipment.

In action by owner of heavy-duty construction equipment for damage to equipment's engines that resulted from use of defective antifreeze that owner purchased to winterize such engines, where evidence showed that antifreeze purchased contained chloride, that chloride could corrode internal-combustion engines because it was a salt-water solution, that equipment owner had purchased the antifreeze from defendant retailer, that retailer had previously purchased it from a wholesale supplier (against whom retailer filed third-party action), and that the wholesale supplier had originally purchased it from manufacturer (against whom supplier filed fourth-party action), (1) retailer was liable to equipment owner, under UCC §§ 2-313(1)(a), 2-314(1), and 2-315, for breach of express warranty that antifreeze was suitable for use in engines of owner's construction equipment and for breach of implied warranties of merchantability of such antifreeze and fitness thereof for particular purpose; (2) wholesale supplier was liable, under theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability of antifreeze under UCC § 2-314(1), to retailer for same damages for which retailer was liable to equipment owner; and (3) manufacturer was liable to wholesale supplier on theory of strict liability in tort. R. Clinton Constr. Co. v. Bryant & Reaves, Inc., 442 F. Supp. 838 (N.D. Miss. 1977).

Where it was clear, under facts of case, that unless seller had agreed to build a crane as good or better than an otherwise available crane, and fit for the needs and purposes of the buyer, there would not have been a sale, the evidence in the record substantiates the trial judge's finding of a breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313. Uganski v. Little Giant Crane & Shovel, Inc., 35 Mich. App. 88, 192 N.W.2d 580 (1971).

24. —Machinery and equipment; presses.

In action for breach of warranty in sale of defective printing press, where sale transaction was complicated by existence of security agreement signed by buyer which contained disclaimer of all express and implied warranties other than those set forth in security agreement, and where there was testimony that seller had told buyer that if buyer would sign security agreement, seller would "make the press print," seller's statement was promise that formed part of bargain of sale and created express warranty within meaning of UCC § 2-313(1)(a) (also holding that testimony that seller had made such warranty was not barred by UCC § 2-202, and that words in security agreement which limited such warranty were inoperative under UCC § 2-316(1)). Drier v. Perfection, Inc., 259 N.W.2d 496 (S.D. 1977).

In products liability action for personal injuries by punch press operator against manufacturer of punch press and others, plaintiff had viable theory of breach of express warranty, even under strict interpretation of UCC § 2-313, where press was advertised to be fail-safe, where plaintiff's employer ordered press with fool-proof control, but where even by testimony of manufacturer's own officers, press was neither fail-safe nor fool-proof, if those words had separate meaning. Wells v. Web Mach. Co., 20 Ill. App. 3d 545, 315 N.E.2d 301 (1st Dist. 1974).

25. —Machinery and equipment; tanks and pipes.

In action for breach of express and implied warranties in sale of bellows-expansion joints purchased for use in buyer's steam utility system, (1) seller's recommendation in letter to buyer that joints be made of Monel metal, rather than stainless steel, did not amount to implied warranty of fitness of joints for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not inform seller that buyer was relying on seller to select metal that would satisfy buyer's need for an extremely anticorrosive substance; (2) buyer did not establish breach of implied warranty of merchantability of joints under UCC § 2-314(1), since joints furnished by seller met all quality standards prescribed by UCC § 2-314(2); (3) statement in seller's letter that seller would guarantee "operation of the application as well as the recommended expansion joints" if joints were installed according to seller's recommendations was not express warranty (see UCC § 2-313(1)(a)) that each joint would work, but was only guarantee that seller's application scheme for placement of joints would adequately absorb expansion and contraction of buyer's steam pipes; and (4) purchase-order warranty that joints would comply with all specifications and would be free of defects in workmanship and materials was not breached, since buyer (a) did not furnish any specifications as to required service longevity of joints or degree of their resistance to corrosion, and (b) alleged design defects of joints, with regard to seller's failure to anneal joints, liner design of joints, and thickness of bellows walls of joints, were not shown to have caused failure of joints after their installation in buyer's utility system. Wisconsin Elec. Power Co. v. Zallea Bros., 443 F. Supp. 946 (E.D. Wis. 1978), aff'd, 606 F.2d 697 (7th Cir. Wis. 1979).

In action by water corporation's contractor (buyer) against seller of filter tanks, failure of distributor heads of filter tanks did not constitute breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, breach of warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, or breach of any express warranty under UCC § 2-313, where distributor heads failed under excessive water pressure in water system due to defect in water corporation's plans and specifications, contractor bought tanks in reliance upon contract specifications without reliance upon any warranty, affirmation or representation by seller as to merchantability or fitness for intended use, and seller's statement to buyer that tanks "should" be able to remove iron and manganese from water did not amount to affirmation of fact affecting bargain between contractor and seller. Hobson Constr. Co. v. Hajoca Corp., 28 N.C. App. 684, 222 S.E.2d 709 (1976).

26. —Motor vehicles and equipment.

Defendant's advertisement that the car he sold to plaintiff was in "very good condition" and his statements at the time of sale that the car had not been in a collision, when in fact the car had previously been "totaled" in an accident and then rebuilt by defendant at his body and fender shop, and that he was selling the car for a friend who had left the country in order to divert plaintiff's suspicion concerning possible trouble with the car, constitute express warranties which may be enforced against both merchants and nonmerchants (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-313) and which may exist, despite the absence of the words "guarantee or warranty", as long as there is an affirmation of fact which is made a part of the basis of the bargain; in addition, defendant's active concealment and failure to disclose the fact that the car had been in an accident constitute fraud especially since defendant used his skill to restore the exterior of the car to lull to rest any suspicion as to the existence of the facts concealed; accordingly, since plaintiff properly revoked his acceptance (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-608) one month after purchase, having first tried on his own to have the car repaired, he is entitled to the cost of the car less the amount realized from the subsequent sale. McGregor v. Dimou, 101 Misc. 2d 756 (1979).

In action by buyer of new Chevrolet Corvette under UCC § 2-313(1) for breach of express warranty, where evidence showed (1) that after car's delivery from selling dealer, both fan belts broke, causing engine to overheat severely, (2) that after car had been repaired by second dealer, engine again overheated because of oil loss caused by second dealer's improper repairs, (3) that third dealer unsuccessfully performed additional repairs, and (4) that buyer was never charged for any repair work, since such work was treated by both dealers and also defendant manufacturer as being covered by manufacturer's express warranty, court held (1) that evidence clearly showed that car was defective, (2) that since manufacturer undertook to perform all repairs without charge, all of the car's defects came under manufacturer's express warranty, (3) that such warranty was clearly breached under rule that unsuccessful efforts to remedy defects found to exist in a product renders seller-warrantor liable therefor, and (4) that since only warranty involved was that of manufacturer, and since both dealers had been expressly authorized to perform warranty repair work at manufacturer's expense and as manufacturer's agents, dealers were not liable to buyer (remanding cause for determination of manufacturer's liability to buyer). Kure v. Chevrolet Motor Div., 581 P.2d 603 (Wyo. 1978).

Where buyer of used three-wheel motorcycle, which had defective weld on rear axle that gave way on date buyer bought vehicle, claimed that statements made by seller's employee (as to whom no deposition was contained in record on appeal) constituted express warranty of dependability and safety of such motorcycle under UCC § 2-313(1)(a), and where seller testified that he himself did not make any representations concerning vehicle's safety and relied on an "as-is" disclaimer that was prominently featured in bill of sale signed by buyer to negate any inference of an express warranty, it could not be fairly said that as a matter of law no express warranty was created, and reviewing court would therefore reverse summary judgment on such issue in favor of defendant seller. Knipp v. Weinbaum, 351 So. 2d 1081 (Fla. App. 1977), cert. denied, 357 So. 2d 188 (Fla. 1978).

In action by buyers of automobile tires against seller and manufacturer for personal injuries allegedly resulting from blowout of tire, language on invoice given to buyers to effect that "the tires identified hereon are guaranteed for 36,000 miles...against all road hazards, including...blowout," constituted express warranty under UCC § 2-313 that tires would not blow out during first 36,000 miles of use. McCarty v. E.J. Korvette, Inc., 28 Md. App. 421, 347 A.2d 253 (1975).

In absence of proof that alleged malfunctioning of car was caused by defect in parts or workmanship, and that manufacturer failed to repair or replace parts in accordance with express warranty that car would be free from defects in material or workmanship, plaintiff could not recover on theory of breach of express warranty. Collum v. Fred Tuch Buick, 6 Ill. App. 3d 317, 285 N.E.2d 532 (1st Dist. 1972).

27. —Motor vehicles and equipment; trucks.

An express warranty given by the defendant with regard to certain engine parts it sold to the plaintiff and installed in a truck engine applied only to those parts and not to the entire engine into which the parts were installed. Easley v. Day Motors, Inc., 796 So. 2d 236 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Where used truck purchased by buyer could not be used on state highways until state inspection sticker had been affixed to it, seller's promise to affix sticker to truck related to goods sold, was part of basis of bargain, and constituted an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) (holding that under Texas Consumer Protection Act, buyer was entitled to triple damages for seller's breach of such warranty). Allen v. Parsons, 555 S.W.2d 522 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ dismissed by agreement, (Mar. 8, 1978).

A manufacturer's warranty that each new truck sold by it was free from defects in material and workmanship under normal use and service met the statutory requirement for an express warranty. Seely v. White Motor Co., 63 Cal. 2d 9, 403 P.2d 145 (1965), overruled on other grounds, Huang v. Garner, 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 (1st Dist. 1984).

28. Description of goods.

In action to rescind contract for fraud, where (1) buyer purchased baler from seller for $2,995, based on offer in seller's letter which represented that baler was two years old and was worth $4,250, and (2) buyer alone signed purchase agreement, court held (1) that purchase agreement did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of contract, (2) that seller's letter offering baler for sale and making certain representations about it, including representations as to its age, was admissible supplementary evidence of consistent additional terms within meaning of UCC § 2-202(b), and (3) that in absence of any specification in purchase agreement about baler's age or model year, its age as set forth in seller's letter became both a consistent additional term of the purchase agreement and, by operation of law, an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) (also holding that warranty disclaimer found inferentially by trial court was inconspicuous and therefore ineffective). Mill Printing & Lithographing Corp. v. Solid Waste Mgt. Sys., 65 A.D.2d 590 (2d Dep't 1978).

In action for breach of express warranty in sale of used boat, where buyer claimed that survey of boat, ordered by seller's agent after parties had agreed only on amount of purchase price and down payment for boat, constituted express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(b), and that such warranty was breached when boat proved to have extensive dry rot and insect infestation contrary to description in survey that boat was "very sound" and "well suited for its intended purpose," and where seller claimed that survey description of boat was not part of "basis of bargain" within meaning of UCC § 2-313(1)(b) because survey was made after sale had taken place, seller's contention could not be sustained because (1) seller confused "contract" with "bargain," but "bargain" was process that could continue after buyer had accepted seller's offer; (2) at time buyer was informed of survey report, certain aspects of the contract, such as time of payment and transfer of possession, had not been settled; and (3) although survey description of boat did not induce actual formation of contract, jury could have found that since such description was intended by seller to induce buyer's satisfaction with contract and to lessen his degree of vigilance in inspecting boat prior to accepting it, seller's use of survey description to affirm condition of boat went to essence of the contract. Autzen v. John C. Taylor Lumber Sales, Inc., 280 Or. 783, 572 P.2d 1322 (1977).

Although written contract for sale and purchase of mobile home provided that article was sold "as is" and disclaimed all warranties, either express or implied, and use of descriptions, samples or models as part of contract, seller made express warranties that mobile home would conform to description given by salesman and sample mobile home; and these warranties rested on "dickered" aspects of individual bargain, and went so clearly to essence of bargain that words of disclaimer in purchase agreement were repugnant to basic dickered terms. Mobile Hous., Inc. v. Stone, 490 S.W.2d 611 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Even if order for "Club Cab" pickup truck could be considered valid contract in absence of dealer's signature thereon, use of truck booklet by dealer's salesman to describe and illustrate truck and optional equipment created sale by description or sample and gave rise to warranty that goods delivered would conform to sample or description used in negotiations, which was breached by delivery of different pickup truck. Antonucci v. Stevens Dodge, Inc., 73 Misc. 2d 173 (1973).

Since warranties of sample and description are characterized as express warranties, the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model and must be in accordance with the obligations under the contract. Graulich Caterer, Inc. v. Hans Holterbosch, Inc., 101 N.J. Super. 61, 243 A.2d 253 (App. Div. 1968).

29. —Advertisement.

Brochure distributed by seller and ultimately received by buyer depicting seller's trailer and stating that trailer had necessary design strength for all types of material hauling and dumping, ideal for droploading, dumping into high hoppers or spreader machines, such statements constitute more than expression of opinion by seller or puffing for which liability cannot be imposed under Mississippi Code Annotated § 75-2-313. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Recovery under theory of breach of express warranty, § 2-313, was precluded where buyer of trailers failed to prove by preponderance of evidence that statements contained in seller's brochure were relied upon by buyer prior to purchase. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Express warranties may be made in advertisements, pamphlets, or brochures (holding that brochure of manufacturer of printing press contained express warranty within meaning of UCC § 2-313(1)(a) concerning ability of press to accommodate paper sizes, perform impression speeds, and control inking). Drier v. Perfection, Inc., 259 N.W.2d 496 (S.D. 1977).

In products liability action for personal injuries by punch press operator against manufacturer of punch press and others, plaintiff had viable theory of breach of express warranty even under strict interpretation of UCC § 2-313 where press was advertised to be fail-safe, where plaintiff's employer ordered press with fool-proof control, but where even by testimony of manufacturer's own officers, press was neither fail-safe nor fool-proof, if those words had separate meaning. Wells v. Web Mach. Co., 20 Ill. App. 3d 545, 315 N.E.2d 301 (1st Dist. 1974).

Express warranty must ordinarily be created at time product is purchased, but such warranty can be created by advertisements. Anthony v. GMC, 33 Cal. App. 3d 699 (2d Dist. 1973).

30. —Blueprint or specification.

Express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(b) need not be by words but can be by conduct, such as by showing blueprint or other description of goods to buyer. Moreover, fraud is not essential ingredient of action for breach of express warranty, and seller need not have had specific intention to make express warranty. It is sufficient, instead, that warranty made formed part of basis of bargain. Miles v. Kavanaugh, 350 So. 2d 1090 (Fla. App. 1977).

Where defendant seller contracted with plaintiff buyer to supply sleeve bearings impregnated with specified oil in accord with government specifications for use in manufacture of bomb fuses, but instead supplied bearings coated with non-conforming oil, and where, although bearings coated with non-conforming oil were visibly different from conforming bearings, buyer used non-conforming bearings to manufacture two lots of bomb fuses which were discovered to be defective as result of use of such bearings, under UCC §§ 2-313, 2-314, and 2-315, seller was liable to buyer for breach of its express warranty to supply bearings meeting applicable specifications and its implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose. General Instrument Corp., F.W. Sickles Div. v. Pennsylvania Pressed Metals, Inc., 366 F. Supp. 139 (M.D. Pa. 1973), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1051 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1052 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974).

31. —Catalog.

In connection with sale of industrial machine where buyer relied on certain representations contained in seller's catalog relating to performance of machine, where purchase order incorporated by reference eight-page document of technical specifications, but where seller's offer included express warranty that product was free from defects in material and workmanship and comprehensive exclusionary provision which stated, in part: "This warranty is in lieu of any other warranty whether expressed or implied other than a warranty of title. There are no warranties of merchantability or fitness," under UCC § 2-316(1), express representations made in sales literature and warranty provisions of seller's offer could be construed consistently since language warranting product to be free from defect in material and workmanship was entirely consistent with promotional literature's description of what machine could do; writings could be construed to mean that sales material and technical specifications established standard of product's performance when free of defects in material and workmanship and, thus, exclusionary language did not render inoperative seller's express representations in promotional literature it supplied. Fargo Mach. & Tool Co. v. Kearney & Trecker Corp., 428 F. Supp. 364 (E.D. Mich. 1977).

Where there was evidence that plaintiff had received catalogue, but no evidence that he relied upon catalogue description in purchasing hammer, plaintiff is not entitled to recover for breach of express warranty of UCC § 2-313(1)(b), since he did not show that the catalogue representations of fact describing the hammer were made "part of the basis of the bargain." Hagenbuch v. Snap-On Tools Corp., 339 F. Supp. 676 (D.N.H. 1972).

32. Sample or model.

Buyer of polystyrene beads was not entitled to recover damages for breach of express warranty of sale by sample under UCC § 2-313(1)(c), although material supplied by seller contained impurities and failed to produce clear plastic, where breach of warranty by sample was only theory buyer relied on in trial court and only basis of recovery found by trial judge, where buyer's entire claim for damages was related to its "down-time" and extra costs in adapting its machinery and polystyrene beads supplied to meet its needs, but where size and form of material, not its impurity, caused buyer's problems and resulting "down-time" and where material supplied by seller generally conformed in size and shape with beads furnished as sample; there was no breach of warranty by sample with regard to size and shape of material supplied. Plasco, Inc. v. Free-Flow Packaging Corp., 547 F.2d 86 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977).

In action by seller for purchase price of coal, buyer's counterclaim based on seller's alleged breach of express warranty and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness of coal for particular purpose could not be sustained where (1) evidence did not show that seller had created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) by showing buyer samples and analyses of coal's quality, but revealed instead that such samples and analyses were shown to buyer solely for his information; (2) coal delivered by seller was fit for ordinary purpose for which it was used, was burned as fuel by buyer's customers, and thus complied with seller's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1); (3) implied warranty of fitness of coal for particular purpose did not arise under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not rely on seller's skill and judgment in furnishing coal suitable for buyer's customers; and (4) even assuming that seller had breached such express and implied warranties as buyer contended, buyer still could not recover on counterclaim because he did not give seller adequate notice of alleged breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and such breach also was not proximate cause of damages buyer allegedly sustained. Kopper Glo Fuel, Inc. v. Island Lake Coal Co., 436 F. Supp. 91 (E.D. Tenn. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-316(3)(b), buyer received no warranty of merchantability on table tops where buyer had opportunity to inspect, test, and examine sample table tops furnished by manufacturer and ordered large quantities of table tops on basis of such samples; even if defect was latent, buyer was experienced in wood industry and, as such, either knew or should have known that wood has tendency to warp because of change in moisture content and that sealing of wood was proper method to treat such distortion. Michael-Regan Co. v. Lindell, 527 F.2d 653 (9th Cir. Cal. 1975).

UCC § 2-313(1)(a), pertaining to samples or models giving rise to express warranties, did not apply in action by purchaser of computer equipment alleging that computer equipment manufactured and sold by defendant for use in plaintiff's insurance premium service business did not perform as defendant had represented or warranted it would where all prior negotiations, demonstrations, "conditional" lease, and experiments, culminated in two outright sales whose terms were put into final written expression signed by plaintiff which set out entire agreement between parties and by separate conspicuous paragraph excluded all outside matters, thus conforming to UCC § 2-202 as final written expression of parties and to UCC § 2-316 as exclusion of matters not specified in final agreements. Investors Premium Corp. v. Burroughs Corp., 389 F. Supp. 39 (D.C.S.C. 1974).

Where distributor of carbon dioxide was interested in purchasing brewer's surplus carbon dioxide, and requested sample of surplus carbon dioxide which was tested and found to be acceptable, and where past deliveries of surplus carbon dioxide aggregating over 700,000 pounds disclosed no deviation from quality of sample nor any objectionable odor which formed basis of present action, sample must be considered as describing values of goods contracted for unless there was clear, convincing and unmistakable denial of such responsibility. Rock Creek Ginger Ale Co. v. Thermice Corp., 352 F. Supp. 522 (D.D.C. 1971).

Manufacturer knew that wine buyer relied on and trusted judgment of manufacturer to send red, dry wine corresponding to samples; held, manufacturer's failure to deliver wine in accordance with sample supplied was breach of express warranty. Regina Grape Prods. Co. v. Supreme Wine Co., 357 Mass. 631, 260 N.E.2d 219 (1970).

Purchaser's customer refused to accept substituted model; there was evidence from which it could be found that there was express warranty that model supplied would be identical to model requested; on investigation differences between models were discovered; purchaser suffered loss by customer's refusal; held, directing verdict in favor of seller on purchaser's counterclaim for damages was reversible error. Helson's Premiums & Gifts, Inc. v. Duncan, 9 N.C. App. 653, 177 S.E.2d 428 (1970).

Since warranties of sample and description are characterized as express warranties, the whole of the goods shall conform to the sample or model and must be in accordance with the obligations under the contract. Graulich Caterer, Inc. v. Hans Holterbosch, Inc., 101 N.J. Super. 61, 243 A.2d 253 (App. Div. 1968).

Where the seller, prior to the sale of a number of storm windows, submitted a sample to the buyer, there was not only an express warranty that the windows would conform to the sample but an implied warranty that they were fit for the purpose intended (holding that where there was some doubt about the sufficiency of the windows to keep out the wind and rain, it was for the jury to determine whether they were fit for the purpose intended). Loomis Bros. Corp. v. Queen, 17 Pa. D. & C.2d 482 (1958).

Where a seller of gray iron castings submitted a series of samples to the buyer, after which suggested changes were made and each sample approved, there was a warranty under subsection (1) (c) of this section that the castings sold to the buyer under the contract would be the same as the sample. John E. Smith's Sons Co. v. Lattimer Foundry & Mach. Co., 19 F.R.D. 379 (M.D. Pa. 1956), aff'd, 239 F.2d 815 (3d Cir. Pa. 1956).

33. —Description or affirmation distinguished.

Small piece of molded acrylic plastic which was given to buyer of boats by seller-manufacturer to illustrate materials and methods used in construction of boats, did not create "sale by sample" under UCC § 2-313(1)(c), but piece of plastic and representations made in regard thereto could be found to constitute express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) or (b). Pacific Marine Schwabacher, Inc. v. HydrosSwift Corp., 525 P.2d 615 (Utah 1974).

34. —Fabric or garments.

Buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-714(2), and to incidental damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(1), for seller's breach of express and implied warranties of fitness for particular purpose, and also express warranty by sample attaching to wrap coats purchased by buyer, where (1) samples of such coats were made part of basis of bargain and created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) that all goods would conform to such samples, (2) seller knew that buyer was relying on seller to furnish goods that would be fit for buyer's particular purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-315, and (3) seller delivered over 3,700 nonconforming coats that were not fit for buyer's resale purposes. Alafoss v. Premium Corp. of Am., Inc., 448 F. Supp. 95 (D. Minn. 1978), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 599 F.2d 232 (8th Cir. Minn. 1979).

In action arising when hotel refused to pay for specially manufactured carpeting because of excessive shading, there was no breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 where carpet conformed precisely to both description of goods contained in purchase order and to sample which had been approved by buyer; neither were implied warranties of merchantability and fitness breached under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 where buyer relied on his own judgment to select goods and manufacturer was not at liberty to alter detailed specifications. Mohasco Indus., Inc. v. Anderson Halverson Corp., 90 Nev. 114, 520 P.2d 234 (1974).

Seller of fabric was liable to buyer for breach of express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, notwithstanding seller's invoice contained statement "No refunds after 5 days. Check goods before cutting," where buyer's purchase order stated that fabric was to be used for swimwear and that all "colors, prints and bonding processes must meet swimwear specifications," where buyer's order was based on sample supplied by seller and, although another fabric was substituted for sample fabric, such modification was initiated by seller, where seller's salesman assured buyer that substituted fabric would meet swimwear specifications, and where fabric supplied and subsequently manufactured into swimsuits was defective and failed to meet minimum performance standards for colorfastness: (1) express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose were established under UCC § 2-313 based on buyer's order form, representations of seller's salesman and samples supplied by seller; and (2) there was no showing that warranties of merchantability and fitness had been excluded or modified under UCC § 2-316. Rite Fabrics, Inc. v. Stafford-Higgins Co., 366 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

35. —Mobile homes.

Purchaser of new mobile home, who purchased from manufacturer through seller after viewing model and who subsequently discovered numerous defects, was entitled to recover from seller for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 based on seller's assurance that home purchased would conform to model home and repeated promises of seller to make repairs to home. Jones v. Abriani, 169 Ind. App. 556, 350 N.E.2d 635 (1976).

Although written contract for sale and purchase of mobile home provided that article was sold "as is" and disclaimed all warranties, either express or implied, and use of descriptions, samples or models as part of contract, seller made express warranties that mobile home would conform to description given by salesman and sample mobile home; and these warranties rested on "dickered" aspects of individual bargain, and went so clearly to essence of bargain that words of disclaimer in purchase agreement were repugnant to basic dickered terms. Mobile Hous., Inc. v. Stone, 490 S.W.2d 611 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

36. Language as creating warranty.

In sales contract, express warranties based on UCC § 2-313 need not be part of written agreement or bill of sale, but written expressed warranties given in a written agreement or bill of sale in accordance with UCC § 2-313 may be explained or supplemented by oral express warranties in accordance with UCC §§ 2-202 and 2-316, where written agreement was not intended by parties as final expression of their agreement. Centennial Ins. Co. v. Vic Tanny Int'l of Toledo, Inc., 46 Ohio App. 2d 137, 346 N.E.2d 330 (1975).

A petition alleging that Zoysia lawn grass was warranted by the seller to survive winter weather, and that the grass subsequently died of the cold, states a cause of action, for the decisive test, in determining whether language used is a mere expression of opinion or a warranty, is whether it purports to state a fact upon which it may fairly be presumed the seller expects the buyer to rely, and upon which the buyer would ordinarily rely, and no particular form of words is necessary to constitute a warranty. Bell v. Menzies, 110 Ga. App. 436, 138 S.E.2d 731 (1964).

37. —Statement of value.

In action to rescind contract for fraud, where (1) buyer purchased baler from seller for $2,995, based on offer in seller's letter which represented that baler was two years old and was worth $4,250, and (2) buyer alone signed purchase agreement, court held (1) that purchase agreement did not constitute complete and exclusive statement of terms of contract, (2) that seller's letter offering baler for sale and making certain representations about it, including representations as to its age, was admissible supplementary evidence of consistent additional terms within meaning of UCC § 2-202(b), and (3) that in absence of any specification in purchase agreement about baler's age or model year, its age as set forth in seller's letter became both a consistent additional term of the purchase agreement and, by operation of law, an express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a). Mill Printing & Lithographing Corp. v. Solid Waste Mgt. Sys., 65 A.D.2d 590 (2d Dep't 1978).

Subsection (1)(a) did not govern a case where the seller, after misrepresenting the value of a diamond ring, received it back from the purchaser and thereafter refused either to redeliver the ring or refund the purchaser his purchase price. Hamilton v. Schwadron, 82 N.J. Super. 493, 198 A.2d 128 (App. Div. 1964).

38. —Opinion or commendation.

General Business Law § 219-c was enacted at least in part to eliminate question whether art dealer's representations with respect to authorship of particular work were to be considered affirmation of fact, in which event description would create express warranty under Uniform Commercial Code § 2-313, or merely expression of dealer's opinion not giving rise to such warranty. Dawson v. G. Malina, Inc., 463 F. Supp. 461 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Seller's words to effect that "The horse is sound" spoken during telephone conversation between buyer and seller constituted opinion or commendation rather than express warranty under UCC § 2-313 where facts that buyer was knowledgeable buyer, having been involved with standardbred horses for some years, and sent agent, an even more knowledgeable horseman, to inspect horse, suggested no special "understanding" between buyer and seller and where conversation between buyer and seller was largely collateral to sale rather than essential part of it.

Furthermore, even if seller's statements constituted express warranties, it did not appear that they were "part of the basis of the bargain", under UCC § 2-313, where agent's opinion was principal, if not only, factor which motivated buyer to purchase horse and conversation with seller played negligible role in buyer's decision. Sessa v. Riegle, 427 F. Supp. 760 (E.D. Pa. 1977), aff'd, 568 F.2d 770 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

In action by buyer of new automobile against seller based on breach of warranty, trial court did not err in dismissing complaint since evidence was sufficient to support conclusion that seller did not violate express warranties contained in warranty book and that seller's commendations regarding auto constituted mere "puffing" rather than express warranties within meaning of UCC § 2-313 where purchaser was sophisticated businessman and experienced negotiator of new car purchases. Falcon Equip. Corp. v. Courtesy Lincoln Mercury, Inc., 536 F.2d 806 (8th Cir. Iowa 1976).

In action by buyer of newly constructed residence against sales agent and seller claiming breach of express warranty, sales agent's statements that water observed in crawl space under house was "probably" left over from construction, that it "should" dry up in a short time, that no more water could get in, and that builder of house "was a good contractor and he built good homes and that they were substantial," were not sufficient to constitute express warranties within UCC § 2-313(2). Griffin v. Wheeler-Leonard & Co., 290 N.C. 185, 225 S.E.2d 557 (1976).

In action by water corporation's contractor (buyer) against seller of filter tanks, failure of distributor heads of filter tanks did not constitute breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, breach of warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, or breach of any express warranty under UCC § 2-313, where distributor heads failed under excessive water pressure in water system due to defect in water corporation's plans and specifications, contractor bought tanks in reliance upon contract specifications without reliance upon any warranty, affirmation or representation by seller as to merchantability or fitness for intended use, and seller's statement to buyer that tanks "should" be able to remove iron and manganese from water did not amount to affirmation of fact affecting bargain between contractor and seller. Hobson Constr. Co. v. Hajoca Corp., 28 N.C. App. 684, 222 S.E.2d 709 (1976).

In personal injury action against manufacturer and seller of wood shaper, recommendations and suggestions of seller did not constitute express warranty, where language used by seller was not affirmation of fact or promise but rather his personal opinion, seller was not possessed of any special knowledge and did not assert fact of which buyer was ignorant, and vendor and vendee could both see danger of device in operation, that blades cut from underside, and that pressure was required to hold board down and against cutter. Weiss v. Rockwell Mfg. Co., 9 Ill. App. 3d 906, 293 N.E.2d 375 (1st Dist. 1973).

A seller's language that "the trailer was supposed to last a lifetime and be in perfect condition", if used in negotiating a sale, is ordinarily regarded as an expression of opinion in "the puffing of his wares", and does not create an express warranty. Performance Motors, Inc. v. Allen, 280 N.C. 385, 186 S.E.2d 161 (1972).

39. Reliance on warranty.

In breach-of-warranty action for damages by buyer of allegedly defective dump trailers against manufacturer-seller, court held (1) that buyer and its ultimate Mexican customers were "merchants" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); (2) that seller was "merchant" within meaning of both UCC § 2-104(1) and § 2-314(1); (3) that telephoned order for 20 additional trailers was not enforceable under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) because it did not come within exceptions to such statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3); (4) that "specially manufactured goods" exception in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) applies only when seller, rather than buyer, seeks to escape statute-of-frauds defense; (5) that since three trailers purchased under valid written contract were put to improper use by buyer's Mexican customers, rather than being used for their "ordinary purposes," no breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) occurred; (6) that use of trailers for improper purposes, rather than for their stated "particular purpose," prevented recovery under implied warranty of fitness in UCC § 2-315; (7) that buyer could not recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) because it failed to prove that it had relied on statements in manufacturer-seller's brochure either prior to or contemporaneously with making of parties' contract; and (8) that since buyer had no right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject two unused and undamaged trailers, manufacturer-seller was not required to retake them or to refund their purchase price to buyer. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

This section requires only that the purchaser rely upon the express warranty, and it does not additionally require that he be aware that it was made by the manufacturer of the truck which he purchased, instead of by the dealer, to reach the one who in fact made it. Seely v. White Motor Co., 63 Cal. 2d 9, 403 P.2d 145 (1965), overruled on other grounds, Huang v. Garner, 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 (1st Dist. 1984).

Buyer of mobile home was entitled to recover from seller for breach of written express warranty made part of basis of bargain under UCC § 2-313, notwithstanding buyer never actually received physical possession of copy of warranty, and notwithstanding buyer neither relied on, nor was even aware of existence of warranty. Winston Indus., Inc. v. Stuyvesant Ins. Co., 55 Ala. App. 525, 317 So. 2d 493 (Civ. App. 1975), cert. denied, 294 Ala. 775, 317 So. 2d 500 (1975).

Purchaser of herbicide was not entitled to recover from manufacturer for breach of express warranty based on herbicide's failure to perform as warranted, where purchaser failed to apply herbicide in accordance with manufacturer's instructions. Elanco Prods. Co. v. Akin-Tunnell, 516 S.W.2d 726 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Feb. 26, 1975).

Where there was evidence that mechanic received tool manufacturer's catalog, but no evidence that he relied on catalog description when he purchased hammer which chipped and injured his eye, mechanic was not entitled to recover for breach of express warranty. Hagenbuch v. Snap-On Tools Corp., 339 F. Supp. 676 (D.N.H. 1972).

40. —Knowledgeable buyer.

Finding of trial court that express warranty had not been made under UCC § 2-313 was not against manifest weight of the evidence, even though seller told buyer that trucks were in "good condition" when in fact they needed extensive repairs, where buyer admitted that he had inspected trucks and worked with them prior to purchase and that he knew they needed repairs. Janssen v. Hook, 1 Ill. App. 3d 318, 272 N.E.2d 385 (2d Dist. 1971).

Evidence supported finding that seller of tractor and combine had not warranted that equipment was new, where purchasers knew at time of purchase that equipment had been used as demonstrator. Pearrow v. Huntsman, 248 Ark. 1146, 455 S.W.2d 128 (1970).

Where the buyer knows that an express warranty of the seller is false there is no "warranty" as the misrepresentation is not in such case a part of the basis for the bargain. City Mach. & Mfg. Co. v. A. & A. Mach. Corp., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 461 (E.D.N.Y. 1967).

41. —Opportunity to inspect.

In action by buyer of used crane for recovery of purchase price based on breach of express warranty, evidence was not sufficient to establish any express warranty as to crane's capabilities within meaning of UCC § 2-313 where buyer's decision to purchase was based primarily on two inspections by buyer's experts, where no evidence of written or oral representations was shown other than description of crane as "75-ton" crane, and where contract terms contained valid disclaimer of express warranties. Alan Wood Steel Co. v. Capital Equip. Enters., Inc., 39 Ill. App. 3d 48, 349 N.E.2d 627 (1st Dist. 1976).

Finding of trial court that express warranty had not been made under UCC § 2-313 was not against manifest weight of the evidence, even though seller told buyer that trucks were in "good condition" when in fact they needed extensive repairs, where buyer admitted that he had inspected trucks and worked with them prior to purchase and that he knew they needed repairs. Janssen v. Hook, 1 Ill. App. 3d 318, 272 N.E.2d 385 (2d Dist. 1971).

Buyer's reliance on express warranty is not precluded by his inspection of merchandise if facts allegedly constituting breach of warranty are not discovered during inspection. Capital Equip. Enters., Inc. v. North Pier Term. Co., 117 Ill. App. 2d 264, 254 N.E.2d 542 (1st Dist. 1969).

42. —Seller's skill and judgment.

Representation made by reputable brewer of beer to distributor of carbon dioxide that surplus carbon dioxide which distributor was interested in buying from brewer was from time to time used by brewer in manufacture of its own beer was one which distributor was entitled to rely upon as matter of fact. Rock Creek Ginger Ale Co. v. Thermice Corp., 352 F. Supp. 522 (D.D.C. 1971).

Where the purchaser never intended to buy anything other than a 7-year-old secondhand automobile, the defendant never purported to sell anything other than such an automobile, the automobile was reasonably fit for the general purpose for which it was sold, and the purchaser did not rely solely upon any special judgment of the defendant, in the complete absence of any special warranties no rescission or recovery could be had of the seller. Basta v. Riviello, 66 Lack. Jur. 77 (Pa. 1964).

43. Disclaimers.

Evidence in buyer's suit against manufacturer and seller of farm sprinkler irrigation system for breach of warranties made in connection with sale of system supported trial court's findings (1) that both manufacturer and seller had made and breached express warranties under UCC § 2-313 concerning system's operation and durability; (2) that both defendants had breached implied warranty of merchantability attaching to system under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); and (3) that both defendants had also breached implied warranty under UCC § 2-315 that system was fit for particular purpose for which buyer had purchased it. Moreover, since such express and implied warranties were made before date on which contract of sale was made, disclaimer of warranties contained in manufacturer's erection manual, which buyer received after entering into contract, did not negate such warranties (noting also that even if buyer had received manufacturer's erection manual before entering into contract, general warranty disclaimer contained in manual would not have destroyed specific express warranties that were made orally by seller and were set forth in writing in manufacturer's advertising brochure). Whitaker v. Farmhand, Inc., 173 Mont. 345, 567 P.2d 916 (1977).

In action by buyers of automobile tires against seller and manufacturer for personal injuries allegedly resulting from blowout of tire, clause purporting to limit buyers' remedy solely to replacement tire and purporting to exclude liability for both personal injury and property damage was unconscionable under UCC § 2-719(3), in absence of any evidence to contrary, and was ineffective. McCarty v. E.J. Korvette, Inc., 28 Md. App. 421, 347 A.2d 253 (1975).

Evidence of alleged oral warranties or of warranties contained in promotional brochure was properly excluded, where retail instalment contract contained sufficient disclaimer of express warranties and implied warranties other than of merchantability and fitness, and instrument also provided that "there are no promises, terms, conditions, or warranties other than those contained herein." Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Secord Bros., 73 Misc. 2d 1031 (1973), aff'd, 44 A.D.2d 906, 357 N.Y.S.2d 702 (4th Dep't 1974).

Summary judgment was granted to seller for entire amount due in payment for certain air conditioning/heating units which allegedly did not comply with express warranties contained in advertising brochure, where front page of sales contract contained boldface disclaimer "Of Warranties, Express or Implied, or Merchantability or Fitness" not discussed by said contract, and where same page contained large bold print warning buyer to read contract. Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Secord Bros., 73 Misc. 2d 1031 (1973), aff'd, 44 A.D.2d 906, 357 N.Y.S.2d 702 (4th Dep't 1974).

In action against tire manufacturer for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 arising when tire failed and caused car to go out of control, contractual limitation of consequential damages to repair or replacement of tire was prima facie unconscionable under UCC § 2-719(3), notwithstanding fact that plaintiff suffered adverse verdict on strict liability theory. Collins v. Uniroyal, Inc., 126 N.J. Super. 401, 315 A.2d 30 (1973), aff'd, 64 N.J. 260, 315 A.2d 16 (1974).

A warrantor's statement that its warranty "is expressly in lieu of all other warranties, expressed or implied" is insufficient to operate as a disclaimer of responsibility in damages for breach of warranty when the warrantor repeatedly fails to correct the defect in the vehicle purchased as promised. Seely v. White Motor Co., 63 Cal. 2d 9, 403 P.2d 145 (1965), overruled on other grounds, Huang v. Garner, 157 Cal. App. 3d 404, 203 Cal. Rptr. 800 (1st Dist. 1984).

44. Time of nonconformity.

Where homeowner brought suit in 1973 based on malfunction of sewer system installed in 1968, and limitation period was thus controlling issue, trial court should have made fact findings as to period of express warranty, whether breach occurred within warranty period, and whether homeowner commenced action within four years of discovering breach as provided in UCC § 2-725. Daughtry v. Jet Aeration Co., 91 Wash. 2d 704, 592 P.2d 631 (1979).

There is no cause of action against an automobile manufacturing company to recover for a vehicle that ceased to operate approximately 23 ½ months after purchase at an odometer reading of 20,879 miles where the express written warranty is limited to repair or replacement of certain parts "after 12,000 miles and during the first twelve months or 50,000 miles of operation, whichever is earliest" and excludes any other warranties, express or implied; the burden is on the purchaser to present the automobile for examination during the warranty period, the parties are free to fix by agreement limitations for actions to be taken within a reasonable time, and the time limitations stated in the warranty are neither unreasonable nor unconscionable. Broe v. Oneonta Sales Co., 100 Misc. 2d 1099 (1978).

No proof of breach of express warranty as to soundness of race horse at time of sale, where X-rays, revealing broken splint bone in horse's leg discovered on day after sale, did not establish date of fracture. Miron v. Yonkers Raceway, Inc., 400 F.2d 112 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968).

The fact that a race horse, sound at the time of its purchase, was soon afterward discovered to have a bowed tendon, afforded the purchaser no relief on grounds of a breach of an express warranty of soundness, for the condition of the animal subsequent to the time that title passed was immaterial. Strauss v. West, 100 R.I. 388, 216 A.2d 366 (1966).

Law Reviews. 1982 Mississippi Supreme Court Review: Contract, Corporation and Commercial Law. 53 Miss L. J. 141, March 1983.

§ 75-2-314. Implied warranty; merchantability; usage of trade; sale of specified animals; computer hardware and software.

(1) Except as provided in subsection (5), a warranty that the goods shall be merchantable is implied in a contract for their sale if the seller is a merchant with respect to goods of that kind. Under this section the serving for value of food or drink to be consumed either on the premises or elsewhere is a sale.

(2) Goods to be merchantable must be at least such as:

(a) Pass without objection in the trade under the contract description; and

(b) In the case of fungible goods, are of fair average quality within the description; and

(c) Are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used; and

(d) Run, within the variations permitted by the agreement, of even kind, quality and quantity within each unit and among all units involved; and

(e) Are adequately contained, packaged and labeled as the agreement may require; and

(f) Conform to the promises or affirmations of fact made on the container or label if any.

(3) Other implied warranties may arise from course of dealing or usage of trade.

(4) With respect to the sale of cattle, hogs and sheep, there shall be no implied warranty that the cattle, hogs and sheep are free from sickness or disease at the time the sale is consummated, conditioned upon reasonable showing by the seller or his agent that all state and federal regulations pertaining to animal health were complied with.

(5) Nothing in this section shall prohibit the express disclaimer or express modification of any implied warranties of merchantability or any express limitation of remedies for breach of such warranties concerning computer hardware, computer software, and services performed on computer hardware and computer software, which are sold between merchants.

Editor's Note — The preamble to Chapter 385, Laws of 1976, provides as follows:

"Whereas, the Mississippi Legislature passed the Uniform Commercial Code with amendments at the 1966 Regular Session of the Legislature, effective as of March 31, 1968, being Chapter 316, General Laws of 1966; and

"Whereas, one of the amendments to the Uniform Act deleted Section 2-316 and amended Section 2-314 for the express purpose of precluding disclaimers and the limitation of remedies for breach of an implied warranty; and

"Whereas, it now appears that there is confusion as to the legislative intent because of the amendment to the Uniform Act that deleted Section 2-316 and amended Section 2-314(1) and (3) by deleting "(Section 2-316)" and the Uniform Act, as amended, and now codified in Sections 75-2-314 and 75-2-315, Mississippi Code of 1972, is interpreted by some segments of the judiciary to permit disclaimers and limitations of implied warranties; and

"Whereas, it was the intent of the Legislature by deleting Section 2-316 of the Uniform Act and amending Section 2-314 of the Uniform Act and Section 2-315 of the Uniform Act to prohibit the exclusion or modification of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose;

"Now, therefore, in order to eliminate any ambiguity in the above sections of the Mississippi Code of 1972, and to conform said sections to express the true legislative intent,

Be it enacted by the legislature of the State of Mississippi:"

A. In General.

1. Generally.

Action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability against manufacturer, as seller, may be maintained by buyer because manufacturer qualified as seller under UCC § 2-103(1)(d) as person who sells or contracts to sell goods, although motor home in question had not been purchased directly from manufacturer. Hargett v. Midas Int'l Corp., 508 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1987).

Implied warranty of merchantability applies to sale of both new and used goods so long as seller is merchant with respect to goods of that kind because UCC does not distinguish between new and used goods. Hargett v. Midas Int'l Corp., 508 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1987).

Three warranties recognized by Mississippi law applicable to a chicken feeder system purchased by defendants from plaintiff on an open account are express warranties, implied warranty of merchantability, and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose. McLaurin v. Smith's Poultry & Farm Supply, Inc., 499 So. 2d 1361 (Miss. 1986).

In breach-of-warranty action by buyer against manufacturer of defective heat pump that was installed by defendant's dealer in plaintiff's new house, court held (1) that case involved breach of binding compromise settlement between plaintiff and defendant; (2) that defendant's attempt in its limited express warranty to limit its liability respecting any implied warranties was invalid under both Mississippi statute abolishing privity requirement between buyer and manufacturer and also Mississippi UCC § 75-2-719(4);

(3) that defendant was "seller" within meaning of Mississippi privity statute; (4) that because of defendant's breach of implied warranty of merchantability that attached to heat pump under Mississippi UCC § 75-2-314(1) and (2)(c), plaintiff was entitled to recover (a) damages under Mississippi UCC § 75-2-714(2) for difference between actual value of heat pump at time plaintiff accepted it and its value in absence of defendant's breach of warranty, and (b) consequential damages under Mississippi UCC § 75-2-715(2)(a) for additional expenses incurred in purchasing one wood heater and two kerosene heaters; and (5) that case did not justify award of punitive damages for defendant's breach. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

Mississippi Code § 75-2-314 by analogy suggests, with respect to a 2 party copier-equipment lease, that the lessor warranted the merchantability of the copier, i.e., that it was fit for the ordinary purpose of making multiple copies of documents. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Language in a copier-equipment lease disclaiming implied warranties of fitness for purpose and merchantability is rendered inoperative by Mississippi Code § 11-7-18. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Warranties of merchantability and fitness for use are implied by sections 2-314 and 2-315 of the Uniform Commercial Code unless excluded or modified pursuant to section 2-316 of the Uniform Commercial Code; where the exact exclusionary words of subdivision (2) of section 2-316 of the Uniform Commercial Code are not used, the exclusion may still be accomplished by language which clearly indicates that no implied warranty is made (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316, subd [3], par [a]), by a course of dealing or course of performance or usage of trade (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316, subd [3], par [c]), or where the buyer has refused to examine the goods under circumstances where the defect complained of would have been revealed through such inspection. Basic Adhesives, Inc. v. Robert Matzkin Co., 101 Misc. 2d 283 (1979), aff'd as modified.

UCC § 2-314 was drawn from developing case law and is designed to permit further and more expansive interpretation whenever this is necessary. O'Dell v. Custom Bldrs. Corp., 560 S.W.2d 862 (Mo. 1978).

Term "merchantable" in UCC § 2-314(1) and (2) does not mean "perfect." Nassau Suffolk White Trucks, Inc. v. Twin County Transit Mix Corp., 62 A.D.2d 982 (2d Dep't 1978).

In suit by gasket manufacturer for damages for defective materials furnished by defendant supplier, where (1) supplier's acceptance of manufacturer's purchase order was expressly conditioned on manufacturer's assent to new terms contained in supplier's acceptance, (2) manufacturer did not assent to such terms, and (3) both parties nevertheless performed what they believed to be their contractual obligations, as evidenced by the shipping and acceptance of the goods, conduct of parties was sufficient under UCC § 2-207(3) to establish a contract, and the terms of such contract were those on which writings of parties agreed, as supplemented by provisions of UCC § 2-314 dealing with implied warranty of merchantability. Uniroyal, Inc. v. Chambers Gasket & Mfg. Co., 177 Ind. App. 508, 380 N.E.2d 571 (1978).

Implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose arise in every contract of sale under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315, unless such warranties are properly excluded under UCC § 2-316. Lease Fin., Inc. v. Burger, 40 Colo. App. 107, 575 P.2d 857 (1977).

In New Hampshire, statutory implied warranties provided by Uniform Commercial Code are deemed to afford complete remedy, and no common-law cause of action in contract based on implied warranty is recognized. Brescia v. Great Rd. Realty Trust, 117 N.H. 154, 373 A.2d 1310 (1977).

In action against seller of house for damages arising out of defective construction: (1) by analogy to UCC § 2-314(1), seller of house who was in business of selling houses and who caused house to be built expressly for resale, made implied warranty against structural defects; and (2) by analogy to UCC § 2-715(1), measure of damages for breach of implied warranty of structural defects was reasonable cost of repairs. Bolkum v. Staab, 133 Vt. 467, 346 A.2d 210 (1975).

The liability arising under the strict tort doctrine is distinct from the liability warranty arising under the Code. Rosenau v. City of New Brunswick, 51 N.J. 130, 238 A.2d 169 (1968).

The implied warranties of merchantability and of fitness for a particular purpose are designed to protect the buyer of goods from bearing the burden of loss where merchandise, though not violating a promise expressly guaranteed, does not conform to the normal commercial standards or meeting the buyer's particular purpose, a condition upon which he had the right to rely. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

Express and implied warranties rest upon sales and the existence of a buyer-seller relationship, insofar as the UCC deals with the subject. Cheshire v. Southampton Hosp. Ass'n, 53 Misc. 2d 355 (1967).

The UCC does not change the already established law of Pennsylvania as to the buyer's right to rescind and recover the purchase price where there has been a breach of an implied warranty of merchantability or fitness. Sarnecki v. Al Johns Pontiac, 56 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 293 (Pa. 1966).

The description of "merchantable" set forth in subsec (2)(c) of this section is the same as that term was understood prior to adoption of the UCC. Johnson v. Fore River Motors, Inc., 26 Mass. App. Dec. 184 (1963).

The instant section is derived from § 15 of the Uniform Sales Act. Bafle v. Remchow & Ford Motor Co., 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 108 (Pa. 1962).

2. Disclaimer or exclusion.

Implied warranty of merchantability may not be waived or disclaimed in Mississippi as result of §§ 11-7-18 and 75-2-719(4). Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

Heat pump manufacturer's attempt in its express limited warranty to limit its liability as to any implied warranty was invalid. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

In action by plaintiff to recover for breach of agreement termed a "lease," under which defendant agreed to lease business machines from plaintiff for 60-month term, with title to pass to defendant at end of term, implied warranties of merchantability and fitness under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 were held applicable to transaction whether deemed lease or bailment agreement; however, since both front and back page of lease agreement contained statement in bold capitalized lettering, "LESSOR MAKES NO EXPRESS OR IMPLIED WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS WITH RESPECT TO SUCH LEASED PROPERTY AND HEREBY DISCLAIMS THE SAME," which appeared not more than two inches above signature of officer who signed lease on behalf of defendant, disclaimer was sufficiently conspicuous, as defined in UCC § 1-201(10), and was properly worded so as to effectively exclude such warranties under UCC § 2-316. Quality Acceptance Corp. v. Million & Albers, Inc., 367 F. Supp. 771 (D. Wyo. 1973).

Exclusion of implied warranty of merchantability under instant section must be made in accordance with § 2-316(2). Hunt v. Perkins Mach. Co., 352 Mass. 535, 226 N.E.2d 228 (1967).

B. Scope of Warranty.

3. In general; nature of seller's liability.

An implied warranty of merchantability with regard to certain engine parts sold by the defendant to the plaintiff and installed in a truck engine applied only to those parts and not to the entire engine into which the parts were installed. Easley v. Day Motors, Inc., 796 So. 2d 236 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Implied warranty of merchantability under § 75-2-314 applies to used goods as well as new goods. Fitzner Pontiac-Buick-Cadillac, Inc. v. Smith, 523 So. 2d 324 (Miss. 1988).

Since UCC does not distinguish between new and used goods, implied warranty of merchantability applies to sale of used motor vehicle. Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

Implied warranty of merchantability applies to sale of both new and used goods so long as seller is merchant with respect to goods of that kind because UCC does not distinguish between new and used goods. Hargett v. Midas Int'l Corp., 508 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1987).

Action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability against manufacturer, as seller, may be maintained by buyer because manufacturer qualified as seller under UCC § 2-103(1)(d) as person who sells or contracts to sell goods, although motor home in question had not been purchased directly from manufacturer. Hargett v. Midas Int'l Corp., 508 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1987).

In an action by the purchaser of a new automobile against the manufacturer and the seller thereof, liability would extend to the manufacturer through its expressed warranty of merchantability, the same as liability extended to the seller through § 75-2-314. Royal Lincoln-Mercury Sales, Inc. v. Wallace, 415 So. 2d 1024 (Miss. 1982).

Pursuant to the legislative policy of the State to protect purchasers of used vehicles from being sold defective vehicles, defendant used car dealer is liable for property damage sustained by plaintiff as the result of an accident caused by a defective steering mechanism, traceable to the manufacturer of the car, under section 417 of the Vehicle and Traffic Law which requires retail sellers of used vehicles to expressly warrant in writing that the vehicle "is in condition and repair to render, under normal use, satisfactory and adequate service upon the public highway at the time of delivery", and, it is therefore not necessary to determine whether defendant is also liable under the theories of strict liability in tort or implied warranty of merchantability. Maure v. Fordham Motor Sales, Inc., 98 Misc. 2d 979 (1979).

The implied warranties under the Uniform Commercial Code apply to the sale of used goods. Natale v. Martin Volkswagen, Inc., 92 Misc. 2d 1046 (1978).

Retail book dealer was not liable under UCC § 2-314 to purchaser of cookbook for injuries and damages caused by improper instructions or lack of adequate warnings as to poisonous ingredients used in recipe; absent allegations that bookseller knew there was reason to warn public as to contents of book, implied warranty in respect to sale of books by merchant who regularly sells them is limited to warranty of physical properties of such books and does not extend to material communicated by book's author or publisher. Cardozo v. True, 342 So. 2d 1053 (Fla. App. 1977), cert. denied, 353 So. 2d 674 (Fla. 1977).

In actions for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 to recover damages for injuries resulting from the use of a product, there is generally no liability on the part of the seller if the buyer was unusually susceptible to injury from the product. A manufacturer cannot be required, under a theory of breach of implied warranty, to insure against the susceptibility of a particular individual to the manufacturer's product. The manufacturer's duty is to guard against probabilities, not possibilities. Chambers v. G.D. Searle & Co., 441 F. Supp. 377 (D. Md. 1975), aff'd, 567 F.2d 269 (4th Cir. Md. 1977).

UCC § 2-314 was inapplicable to tort action alleging breach of implied warranty. Williams v. Detroit Edison Co., 63 Mich. App. 559, 234 N.W.2d 702 (1975).

Breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose requires only that seller be made aware of buyer's need, that seller recommend products, and that buyer purchaser product as recommended. Robinson v. Williamsen Idaho Equip. Co., 94 Idaho 819, 498 P.2d 1292 (1972).

Lack of skill or foresight on the part of the seller in discovering the product's flaw was never meant to bar recovery under this section. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

Although the seller is unable to discover the defect in goods sold or cure the damage if it could be ascertained, he cannot avoid the consequences imposed by this section upon the seller of commercially inferior goods. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

The entire purpose behind the implied warranty sections of the UCC is to hold the seller responsible when inferior goods are passed along to the unsuspecting buyer, and the evidence required is not that the defects could or should have been uncovered by the seller but only that the goods upon delivery were not of a merchantable quality or fit for their particular purpose; and if the requisite proofs are established the only exculpatory relief afforded is a showing that the implied warranties were modified or excluded by specific language under § 2-316. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

The mere fact that shoes were slippery when wet and caused the plaintiff to fall on a laundromat floor does not establish that there was any defect as warranty liability does not require that goods be made accident-proof nor impose on the manufacturer the duty of warning of obvious dangers. Fanning v. LeMay, 38 Ill. 2d 209, 230 N.E.2d 182 (1967).

4. Services distinguished.

UCC § 2-314(1), dealing with implied warranty of merchantability, and § 2-315, dealing with implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, were inapplicable to action against truck-maintenance company for its failure to maintain properly brakes on truck that struck plaintiff's decedent, since such sections relate to a seller of goods. Lee v. C & P Serv. Corp., 363 So. 2d 586 (Fla. App. 1978), cert. denied, 372 So. 2d 469 (Fla. 1979).

Where complaint showed that furnishing of allegedly unsafe drug to decedent was incidental feature of professional services rendered by defendant physicians, no sale of such drug occurred within meaning of Uniform Commercial Code that could give rise to cause of action for breach of any express or implied warranties under UCC § 2-313(1), § 2-314(1), and § 2-315. Osborn v. Kelley, 61 A.D.2d 367 (3d Dep't 1978).

In suit by buyer of modular home against seller for breach of warranty, wherein seller filed third-party complaint against testing laboratory, which had allowed its seal of "approval for use and occupancy" to be placed on home, for breach of implied warranties allegedly arising from seal's placement, implied warranties created by UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 were inapplicable because (1) UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 apply only to transactions in goods, and (2) in present case, any implied warranty of testing laboratory would concern quality of its inspection services, rather than quality of goods inspected. Jones v. Clark, 36 N.C. App. 327, 244 S.E.2d 183 (1978).

Implied warranties do not attach to the performance of a service. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

Bridge design plans were not "goods" as defined in UCC § 2-105(1), and, thus, implied warranty provisions of Uniform Commercial Code §§ 2-314 and 2-315, did not apply to cause of action based on defect in plans. Department of Transp. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 28 Pa. Commw. 214, 368 A.2d 888 (1977).

Insofar as applicability of implied warranty provisions of Uniform Commercial Code to sale of product under hybrid sales-service contract is concerned, if service aspect of such contract is predominant and transfer of personal property is merely incidental feature of transaction, exacting warranty standards in Uniform Commercial Code for imposing liability without proof of fault will not be imported from law of sales to render liable those who perform trade or professional services, such as building services under construction contract. Those who hire experts for predominant purpose of rendering services and who rely on their special skills cannot expect infallibility. Therefore, unless the parties have contractually bound themselves to a higher standard of performance, reasonable care and competence owed generally by practitioners in the particular trade or profession define the limits of an injured party's justifiable demands (also stating that since express warranty provisions of UCC § 2-313(1)(a) apply only to contracts for sale of goods, that section would be no more applicable to contract for rendition of services than the code's implied warranty provisions). Milau Assocs. v. North Ave. Dev. Corp., 42 N.Y.2d 482, 368 N.E.2d 1247 (1977).

Implied warranty of merchantability and fitness under UCC § 2-314 did not apply to contract for investigating services and report pertaining to prospective insurance agent, since report based upon pre-employment investigation did not constitute "goods" under UCC. Strong v. Retail Credit Co., 38 Colo. App. 125, 552 P.2d 1025 (1976).

In action against supplier of concrete used in allegedly defective floors, defendant's third party complaint for indemnity against installing contractor, alleging that contractor warranted fitness and merchantability of materials, did not state a cause of action because the warranties created by UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 only have significance if made by a seller. ICI Am., Inc. v. Martin-Marietta Corp., 368 F. Supp. 1148 (D. Del. 1974).

A complaint which alleges the breach of an express or implied warranty of fitness arising as a consequence of the breaking of an intramedullary pin, warranted as properly manufactured and free of defects, which was surgically inserted in the plaintiff, stated a cause of action; for it might be possible for the plaintiff to prove a sale of the pin as opposed to an overall contract for hospital and medical services. Cheshire v. Southampton Hosp. Ass'n, 53 Misc. 2d 355 (1967).

Warranties are limited to the sales of goods, and no warranty attaches to the performance of a service. Aegis Prods., Inc. v. Arriflex Corp. of Am., 25 A.D.2d 639 (1st Dep't 1966).

5. —Installation of goods or fixtures.

Where vinyl liner of swimming pool developed wrinkle, seller agreed to reseal liner but failed to do so and hole developed which resulted in total destruction of pool, seller breached implied warranties under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 through his failure to install pool in workmanlike manner using suitable materials. Riffe v. Black, 548 S.W.2d 175 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

Contract for installation and maintenance by defendant of burglar alarm system on plaintiff's premises, which provided that equipment installed should remain property of defendant, did not constitute sale of equipment so as to be basis of cause of action for breach of either express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1) or implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and UCC § 2-315. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

Where plumbing and heating subcontractor selected, purchased and installed floor furnace in plaintiff's home, and where it was claimed that installation of furnace was faulty, installation of furnace by subcontractor was covered by implied warranties of UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. O'Laughlin v. Minnesota Natural Gas Co., 253 N.W.2d 826 (Minn. 1977).

Implied warranty of UCC § 2-314 applied to goods being installed by electrical contractor where contractor contracted with owner of apartment building to install electrical wiring. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Radiant Elec. Co., 55 Mich. App. 410, 222 N.W.2d 323 (1974).

An oral agreement between property owners and a handyman whereby the handyman agreed to purchase a heating unit for owners and install it in the owners' building did not create between the parties a relationship of buyer and seller, so as to entitle the owners to a recovery against the handyman on the ground of a breach of implied warranty of merchantability and of fitness for the purpose. Victor v. Barzaleski, 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 698 (1959).

6. —Beauty treatments.

Beauty salon patron stated cause of action against operator of beauty salon for breach of implied warranties of fitness and merchantability under UCC where patron alleged that she was injured as result of application of defective hair product during course of permanent wave given by employee of beauty salon. Ellibee v. Dye, 64 Pa. D. & C.2d 158 (1973).

Despite hybrid sale-and-service nature of permanent wave treatment, New Jersey Supreme Court has allowed patron's suit against beautician for breach of fitness warranty under Code Sales Article. Newmark v. Gimbel's, Inc., 54 N.J. 585, 258 A.2d 697 (1969).

There is no "sale" to a beauty parlor customer of materials used in giving her treatments, for the materials used in the performance of such services are patently incidental to the treatment itself and do not constitute a purchase of an article by the customer. Epstein v. Giannattasio, 25 Conn. Supp. 109, 197 A.2d 342 (1963).

7. —Blood transfusions.

Under Tennessee addition to UCC § 2-316, implied warranties of merchantabil-ity and fitness were not applicable to transfusions of blood. Sawyer v. Methodist Hosp., 522 F.2d 1102 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1975).

Furnishing of blood to patient by blood banks and hospital was adjunct to services performed by hospital in endeavor to restore patient's health and thus was not "sale" giving rise to any warranty of fitness or merchantable quality; consequently, actions for breach of warranty against blood banks and hospital were not maintainable. Jennings v. Roosevelt Hosp., 83 Misc. 2d 1 (1975).

Even if transfer of donor blood by non-commercial supplier to hospital for service fee was sale under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315, so as to give rise to implied warranty, supplier was not liable to hospital patient who contracted serum hepatitis, since there were no methods available at time in question by which hepatitis virus could effectively be excluded from blood or presence of virus determined and, therefore, blood, to extent it may have contained hepatitis virus, was unavoidably unsafe and for that reason was not unreasonably dangerous and did not fail to be fit within terms of warranties provided for in UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. McMichael v. American Red Cross, 532 S.W.2d 7 (Ky. 1975).

Although implied warranty contained in UCC § 2-314 imposes responsibility on seller for injuries caused by bad product, regardless of seller's fault, suppliers of blood for human transfusions are exempted from such liability. Steinik v. Doctors Hosp., 82 Misc. 2d 97 (1975).

Hospital which furnished defective blood for transfusion to patient who contracted serum hepatitis as a result thereof did not make a "sale" to patient, and thus hospital was not liable under doctrine of strict liability or theory of breach of warranty. St. Luke's Hosp. v. Schmaltz, 188 Colo. 353, 534 P.2d 781 (1975).

Alabama Code § 2-314(4) is clear legislative expression that activity of "procuring, furnishing, donating, processing, distributing, or using human whole blood, plasma, blood products, etc." is to be service by every person participating therein and not sale. State v. Community Blood & Plasma Serv., Inc., 48 Ala. App. 658, 267 So. 2d 176 (Civ. App. 1972).

8. Bailments distinguished.

In action by tire store employees against truck manufacturer, manufacture of truck wheel and rim, and truck dealer, for injuries received while they were changing tires on truck: (1) employees failed to establish breach of warranty against dealer since there was no sale when dealer delivered truck to plaintiffs' employer for purpose of having tires changed; (2) plaintiffs also failed to state cause of action for breach of warranty against truck manufacturer or manufacturer of wheel and rim since there was no privity between plaintiffs and manufacturers. Favors v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 309 So. 2d 69 (Fla. App. 1975).

9. Leases distinguished; statute applicable.

In action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability allegedly attaching under Oklahoma UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) to oil-drilling pipe rented by plaintiff from defendant, (1) federal district court would assume without deciding, in absence of decision by Oklahoma Supreme Court, that Oklahoma UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) applied to rental transaction in suit, and (2) plaintiff failed to prove by preponderance of the evidence that defendant had breached its alleged warranty, since plaintiff did not prove that joint of drill pipe which broke during drilling operation was not fit for purpose for which it was used. Dyco Petro. Corp. v. Rucker Co., 443 F. Supp. 685 (E.D. Okla. 1977).

UCC § 2-314, implied warranty of merchantability, and UCC § 2-315, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, would be extended to lease transaction under which equipment company leased three motor scraper units to construction company since same considerations which give rise to creation of implied warranties in sales transaction were present: lessor was merchant specializing in sale and leasing of heavy construction equipment and lessee claimed it relied on lessor's expertise; lessor placed product into stream of commerce and sought to reap economic benefits from lease of product; and, finally, lessor was in better position to control antecedent factors which affect condition of product. Furthermore, UCC § 2-316, which allows seller to disclaim implied warranties and provides specific means for such disclaimer, would be extended to lease in question by analogy. Glenn Dick Equip. Co. v. Galey Constr., Inc., 97 Idaho 216, 541 P.2d 1184 (1975).

10. —Statute inapplicable.

The provisions for implied warranties in contracts for the sale of goods set forth in §§ 75-2-314(1) and 75-2-315 are not applicable to 3-party lease transactions where the evidence clearly shows that the lessor is an independent financing lessor, not the functional equivalent of a seller or an agent thereof. David Nutt & Assocs. v. First Continental Leasing Corp., 599 So. 2d 576 (Miss. 1992).

In lessor's action to recover balance due under automobile lease, lessee who claimed benefits of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC 2-314 and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 could not escape liability by contending that its duty to make payments was conditioned on vehicle's remaining merchantable and repairable and that lessor had breached implied warranties relied on, since assuming that such warranties applied to transaction, neither warranty encompassed commitment that leased vehicle would remain serviceable during the term of lease. A-Leet Leasing Corp. v. Kingshead Corp., 150 N.J. Super. 384, 375 A.2d 1208 (App. Div. 1977), certification denied, 75 N.J. 528, 384 A.2d 508 (1977).

Contract was lease arrangement and was not covered by Uniform Commercial Code provisions relating to warranties where one party agreed to lease certain hens, known as "Parent Stock," and eggs therefrom, known as "Hatching Eggs," to other party for purpose of producing offspring, where contract provided that first party retained title to "Parent Stock" and "Hatching Eggs" and other party was precluded from selling or otherwise disposing of same without express written consent of first party, and where contract additionally provided for termination by either party on written notice at least 30 days in advance. DeKalb Agresearch, Inc. v. Abbott, 391 F. Supp. 152 (N.D. Ala. 1974), aff'd, 511 F.2d 1162 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

Guarantors of lease of truck crane could not assert defense of breach of warranty in action on guarantee. Hurst v. Stith Equip. Co., 133 Ga. App. 374, 210 S.E.2d 851 (1974).

11. "Merchant with respect to goods of that kind".

A seller of cattle who had been in the cattle business for 20 years, owned approximately 2,000 head of cattle, and annually sold about 1,000 head, and who operated a feed lot operation, feeding and fattening cattle for sale to meat packing plants for slaughter, was an experienced cattle man and a knowledgeable seller, who dealt with goods (cattle) of a kind, and had expertise peculiar to cattle transactions; thus his cattle operation was of sufficient size, extent, and duration that he was a "merchant dealing in goods of that kind" within the meaning of former § 75-2-314, and an implied warranty of merchantability arose from his sale of cattle to plaintiff buyer, notwithstanding the fact that he sold only what he raised, that he had no special knowledge or skill peculiar to selling cattle through a live-stock sale, rather than a stock yard, and that raising cattle was only one of his businesses. Vince v. Broome, 443 So. 2d 23 (Miss. 1983).

Although seller was unfamiliar with "hoedads" (i.e., forestry tool used for planting seedling trees) and had not previously manufactured hoedad collars, seller did hold itself out, by operating foundry, as having skill in "practice" of casting iron and presumably in selection of materials to be used in manufacturing castings; inasmuch as transaction involved selection of type of metal appropriate for hoedad collars, seller was merchant within meaning of UCC § 2-104. Likewise, for purposes of UCC § 2-314, seller was merchant "with respect to goods of that kind," i.e., castings, seller having in past assisted buyer in choosing particular type of metals to fulfil various tasks in its manufacture of castings. Furthermore, since ordinary purpose of custom-made castings depended on their designated use, since seller knew that castings were to join handle and blade in tree-planting impact tools which occasionally would strike rock but since castings were not fit for this purpose, warranty of merchantability was breached. Valley Iron & Steel Co. v. Thorin, 278 Or. 103, 562 P.2d 1212 (1977).

Uniform Commercial Code provides two implied warranties: (1) implied warranty of general merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314, which is applicable if seller is merchant with respect to goods of that kind, and (2) implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose contained in UCC § 2-315, which is applicable if seller has reason to know any particular purpose for which goods are required and buyer is relying on seller's skill or judgment to select or to furnish suitable goods. These warranties are imposed by law on basis of public policy and arise by operation of law because of relationship between parties, nature of transaction, and surrounding circumstances. Brescia v. Great Rd. Realty Trust, 117 N.H. 154, 373 A.2d 1310 (1977).

Sale of repossessed boat by bank did not give rise to implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 where there was no evidence that bank was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), there being no evidence that bank dealt in kind of goods involved in transaction—boats—or that it held itself as having knowledge or skill peculiar to such goods, but rather record indicated sale of boat was no more than isolated transaction by bank; nor did sale give rise to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose within UCC § 2-315, although buyer told bank officer he "was thinking about buying a boat to put into charter service" where there was no evidence that buyer relied upon bank's skill or judgment, or that bank possessed such skill or judgment, that boat was fit for particular purpose of charter service use. Donald v. City Nat'l Bank, 295 Ala. 320, 329 So. 2d 92 (1976).

Mechanical contracting firm that accepted order to supply custom cooling equipment which would conform to specifications supplied by buyer and that guaranteed its work for period of one year against defects was (1) "seller" as defined in UCC § 2-103(1)(d), and (2) "a merchant with respect to goods of that kind," i.e., with respect to cooling system, as provided in UCC § 2-314(1). Frantz, Inc. v. Blue Grass Hams, Inc., 520 S.W.2d 313 (Ky. 1974).

Since seller of used airplane was not merchant as defined in Code § 2-104, there could be no implied warranties attributed to him in sale of airplane. Downs v. Shouse, 18 Ariz. App. 225, 501 P.2d 401 (1972).

Auctioneer who sells different kinds of goods on an ongoing basis under circumstances that imply a likelihood of repetition with regard to the goods in question is a "merchant with respect to goods of that kind." Regan Purchase & Sales Corp. v. Primavera, 68 Misc. 2d 858 (1972).

Implied warranty of merchantability of chickens arose by operation of law from sole fact that seller was regular merchant with respect to sale of chickens and knew particular purpose for which buyer intended to use chickens, production of eggs. Woodruff v. Clark County Farm Bureau Coop. Ass'n, 153 Ind. App. 31, 286 N.E.2d 188 (1972).

Since the evidence is uncontradicted that the article sold, even though a used or second-hand article, was sold by a seller who is "a merchant with respect to goods of that kind" an implied warranty of merchantability attaches to the sale under UCC § 2-314, unless excluded or modified by UCC § 2-316. Georgia Timberlands, Inc. v. Southern Airways Co., 125 Ga. App. 404, 188 S.E.2d 108 (1972).

In breach of warranty action by distributor of carbon dioxide against brewer which sold its surplus carbon dioxide to distributor, evidence supported brewer's contention that it was not merchant with respect to carbon dioxide, although sale involved more than 700,000 pounds of carbon dioxide. Rock Creek Ginger Ale Co. v. Thermice Corp., 352 F. Supp. 522 (D.D.C. 1971).

12. —Isolated sales.

Since defendant, a body and fender specialist, was not, nor did he represent himself to be in the business of selling cars when he sold an allegedly defective car to plaintiff, he is not a merchant and, thus, no warranty of merchantability is applicable (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-314); a person making an isolated sale of goods is not a merchant within the meaning of the code and the fact that defendant had repaired and sold a few other cars does not render him a used car salesman. McGregor v. Dimou, 101 Misc. 2d 756 (1979).

Sale of used multi-rip saw did not come within terms of UCC § 2-314 where seller was engaged in sawmill business, not business of selling sawmill equipment, and sale was isolated transaction; furthermore, UCC § 2-315 did not apply to transaction where uncontroverted facts established that buyer had decided to purchase particular brand of saw purchased from seller prior to his initial contact with seller, thus mitigating any reliance upon seller's skill and knowledge. Siemen v. Alden, 34 Ill. App. 3d 961, 341 N.E.2d 713 (2d Dist. 1975).

In action arising out of automobile accident which was allegedly caused by latent defect in recapped tire, driver of automobile was entitled to protection under UCC § 2-318 despite lack of privity of contract where she was member of purchaser's family; nor did lack of privity bar relief sought by innocent third party bystander; cause of action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was not stated where tires were purchased for general use upon ordinary highways; but cause of action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 was stated where sale of recapped tires by service station operator was not isolated sale and retailer qualified as merchant with respect to goods sold. McHugh v. Carlton, 369 F. Supp. 1271 (D.C.S.C. 1974).

13. —Custom-made goods.

In action arising when hotel refused to pay for specially manufactured carpeting because of excessive shading, there was no breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 where carpet conformed precisely to both description of goods contained in purchase order and to sample which had been approved by buyer; neither were implied warranties of merchantability and fitness breached under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 where buyer relied on his own judgment to select goods and manufacturer was not at liberty to alter detailed specifications. Mohasco Indus., Inc. v. Anderson Halverson Corp., 90 Nev. 114, 520 P.2d 234 (1974).

14. —Reliance on seller's skill and judgment.

"Reliance" is not an element of the warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c). Matulunas v. Baker, 569 S.W.2d 791 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Packinghouse waste processing plant was constructed subject to implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, where seller knew particular purpose for which processing plant was required, buyer relied on seller's skill and judgment to furnish suitable plant, and these warranties were not excluded pursuant to UCC § 2-316. Omaha Pollution Control Corp. v. Carver-Greenfield Corp., 413 F. Supp. 1069 (D. Neb. 1976).

Upon evidence that a marine engine sold by defendant distributor to plaintiff boat owner gave off excessive quantities of heavy black smoke when running, and that defendant was unable to cure the defect after persistent efforts, and where it could have been found that the defendant knew of plaintiff's purpose in buying the engine and that plaintiff relied on defendant to guide him in its selection, a finding was warranted that there were breaches both of the warranty of merchantability and of the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose under §§ 2-314 and 2-315. Hunt v. Perkins Mach. Co., 352 Mass. 535, 226 N.E.2d 228 (1967).

A petition alleging that Zoysia lawn grass was warranted by the seller to survive winter weather, and that the grass subsequently died of the cold, states a cause of action, for the decisive test, in determining whether language used is a mere expression of opinion or a warranty, is whether it purports to state a fact upon which it may fairly be presumed the seller expects the buyer to rely, and upon which the buyer would ordinarily rely, and no particular form of words is necessary to constitute a warranty. Bell v. Menzies, 110 Ga. App. 436, 138 S.E.2d 731 (1964).

15. Food and drink.

In in rem action in admiralty involving counterclaims by seller and buyer arising from breaches of contract to sell flour, (1) seller breached implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), and also federal adulterated-food statute, as to one cargo of flour which was infested with insects when it arrived at warehouse prior to being loaded on ship, (2) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject all of such cargo and therefore was not liable for its purchase price or any consequential damages, (3) seller also breached implied warranty of merchantability with respect to two other cargoes of flour, and since buyer had paid for such flour and had ultimately accepted it, buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-606(1)(a), (4) buyer was not barred from claiming damages for such nonconforming cargoes by failure to give notice of nonconformity by registered mail, since buyer's warning to seller of buyer's dissatisfaction with cargoes constituted adequate notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (5) under UCC § 2-714(2), although there was no evidence as to value of such cargoes at time and place of their acceptance (Mobile, Alabama), buyer was entitled to damages for difference between prices for good and infested flour in Bolivia, South America, plus damages for expenses incurred because of flour's infestation, since buyer had accepted such flour after it had been loaded on ships that transported it to Bolivia and had had no reasonable opportunity to inspect it before it was loaded. T.J. Stevenson & Co. v. 81,193 Bags of Flour, 449 F. Supp. 84 (S.D. Ala. 1976), rev'd on other grounds, 629 F.2d 338 (5th Cir. Ala. 1980), reh'g denied, 651 F.2d 779 (5th Cir. Ala. 1981).

Manufacturer, seller or supplier of products for human consumption or intimate bodily use may become liable on basis of implied warranty for injurious result stemming therefrom when it should have been foreseen, in exercise of reasonable care and foresight, that such results would be sustained by appreciable number of persons using products. Robbins v. Alberto-Culver Co., 210 Kan. 147, 499 P.2d 1080 (1972).

Where evidence made it clear that cattle food contained stilbestrol, and that the food had not been purchased for beef cattle, the tainted food constituted a clear breach of the implied warranty of merchantability and of the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. Kassab v. Cen- tral Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

The implied warranty of fitness of food for human consumption may be regarded as absolute. Scanlon v. Food Crafts, Inc., 2 Conn. Cir. Ct. 3, 193 A.2d 610 (1963).

Whether a person is a restaurant keeper has no effect upon the existence of the implied warranty for fitness for human consumption that arises from a sale of food by him. Scanlon v. Food Crafts, Inc., 2 Conn. Cir. Ct. 3, 193 A.2d 610 (1963).

All food to be consumed on or off the premises where it is prepared carries an implied warranty of merchantability. Wernick v. Bob Ware's Food Shops, Inc., 27 Mass. App. Dec. 19 (1963).

In Sofman v. Denham Food Service, Inc. (1962) 37 NJ 304, 181 A.2d 168, 1 UCCRS 93, the court noted that under the Code which had been adopted but which was not yet in effect a cafeteria selling food makes an implied warranty of its fitness to a purchaser. Sofman v. Denham Food Serv., Inc., 37 N.J. 304, 181 A.2d 168 (1962).

16. —When sale occurs.

In action by customer against self-service food store on theory of breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314, for injuries sustained when soft drink bottle exploded while customer was placing it on check-out counter, directed verdict in favor of store was erroneous where evidence established that store placed goods on shelves with specified price mark and customer removed bottle with intent to pay for it; such acts constituted a contract to sell within UCC § 2-106(1), giving rise to warranty protection, even though customer had not yet paid for goods and title had not yet passed. Fender v. Colonial Stores, Inc., 138 Ga. App. 31, 225 S.E.2d 691 (1976).

In action by supermarket customer for injuries sustained when one or more bottles of Coca Cola exploded prior to being placed in shopping cart, retailer breached implied warranty of merchantability by relinquishing physical control of defective bottle to consumer, but evidence was not sufficient to establish breach of warranty by manufacturer. Sheeskin v. Giant Food, Inc., 20 Md. App. 611, 318

A.2d 874 (1974), aff'd, 273 Md. 592, 332 A.2d 1, 78 A.L.R.3d 682 (1975).

Delivery of article, not payment therefor, is determinative of when and whether sale of food or drink from self-service stores has taken place, so that where buyer took drinks into his possession with intent to pay for them, delay in making payment at cashier's counter did not delay point at which sale was made or to be made. Gillispie v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 14 N.C. App. 1, 187 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

17. —Nature of defect.

Buyer who sustained permanent hand injury from breaking of wine glass while drinking wine purchased in defendant's restaurant had cause of action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2), since drink sold in such case included not only the wine but also its container, and both were required to be fit for ordinary purposes for which they are used. Shaffer v. Victoria Station, Inc., 91 Wash. 2d 295, 588 P.2d 233 (1978).

Distributor of bananas was not liable for wrongful death of grocery store produce manager, who was bitten by banana spider while handling produce delivered to store by distributor, on theory of breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-314, although spider may have been transported in banana container, where spider was not in bananas when it bit decedent and where there was nothing wrong with bananas which were edible and salable. Anderson v. Associated Grocers, Inc., 11 Wash. App. 774, 525 P.2d 284 (1974).

Trial court erroneously assumed that food is necessarily "fit for ordinary purposes" if not deleterious; if apple sauce is inedible because of taste and smell it is not fit for ordinary purposes for which it is to be used; no biological or laboratory proof should be required as part of plaintiff's case. Martel v. Duffy-Mott Corp., 15 Mich. App. 67, 166 N.W.2d 541 (1968).

The presence of a fish bone in a bowl of New England style fish chowder served to the plaintiff in a restaurant, as a result of which the fish bone became lodged in plaintiff's throat while she was eating the chowder, does not constitute a breach of implied warranty under § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) and under § 2-316(3)(b) of the instant chapter because in the light of the traditional methods of preparing such chowders, the occasional presence of bones therein is to be anticipated and it does not impair the fitness or merchantability thereof. Webster v. Blue Ship Tea Room, Inc., 347 Mass. 421, 198 N.E.2d 309 (1964).

The purchaser of a chicken pie could maintain an action based on the breach of an implied warranty of fitness for consumption against the manufacturer to recover for injuries resulting from a chicken bone lodging in purchaser's throat as he was eating the pie. The court pointing out that, because the question had not been raised, it was not called upon to decide whether the manufacturer's implied warranty extended to the instant purchaser, who was apparently a remote consumer and not a purchaser from the manufacturer. De Graff v. Myers Foods, Inc., 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 19, 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 110 (1958).

18. —Inherent hazards.

In action against manufacturer of mixed nuts by purchaser who suffered tooth injury when biting down on unshelled nut, directed verdict in favor of manufacturer was proper since: (1) evidence did not support purchaser's claim of express warranty within meaning of UCC § 2-313(1), where no statement on label indicated that nuts were shelled and where use of clear glass jar revealing only shelled nuts was mere passive marketing tool and not affirmative representation sufficient to give rise to express warranty; and (2) manufacturer did not breach implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, since presence of limited quantities of unshelled nuts was not sufficient to render jar of nuts unmerchantable, or unfit for ordinary purposes. Coffer v. Standard Brands, Inc., 30 N.C. App. 134, 226 S.E.2d 534 (1976).

In action by purchaser of ice cream cone against seller for breach of implied warranty of merchantability where plaintiff purchased "cherry pecan" ice cream cone from defendant's retail store, ate portion of ice cream, and broke tooth on cherry pit contained in ice cream, trial court erred in holding that cherry pit was substance natural to such ice cream and that defendant was not liable for injuries resulting from such natural substance; "reasonable expectation" test would be applied to action for breach of implied warranty and if it was found that pit of cherry should be anticipated in cherry pecan ice cream and guarded against by consumer, then ice cream was reasonably fit under implied warranty of merchantability. Williams v. Braum Ice Cream Stores, Inc., 534 P.2d 700 (Okla. Ct. App. 1974).

19. —Beverages.

In action for damages for negligence and breach of warranty, circumstantial evidence sufficient to support reasonable inference that insect was contained in bottle of orange soda when bottle left defendant's bottling plant was sufficient to support jury finding of liability for (1) negligence, and (2) breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 75-2-314(1) and (2)(c) that soft drink purchased by plaintiff was fit for ordinary consumption. Cohen v. Allendale Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 291 S.C. 35, 351 S.E.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1986).

Buyer who sustained permanent hand injury from breaking of wine glass while drinking wine purchased in defendant's restaurant had cause of action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2), since drink sold in such case included not only the wine but also its container, and both were required to be fit for ordinary purposes for which they are used. Shaffer v. Victoria Station, Inc., 91 Wash. 2d 295, 588 P.2d 233 (1978).

In action by customer against self-service food store on theory of breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314, for injuries sustained when soft drink bottle exploded while customer was placing it on check-out counter, directed verdict in favor of store was erroneous where evidence established that store placed goods on shelves with specified price mark and customer removed bottle with intent to pay for it; such acts constituted a contract to sell within UCC § 2-106(1), giving rise to warranty protection, even though customer had not yet paid for goods and title had not yet passed. Fender v. Colonial Stores, Inc., 138 Ga. App. 31, 225 S.E.2d 691 (1976).

In action by supermarket customer for injuries sustained when one or more bottles of Coca Cola exploded prior to being placed in shopping cart, retailer breached implied warranty of merchantability by relinquishing physical control of defective bottle to consumer, but evidence was not sufficient to establish breach of warranty by manufacturer. Sheeskin v. Giant Food, Inc., 20 Md. App. 611, 318 A.2d 874 (1974), aff'd, 273 Md. 592, 332 A.2d 1, 78 A.L.R.3d 682 (1975).

Delivery of article, not payment therefor, is determinative of when and whether sale of food or drink from self-service stores has taken place, so that where buyer took drinks into his possession with intent to pay for them, delay in making payment at cashier's counter did not delay point at which sale was made or to be made. Gillispie v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 14 N.C. App. 1, 187 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

20. —Bread and rolls.

Warranty of fitness for particular purpose held implied in sales of bread eaten by buyer. Finocchiaro v. Ward Baking Co., 104 R.I. 5, 241 A.2d 619 (1968).

There is an implied warranty from the vendor of food that it should not be too hard for human consumption, although it is recognized that hardness is a matter which is distinct from the presence of extraneous or foreign matter and is not necessarily related to the freshness of the food. (vendor of a ready-made roll-sandwich makes an implied warranty that the roll is not too hard for human consumption) Scanlon v. Food Crafts, Inc., 2 Conn. Cir. Ct. 3, 193 A.2d 610 (1963).

It could be found that the presence in a muffin of a date pit which broke the tooth of the purchaser eating it rendered the muffin unfit for consumption and unmerchantable. Wernick v. Bob Ware's Food Shops, Inc., 27 Mass. App. Dec. 19 (1963).

21. —Meat.

Under Illinois UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), implied warranty of merchantability attaching to sale of raw pork means that such pork is wholesome and fit for consumption only after proper cooking at temperature of at least 137° Fahrenheit, which is sufficient to destroy all trichinae (holding that allegation that plaintiff had contracted trichinosis after consuming "properly cooked" pork was allegation of factual impossibility). Huebner v. Hunter Packing Co., 59 Ill. App. 3d 563, 375 N.E.2d 873, 96 A.L.R.3d 444 (5th Dist. 1978).

Seller of raw pork did not breach implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 with respect to buyer who contracted trichinosis after eating pork; ordinary and intended purpose for raw pork is consumption after proper cooking by consumer and, since proper cooking would have killed all trichinae, fact that buyer contracted trichinosis showed by necessary implication that pork was not properly cooked and, thus, buyer failed to show that pork was not fit for its ordinary and intended purpose. Hollinger v. Shoppers Paradise of New Jersey, Inc., 134 N.J. Super. 328, 340 A.2d 687 (1975), aff'd, 142 N.J. Super. 356, 361 A.2d 578 (1976).

In enacting this section it was the clear intention of the Georgia legislature to abrogate the previously existing substantive rule that furnishing of food by a restaurant for consumption on the premises was a service and not a sale; and a customer who broke a tooth, on a hard substance in a hamburger could presently maintain an action for breach of implied warranty against the seller. Ray v. Deas, 112 Ga. App. 191, 144 S.E.2d 468 (1965).

An implied warranty of fitness arises on the sale by a merchant to a consumer of raw pork but the warranty is only that it is for human consumption if it is properly cooked. Adams v. Scheib, 408 Pa. 452, 184 A.2d 700 (1962).

C. Requisites of Merchantability.

22. In general; fair average quality.

Employee who sustained arm injury from "nip point" of conveyor while working at employer's sugar plant and who alleged that plant's conveyor system was not fit, within meaning of UCC § 2-314(2)(c) and § 2-315, for ordinary and particular purposes for which it was to be used, presented claims involving issues of material fact that should have been submitted to jury (stating that implied warranty liability can extend to manufacturer of component parts, provided that defects exist in such parts before they leave manufacturer). Union Supply Co. v. Pust, 196 Colo. 162, 583 P.2d 276, 2 A.L.R.4th 245 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-316(3)(b), buyer received no warranty of merchantability on table tops where buyer had opportunity to inspect, test, and examine sample table tops furnished by manufacturer and ordered large quantities of table tops on basis of such samples; even if defect was latent, buyer was experienced in wood industry and, as such, either knew or should have known that wood has tendency to warp because of change in moisture content and that sealing of wood was proper method to treat such distortion. Michael-Regan Co. v. Lindell, 527 F.2d 653 (9th Cir. Cal. 1975).

Even if transfer of donor blood by non-commercial supplier to hospital for service fee was sale under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315, so as to give rise to implied warranty, supplier was not liable to hospital patient who contracted serum hepatitis, since there were no methods available at time in question by which hepatitis virus could effectively be excluded from blood or presence of virus determined and, therefore, blood, to extent it may have contained hepatitis virus, was unavoidably unsafe and for that reason was not unreasonably dangerous and did not fail to be fit within terms of warranties provided for in UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. McMichael v. American Red Cross, 532 S.W.2d 7 (Ky. 1975).

Mere fact that lock ring "exploded" from used truck wheel, striking bystander in mouth and injuring her, did not establish that wheel was "unmerchantable" within meaning of UCC § 2-314. Rix v. Reeves, 23 Ariz. App. 243, 532 P.2d 185 (1975).

Where defendant seller contracted with plaintiff buyer to supply sleeve bearings impregnated with specified oil in accord with government specifications for use in manufacture of bomb fuses, but instead supplied bearings coated with non-conforming oil, and where, although bearings coated with non-conforming oil were visibly different from conforming bearings, buyer used non-conforming bearings to manufacture two lots of bomb fuses which were discovered to be defective as result of use of such bearings, (1) under UCC §§ 2-313, 2-314, and 2-315, seller was liable to buyer for breach of its express warranty to supply bearings meeting applicable specifications and its implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose. General Instrument Corp., F.W. Sickles Div. v. Pennsylvania Pressed Metals, Inc., 366 F. Supp. 139 (M.D. Pa. 1973), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1051 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1052 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974).

Implied warranty of merchantability applies to livestock, and applies to latent diseases in livestock; and fact that buyer's employee inspected sheep prior to delivery would not have precluded implied warranty where vibriosis with which sheep were infected would not have been apparent to even trained veterinarian. S-Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Monier & Co., 509 P.2d 777 (1973).

Implied warranty of merchantability applies equally to both retailer and manufacturer of goods. Gillispie v. Thomasville Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 17 N.C. App. 545, 195 S.E.2d 45 (1973), cert. denied, 283 N.C. 393, 196 S.E.2d 275 (1973).

Where prior to using artificial insemination rancher got 95 percent calf crop via natural service, and obtained 70 percent calf crop during first year of artificial insemination, but obtained only 7 percent calf crop during second year using semen from same bull under almost identical conditions, only logical inference was that something was wrong with semen purchased in second year and that express warranties made by breeding service company to rancher were not met, nor were implied warranties of merchantability and fitness met. Waddell v. American Breeders Serv., Inc., 161 Mont. 221, 505 P.2d 417, 61 A.L.R.3d 801 (1973).

There is no express or implied warranty of merchantability or fitness for particular purpose in connection with sale and supply of water by municipality. Coast Laundry, Inc. v. Lincoln City, 9 Or. App. 521, 497 P.2d 1224, 54 A.L.R.3d 930 (1972).

Frozen food case seller was not entitled to directed verdict in face of evidence warranting finding of breach of implied warranty of merchantability, even if there was no evidence of seller's negligence. Belcher v. Hamilton, 475 S.W.2d 483 (Ky. 1971).

A purchaser of a product under a trade or patent name receives no implied warranty of fitness of use for any particular purpose, but does receive an implied warranty that the goods are of merchantable quality. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 55 Misc. 2d 529 (1967).

The "fair, average quality within the description" provisions of the original section, since the 1959 amendment to the Pennsylvania Uniform Commercial Code, are expressly limited to cases of fungible goods and thus were not applicable to an action predicated on a breach of warranty arising out of the sale of "log chains." Robert H. Carr & Sons v. Yearsley, 31 Pa. D. & C.2d 262 (1963).

It is no defense to an action brought for breach of warranty under subd (1) of this section to say that the seller could not expect that a nine-year-old child would handle and open a bottle of beer which exploded, causing injuries. Harris v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 23 Mass. App. Dec. 169 (1962).

23. Fitness for ordinary purposes.

Distributor that sold rifle which exploded and injured plaintiff was a seller and therefore subject to suit under strict liability, however distributor had no duty to inspect rifle for latent defects and therefore could not be held liable on negligence theory; distributor impliedly warranted rifle as merchantable by selling it in role of merchant, however, there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular use because rifle was purchased for ordinary use; manufacturer of rifle was not obliged to defend distributor in such action. Curry v. Sile Distribs., 727 F. Supp. 1052 (N.D. Miss. 1990).

Unless the warranty of merchantability is excluded or modified, a merchant impliedly warrants that goods sold are fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-314, subd [2], par [c]), and where a photocopying machine frequently malfunctioned, the implied warranty of merchantability was breached. United States Leasing Corp. v. Comerlald Assocs., 101 Misc. 2d 773 (1979).

Employee of dry-cleaning plant, who was injured when his clothing caught fire after being saturated with cleaning solvent and who, with respect to use of such solvent, was covered by warranties of fitness for purpose and merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314, § 2-315, and § 2-318, could not recover from manufacturers and distributors of solvent on theory of strict liability in tort for defective manufacture and failure to warn plaintiff of its flammability since legislature, by adopting Uniform Commercial Code, preempted field of tort liability in direct sale relationships, so as to prevent court from applying strict liability doctrine. Wilhelm v. Globe Solvent Co., 373 A.2d 218 (Del. Super. 1977) but see Wilhelm v. Globe Solvent Co., 411 A.2d 611 (Del. 1979).

Race horse sold to buyer was merchantable within meaning of UCC § 2-314(2), notwithstanding he suffered from tendonitis and intermittent claudication, where tendonitis was merely temporary and of no long term effect and where intermittent claudication did not prevent horse from becoming creditable if unspectacular race horse; after rest and recuperation, horse won three races in 13 starts and, although he did not live up to buyer's hopes for a preferred pacer, he was able to hold his own with other standardbreds, was reasonably fit for ordinary purpose for which race horses are used, and was merchantable. Sessa v. Riegle, 427 F. Supp. 760 (E.D. Pa. 1977), aff'd, 568 F.2d 770 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

Both the common-law warranty of fitness and quality and the statutory codification thereof in UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) require that the product be reasonably fit for the ordinary purposes for which it is used. Matulunas v. Baker, 569 S.W.2d 791 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

"Ordinary purposes" in UCC § 2-314(2)(c) include both those uses that the manufacturer intended and uses that are reasonably foreseeable. Back v. Wickes Corp., 375 Mass. 633, 378 N.E.2d 964 (1978).

Where there is evidence of a defect in goods which renders them unfit for the ordinary purposes for which they are used, the seller may be held liable under the Uniform Commercial Code (see UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c)) (involving alleged breach of implied warranty of merchantability of hybrid seed corn). Farmers Mut. Exch. Inc. v. Dixon, 146 Ga. App. 663, 247 S.E.2d 124 (1978).

Under implied warranty of merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), goods to be merchantable (1) must at least be fit for ordinary purposes for which such goods are used, and (2) no reliance on seller, when relying on this implied warranty, need be shown. El Fredo Pizza, Inc. v. Roto-Flex Oven Co., 199 Neb. 697, 261 N.W.2d 358 (1978).

Tank purchased for storage of liquid fertilizer would not be suitable for such purpose, and would not be merchantable under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), if it were leaky (action for loss of liquid fertilizer because of leaks in storage tank purchased by plaintiff). Christensen v. Eastern Neb. Equip. Co., 199 Neb. 741, 261 N.W.2d 367 (1978).

Employee who sustained arm injury from "nip point" of conveyor while working at employer's sugar plant and who alleged that plant's conveyor system was not fit, within meaning of UCC § 2-314(2)(c) and § 2-315, for ordinary and particular purposes for which it was to be used, presented claims involving issues of material fact that should have been submitted to jury (stating that implied warranty liability can extend to manufacturer of component parts, provided that defects exist in such parts before they leave manufacturer). Union Supply Co. v. Pust, 196 Colo. 162, 583 P.2d 276, 2 A.L.R.4th 245 (1978).

In action by owner of heavy-duty construction equipment for damage to equipment's engines that resulted from use of defective antifreeze that owner purchased to winterize such engines, where evidence showed that antifreeze purchased contained chloride, that chloride could corrode internal-combustion engines because it was a salt-water solution, that equipment owner had purchased the antifreeze from defendant retailer, that retailer had previously purchased it from a wholesale supplier (against whom retailer filed third-party action), and that the wholesale supplier had originally purchased it from manufacturer (against whom supplier filed fourth-party action), (1) retailer was liable to equipment owner, under UCC §§ 2-313(1)(a), 2-314(1), and 2-315, for breach of express warranty that antifreeze was suitable for use in engines of owner's construction equipment and for breach of implied warranties of merchantability of such antifreeze and fitness thereof for particular purpose; (2) wholesale supplier was liable, under theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability of antifreeze under UCC § 2-314(1), to retailer for same damages for which retailer was liable to equipment owner; and (3) manufacturer was liable to wholesale supplier on theory of strict liability in tort. R. Clinton Constr. Co. v. Bryant & Reaves, Inc., 442 F. Supp. 838 (N.D. Miss. 1977).

In action by seller for purchase price of coal, buyer's counterclaim based on seller's alleged breach of express warranty and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness of coal for particular purpose could not be sustained where (1) evidence did not show that seller had created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) by showing buyer samples and analyses of coal's quality, but revealed instead that such samples and analyses were shown to buyer solely for his information; (2) coal delivered by seller was fit for ordinary purpose for which it was used, was burned as fuel by buyer's customers, and thus complied with seller's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1); (3) implied warranty of fitness of coal for particular purpose did not arise under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not rely on seller's skill and judgment in furnishing coal suitable for buyer's customers; and (4) even assuming that seller had breached such express and implied warranties as buyer contended, buyer still could not recover on counterclaim because he did not give seller adequate notice of alleged breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and such breach also was not proximate cause of damages buyer allegedly sustained. Kopper Glo Fuel, Inc. v. Island Lake Coal Co., 436 F. Supp. 91 (E.D. Tenn. 1977).

In action by automobile body repairman against manufacturer of clamps used on body straightening machine to recover for injuries sustained when one of such clamps broke while repairman was straightening automobile body, there was sufficient evidence to establish that clamps were not fit for ordinary purposes for which such goods are used under UCC § 2-314 where manufacturer's salesman sold clamps for use with body straightening machine which it had previously sold to repairman's employer, knowing that both machine and clamps were to be used by buyer to straighten "unitized" automobile bodies, and where clamp, which was one of pair, was delivered in box that contained no warning of any kind. Mattos, Inc. v. Hash, 279 Md. 371, 368 A.2d 993 (1977).

Seller of raw pork did not breach implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 with respect to buyer who contracted trichinosis after eating pork; ordinary and intended purpose for raw pork is consumption after proper cooking by consumer and, since proper cooking would have killed all trichinae, fact that buyer contracted trichinosis showed by necessary implication that pork was not properly cooked and, thus, buyer failed to show that pork was not fit for its ordinary and intended purpose. Hollinger v. Shoppers Paradise of New Jersey, Inc., 134 N.J. Super. 328, 340 A.2d 687 (1975), aff'd, 142 N.J. Super. 356, 361 A.2d 578 (1976).

Even if transfer of donor blood by non-commercial supplier to hospital for service fee was sale under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315, so as to give rise to implied warranty, supplier was not liable to hospital patient who contracted serum hepatitis, since there were no methods available at time in question by which hepatitis virus could effectively be excluded from blood or presence of virus determined and, therefore, blood, to extent it may have contained hepatitis virus, was unavoidably unsafe and for that reason was not unreasonably dangerous and did not fail to be fit within terms of warranties provided for in UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. McMichael v. American Red Cross, 532 S.W.2d 7 (Ky. 1975).

In action by buyer of tube mill against seller for breach of warranty: (1) where seller's offer and buyer's acceptance contained conflicting provisions as to warranties, neither provision became part of contract, and UCC implied warranty of merchantability, § 2-314, was in effect; (2) as to limitation of damages clause in seller's offer, since there was no question that tube mill was grossly defective on delivery, not only did limitation of remedies provision fail of its essential purpose, but its application would be unconscionable; (3) notwithstanding facts that when resale price of machine was coupled with award of damages, buyer would receive more than purchase price of machine, damage award was not improper; (4) warranty of merchantability was breached by seller since tube mill was not fit for ordinary purpose of producing quality salable square tubing. Bosway Tube & Steel Corp. v. McKay Mach. Co., 65 Mich. App. 426, 237 N.W.2d 488 (1975).

Allegations held sufficient to aver breach of implied warranty of merchantability in sale of hair rollers. Gardner v. Q.H.S., Inc., 448 F.2d 238 (4th Cir. S.C. 1971).

The difficulties that plaintiff experienced in using the crane and the many breakdowns including the final breakdown occasioned during the time the crane was in use constituted sufficient evidence that it was not fit for the purposes for which it was used, and the trial judge was correct in finding a breach of the UCC § 2-314(2)(c) implied warranty. Uganski v. Little Giant Crane & Shovel, Inc., 35 Mich. App. 88, 192 N.W.2d 580 (1971).

Leather skins which could be found to have met contract requirements that they be table run and conform to government specifications were "merchantable", regardless of fact that buyer could not use all the skins in the particular manner he wished. Wakerman Leather Co. v. Irvin B. Foster Sportswear Co., 34 A.D.2d 594 (3d Dep't 1970), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 614 (1970).

The fact that a product wears out in the course of normal use does not establish that there was a defect in it. Indiana Nat'l Bank v. De Laval Separator Co., 389 F.2d 674 (7th Cir. Ind. 1968).

Under the Connecticut Act there may be an implied warranty that the goods sold shall be reasonably fit for a particular purpose, or that the goods shall be of merchantable quality, and the existence, nature and extent of either implied warranty depends on the circumstances of the individual case. Corneliuson v. Arthur Drug Stores, Inc., 153 Conn. 134, 214 A.2d 676 (1965).

The court could not take judicial notice of the ordinary uses of a "log chain" with link, hook and weld, and evidence was required to prove that its use as a cable for towing a truck was among such purposes. Robert H. Carr & Sons v. Yearsley, 31 Pa. D. & C.2d 262 (1963).

Whether the ordinary purposes for which a "log chain" with link hook, and weld is used includes its use as a cable for towing a truck is a jury question. Robert H. Carr & Sons v. Yearsley, 31 Pa. D. & C.2d 262 (1963).

24. —Drugs and medicine.

In action by cattle ranchers for damages for injuries to, and death of, cattle from particular batch of cattle vaccine manufactured by defendant, trial court's finding that such vaccine was not fit for purpose for which it was to be used, and therefore was unmerchantable within meaning of UCC § 2-314(2)(c), was sustained by evidence which showed that plaintiffs' cattle, and also cattle belonging to other persons, had become ill at approximately the same time and with the same clinical symptoms after being vaccinated with such vaccine, whereas herds that were vaccinated with vaccines that were not part of batch that plaintiffs bought from defendant did not become ill. Furthermore, such finding was not precluded by evidence of defendant which tended to establish that there were other possible causes of sickness of plaintiffs' cattle. Pearson v. Franklin Lab., Inc., 254 N.W.2d 133 (S.D. 1977).

In action against pharmacist and physician to recover damages for stroke allegedly suffered as result of oral contraceptive drug available only by prescription, implied warranties of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and of fitness under UCC § 2-315 were not applicable to transaction with pharmacist, since pharmacist filled prescription as issued by physician. Furthermore, Physician issuing was not "seller" within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1) by virtue of issuing prescription for oral contraceptive drug and, thus, he was not subject to liability on theory of breach of implied warranties of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and of fitness under UCC § 2-315. Batiste v. American Home Prods. Corp., 32 N.C. App. 1, 231 S.E.2d 269 (1977), cert. denied, 292 N.C. 466, 233 S.E.2d 921 (1977).

25. —Household chemicals.

Manufacturer of common, household drain cleaner that contained highly caustic concentration of sodium hydroxide, breached its implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(2)(c) by marketing product that was inherently and unnecessarily dangerous, and therefore not "fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used." Furthermore, under UCC § 2-318 such warranty inured to benefit of child whose mother was tenant in purchaser's boarding house and who was injured by drain cleaner. Drayton v. Jiffie Chem. Corp., 1 Ohio Op. 3d 325, 395 F. Supp. 1081 (N.D. Ohio 1975), motion denied, 413 F. Supp. 834 (N.D. Ohio 1976), modified, 12 Ohio Op. 3d 135, 591 F.2d 352 (N.D. Ohio 1978).

There is no implied warranty that a child will not be killed by eating roach poison since the roach poison is sold as a poison and need only be fit for the purpose for which it was to be used. Rumsey v. Freeway Manor Minimax, 423 S.W.2d 387 (Tex. Civ. App. 1968).

26. —New motor vehicles and related equipment.

Purchaser of automobile battery who is injured when battery exploded could not recover under theory of implied warranty of merchantability from organization which allowed its name to be printed on battery because organization did not sell or contract to sell battery and was therefore not in position to make such warranty; organization was not liable for misrepresentation because no evidence was presented that plaintiff relied on name of organization in purchasing battery. Harmon v. National Automotive Parts Ass'n, 720 F. Supp. 79 (N.D. Miss. 1989).

Sufficient evidence had been adduced from which jury could find that tire had been cut before it left manufacturer's plant where: manufacturer had possession of tire longer than anyone else; numerous employees, as well as machinery, handled it during manufacturing process; it was new tire put on rim less than 3 months following manufacture; manufacturer's employee testified that some force was necessary to make such cut, suggesting it was deliberately made by someone with knife or sharp instrument; there was nothing in record to suggest the cut was made by someone other than manufacturer; and, plaintiff offered expert testimony that tire was defective and that this was type of cut customarily made by tire manufacturers on defective tires which were to be scrapped. BFGoodrich, Inc. v. Taylor, 509 So. 2d 895 (Miss. 1987).

In breach-of-warranty action for damages by buyer of allegedly defective dump trailers against manufacturer-seller, court held (1) that buyer and its ultimate Mexican customers were "merchants" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); (2) that seller was "merchant" within meaning of both UCC § 2-104(1) and § 2-314(1); (3) that telephoned order for 20 additional trailers was not enforceable under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) because it did not come within exceptions to such statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3); (4) that "specially manufactured goods" exception in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) applies only when seller, rather than buyer, seeks to escape statute-of-frauds defense; (5) that since three trailers purchased under valid written contract were put to improper use by buyer's Mexican customers, rather than being used for their "ordinary purposes," no breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) occurred; (6) that use of trailers for improper purposes, rather than for their stated "particular purpose," prevented recovery under implied warranty of fitness in UCC § 2-315; (7) that buyer could not recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) because it failed to prove that it had relied on statements in manufacturer-seller's brochure either prior to or contemporaneously with making of parties' contract; and (8) that since buyer had no right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject two unused and undamaged trailers, manufacturer-seller was not required to retake them or to refund their purchase price to buyer. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Where buyer, in action for breach of express and implied warranties attaching to sale of new car, attacked defendant manufacturer's 12 months-12,000 mile express warranty limit as unreasonable and unconscionable when applied to latent defect (development of rust) in car, and manufacturer, on motion for summary judgment, relied on expiration of its express warranty and its disclaimer of all implied warranties, court held (1) that since car had been driven for 33 months and 90,000 miles without serious mishap, its rust problem did not render it unmerchantable under UCC § 2-314(2)(c); (2) that although UCC § 2-316(2), providing for disclaimer of implied warranties, is silent as to when disclaimer must be made, court would apply rule adopted in other jurisdictions that disclaimer made after the sale is ineffective; (3) that manufacturer's disclaimer in present case was therefore ineffective because it was given to buyer at time of delivery of car and not at time of execution of sales contract; (4) that manufacturer's 12 months-12,000 mile limitation on its express warranty was not unreasonable; and (5) that such warranty, instead of covering all manufacturing defects in car, covered only those that were discoverable within 12 months or 12,000 miles, and buyer bore risk of repairs beyond that point. Taterka v. Ford Motor Co., 86 Wis. 2d 140, 271 N.W.2d 653 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-314, theory of implied warranty is available in Florida against both manufacturers and merchants, and such theory embraces to some degree "crashworthiness" concept of automobiles. Thus, plaintiff who was injured when his automobile was "rear-ended" and his driver's seat back broke could properly sue vehicle's importer-distributor for breach of implied warranty that vehicle was reasonably fit for its intended use as passenger vehicle and that it was equipped with crashworthy seat backs and devices securing such equipment. Smith v. Fiat-Roosevelt Motors, Inc., 556 F.2d 728 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

Corporation that imported automobile for resale impliedly warranted under UCC § 2-314(2)(c) that automobile would be equipped with "crashworthy seat backs."

Smith v. Fiat-Roosevelt Motors, Inc., 556 F.2d 728 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

In action by buyer of new Toyota pickup truck against seller for breach of implied warranty, under UCC § 2-314(2)(c), of merchantability and fitness of truck for ordinary purposes for which such a truck is used and breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-315 of truck's fitness for particular purpose (operation at sustained freeway speeds), (1) directed verdict for seller was error with respect to engine's defective performance during first six months of operation, since vehicle's low mileage at such time and testimony that design defect generally existed in that particular engine model removed inference of causation between design defect and defective performance of plaintiff's engine from realm of speculation; (2) directed verdict for seller was proper with respect to subsequent engine repairs that followed repairs made in first six months of engine's operation, since making of earlier repairs and vehicle's advanced mileage rendered speculative plaintiff's claim that design defect, without proof of its existence in plaintiff's engine or elimination of other causes of engine's defective performance, caused engine's difficulties; and (3) directed verdict for seller was error with respect to defects in vehicle's paint, shift lever, and oil system, since plaintiff sustained burden of proof as to causation on these matters. Nelson v. Wilkins Dodge, Inc., 256 N.W.2d 472 (Minn. 1977).

Both seller and manufacturer of new car with defective tie-rod assembly were liable for injuries sustained by owner's son under breach of implied warranty of merchantability, but seller was not negligent and could not have discovered defect and was entitled to full indemnification from manufacturer. Langford v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 373 F. Supp. 1251 (E.D.N.Y. 1974), aff'd, 513 F.2d 1121 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1975).

In products liability action against, inter alia, manufacturer and dealer of automobile, for purpose of evaluating sufficiency of plaintiff's allegations to effect that manufacturer was liable for "secondary impact" injuries caused by design defects, based on breach of warranty, although breach of both implied and express warranties was alleged, warranties would be treated as one since both warranted automobile as being suitable for its intended purpose, i.e., provision of reasonably safe transportation. Frericks v. GMC, 274 Md. 288, 336 A.2d 118 (1975).

Automobile manufacturer was not liable for injury to child which occurred when child, who was riding his bicycle, collided with automobile and impact of collision broke parking light on automobile, causing tendon in child's knee to be severed, although child was within class of persons who might reasonably be expected to be affected by such automobile under UCC § 2-318, where vehicle in question was fit for ordinary purposes for which such vehicle is used under UCC § 2-314; part of car involved was essential item on car, and not mere ornamentation; of necessity lens had to be made of transparent or translucent material and, in general, such materials are fragile; light did not shatter under normal usage, but shattered under impact with metal; and breakage resulted from external force and injury did not occur to user of vehicle. Nacci v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 325 A.2d 617 (Del. Super. 1974).

In action against car dealer and manufacturer brought by buyer when engine failed to perform properly, statement by manufacturer warranting car to be free from defects in material and workmanship under normal use and service constituted express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and exclusion of, inter alia, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose was ineffective where exclusions were not at any time called to buyer's attention and were not sufficiently conspicuous under UCC § 1-201(10); while implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 may both attend sale of automobile, where neither dealer nor manufacturer knew that buyer intended to use car for occasional drag racing prior to or at time of original sale, no issue was created as to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, either in connection with original car purchase or subsequent motor replacement. Jacobson v. Benson Motors, Inc., 216 N.W.2d 396 (Iowa 1974).

Where automobile purchaser was furnished with certain express warranties, language of which provided that "this warranty is expressly in lieu of all other warranties and representations, expressed or implied" and radio was expressly excluded from the warranty, it was held that implied warranty of suitability for particular purpose for which it was sold applied to radio. Mintz v. Daimler-Benz of N. Am., Inc., 73 Misc. 2d 212 (1973).

Where fender of new car was damaged in transit to dealer, dealer replaced damaged fender with new fender and had it repainted, and car was sold to buyer as new car, dealer had no duty under Uniform Commercial Code to disclose to buyer prior damage to fender and its replacement with new fender; mention of one thing in statute implies exclusion of others not expressed and, since UCC mandated only 2 implied warranties (merchantability, § 2-314, and fitness for particular purpose, § 2-315), there was no implied warranty that part of new motor vehicle had not been replaced with another new part. Cocco v. Degnan Chevrolet, Inc., 64 Pa. D. & C.2d 6 (1973).

Where purchaser of new automobile claimed that from time car was delivered it did not operate in proper manner, that doors did not open and close properly, that various portions of car did not fit properly, that car started to rust within 1 month of delivery, that parts of automobile fell off, and that car was damaged while in transit from manufacturer to seller and was repaired without advising plaintiff of this fact, jury finding that dealer had breached implied warranty of merchantability in that vehicle did not comply with standards of quality which purchaser would ordinarily be entitled to expect when buying new car of same type was not against weight of evidence. Luther v. Bud-Jack Corp., 72 Misc. 2d 924 (1972).

27. —Mobile homes.

Finding that there was no breach of implied warranty of merchantability attaching to mobile home under UCC § 2-314(1) was sustained by evidence that showed that although mobile home had leaking roof, buyer did not complain to seller about roof, but instead informed seller that financial problems were reason for buyer's failure to make monthly payments on time. Wickware v. National Mtg. Corp. of Am., 570 P.2d 330 (Okla. 1977).

Breach, within meaning of UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-314(2)(c), of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of mobile home for ordinary purposes for which home was to be used was established by evidence of buyer which showed that vehicle's doors would not latch, that frame of vehicle was crooked, that vehicle's wiring was incorrectly installed, and that vehicle's plumbing did not function properly (rejecting defense contention that seller does not impliedly warrant against latent defects). Fredrick v. Dreyer, 257 N.W.2d 835 (S.D. 1977).

Purchaser of new mobile home, who purchased from manufacturer through seller after viewing model and who subsequently discovered numerous defects, was entitled to recover from seller for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 based on seller's assurance that home purchased would conform to model home and repeated promises of seller to make repairs to home; purchaser was also entitled to recover for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 since home purchased was clearly below average and of poor quality. Jones v. Abriani, 169 Ind. App. 556, 350 N.E.2d 635 (1976).

A sale of a residential mobile home made by a mobile home merchant carried with it an implied warranty that the mobile home was fit for residential purposes. Performance Motors, Inc. v. Allen, 280 N.C. 385, 186 S.E.2d 161 (1972).

28. —Used motor vehicles.

Under Mississippi law, as predicted by district court, plaintiff cannot pursue remedy under theory of negligence or strict liability against product manufacturer in which damages that are solely economic are sought. Lee v. GMC, 950 F. Supp. 170 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

Buyer of pipes stated claims, under Mississippi law, for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, by alleging that seller represented to buyer that pipes would be sealed and tested to withstand 15 pounds of pressure per square inch and that pipes failed to withstand such pressure. IHP Indus., Inc. v. PermAlert, Esp., 947 F. Supp. 257 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

The buyer of a used car could not recover from the dealer who sold him the car for breach of implied warranty of merchantability since the buyer had a duty to afford the dealer a reasonable opportunity to cure the automobile's defects, which the buyer failed to do. Fitzner Pontiac-Buick-Cadillac, Inc. v. Smith, 523 So. 2d 324 (Miss. 1988).

Merchantability is different for new and used goods of same type, used goods being expected to require more maintenance and repair; additionally, if their quality conforms to that of similar used goods, they will normally be merchantable. Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

In an action for damages arising out of an alleged breach of implied and express warranties on a used automobile purchased by the plaintiff, no breach of any implied warranty of merchantability existed as a matter of law where the vehicle had been driven for over two years and 26,649 miles before the plaintiff experienced any difficulty with it; neither was there any breach of an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose where the vehicle had been purchased for a very ordinary purpose. Ford Motor Co. v. Fairley, 398 So. 2d 216 (Miss. 1981).

Pursuant to the legislative policy of the State to protect purchasers of used vehicles from being sold defective vehicles, defendant used car dealer is liable for property damage sustained by plaintiff as the result of an accident caused by a defective steering mechanism, traceable to the manufacturer of the car, under section 417 of the Vehicle and Traffic Law which requires retail sellers of used vehicles to expressly warrant in writing that the vehicle "is in condition and repair to render, under normal use, satisfactory and adequate service upon the public highway at the time of delivery", and, it is therefore not necessary to determine whether defendant is also liable under the theories of strict liability in tort or implied warranty of merchantability. Maure v. Fordham Motor Sales, Inc., 98 Misc. 2d 979 (1979).

Implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) applies to sale of used car. Natale v. Martin Volkswagen, Inc., 92 Misc. 2d 1046 (1978).

In action by buyer for breach of warranties attaching to sale of used truck, (1) when defendant dealer sold used truck, represented to have completely rebuilt engine, to plaintiff, appropriate implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) was created; (2) since plaintiff had relied on defendant's skill and judgment to furnish truck suitable for plaintiff's purposes, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose arose by operation of law under UCC § 2-315 at time of sale and delivery of truck to plaintiff; and (3) no compelling reason existed to disturb trial court's finding that failure of truck's engine had not resulted from plaintiff's failure to keep engine properly oiled. Roupp v. Acor, 253 Pa. Super. 46, 384 A.2d 968 (1978).

In buyer's action for damages for breach of warranty in sale of three-year-old used car, court held (1) that used-car warranty under Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, which applied to cars not more than four years old, was not plaintiff's exclusive remedy simply because such act was enacted after Illinois Uniform Commercial Code; (2) that both Illinois Consumer Fraud Act and Uniform Commercial Code applied to sale of used automobiles, and that used-car warranties under the former act supplemented remedies afforded to consumers under the Uniform Commercial Code; (3) that implied warranty of merchantability under Illinois UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) applied to case; (4) that jury was entitled to believe plaintiff's testimony that defects in her car had substantially impaired its value; (5) that seller had not excluded or modified its implied warranty of merchantability in sales contract because seller had failed to include therein the word "merchantability," as required by Illinois UCC § 2-316(2); (6) that jury believed that plaintiff had properly revoked her acceptance of car; and (7) that trial court by adjusting plaintiff's damages to reflect difference, at time and place of her acceptance of car, between car's value as warranted and its actual worth had applied measure of damages prescribed by Illinois UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty. Jackson v. H. Frank Olds, Inc., 65 Ill. App. 3d 571, 382 N.E.2d 550 (1st Dist. 1978).

In action by buyer of used car to recover purchase price from seller for seller's breach of express and implied warranties, where engine in vehicle at time of sale and also replacement engine subsequently installed were both defective, so as to cause breach of seller's express engine warranty and also breach of vehicle's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), remedy of recovery of purchase price was available to buyer because (1) language in seller's express warranty did not expressly limit buyer's remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts; (2) even if seller's express warranty could be construed as limiting buyer's remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts, such exclusive remedy failed in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2); and (3) buyer's remedies were not limited by any exclusion or modification by seller, under UCC § 2-316(2), of vehicle's implied warranty of merchantability. Furthermore, since buyer under UCC § 2-608(2) had sufficiently revoked her acceptance of vehicle, she was entitled to recover its purchase price. Stream v. Sportscar Salon, Ltd., 91 Misc. 2d 99 (1977).

Appropriate implied warranty of merchantability was created by contract for sale of "good" used car which entitled buyers to revoke their obligations under contract when warranties were found to have been breached. Overland Bond & Inv. Corp. v. Howard, 9 Ill. App. 3d 348, 292 N.E.2d 168 (1st Dist. 1972).

Exterior finish on two year old used car was not, without more, included in any implied warranty of merchantability that might attach to sale of used car. Tracy v. Vinton Motors, Inc., 130 Vt. 512, 296 A.2d 269 (1972).

A warranty of fitness of merchantability may arise in the sale of a used automobile. Chamberlain v. Bob Matick Chevrolet, Inc., 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 685, 239 A.2d 42, 24 A.L.R.3d 456 (1967).

Where the purchaser never intended to buy anything other than a 7-year-old secondhand automobile, the defendant never purported to sell anything other than such an automobile, the automobile was reasonably fit for the general purpose for which it was sold, and the purchaser did not rely solely upon any special judgment of the defendant, in the complete absence of any special warranties no rescission or recovery could be had of the seller. Basta v. Riviello, 66 Lack. Jur. 77 (Pa. 1964).

29. —Building materials.

In breach of warranty action by developer of subdivision against seller-manufacturer of coating product used on plywood exterior of certain of developer's houses following delamination and checking of surfaces painted with sellers' product, finding that seller neither breached implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 nor implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was proper where there was evidence that coating material was free from defects and was proper material for use intended, and that delamination and checking occurred as result of combination of improper preparation of plywood surface and incompetent application of coating material. Shore Line Properties, Inc. v. Deer-O-Paints & Chems., Ltd, 24 Ariz. App. 331, 538 P.2d 760 (1975).

30. —Fixtures.

No recovery for wrongful death where claim is based on alleged breach of implied warranty of fitness of room heater. Horne v. Armstrong Prods. Corp., 416 F.2d 1329 (5th Cir. Ga. 1969).

31. —Farm fixtures and implements.

A seller of farm machinery breached its new equipment warranty and the implied warranty of merchantability found in § 75-2-314(2)(c) where neither a new grain drill nor a used combine sold to the purchaser were fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods were to be used; the seller also breached the implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose found in § 75-2-315 where the evidence established that the purchaser relied upon the skill of the seller's salesman who had explained to the purchaser all that he knew about farming and had assisted the purchaser in selecting the equipment that he would need in his initial farming operation. A new agricultural equipment warranty which warrants new agricultural equipment to be free of defects in material and workmanship at the time of delivery to the first retail purchaser encompasses the proposition that the equipment will be in "field ready" condition; "field ready" condition simply means that the equipment is ready to be used in the field and is consistent with the warranty that the machinery is free of defects in material and workmanship at the time of delivery. The seller's attempt to avoid any warranty, express or implied, in relation to used equipment sold to the purchaser was prohibited by § 75-2-719(14). Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Evans, 406 So. 2d 15 (Miss. 1981).

Evidence in buyer's suit against manufacturer and seller of farm sprinkler irrigation system for breach of warranties made in connection with sale of system supported trial court's findings (1) that both manufacturer and seller had made and breached express warranties under UCC § 2-313 concerning system's operation and durability; (2) that both defendants had breached implied warranty of merchantability attaching to system under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); and (3) that both defendants had also breached implied warranty under UCC § 2-315 that system was fit for particular purpose for which buyer had purchased it. Moreover, since such express and implied warranties were made before date on which contract of sale was made, disclaimer of warranties contained in manufacturer's erection manual, which buyer received after entering into contract, did not negate such warranties (noting also that even if buyer had received manufacturer's erection manual before entering into contract, general warranty disclaimer contained in manual would not have destroyed specific express warranties that were made orally by seller and were set forth in writing in manufacturer's advertising brochure). Whitaker v. Farmhand, Inc., 173 Mont. 345, 567 P.2d 916 (1977).

Even though contract for sale of used tractor to farmer contained complete disclaimer of warranties in accordance with UCC § 2-316, UCC § 2-102 states that Article 2 does not "impair or repeal any statute regulating sales to consumers, farmers or other specified classes of buyers," and hence disclaimer provision was void since it was in conflict with statute relating to purchase of tractors which made such disclaimers void; once disclaimer provision was voided, UCC § 2-314 injected implied warranty of merchantability into contract for sale of tractor. Hoffman Motors, Inc. v. Enockson, 240 N.W.2d 353 (N.D. 1976).

32. —Livestock feed.

In action arising out of sale of livestock feed, implied warranty under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 of fitness for purpose of feeding hogs was inherent in transaction, since inference that seller knew purpose to which feed was being put by buyer, a hog farmer, must follow from their course of dealing for two years. Utah Coop. Ass'n v. Egbert-Haderlie Hog Farms, Inc., 550 P.2d 196 (Utah. 1976).

Evidence was sufficient to support finding that seller breached implied warranty that feed was of merchantable quality and reasonably fit for commercial feeding of dairy cattle, where, inter alia, veterinarian testified that cows often back away from quality of mix which defendant sold plaintiff; although buyer was obligated under UCC § 2-607 to pay for goods accepted at a contract rate, he was not barred thereby from recovering damages resulting from defects in such goods. Jorritsma v. Farmers' Feed & Supply Co., 272 Or. 499, 538 P.2d 61 (1975).

33. Uniform quality and quantity.

In action for breach of express and implied warranties in sale of bellows-expansion joints purchased for use in buyer's steam utility system, (1) seller's recommendation in letter to buyer that joints be made of Monel metal, rather than stainless steel, did not amount to implied warranty of fitness of joints for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not inform seller that buyer was relying on seller to select metal that would satisfy buyer's need for an extremely anticorrosive substance; (2) buyer did not establish breach of implied warranty of merchantability of joints under UCC § 2-314(1), since joints furnished by seller met all quality standards prescribed by UCC

§ 2-314(2); (3) statement in seller's letter that seller would guarantee "operation of the application as well as the recommended expansion joints" if joints were installed according to seller's recommendations was not express warranty (see UCC § 2-313(1)(a)) that each joint would work, but was only guarantee that seller's application scheme for placement of joints would adequately absorb expansion and contraction of buyer's steam pipes; and (4) purchase-order warranty that joints would comply with all specifications and would be free of defects in workmanship and materials was not breached, since buyer (a) did not furnish any specifications as to required service longevity of joints or degree of their resistance to corrosion, and (b) alleged design defects of joints, with regard to seller's failure to anneal joints, liner design of joints, and thickness of bellows walls of joints, were not shown to have caused failure of joints after their installation in buyer's utility system. Wisconsin Elec. Power Co. v. Zallea Bros., 443 F. Supp. 946 (E.D. Wis. 1978), aff'd, 606 F.2d 697 (7th Cir. Wis. 1979).

In action for breach of express and implied warranties in sale of bellows-expansion joints purchased for use in buyer's steam utility system, (1) seller's recommendation in letter to buyer that joints be made of Monel metal, rather than stainless steel, did not amount to implied warranty of fitness of joints for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not inform seller that buyer was relying on seller to select metal that would satisfy buyer's need for an extremely anticorrosive substance; (2) buyer did not establish breach of implied warranty of merchantability of joints under UCC § 2-314(1), since joints furnished by seller met all quality standards prescribed by UCC § 2-314(2); (3) statement in seller's letter that seller would guarantee "operation of the application as well as the recommended expansion joints" if joints were installed according to seller's recommendations was not express warranty (see UCC § 2-313(1)(a)) that each joint would work, but was only guarantee that seller's application scheme for placement of joints would adequately absorb expansion and contraction of buyer's steam pipes; and (4) purchase-order warranty that joints would comply with all specifications and would be free of defects in workmanship and materials was not breached, since buyer (a) did not furnish any specifications as to required service longevity of joints or degree of their resistance to corrosion, and (b) alleged design warranty (reversing default judgment for plaintiff and remanding case for new trial). Dallas Heating Co. v. Pardee, 561 S.W.2d 16 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Mar. 29, 1978).

In action by buyer against seller of studs to be used in construction of building, evidence was sufficient to sustain trial court's conclusions that: (1) seller breached implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 where seller did not furnish buyer building studs which were of "fair average quality" within description or agreed upon sample, majority of studs were much lower in quality than "#2 spruce studs" agreed upon, and studs were not "fit for the ordinary purposes" for which they were furnished, namely the construction of buildings which would meet minimum general construction standards; and (2) seller breached implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where seller's salesman knew purpose for which studs were to be used, viewed the building site and surveyed the list of goods to be used in the construction of the development, was experienced lumber dealer and had greater skill and judgment than buyer's representative regarding suitability of types of lumber for specific projects, and where seller's expertise was relied upon by buyer. Jetero Constr. Co. v. South Memphis Lumber Co., 531 F.2d 1348 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1976).

Cotton merchant made express warranties of quantity by stating on its 3 invoices number of bales of cotton sold thereby; and when merchant sold nonexistent cotton to broker, it breached both express and implied warranties and thereby rendered itself liable to broker for at least amount he paid therefor. Simon v. Estate of Allen, 497 S.W.2d 800 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e., cert. denied, 419 U.S. 843, 95 S. Ct. 76, 42 L. Ed. 2d 71 (1974).

34. Adequate packaging and labeling.

Code imposes on retailer warranty of merchantability which covers not only product which is object of sale, but adequacy of container and its packaging, including paper carton for carrying bottled soft drink. Schuessler v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 279 So. 2d 901 (Fla. App. 1973).

The nature of bottled drinks requires a container which is adequate to contain the drink without breaking or exploding when handled with ordinary care, or, stated differently, soft drinks are not merchantable if inadequately contained. Gillispie v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 14 N.C. App. 1, 187 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

Nature of bottled drinks requires container which is adequate to contain drink without breaking or exploding when handled with ordinary care; and if they are sold in container which is inadequate, seller has breached his implied warranty of merchantability and he is liable for personal injury proximately caused by this breach. Gillispie v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 14 N.C. App. 1, 187 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

Gift or holiday boxes manufactured for use as containers of individual bottles of whiskey which adequately contained the bottles were fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used, and the fact that the increased dimensions of the packaged bottles over those which were unpackaged made it difficult if not impossible to fit them into purchaser's standard shipping cases without damage was not a breach of implied warranty. Standard Packaging Corp. v. Continental Distilling Corp., 259 F. Supp. 919 (E.D. Pa. 1966), aff'd, 378 F.2d 505 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

Manufacturer of cosmetics could maintain an action for damages resulting from leaking aerosol cans in which certain of its products were packaged against can manufacturer on theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness, although no privity of contract existed between can manufacturer and the user. Rhodes Pharmacal Co. v. Continental Can Co., 72 Ill. App. 2d 362, 219 N.E.2d 726 (1st Dist. 1966).

35. Conformity to affirmation or statement on label.

Since an implied warranty can be made on a container or label of a product (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-314, subd [2], par [f]), a valid disclaimer of warranty may also be found on a container or label; a specific written disclaimer prevails over an orally expressed warranty which would, in any event, run afoul of the parol evidence rule. Basic Adhesives, Inc. v. Robert Matzkin Co., 101 Misc. 2d 283 (1979), aff'd as modified.

In action for injuries suffered by plaintiff while using golf training device made by defendants, trial court properly concluded that defendants expressly warranted safety of device and that they were liable for plaintiff's injuries, where plaintiff's evidence indicated that before using device, he read and relied on words "Completely Safe Ball Will Not Hit Player", printed on container, but that when his golf club hit under ball, ball looped over club and hit him on head, and where defendants presented no evidence which could remove their assurance of safety from basis of bargain. Furthermore, trial court properly held for plaintiff on theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability, where device failed to conform to words on container "Completely Safe Ball Will Not Hit Player", and was not fit for ordinary purposes for which such goods are normally used, and where defendants' attempt to limit scope of their warranties failed to meet requirements of UCC § 2-316 governing disclaimer and modification of warranties. Hauter v. Zogarts, 14 Cal. 3d 104, 534 P.2d 377, 74 A.L.R.3d 1282 (1975).

36. In general.

Buyer who successfully sues for breach of warranty may recover litigation expenses under Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act, 15 USCA § 2301-2312. Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

In action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose of trailer that was dangerously unroadworthy, (1) trailer's condition demonstrated that implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 were breached, (2) buyer accepted trailer by offering to pay balance of contract price on assumption that trailer could be repaired, (3) under UCC § 2-608(1)(a), buyer was entitled to revoke acceptance on discovering structural defects in trailer's welding and design that he could not have known about without aid of an expert, (4) buyer's revocation of acceptance was timely under UCC § 2-608(2), and (5) under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was not required to prove that damages were inadequate remedy before obtaining right to rescind contract. McCormick v. Ornstein, 119 Ariz. 352, 580 P.2d 1206 (Ct. App. 1978).

37. Wrongful death.

Cause of action for wrongful death does not arise on account of breach of implied warranty of fitness under UCC. Denny v. Seaboard Lacquer, Inc., 487 F.2d 485 (4th Cir. Md. 1973).

38. Measure and elements of damages.

In action against manufacturer of poultry meal for damages resulting from injury to poultry producer's chickens in that chickens fed with feed that included meal manufactured by defendant failed to achieve normal growth, gravamen of cause of action was breach of warranty of sale under UCC §§ 2-313 and 2-314 and damages sought were permissible under and governed by UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, even though tortious breach on part of defendants was alleged. Mid-South Milling Co. v. Loret Farms, Inc., 521 S.W.2d 586 (Tenn. 1975).

In action by buyer of tube mill against seller for breach of warranty, notwithstanding facts that when resale price of machine was coupled with award of damages, buyer would receive more than purchase price of machine, damage award was not improper. Bosway Tube & Steel Corp. v. McKay Mach. Co., 65 Mich. App. 426, 237 N.W.2d 488 (1975).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of title, brought by buyer of stolen automobile against seller wherein buyer had undisturbed possession of automobile for period of approximately nine months, value of automobile at time buyer's possession was disturbed so that he lost use of automobile was proper measure of damages. Ricklefs v. Clemens, 216 Kan. 128, 531 P.2d 94, 94 A.L.R.3d 572 (1975).

39. Parties and standing.

Plaintiff, buyer of beef from defendant packing company, was not entitled to recover from packer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, following buyer's receipt of partially spoiled beef, where plaintiff prosecuted claim against carrier and breached its fiduciary duty under UCC § 2-722 by settling claim against carrier without consulting seller, where plaintiff failed to make sufficient proof of seller's fault in defective shipment, and where, even if seller had been at fault, plaintiff failed to apportion fault between carrier and seller with sufficient certainty to support judgment against seller. Greisler Bros. v. Packerland Packing Co., 392 F. Supp. 206 (E.D. Wis. 1975).

UCC § 2-314, implied warranty of merchantability, and UCC § 2-315, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, would be extended to lease transaction under which equipment company leased three motor scraper units to construction company since same considerations which give rise to creation of implied warranties in sales transaction were present: lessor was merchant specializing in sale and leasing of heavy construction equipment and lessee claimed it relied on lessor's expertise; lessor placed product into stream of commerce and sought to reap economic benefits from lease of product; and, finally, lessor was in better position to control antecedent factors which affect condition of product. Furthermore, UCC § 2-316, which allows seller to disclaim implied warranties and provides specific means for such disclaimer, would be extended to lease in question by analogy. Glenn Dick Equip. Co. v. Galey Constr., Inc., 97 Idaho 216, 541 P.2d 1184 (1975).

This section does not deal with the rights of third persons not parties to the sale who come into possession of the goods and use them in the manner intended by the manufacturer and are thereby injured by reason of the faulty condition of goods latent in character due to improper manufacture or the use of faulty materials. Lonzrick v. Republic Steel Corp., 1 Ohio App. 2d 374, 205 N.E.2d 92 (1965), aff'd, 6

Ohio St. 2d 227, 35 Ohio Op. 2d 404, 218 N.E.2d 185 (1966).

Where employee's complaint alleged that safety work shoes "supplied" to him by his employer caused dermatitis, it could not be said in view of the many connotations of the word "supplied" that the employee was, as a matter of fact, excluded from the class of persons to whom the warranties extended under this section applied. Nederostek v. Endicott-Johnson Shoe Co., 415 Pa. 136, 202 A.2d 72 (1964).

The implied warranty afforded by subd (1) of this section applied where the injured party was a member of the buyer's family. Harris v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 23 Mass. App. Dec. 169 (1962).

40. Remote manufacturer or seller; privity required.

In an action by a purchaser of an automobile against the car manufacturer and the car dealership, no remedy of revocation would be available to the purchaser against the manufacturer as a "seller" under § 75-2-314, where there was no evidence that the manufacturer either sold or contracted to sell the automobile to the purchaser. Royal Lincoln-Mercury Sales, Inc. v. Wallace, 415 So. 2d 1024 (Miss. 1982).

Where the purchaser of an unmerchantable product suffers only loss of profits, his remedy for breach of warranty is against his immediate seller unless he can predicate liability upon some fault on the part of a remote seller. State ex rel. W. Seed Prod. Corp. v. Campbell, 250 Or. 262, 442 P.2d 215 (1968), cert. denied, 393 U.S. 1093, 89 S. Ct. 862, 21 L. Ed. 2d 784 (1969), but see, State ex rel. La Manufacture Francaise Des Pneumatiques Michelin v. Wells, 294 Or. 296, 657 P.2d 207 (1982).

Corporation that imported automobile for resale impliedly warranted under UCC § 2-314(2)(c) that automobile would be equipped with "crashworthy seat backs." Smith v. Fiat-Roosevelt Motors, Inc., 556 F.2d 728 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

No cause of action for breach of express or implied warranty existed, in insurer's action as subrogee against company supplying defective filtration plant equipment to subcontracting company insured by plaintiff, where (1) no seller-buyer relationship or sale contract existed under UCC § 2-314 and § 2-315 between subcontracting company and defendant supplier and (2) plaintiff insurer was neither "natural person" nor "injured in person" within meaning of UCC § 2-318. Potsdam Welding & Mach. Co. v. Neptune Microfloc, Inc., 57 A.D.2d 993 (3d Dep't 1977).

In action by buyer of four oil tankers against shipbuilder-seller for consequential damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2) for losses incurred when tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures, in which shipbuilder filed third-party complaint against manufacturer of defective cargo pumps and manufacturer of pumps filed fourth-party complaint against manufacturer of defective expansion joints, (1) shipbuilder-seller breached express warranty to buyer under UCC § 2-313(1) that tankers would be built to operate efficiently and also implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 of merchantability and fitness of tankers for particular purpose (transportation of aviation fuels); (2) buyer of tankers was entitled only to consequential damages caused by defects in design and was not entitled to damages caused by defects in materials or workmanship; (3) shipbuilder-seller's foreseeable liability to buyer was $500,000, which was amount of adjusted revenues lost by buyer when two of its tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures due to defective design; (4) manufacturer of defective cargo pumps breached its express and implied warranties to shipbuilder and was liable, in amount of $2,000,000, for losses sustained by shipbuilder as result of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures in tankers sold to buyer (including shipbuilder's liability to buyer for lost revenues during period tankers were inoperative), but was not liable to shipbuilder for cost of installing separate stripping on each tanker; and (5) manufacturer of defective expansion joints, which were used in connection with cargo pumps, breached its express and implied warranties concerning such joints and was liable to manufacturer of pumps for costs of replacing all defective joints. Falcon Tankers, Inc. v. Litton Sys., 380 A.2d 569 (Del. Super. 1977).

In action by purchaser of rifle against manufacturer's distributor for breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of rifle for ordinary purposes for which it was to be used, (1) distributor was remote seller who could be held liable under Uniform Commercial Code for breach of either express or implied warranty; (2) unlike Uniform Commercial Code, Georgia law required existence of privity of contract before liability could be imposed on distributor or remote seller under theory of express or implied warranty; (3) requirement of privity was complied with because distributor, by written statement accompanying rifle, "fully guaranteed" its use by ultimate consumer, and such express warranty was part of bargain of sale; and (4) since distributor's express warranty contained no limitation on its provisions and also did not exclude any implied warranties attaching to rifle, distributor could be held liable under either UCC § 2-313(1)(a) for breach of express warranty or UCC § 2-314(2)(c) for breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of rifle for ordinary purposes for which it was to be used (holding that distributor failed to discharge its burden of establishing nonexistence of plaintiff's right to recover). Jones v. Cranman's Sporting Goods, 142 Ga. App. 838, 237 S.E.2d 402 (1977).

While no implied warranty ordinarily exists under UCC § 2-314 between manufacturer and purchaser of automobile when no privity exists between them, implied warranty of UCC § 2-314 was applicable to personal injury action arising from automobile "jumping in gear," where manufacturer issued written warranty to purchaser through its authorized agent. Ford Motor Co. v. Lee, 137 Ga. App. 486, 224 S.E.2d 168 (1976), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 237 Ga. 554, 229 S.E.2d 379 (1976), conformed to, 140 Ga. App. 579, 231 S.E.2d 571 (1976).

In action by tire store employees against truck manufacturer, manufacturer of truck wheel and rim, and truck dealer, for injuries received while they were changing tires on truck: (1) employees failed to establish breach of warranty against dealer since there was no sale when dealer delivered truck to plaintiffs' employer for purpose of having tires changed; (2) plaintiffs also failed to state cause of action for breach of warranty against truck manufacturer or manufacturer of wheel and rim since there was no privity between plaintiffs and manufacturers. Favors v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 309 So. 2d 69 (Fla. App. 1975).

Automobile manufacturer was not liable for injury to child which occurred when child, who was riding his bicycle, collided with automobile and impact of collision broke parking light on automobile, causing tendon in child's knee to be severed, although child was within class of persons who might reasonably be expected to be affected by such automobile under UCC § 2-318, where vehicle in question was fit for ordinary purposes for which such vehicle is used under UCC § 2-314; part of car involved was essential item on car, and not mere ornamentation; of necessity lens had to be made of transparent or translucent material and, in general, such materials are fragile; light did not shatter under normal usage, but shattered under impact with metal; and breakage resulted from external force and injury did not occur to user of vehicle. Nacci v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 325 A.2d 617 (Del. Super. 1974).

Code section pertaining to implied warranty of merchantability does not appear to govern rights and duties as between retail buyer and remote seller with whom buyer has no privity of contract. Schuessler v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 279 So. 2d 901 (Fla. App. 1973).

Distributor of weed killer was liable in damages to truck gardener purchaser whose crop of squash was substantially destroyed when he applied it under adverse weather conditions on the representation of distributor's agent that the chemical was suitable for immediate use. However the manufacturer was not liable, though the labels on its containers contained no warnings whatsoever as to use under adverse conditions. Wilson v. E-Z Flo Chem. Co., 281 N.C. 506, 189 S.E.2d 221 (1972).

A manufacturer's express or implied warranty of fitness of his product for its contemplated use running in favor of all its intended uses does not give rise to liability on its part in an action to rescind the contract and for the return of the purchase price paid to a dealer by the ultimate consumer. Carlson v. Shepard Pontiac, Inc., 63 Misc. 2d 994 (1970).

Where the liability of the dealer is predicated upon a breach of warranty of the manufacturer a judgment cannot be entered against the dealer until an adverse judgment is entered against the manufacturer and this is so even though the dealer is in default in the lawsuit. Byrd v. Moore Ford Co., 116 Ga. App. 292, 157 S.E.2d 41 (1967).

41. —Privity not required.

Lack of privity between buyer and manufacturer of motor home is no bar to cause of action arising under UCC § 2-314, because privity requirement was statutorily abolished in Mississippi Code Annotated § 11-7-20; action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability against manufacturer, as seller, may be maintained by buyer because the manufacturer qualified as a seller under UCC § 2-103(1)(d) as a person who sells or contracts to sell goods, although the motor home in question had not been purchased directly from the manufacturer. Hargett v. Midas Int'l Corp., 508 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1987).

Manufacturer can be held liable, without regard to privity, for purely economic loss that results from his breach of implied warranty of merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314(1) (applying rule to manufacturer of mobile homes which sold mobile home to third person who, in turn, resold it to plaintiff). Nobility Homes of Tex., Inc. v. Shivers, 557 S.W.2d 77 (Tex. 1977).

In suit by person suffering from degenerative osteoarthritis against manufacturer of artificial hip prosthesis for breach of implied warranty of fitness and merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314, where evidence showed that device manufactured by defendant was implanted in plaintiff's hip in September, 1971, that device failed to function properly in May, 1974, and that plaintiff suffered pain as result, judgment for plaintiff under 1973 amendment of Massachusetts version of

UCC § 2-318, which eliminated requirement of privity with respect to third-party beneficiaries of express or implied warranties, was proper because (1) plaintiff's injury occurred after effective date of such amendment; and (2) since amendment's elimination of privity requirement had as its purpose deemphasizing sale transaction and emphasizing harm that may result from defects contained in items in commerce that cause injury to class of persons specified in amendment, fact that defendant's device was sold before enactment of amendment did not bar plaintiff's recovery on ground that amendment would thus be applied retroactively. Hoffman v. Howmedica, Inc., 373 Mass. 32, 364 N.E.2d 1215 (1977).

Where there was no exclusion or modification by manufacturer of any warranties in sale of printing press to distributor-retailer, implied warranty of merchantability was created under South Dakota UCC § 2-314(1) which extended under South Dakota UCC § 2-318 to print-shop operator who bought press from distributor. Drier v. Perfection, Inc., 259 N.W.2d 496 (S.D. 1977).

Manufacturer of defective mobile home could be held liable for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315, without regard to privity of contract between manufacturer and consumer, and this liability embraced not only personal injuries and property damage, but also economic loss. Morrow v. New Moon Homes, Inc., 548 P.2d 279 (Alaska 1976).

The implied warranty of fitness imposed by law on a manufacturer may be enforced directly against the manufacturer by a third party user where the manufacturer was aware of the purpose for which the product was to be put, and knew of the user's reliance that the product would be fit for the purpose intended, and it is not necessary that a contractual relationship exist between the user and the manufacturer. Rhodes Pharmacal Co. v. Continental Can Co., 72 Ill. App. 2d 362, 219 N.E.2d 726 (1st Dist. 1966).

42. —Remedies of manufacturer and seller inter se.

Where retailer and wholesaler of child's toy each paid $10,000 to consumer in settlement of products liability action, and where retailer made out prima facie case for breach of warranty of merchantability by wholesaler, retailer was entitled to recover from wholesaler as consequential damages amount it was required to pay in settlement. Kelly v. Hanscom Bros., 231 Pa. Super. 357, 331 A.2d 737 (1974).

Implied warranty of merchantability applies equally to both retailer and manufacturer of goods. Gillispie v. Thomasville Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 17 N.C. App. 545, 195 S.E.2d 45 (1973), cert. denied, 283 N.C. 393, 196 S.E.2d 275 (1973).

Where a steel company employee recovered for personal injuries in an action against the manufacturer and the general contractor who installed the alleged defective machine in the steel mill, the jury's verdict necessarily concluded the product was in a defective condition at the time it was sold and all elements necessary to establish a breach of warranty were established. Accordingly, the general contractor was entitled to a judgment over against the manufacturer of the machine, since there was implied a warranty of merchantability in the sales transaction. Greco v. Bucciconi Eng'g Co., 283 F. Supp. 978 (W.D. Pa. 1967), aff'd, 407 F.2d 87 (3d Cir. Pa. 1969).

The fact that some minor repairs were required for the automobile does not establish that there has been a breach of warranty of merchantability where the car was in proper running condition after the making of such repairs. Johnson v. Fore River Motors, Inc., 26 Mass. App. Dec. 184 (1963).

43. Proximate cause.

To recover for the breach of an implied warranty (see UCC §§ 2-314(1) and 2-315, the plaintiff must establish that the defect that caused the damage was present when the product left the defendant's control. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

In buyer's action for consequential damages resulting from explosion of oil refinery equipment defectively installed by buyer, comparative negligence theory was applied to bar seller from recovering so much of damages as were proximately caused by buyer's failure to heed seller's warning regarding continued unsafe operation of defective unit. Signal Oil & Gas Co. v. Universal Oil Prods., 572 S.W.2d 320 (1978).

In action by buyer against paint manufacturer for damages for breach of warranty in sale of red barn paint, where evidence showed (1) that plaintiff was professional barn painter, (2) that he had not followed defendant's instructions when adding linseed oil to paint purchased, (3) that paint on customers' barns painted by plaintiff had faded within one to four months after its application, (4) that plaintiff had had many complaints, and (5) that defendant had admitted that a "fade problem" existed with respect to paint purchased by plaintiff, which was of "botton-of-the-line" quality, court held, on affirming judgment for plaintiff, (1) that although plaintiff's proof of causation was not direct, jury could still infer from fact that fading of paint was quite uniform that presence or absence of linseed oil had had no effect on paint's fading; (2) that since defendant had admitted that paint had a "fade problem" which was to be expected with that brand of paint, jury could therefore infer that paint was not "good barn paint" and that it violated defendant's express warranty made under UCC § 2-313(1)(a); (3) that jury could also infer that paint was not of merchantable quality in violation of implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); (4) that, moreover, it was not fit for plaintiff's particular purpose in violation of implied warranty of fitness contained in UCC § 2-315; and (5) that trial court correctly instructed jury that it could consider whether plaintiff had complied with defendant's directions in determining whether plaintiff had been negligent, and whether such negligence had been a cause of his consequential damages (declining, since issue was first presented on appeal, to consider whether plaintiff's consequential damages should have reduced by 15 per cent to reflect proportion of fault that jury attributed to plaintiff's negligence, and stating that Minnesota courts had not determined whether comparative-fault principle should be applied in breach-of-warranty actions, although its application seemed equitable and appropriate under UCC § 2-715(2)(b)).

Chatfield v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 266 N.W.2d 171 (Minn. 1978).

In action by operator of hog farm for breach of express and implied warranties attaching under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) and 2-314(1) to corn purchased by plaintiff to feed his hogs, evidence was sufficient to support verdict and judgment in plaintiff's favor where it showed (1) that plaintiff's hogs became ill after eating contaminated corn purchased from defendant, (2) that samples of other corn that plaintiff at that time had also fed to his hogs, which corn was purchased from other sources, proved on analysis to be completely negative for toxins, while samples of corn sold by defendant were positive for toxins, and (3) that plaintiff's hogs had not been sick before eating corn purchased from defendant, but had become sick thereafter. Tillman & Deal Farm Supply, Inc. v. Deal, 146 Ga. App. 232, 246 S.E.2d 138 (1978).

The plaintiff in a merchantability lawsuit must prove that the defendant deviated from the standard of merchantability and that this deviation caused the plaintiff's injury, both proximately and in fact. These necessities of proof make the merchantability case a first cousin to a negligence lawsuit. Under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2), a plaintiff must prove the following: (1) that a merchant sold goods, (2) that the goods were not merchantable at the time of sale, (3) that injury and damages to the plaintiff or his property resulted, (4) that such injury and damages were proximately and in fact caused by the defective nature of the goods, and (5) that notice of the injury was given to the seller (action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability to recover damages for destruction of grain bin, which was blown off its foundation by tornadic winds, in which trial court erred in not instructing jury that plaintiff had burden of proving that breach of implied warranty alleged was proximate cause of plaintiff's injury). Geiger v. Sweeney, 201 Neb. 175, 266 N.W.2d 895 (1978).

In action by purchaser of stove from defendant seller for damages for destruction of plaintiff's home in fire allegedly caused by defect in stove, directed verdict for defendant was proper where plaintiff failed to introduce evidence from which jury could have found that destruction of her home had resulted from stove's alleged defect. Moreover, such verdict was proper, regardless of whether plaintiff's action was based on implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, an express warranty governed by UCC § 2-313, or tort theory of products liability, since plaintiff under any of these theories was still required to prove that alleged defect in stove caused destruction of home. Crocker v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 346 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 1977).

Where seller of herbicide by his own testimony relating to his experience, licensing, and training in use of herbicide, established himself as merchant as to goods involved, where evidence, inter alia, proved that herbicide was defective in that wheat crop was not unusually susceptible to damage from herbicide even if unusually strong concentration had been applied, and where seller exercised sole control over herbicide, its mixture with water, and application to crop, seller was liable for implied breach of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 since defective herbicide was efficient cause of damage to buyer's crop; statement on label that buyer assumes all risks and liabilities was not part of bargain of sale where buyer was given no opportunity to see or read label. Eichenberger v. Wilhelm, 244 N.W.2d 691 (N.D. 1976).

In action by water corporation's contractor (buyer) against seller of filter tanks, failure of distributor heads of filter tanks did not constitute breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, breach of warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, or breach of any express warranty under UCC § 2-313, where distributor heads failed under excessive water pressure in water system due to defect in water corporation's plans and specifications, contractor bought tanks in reliance upon contract specifications without reliance upon any warranty, affirmation or representation by seller as to merchantability or fitness for intended use, and seller's statement to buyer that tanks "should" be able to remove iron and manganese from water did not amount to affirmation of fact affecting bargain between contractor and seller. Hobson Constr. Co. v. Hajoca Corp., 28 N.C. App. 684, 222 S.E.2d 709 (1976).

In action against manufacturer of oral contraceptive for stroke allegedly caused by using contraceptive, plaintiff was not entitled to proceed on theory of breach of either implied warranty of merchantability (UCC § 2-314(1)) or implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose (UCC § 2-315) where there was no evidence to show that such contraceptive had contained any foreign ingredients or impurities that rendered it inherently dangerous for human consumption, and where evidence revealed that plaintiff was suffering from hypertension when her doctor prescribed the contraceptive. Chambers v. G.D. Searle & Co., 441 F. Supp. 377 (D. Md. 1975), aff'd, 567 F.2d 269 (4th Cir. Md. 1977).

In breach of warranty action by developer of subdivision against seller-manufacturer of coating product used on plywood exterior of certain of developer's houses following delamination and checking of surfaces painted with seller's product, finding that seller neither breached implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 nor implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was proper where there was evidence that coating material was free from defects and was proper material for use intended, and that delamination and checking occurred as result of combination of improper preparation of plywood surface and incompetent application of coating material. Shore Line Properties, Inc. v. Deer-O-Paints & Chems., Ltd, 24 Ariz. App. 331, 538 P.2d 760 (1975).

In action by automobile purchaser against manufacturer and dealer for damages sustained when engine of automobile "burned up," evidence was insufficient to require trial court to submit purchaser's case to jury on theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability in view of evidence that prior to burning episode purchaser had points and spark plugs replaced by servicemen independent of manufacturer or dealer and in view of testimony of president of dealer corporation that in his opinion damage to engine was caused by improper ignition advance resulting from maladjustment of "timing" and that installation of points and plug without timing adjustment, as recommended by manufacturer, would cause mishap that occurred; evidence was not sufficient to negate possibility of intermediate act or agency producing engine failure. Kriedler v. Pontiac Div. of GMC, 514 S.W.2d 174 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e. (Oct. 30, 1974).

Manufacturer, seller or supplier of products for human consumption or intimate bodily use may become liable on basis of implied warranty for injurious result stemming therefrom when it should have been foreseen, in exercise of reasonable care and foresight, that such results would be sustained by appreciable number of persons using products. Robbins v. Alberto-Culver Co., 210 Kan. 147, 499 P.2d 1080 (1972).

Allegations held sufficient to aver breach of implied warranty of merchantability in sale of hair rollers. Gardner v. Q.H.S., Inc., 448 F.2d 238 (4th Cir. S.C. 1971).

When proceeding under Code-imposed implied warranty, plaintiff has burden of proving that injury resulted from unmerchantability or unsuitability of product; mere fact of application of shampoo and permanent wave followed by temporary hair loss is not enough to justify this conclusion. Elliott v. Lachance, 109 N.H. 481, 256 A.2d 153 (1969).

44. Pleading.

Complaint which alleged (1) that defendant had manufactured drug complained of (pitocin) and sold it to codefendant hospital, (2) that defendant had impliedly warranted that drug was of merchantable quality and fit for use in certain obstetrical deliveries, (3) that plaintiff had relied on such warranties and on defendant's skill and judgment in purchasing drug, (4) that treating physician had ordered intravenous administration of drug to plaintiff's mother while fetus was in high station, (5) that defendant had breached its warranties of merchantability and fitness of drug for particular purpose by inadequate packaging and labeling, and by failure of drug to conform to defendant's affirmations of fact, and (6) that plaintiff had been proximately injured as a result of such breaches, was sufficient to state cause of action for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 (stating that Uniform Commercial Code intended to create statutory cause of action for breach of implied warranty on behalf of consumers who are injured by product deficiencies, and that such cause of action is in addition to that existing in strict tort liability). Woodill v. Parke Davis & Co., 58 Ill. App. 3d 349, 374 N.E.2d 683 (1st Dist. 1978), aff'd and remanded, 79 Ill. 2d 26, 37 Ill. Dec. 304, 402 N.E.2d 194 (1980).

To plead properly cause of action for breach of warranty under Uniform Commercial Code, complaint should at least allege the following: (1) facts respecting sale of the goods; (2) identification of warranty created as being express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1), implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1), or implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; (3) facts respecting creation of such warranty; (4) facts respecting its breach; (5) giving to seller of notice of breach required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (6) injuries sustained by buyer as result of breach (holding that third-party complaint failed to state cause of action because it did not comply with above list of essential allegations). Dunham-Bush, Inc. v. Thermo-Air Serv., Inc., 351 So. 2d 351 (Fla. App. 1977).

Allegations that plaintiff purchased burglar alarm system from defendant, that the system was to remain the property of the defendant, that plaintiff was told that defendant was reliable firm, had an excellent staff, that the system was foolproof, and that the system was a substantial deterrent to burglaries, that plaintiff's premises were burglarized, and that defendant had breached an express warranty and an implied warranty, and had been guilty of gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and intentional tort did not state a claim upon which relief could be granted where it contained no allegations of facts stating in what respect any warranty was breached or that any breach was a proximate cause of the burglary. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

Complaint which alleged that architect had breached implied warranty of merchantability that roof of building designed by architect was of good and merchantable quality (see UCC § 2-314(1)) failed to state cause of action, since architect's contract with plaintiff was for rendition of professional services and did not involve sale of goods. Queensbury Union Free Sch. Dist. v. Jim Walter Corp., 91 Misc. 2d 804 (1977).

Complaint alleging that drug was contraceptive pill, that defendant manufacturer knew that members of the public were purchasing the pill for contraceptive purposes, and that drug "was unsafe and was not reasonably fit for plaintiff's use as contraceptive," adequately stated cause of action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Redfield v. Mead, Johnson & Co., 266 Or. 273, 512 P.2d 776 (1973).

On a motion for summary judgment an allegation in defendant's affidavit alleging that its sweaters were rendered unsalable because of latent defects in the yarn (for which suit was brought) which caused "variation and color from piece to piece and in the pieces," was sufficient to create a question of fact concerning the merchantability of the yarn. Wilson Trading Corp. v. David Ferguson, Ltd., 23 N.Y.2d 398, 244 N.E.2d 685 (1968).

In an action to rescind a sales contract on the ground of breach of an express warranty of fitness for purpose, the plaintiff, after the hearing before the chancellor, cannot argue that there was an implied warranty of fitness when no implied warranty was pleaded and the defendant did not have any opportunity to defend against such a claim. Suppa v. D.A. Wiley, Inc., 49 Del. Co. 335 (Pa. 1962).

45. Notice of breach.

In action by purchaser of rifle against seller under UCC § 2-314(2)(c) for breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of rifle for ordinary purposes for which it was to be used, defendant failed to discharge its burden of proof to show that there was no defect in rifle and thus no breach of implied warranty sued on. Furthermore, defendant, who alleged that plaintiff did not give notice of alleged breach of warranty within reasonable time after discovery of breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), also did not discharge burden of establishing that reasonable notice of breach had not been given (stating that fact that rifle exploded while it was being loaded constituted evidence that it was unfit for ordinary purposes for which it was intended). Jones v. Cranman's Sporting Goods, 142 Ga. App. 838, 237 S.E.2d 402 (1977).

In rem action in admiralty involving counterclaims by seller and buyer arising from breaches of contract to sell flour, (1) seller breached implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), and also federal adulterated-food statute, as to one cargo of flour which was infested with insects when it arrived at warehouse prior to being loaded on ship, (2) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject all of such cargo and therefore was not liable for its purchase price or any consequential damages, (3) seller also breached implied warranty of merchantability with respect to two other cargoes of flour, and since buyer had paid for such flour and had ultimately accepted it, buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-606(1)(a), (4) buyer was not barred from claiming damages for such nonconforming cargoes by failure to give notice of nonconformity by registered mail, since buyer's warning to seller of buyer's dissatisfaction with cargoes constituted adequate notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (5) under UCC § 2-714(2), although there was no evidence as to value of such cargoes at time and place of their acceptance (Mobile, Alabama), buyer was entitled to damages for difference between prices for good and infested flour in Bolivia, South America, plus damages for expenses incurred because of flour's infestation, since buyer had accepted such flour after it had been loaded on ships that transported it to Bolivia and had had no reasonable opportunity to inspect it before it was loaded. T.J. Stevenson & Co. v. 81,193 Bags of Flour, 449 F. Supp. 84 (S.D. Ala. 1976), rev'd on other grounds, 629 F.2d 338 (5th Cir. Ala. 1980), reh'g denied, 651 F.2d 779 (5th Cir. Ala. 1981).

46. Evidence and burden of proof.

Evidence was sufficient to establish that the defendant breached the implied warranty of merchantability with regard to the sale of a rebuilt motor vehicle transmission. Settlemyres v. Jones, 736 So. 2d 471 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Where evidence tended to show that galvanized nails were not proper for use in cedar siding and were not ordinarily used for such purpose in the building-trade industry, plaintiff builder of house components, who had used galvanized casing nails purchased from defendant to construct cedar plywood paneling, failed to prove that nails did not comply with defendant's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c). Lindy Homes, Inc. v. Evans Supply Co., 357 So. 2d 996 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

In action against dealer, who assembled truck and camper unit sold to plaintiffs, for injuries sustained by plaintiffs and their niece when truck's rear tire blew out and caused truck to go out of control, (1) evidence showed that blowout was caused by combination of vehicle overloading and rear tire's underinflation, (2) adequate warnings were not contained in operator's manual furnished with truck by manufacturer, or by "rating plate" affixed by manufacturer to truck's door which listed recommended maximum gross vehicle weight rating, (3) plaintiffs' niece was member of class of persons who under UCC § 2-318 are third-party beneficiaries of express and implied warranties, and (4) since warnings furnished by truck's manufacturer were inadequate to prevent danger of blowout when truck and camper unit were used by ordinary user for purposes for which such goods are ordinarily used, and since a product is unmerchantable if it is sold without a suitable warning, dealer's sale breached warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c). Sorensen v. Travelers Indem. Co., 1978 Adv. Sheets 550 (Mass. App. Div. 1978).

In action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) of container of Ortho Tomato Vegetable Dust insecticide, some of which came into contact with plaintiff's skin during use and caused her to be hospitalized for insecticide poisoning, plaintiff's complaint was properly dismissed at end of her case when she failed to show that such insecticide was not reasonably fit for purposes for which it was ordinarily used (observing that although plaintiff might have been more successful if she had based her claim on theory of strict products liability, her recourse because of statute-of-limitations reasons was limited to theory of breach of implied warranty). Finkelstein v. Chevron Chem. Co., 60 A.D.2d 640 (2d Dep't 1977), appeal denied, 44 N.Y.2d 641 (1978).

In action by purchaser of stove from defendant seller for damages for destruction of plaintiff's home in fire allegedly caused by defect in stove, directed verdict for defendant was proper where plaintiff failed to introduce evidence from which jury could have found that destruction of her home had resulted from stove's alleged defect. Moreover, such verdict was proper, regardless of whether plaintiff's action was based on implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, an express warranty governed by UCC § 2-313, or tort theory of products liability, since plaintiff under any of these theories was still required to prove that alleged defect in stove caused destruction of home. Crocker v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 346 So. 2d 921 (Miss. 1977).

Failure of plaintiff to meet its burden of showing that contract with defendant electric company, under which defendant was to design, manufacture, and install electrical distribution system in plaintiff's building, involved sale of goods under UCC Art 2 precluded any recovery under UCC § 2-314(1) for defendant's alleged breach of implied warranty of merchantability of equipment installed or any recovery under UCC § 2-315 for defendant's alleged breach of implied warranty of fitness of equipment for particular purpose (observing that not every contract to install electrical system is automatically outside scope of UCC Art 2). Air Heaters, Inc. v. Johnson Elec., Inc., 258 N.W.2d 649, 5 A.L.R.4th 489 (N.D. 1977).

Breach, within meaning of UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-314(2)(c), of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of mobile home for ordinary purposes for which home was to be used was established by evidence of buyer which showed that vehicle's doors would not latch, that frame of vehicle was crooked, that vehicle's wiring was incorrectly installed, and that vehicle's plumbing did not function properly (rejecting defense contention that seller does not impliedly warrant against latent defects). Fredrick v. Dreyer, 257 N.W.2d 835 (S.D. 1977).

In action for eye injury following application of false eyelashes by manufacturer's representative, (1) where representative had warned plaintiff of possible irritation if adhesive glue supplied with eyelashes came into contact with skin or eyes, lashes that were applied properly to one eye had caused no injury, and adhesive glue was inadvertently introduced into plaintiff's damaged eye; and (2) where plaintiff's sole theory of action was breach by defendant of implied warranty of fitness of eyelashes for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 and breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, summary judgment for defendant was proper, since (1) plaintiff's testimony that eyelashes, when properly applied to one eye, had caused her no injury contradicted her claim of breach of warranty, and (2) such warranties did not apply to use of defendant's product in other than normal manner. Caldwell v. Lord & Taylor, Inc., 142 Ga. App. 137, 235 S.E.2d 546 (1977).

Employee of construction company, who was injured by collapse of boom of truck crane that construction company had leased from defendant trust company, could not recover damages under UCC § 2-314 for defendant's alleged breach of implied warranty of merchantability of crane where evidence showed (1) that person who was president and sole stockholder of construction company also was sole stockholder, trustee, and beneficiary of defendant trust company, and (2) that trust company did not deal in cranes or any other type of goods, had no employees, and had been formed solely as tax-saving device. Defendant also was not liable to plaintiff under UCC § 2-315 for breach of implied warranty of fitness of crane for particular purpose, since defendant lessor possessed no skill or judgment on which lessee (construction company) had relied; for purposes of Uniform Commercial Code, lessor and lessee of crane constituted single entity in person of sole stockholder of both companies. Brescia v. Great

Rd. Realty Trust, 117 N.H. 154, 373 A.2d 1310 (1977).

Under UCC § 2-314, buyer who had purchased pump from seller was entitled to retain replacement motor for pump without paying for it or its installation where seller was merchant engaged in selling such goods, no evidence existed that implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 for pump was excluded or modified, and seller by his own testimony showed that pump as originally installed was not merchantable. Titus v. Polan, 72 Wis. 2d 23, 240 N.W.2d 420 (1976).

Plaintiff, buyer of beef from defendant packing company, was not entitled to recover from packer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, following buyer's receipt of partially spoiled beef, where plaintiff prosecuted claim against carrier and breached its fiduciary duty under UCC § 2-722 by settling claim against carrier without consulting seller, where plaintiff failed to make sufficient proof of seller's fault in defective shipment, and where, even if seller had been at fault, plaintiff failed to apportion fault between carrier and seller with sufficient certainty to support judgment against seller. Greisler Bros. v. Packerland Packing Co., 392 F. Supp. 206 (E.D. Wis. 1975).

In breach of warranty action by developer of subdivision against seller-manufacturer of coating product used on plywood exterior of certain developer's houses following delamination and checking of surfaces painted with seller's product, finding that seller neither breached implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 nor implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was proper where there was evidence that coating material was free from defects and was proper material for use intended, and that delamination and checking occurred as result of combination of improper preparation of plywood surface and incompetent application of coating material. Shore Line Properties, Inc. v. Deer-O-Paints & Chems., Ltd, 24 Ariz. App. 331, 538 P.2d 760 (1975).

Knowledge of defect on part of seller is not essential to recovery by buyer for breach of implied warranties under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. Brendsel v. Wright, 301 Minn. 175, 221 N.W.2d 695 (1974).

Purchaser of pumps failed to prove breach of implied warranty of merchantability, even if it was not excluded by express warranty, where purchaser's expert could not say had made no measurements which indicated that pump, bearings, etc. were not within tolerance for necessary and proper use nor that they were not reasonably suited for purposes intended; fact that pumps may have produced "red water", arising from faulty installation or other causes, did not show breach. Carr v. Jacuzzi Bros., 133 Ga. App. 70, 210 S.E.2d 16 (1974).

Genuine issues of material fact arose as to existence and violation of express warranties and as to violation of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness, and as to sufficiency of disclaiming language in receipts to negate either implied or express warranties; therefore, granting of summary judgment was reversible error. Woodruff v. Clark County Farm Bureau Coop. Ass'n, 153 Ind. App. 31, 286 N.E.2d 188 (1972).

Where plaintiff was only witness who testified to defects in car and his testimony showed no evidence that he at any time examined car to determine what, if anything was wrong with it, and showed that most serious problem was not caused by defect, but merely by oversight of serviceman who failed to replace oil filter, and plaintiff admitted that he was not qualified to give opinion concerning trouble and that he never had to add water to car even though it appeared to be running hot, plaintiff failed to prove breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Collum v. Fred Tuch Buick, 6 Ill. App. 3d 317, 285 N.E.2d 532 (1st Dist. 1972).

It is clear that plaintiff has not met his burden of proof of proving a cause of action under UCC § 2-313 (Express Warranty), UCC § 2-314 (Implied Warranty of Merchantability), and UCC § 2-315 (Implied Warranty of Fitness for a Particular Purpose), where no evidence was submitted by the plaintiff on the existence of such warranties or on any defect in the chemical at issue, and none is apparent from the testimony. Toppi v. United States, 332 F. Supp. 513 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

Contributory negligence of purchaser may be defense to claim of breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness, but was not proven where gas purchaser had attempted to reignite pilot light after having been informed of trouble by gas company-seller. Murphy v. Petrolane-Wyoming Gas Serv., 468 P.2d 969 (Wyo. 1970).

Contributory negligence is defense to action for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314. Stephan v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 110 N.H. 248, 266 A.2d 855 (1970).

When proceeding under Code-imposed implied warranty, plaintiff has burden of proving that injury resulted from unmerchantability or unsuitability of product; mere fact of application of shampoo and permanent wave followed by temporary hair loss is not enough to justify this conclusion. Elliott v. Lachance, 109 N.H. 481, 256 A.2d 153 (1969).

The buyer has the burden of proving the existence of the warranty relied on. Chamberlain v. Bob Matick Chevrolet, Inc., 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 685, 239 A.2d 42, 24 A.L.R.3d 456 (1967).

Evidence that (a) the bulbs were inspected by inspectors for the Dutch and American governments and were found to be sound, and both the plaintiff and the government of Holland go to great lengths to see that nothing is wrong with the bulbs shipped, (b) so many things can happen after delivery that are not under the control of plaintiff that it has the right to limit its warranty, and there is therefore no implied warranty after this moment, and (c) defendants, as well as plaintiff, have been in the business for a long time and know that no shipper of bulbs guarantees flowering results, affected only the weight and credibility of the evidence but not its admissibility. Q. Vandenberg & Sons v. Siter, 204 Pa. Super. 392, 204 A.2d 494 (1964).

47. —Breach at time of sale.

Buyer of motor home must establish that defects existed when motor home left control of manufacturer in order to recover, thus assuring that manufacturer will not be held responsible for defects caused by actions of intervening parties, unrelated to manufacturer, who had access to goods. Hargett v. Midas Int'l Corp., 508 So. 2d 663 (Miss. 1987).

To recover for the breach of an implied warranty (see UCC §§ 2-314(1) and 2-315), the plaintiff must establish that the defect that caused the damage was present when the product left the defendant's control. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

In suit under UCC § 2-314(1) for breach of implied warranty of merchantability in sale of automobile, buyer had burden of proving that vehicle was defective when it left hands of manufacturer or seller, although such proof could consist of circumstantial evidence. However, although buyer did produce evidence that some of vehicle's lesser defects had existed when he bought vehicle, trial court's finding of unfitness of vehicle at time of sale was not supported by evidence which did not negate possibility that vehicle's main defect (defective steering mechanism) was not in existence when vehicle was purchased, but came into existence after dealer had attempted to repair vehicle's front end. Ford Motor Co. v. Tidwell, 563 S.W.2d 831 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

In action by fourth-party declaration by manufacturer of propane-fuel canister against manufacturer of value-core unit incorporated in canister for breach of implied warranty of merchantability established by UCC § 2-314, evidence did not sustain plaintiff's contention that valve-core unit, when delivered to plaintiff for incorporation into canister, was not fit for ordinary purposes for which it was used. Eaton Corp. v. Wright, 281 Md. 80, 375 A.2d 1122 (1977).

In action by subrogee of buyer of used automobile against manufacturer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314(1), plaintiff did not sustain its burden of proof when it failed to establish that defect that caused fire in vehicle's engine existed when vehicle left possession of either defendant distributor or defendant manufacturer. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Jeep Corp., 175 Mont. 69, 572 P.2d 204 (1977).

In action by buyer of new automobile against seller based on breach of warranty, trial court did not err in dismissing complaint since seller did not breach implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 where there was no evidence to establish any defective condition existing at the time of the purchase. Falcon Equip. Corp. v. Courtesy Lincoln Mercury, Inc., 536 F.2d 806 (8th Cir. Iowa 1976).

Evidence established that elevators were materially defective at time of delivery and were unfit for ordinary purposes for which they were normally used, and thus that implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 was breached, where shortly after elevators were installed many complaints were received concerning erratic operation, elevators frequently did not come to rest flush with floor, elevators would not operate properly at speed specified in contract, and, although elevators were installed with releveing devices, devices had to be disconnected, without which elevators were unsafe. Curtis v. Murphy Elevator Co., 407 F. Supp. 940 (E.D. Tenn. 1976).

In a suit for personal injuries against the seller of a cigarette lighter which caught fire in the plaintiff's hand as he attempted to use it, a judgment for the plaintiff would be reversed, where the plaintiff relied entirely on the theory of a breach of the implied warranty of merchantability, and the evidence disclosed that he had used the lighter approximately 8 months prior to the accident with no difficulty. To recover for breach of an implied warranty of fitness of goods sold, the buyer must prove that the goods were defective at the time of their delivery to him. Bruns v. Wellesley Hills Mkt., Inc., 39 Mass. App. Dec. 160 (1968).

48. —Expert and opinion testimony.

Evidence that printing press did not feed paper properly, that feeder mechanism caused paper jams in press, that it failed to "register" properly (i.e., failed to print one symbol on top of another identical symbol without visible overlap on printed surface), that machine streaked or smeared printed surface, that it was not timed properly, produced crooked printing, was slow in printing and that there were problems with loose or defective parts, was sufficient to establish breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(2)(c); fact that defects complained of were apparent immediately after delivery was strong evidence against finding that problems were caused by improper maintenance and there was no requirement that specific defects must be proven by expert testimony. Burrus v. Ittek Corp., 46 Ill. App. 3d 350, 360 N.E.2d 1168 (3d Dist. 1977).

49. —Presumptions and inferences.

In action by buyer against paint manufacturer for damages for breach of warranty in sale of red barn paint, where evidence showed (1) that plaintiff was professional barn painter, (2) that he had not followed defendant's instructions when adding linseed oil to paint purchased, (3) that paint on customers' barns painted by plaintiff had faded within one to four months after its application, (4) that plaintiff had had many complaints, and (5) that defendant had admitted that a "fade problem" existed with respect to paint purchased by plaintiff, which was of "bottom-of-the-line" quality, court held, on affirming judgment for plaintiff, (1) that although plaintiff's proof of causation was not direct, jury could still infer from fact that fading of paint was quite uniform that presence or absence of linseed oil had had no effect on paint's fading; (2) that since defendant had admitted that paint had a "fade problem" which was to be expected with that brand of paint, jury could therefore infer that paint was not "good barn paint" and that it violated defendant's express warranty made under UCC § 2-313(1)(a); (3) that jury could also infer that paint was not of merchantable quality in violation of implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); (4) that, moreover, it was not fit for plaintiff's particular purpose in violation of implied warranty of fitness contained in UCC § 2-315; and (5) that trial court correctly instructed jury that it could consider whether plaintiff had complied with defendant's directions in determining whether plaintiff had been negligent, and whether such negligence had been a cause of his consequential damages (declining, since issue was first presented on appeal, to consider whether plaintiff's consequential damages should have reduced by 15 per cent to reflect proportion of fault that jury attributed to plaintiff's negligence, and stating that Minnesota courts had not determined whether comparative-fault principle should be applied in breach-of-warranty actions, although its application seemed equitable and appropriate under UCC § 2-715(2)(b)). Chatfield v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 266 N.W.2d 171 (Minn. 1978).

Seller of raw pork did not breach implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 with respect to buyer who contracted trichinosis after eating pork; ordinary and intended purpose for raw pork is consumption after proper cooking by consumer and, since proper cooking would have killed all trichinae, fact that buyer contracted trichinosis showed by necessary implication that pork was not properly cooked and, thus, buyer failed to show pork was not fit for its ordinary and intended purpose. Hollinger v. Shoppers Paradise of New Jersey, Inc., 134 N.J. Super. 328, 340 A.2d 687 (1975), aff'd, 142 N.J. Super. 356, 361 A.2d 578 (1976).

Where used car as to which no express warranties were made was totally destroyed by fire during normal operation 3 hours following purchase, it could be reasonably inferred that dealer breached implied warranties of merchantability and fitness, notwithstanding purchaser's failure to allege and prove defect. Rose v. Epley Motor Sales, 288 N.C. 53, 215 S.E.2d 573 (1975).

In action by egg producer against feed manufacturer for breach of warranties based on claim that feed supplied contained improper nutritional balance, resulting in obesity and "fatty liver syndrome" in producer's laying hens, thereby reducing egg production and requiring producer to purchase eggs in open market in order to supply its various supermarket customers, evidence was sufficient to permit jury to draw inference that manufacturer's feed caused excess obesity, and hence low egg production, in all of producer's flocks where there was competent evidence that flocks fed with manufacturer's feed were obese and suffered from fatty liver syndrome and low egg production, whereas control flock, which was fed on another manufacturer's feed, were normal. Vermont Food Indus., Inc. v. Ralston

Purina Co., 514 F.2d 456 (2d Cir. Vt. 1975).

Evidence that new car, driven only 17 miles, plunged out of control due to defective accelerator, was sufficient to submit case to jury on theory of breach of implied warranty. Williams v. Steuart Motor Co., 494 F.2d 1074, 161 U.S. App. D.C. 155 (1974).

50. —Relation back.

In action for damages for breach of implied warranties of fitness and merchantability arising out of sale of diseased cattle, evidence was sufficient to support conclusion that animals were diseased prior to risk of loss passing to buyer, notwithstanding buyer's expert witness, a veterinarian, could not scientifically identify seller's ranch as source of infection, where inference could be drawn from his testimony that infection had to occur prior to shipment of calves from seller's ranch. Martineau v. Walker, 97 Idaho 246, 542 P.2d 1165 (1975).

Where bulbs were warranted of flowering capacity at time of shipment, evidence was admissible to show that the failure to flower resulted from a condition which existed at the time of shipment because the bulbs had been grown beyond their capacity before shipment. Q. Vandenberg & Sons v. Siter, 204 Pa. Super. 392, 204 A.2d 494 (1964).

51. —Seller's efforts at repair.

A seller's right to cure before the buyer may revoke acceptance is not unlimited; there comes a time when "enough is enough" and a purchaser is entitled to seek revocation notwithstanding the seller's repeated good faith efforts. Guerdon Indus., Inc. v. Gentry, 531 So. 2d 1202 (Miss. 1988).

In action by purchaser of bulk curing tobacco barn against its manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties, barn was covered by implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, since manufacturer was merchant with respect to bulk barns, and since there was no evidence of any oral disclaimers or modifications of this implied warranty of merchantability. There was sufficient evidence to support finding that manufacturer breached both oral express warranties as to superior craftsmanship and first-rate quality and implied warranty of merchantability where there was evidence that upon delivery of bulk barn, angle iron that held steel floor was loose and sliding, corner boards were loose, causing cracks, doors would not close, roof was buckled, tobacco racks did not fit, and sides of barn buckled inward when barn was filled with tobacco, notwithstanding evidence that manufacturer sent its servicemen who remedied defects to satisfaction of purchaser, with exception of doors and caving in of sides. Bell v. Harrington Mfg. Co., 265 S.C. 468, 219 S.E.2d 906 (1975).

There is statutory implied warranty of merchantability unless excluded or modified by agreement of parties; evidence that tractor-seller exerted commendable efforts and incurred considerable expense in his efforts to correct defects cannot relieve seller of unconditional obligation imposed by statute, no matter how commendable his efforts. Ford Motor Co. v. Taylor, 60 Tenn. App. 271, 446 S.W.2d 521 (1969).

52. Instructions to jury.

In wrongful death action involving warranty count for breach of implied warranty of merchantability attaching under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) to sale of motor home, which had burst into flames after overturning on highway, instruction which informed jury that if motor home had been used in extraordinary or unusual manner, there would be no warranty liability for any injury caused by such use was erroneous where no evidence had been introduced to show that motor home had been misused (also holding that trial court correctly refused to instruct jury that evidence of defendant manufacturer's conformity with industry manufacturing practices was immaterial to their decision on warranty count). Back v. Wickes Corp., 375 Mass. 633, 378 N.E.2d 964 (1978).

In an action by the buyer against the seller of day-old chicks for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness, an instruction that if the jury concludes that chickens had leukosis when delivered to the plaintiff jury should find for the plaintiff and proceed to the question of damages is not erroneous on the ground that it constitutes a charge of absolute liability. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

53. Defenses.

In action under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) for breach of implied warranty of merchantability of rebuilt compressor in air-conditioning system, which buyer alleged was not fit for ordinary purpose for which such goods are used, seller's affidavit stating that malfunction in compressor, which was under warranty, was not result of any inherent defect in compressor itself but was caused by malfunction in another part of the such air-conditioning system, could constitute complete defense to buyer's allegations of breach of defects of joints, with regard to seller's failure to anneal joints, liner design of joints, and thickness of bellows walls of joint, were not shown to have caused failure of joints after their installation in buyer's utility system. Wisconsin Elec. Power Co. v. Zallea Bros., 443 F. Supp. 946 (E.D. Wis. 1978), aff'd, 606 F.2d 697 (7th Cir. Wis. 1979).

In wrongful death action involving claims based on breach of both express warranties and implied warranty of merchantability attaching to defendant's sale of radial tires to plaintiff and her deceased husband, court held (1) that under UCC § 1-105(1), since significant part of transaction, including sale, service, and use of the tires, had occurred in Florida, plaintiff's cause of action arose in Florida and was guaranteed by Florida Wrongful Death Act, (2) that plaintiffs' theory of recovery was governed by Florida's interpretation of Florida Uniform Commercial Code provisions governing actions for breach of express and implied warranties, and (3) that under Florida law, contributory negligence, assumption of the risk, and misuse were available defenses to action for breach of warranty. Westerman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 577 F.2d 873 (5th Cir. Fla. 1978).

In action by buyer of motor home against dealer-seller for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1), (1) dealer was liable for such breach because it had not disclaimed warranty under UCC § 2-316(2), and (2) dealer could not avoid its liability by reliance on manufacturer's disclaimer of warranties, which was contained in the sales contract. Collella v. Beranger Volkswagen, Inc., 118 N.H. 365, 386 A.2d 1283 (1978).

In breach of implied warranty action based on UCC §§ 2-314 et seq., defenses of lack of notice, lack of privity, and disclaimer of warranty are available, but in action based on strict liability in tort, such defenses are not available (expressly refraining from deciding whether adoption of Uniform Commercial Code limited court's authority to impose broader concept of liability for injuries caused by defectively manufactured products). Pearson v. Franklin Lab., Inc., 254 N.W.2d 133 (S.D. 1977).

Manufacturer of blow-molded plastic products was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(9) with respect to plastic wiglet cases, notwithstanding manufacturer produced variety of plastic goods, and wiglet cases produced by manufacturer were subject to implied warranty of merchantability. However, since allegedly defective handle housing walls were result of specifications supplied by distributor that ordered cases and since distributor, who was informed buyer who designed product in issue and held mechanical and design patents covering similar cases, examined 15 pre-production cases, inspecting handles and handle housing by lifting cases and shaking them, any implied warranty of merchantability with respect to handle housings was precluded. Blockhead, Inc. v. Plastic Forming Co., 402 F. Supp. 1017 (D. Conn. 1975).

Test for plaintiff's alleged misuse of galvanized kettle alleged to bar recovery under UCC § 2-314 warranty of merchantability was whether use to which kettle was put was "in accord with practices employed by an appreciable number of galvanizers" and not whether plaintiff took "commonly used precautions". Brickman-Joy Corp. v. National Annealing Box Co., 459 F.2d 133 (2d Cir. Conn. 1972).

It is no defense to an action brought for breach of warranty under subd (1) of this section to say that the seller could not expect that a nine-year-old child would handle and open a bottle of beer which exploded, causing injuries. Harris v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 23 Mass. App. Dec. 169 (1962).

54. —Limitations and laches.

No implied warranties under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 applied to sale of used caterpillar tractor, where (1) buyer had previously owned and used the same tractor; (2) buyer knew much more about tractor's quality and condition than did seller who had been persuaded by buyer to purchase tractor from buyer; (3) buyer subsequently purchased tractor from seller after seller repaired it; and (4) buyer in choosing tractor did not rely on seller's skill or judgment. Trax, Inc. v. Tidmore, 331 So. 2d 275 (Ala. 1976).

In absence of express warranty explicitly guaranteeing future performance or quality of brick which was used in construction of home but which deteriorated, homeowner's cause of action for breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-314 against manufacturer of brick accrued and limitations statute began to run under UCC § 2-725 from time brick was delivered; however, limitations statute was tolled by manufacturer's absence from state notwithstanding that it could have been served under long arm statute. Beckmire v. Ristokrat Clay Prods. Co., 36 Ill. App. 3d 411, 343 N.E.2d 530 (2d Dist. 1976).

55. —Contributory negligence.

Contributory negligence of purchaser may be defense to claim of breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness, but was not proven where gas purchaser had attempted to reignite pilot light after having been informed of trouble by gas company-seller. Murphy v. Petrolane-Wyoming Gas Serv., 468 P.2d 969 (Wyo. 1970).

Contributory negligence is defense to action for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314. Stephan v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 110 N.H. 248, 266 A.2d 855 (1970).

56. —Failure to follow instructions.

Where a buyer took possession of and later used a container of adhesive which displayed a valid warranty disclaimer on its label followed by the capitalized words "IF THE PURCHASER DOES NOT AC-CEPT THE GOODS ON THESE TERMS, THEY ARE TO BE RETURNED AT ONCE, UNOPENED", the buyer may not complain that the seller of the adhesive breached express or implied warranties since the buyer's unreasonable failure to examine the adhesive after it was delivered to him and before its use, not only to determine whether it was fit for the use intended, but also to reject and return it if the buyer did not intend to be bound by the disclaimer, constituted the proximate cause of his injuries. Basic Adhesives, Inc. v. Robert Matzkin Co., 101 Misc. 2d 283 (1979), aff'd as modified.

In action by buyer of trailer hitch against seller for breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-314 when trailer hitch broke while plaintiff was towing his trailer, motion for directed verdict should have been granted to defendant seller where plaintiff admitted he did not read instructions furnished with trailer hitch and that he knew tongue weight should be between 350 and 525 pounds, but stated that he picked up tongue and placed it on ball, and whether breaking of hitch was caused by defect in part, or by improper load distribution or connection was pure speculation and should not have been submitted to jury. Burbage v. Atlantic Mobilehome Suppliers Corp., 21 N.C. App. 615, 205 S.E.2d 622 (1974).

In action by husband and wife against manufacturer of household cleaner to recover damages for injuries sustained by wife, allegedly resulting from use of cleaner to remove wax from floor, evidence that wife did not use dilutions recommended on label but instead used concentrations greatly exceeding those given in directions, manufacturer was not liable for breach of express or implied warranties, if any, where article was not used in normal manner or, as here, according to directions on label. Evershine Prods., Inc. v. Schmitt, 130 Ga. App. 34, 202 S.E.2d 228 (1973).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

The Mississippi Department of Information Technology Services deals in computer hardware, software, and computer services and has knowledge or skill peculiar to such transactions and so is clearly a "merchant" within the meaning of the statute. Litchliter, May 29, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0288.

Merchants can limit or disclaim implied warranties in offering computer hardware and computer software to the Mississippi Department of Information Technology Services (ITS) or other state agencies through ITS; however, ITS can make it a condition of any bid process or request for proposals or other offer to purchase that the computer hardware and software solicited carry the implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose or, indeed, any other standard it deems necessary and advisable. Litchliter, May 29, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0288.

§ 75-2-315. Implied warranty; fitness for particular purpose.

Except as otherwise provided in this section, where the seller at the time of contracting has reason to know any particular purpose for which the goods are required and that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods, there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be fit for such purpose. Provided, however, with respect to the sale of cattle, hogs and sheep, there shall be no implied warranty that the cattle, hogs and sheep are free from sickness or disease at the time the same is consummated, conditioned upon reasonable showing by the seller or his agent that all state and federal regulations pertaining to animal health were complied with.

Nothing in this section shall prohibit the express disclaimer or express modification of any implied warranties of fitness for a particular purpose or any express limitation of remedies for breach of such warranties concerning computer hardware, computer software, and services performed on computer hardware and computer software, which are sold between merchants.

A. In General.

1. Generally.

An implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose with regard to certain engine parts sold by the defendant to the plaintiff and installed in a truck engine applied only to those parts and not to the entire engine into which the parts were installed. Easley v. Day Motors, Inc., 796 So. 2d 236 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Three warranties recognized by Mississippi law applicable to a chicken feeder system purchased by defendants from plaintiff on an open account are express warranties, implied warranty of merchantability, and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose. McLaurin v. Smith's Poultry & Farm Supply, Inc., 499 So. 2d 1361 (Miss. 1986).

Language in a copier-equipment lease disclaiming implied warranties of fitness for purpose and merchantability is rendered inoperative by Mississippi Code § 11-7-18. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Mississippi Code § 75-2-315 by analogy suggests, with respect to a 2 party copier-equipment lease, that the lessor warranted that the copier was fit for the specific purposes communicated to it by the lessee. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Disclaimer of implied warranty of merchantability in sale of used car was ineffective under UCC § 2-316(2) where (1) although disclaimer was conspicuously stamped on car-purchase order, buyer's signature was underneath, instead of on, line provided in disclaimer for such signature (thus tending to support buyer's claim that disclaimer had been stamped on purchase order after buyer signed order), and (2) that part of disclaimer which stated that car was sold "as is" was stamped over other printed material on order form so as to be almost impossible to read. Natale v. Martin Volkswagen, Inc., 92 Misc. 2d 1046 (1978).

The purpose of the implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, which is provided by UCC § 2-315, is to protect the buyer from bearing the burden of loss when the goods, although not violating an express warranty, do not meet the buyer's particular purpose. Controltek, Inc. v. Kwikie Enters., Inc., 284 Or. 123, 585 P.2d 670 (1978).

No warranty of fitness for a particular purpose arises under UCC § 2-315 when goods are manufactured in accordance with specifications provided by the buyer. In such case, the buyer does not rely on the seller's skill or judgment (holding that since buyer of electronic control units for operating automatic steps on motor homes had no expertise in electronics and had not given manufacturer any specifications for manufacturing such units, buyer was justified in relying on manufacturer's skill and judgment, and also holding that buyer's inspection and acceptance of units without making any complaint to manufacturer did not constitute waiver under UCC § 2-316(3)(b) of buyer's claim for breach of implied warranty of fitness of units for particular purpose, since design of units was such as to prevent buyer's discovery of any defects therein). Controltek, Inc. v. Kwikie Enters., Inc., 284 Or. 123, 585 P.2d 670 (1978).

Implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose arise in every contract of sale under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315, unless such warranties are properly excluded under UCC § 2-316. Lease Fin., Inc. v. Burger, 40 Colo. App. 107, 575 P.2d 857 (1977).

Every sale comprehends within it the warranty of fitness for the purpose intended, unless all warranties have been expressly excluded; nevertheless, the parties may supplement the warranty of fitness and call for detailed and objective standards of compliance. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

The entire purpose behind the implied warranty sections of the UCC is to hold the seller responsible when inferior goods are passed along to the unsuspecting buyer, and the evidence required is not that the defects could or should have been uncovered by the seller but only that the goods upon delivery were not of a mer-chantable quality or fit for their particular purpose; and if the requisite proofs are established the only exculpatory relief afforded is a showing that the implied warranties were modified or excluded by specific language under § 2-316. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

Lack of skill or foresight on the part of the seller in discovering the product's flaw was never meant to bar recovery under this section. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

2. Comparison with other laws.

The fact that a warranty of fitness for a particular purpose does or does not exist has no bearing on any other warranty or theory of product liability. Conversely, the fact that there may be some other basis for liability of the defendant does not preclude the existence of a warranty for a particular purpose. Thus, the fact that there is a warranty of conformity to sample (an express warranty) does not preclude the existence of a warranty for a particular purpose under UCC § 2-315. Singer Co. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 579 F.2d 433 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

In New Hampshire, statutory implied warranties provided by Uniform Commercial Code are deemed to afford complete remedy, and no common-law cause of action in contract based on implied warranty is recognized. Brescia v. Great Rd. Realty Trust, 117 N.H. 154, 373 A.2d 1310 (1977).

The UCC does not change the already established law of Pennsylvania as to the buyer's right to rescind and recover the purchase price where there has been a breach of an implied warranty of merchantability or fitness. Sarnecki v. Al Johns Pontiac, 56 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 293 (Pa. 1966).

A former section of the Connecticut Sales Act extended the warranty of fitness of food or drink "to the purchaser and to all persons for whom such food or drink is intended" whereas § 2-315 extends an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, if the seller has reason to know of that purpose, and § 2-318 extends an express or implied warranty to any person in the family or household of the buyer, or who is a guest in his home. Thus, it would seem that the Uniform Commercial Code represents an expansion of the old law to include any article, and a contraction from "all persons for whom...[it] is intended." Simpson v. Powered Prods. of Mich., Inc., 24 Conn. Supp. 409, 192 A.2d 555 (1963).

The concept of warranty of fitness for a particular purpose is the same under the Code as under the former Uniform Sales Act. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

3. Disclaimer or exclusion.

Provision of contract for extermination of pests which limited homeowner's remedy for breach of express warranty to reinspection and refumigation in event of reinfestation, was enforceable under Mississippi law. Facts did not fall within protections afforded by §§ 11-7-18 or 75-2-315.1, and litigation not involve claim for breach of implied warranties. Moreover, even if defendant had attempted to limit implied warranties, plaintiff did not seek remedies based thereon. In addition, contract was one primarily for service, whereas prohibition on limitation of express warranties applies only to manufacturer of consumer goods, thus there was nothing in Mississippi statutes forbidding limitation of remedies for breach of express warranty provided in service contract. Smith v. Orkin Exterminating Co., 791 F. Supp. 1137 (S.D. Miss. 1990), aff'd, 943 F.2d 1314 (5th Cir. 1991).

Warranties of merchantability and fitness for use are implied by sections 2-314 and 2-315 of the Uniform Commercial Code unless excluded or modified pursuant to section 2-316 of the Uniform Commercial Code; where the exact exclusionary words of subdivision (2) of section 2-316 of the Uniform Commercial Code are not used, the exclusion may still be accomplished by language which clearly indicates that no implied warranty is made (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316, subd [3], par [a]), by a course of dealing or course of performance or usage of trade (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-316, subd [3], par [c]), or where the buyer has refused to examine the goods under circumstances where the defect complained of would have been revealed through such inspection. Basic Adhesives, Inc. v. Robert Matzkin Co., 101 Misc. 2d 283 (1979), aff'd as modified.

In action by lessor of ice-vending machine against lessee for overdue lease payments, in which lessee cross-complained against machine's seller alleging breach of seller's implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, where evidence showed (1) that seller had sold machine to lessor in order to facilitate leasing it to lessee, (2) that both seller and lessor had advised lessee not to accept machine until he was satisfied with its performance, and (3) that both machine's acceptance notice and lease itself expressly declared that lessee understood that lessor made no warranties, express or implied, concerning machine, court held (1) that since lease agreement between lessor and lessee was merely a financing tool whereby lessee acquired use of machine after seller sold it to lessor, lessor thus was lessee's agent in purchasing machine from seller, (2) that as a result, seller's implied warranty of fitness of machine for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 extended to lessee, (3) that seller breached such warranty when machine proved to be only 80 percent effective when used, (4) that lessee, by signing acceptance notice wherein he acknowledged that machine was operative and had no defects, accepted it under UCC § 2-606(1) in an "as is" condition and thus released seller from its implied warranty, and (5) that lessee's use of machine for 22 months with full knowledge of its limitations was unreasonable and prevented him from revoking his acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2). World Wide Lease, Inc. v. Grobschmit, 21 Wash. App. 537, 586 P.2d 889 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1023 (1979).

In action by plaintiff to recover for breach of agreement termed a "lease," under which defendant agreed to lease business machines from plaintiff for 60-month term, with title to pass to defendant at end of term, implied warranties of merchantability and fitness under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 were held applicable to transaction whether it was deemed lease or bailment agreement; however, since both front and back page of lease agreement contained statement in bold capitalized lettering, "LESSOR MAKES

NO EXPRESS OR IMPLIED WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS WITH RESPECT TO SUCH LEASED PROPERTY AND HEREBY DISCLAIMS THE SAME," which appeared not more than two inches above signature of officer who signed lease on behalf of defendant, disclaimer was sufficiently conspicuous, as defined in UCC § 1-201(10), and was properly worded so as to effectively exclude such warranties under UCC § 2-316. Quality Acceptance Corp. v. Million & Albers, Inc., 367 F. Supp. 771 (D. Wyo. 1973).

Exclusion of implied warranty under instant section that goods be fit for a particular purpose must be made in accordance with § 2-316(2). Hunt v. Perkins Mach. Co., 352 Mass. 535, 226 N.E.2d 228 (1967).

A new car warranty appearing on page 3 of the "owner's booklet" which limited seller's liability to replacement of defective parts, and was expressly stated to be in lieu of all other warranties, was not so conspicuous as to exclude an implied warranty of merchantability or fitness, even though it was printed in type which contrasted slightly with that used in the remainder of the booklet. Sarnecki v. Al Johns Pontiac, 56 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 293 (Pa. 1966).

B. Scope of Warranty.

4. In general.

Bridge design plans were not "goods" as defined in UCC § 2-105(1), and, thus, implied warranty provisions of Uniform Commercial Code §§ 2-314 and 2-315, did not apply to cause of action based on defect in plans. Department of Transp. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 28 Pa. Commw. 214, 368 A.2d 888 (1977).

Uniform Commercial Code provides two implied warranties: (1) implied warranty of general merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314, which is applicable if seller is merchant with respect to goods of that kind, and (2) implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose contained in UCC § 2-315, which is applicable if seller has reason to know any particular purpose for which goods are required and buyer is relying on seller's skill or judgment to select or to furnish suitable goods. These warranties are imposed by law on basis of public policy and arise by operation of law because of relationship between parties, nature of transaction, and surrounding circumstances. Brescia v. Great Rd. Realty Trust, 117 N.H. 154, 373 A.2d 1310 (1977).

Where fender of new car was damaged in transit to dealer, dealer replaced damaged fender with new fender and had it repainted, and car was sold to buyer as new car, dealer had no duty under Uniform Commercial Code to disclose to buyer prior damage to fender and its replacement with new fender; mention of one thing in statute implies exclusion of others not expressed and, since UCC mandated only 2 implied warranties (merchantability, § 2-314, and fitness for particular purpose, § 2-315), there was no implied warranty that part of new motor vehicle had not been replaced with another new part. Cocco v. Degnan Chevrolet, Inc., 64 Pa. D. & C.2d 6 (1973).

Seller's warranty of fitness imposes obligation to indemnify warrantee for losses, including compensation awards and judgments, resulting from breach of warranty. Gambino v. United Fruit Co., 48 F.R.D. 28 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

The implied warranties of merchantability and of fitness for a particular purpose are designed to protect the buyer of goods from bearing the burden of loss where merchandise, though not violating a promise expressly guaranteed, does not conform to the normal commercial standards or meeting the buyer's particular purpose, a condition upon which he had the right to rely. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

Where an automobile parts supplier with 20 years' experience used a micrometer, trade manuals, and checked the numbers on the main bearing to be replaced in ordering parts for a truck engine, and evidence later disclosed that the jet lubrication system had been replaced at some prior time when the engine was rebuilt by a full pressure system requiring main bearings with grooved walls, there was no breach of an implied warranty of fitness in supplying the main bearings without grooved walls. Mennella v. Schork, 49 Misc. 2d 449 (1966).

Assuming that an implied warranty applies to the trustworthiness of a person employed to a person supplying the person for hire, such a warranty would be negated by a time slip containing a notation that agency furnishing the employee could not be responsible for the handling of cash or negotiable securities by employee without agency's prior consent. Yoffee v. Temporary Help, Inc., 60 Lanc. L. Rev. 137 (Pa. 1966).

Under the Connecticut Act there may be an implied warranty that the goods sold shall be reasonably fit for a particular purpose, or that the goods shall be of merchantable quality, and the existence, nature and extent of either implied warranty depends on the circumstances of the individual case. Corneliuson v. Arthur Drug Stores, Inc., 153 Conn. 134, 214 A.2d 676 (1965).

A warranty that flowering bulbs were sound and healthy and had flowering capacity at time of shipment is not inconsistent with an implied warranty of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose. Q. Vandenberg & Sons v. Siter, 204 Pa. Super. 392, 204 A.2d 494 (1964).

No warranty of fitness for a particular purpose arises where the buyer receives the exact goods which he ordered. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

5. Knowledge or discovery of defect.

Knowledge of defect on part of seller is not essential to recovery by buyer for breach of implied warranties under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. Brendsel v. Wright, 301 Minn. 175, 221 N.W.2d 695 (1974).

Lack of skill or foresight on the part of the seller in discovering the product's flaw was never meant to bar recovery under this section. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

6. What constitutes particular purpose.

Distributor that sold rifle which exploded and injured plaintiff was a seller and therefore subject to suit under strict liability, however distributor had no duty to inspect rifle for latent defects and therefore could not be held liable on negligence theory; distributor impliedly warranted rifle as merchantable by selling it in role of merchant, however, there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular use because rifle was purchased for ordinary use; manufacturer of rifle was not obliged to defend distributor in such action. Curry v. Sile Distribs., 727 F. Supp. 1052 (N.D. Miss. 1990).

Although primary purpose of Code provision relating to implied warranty of fitness was to protect buyer who purchases goods with intention of using them in "particular" manner, meaning manner in which they would not normally be expected to be used, that section was not limited exclusively to purchases of such nature, but protected also buyer when his particular purpose was general or ordinary purpose. Tennessee Carolina Transp., Inc. v. Strick Corp., 283 N.C. 423, 196 S.E.2d 711, 83 A.L.R.3d 636 (1973).

7. Extent of defect constituting breach.

Under Mississippi law, as predicted by district court, plaintiff cannot pursue remedy under theory of negligence or strict liability against product manufacturer in which damages that are solely economic are sought. Lee v. GMC, 950 F. Supp. 170 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

Where the purchaser bought milk from a supermarket, delivered in a glass jug which served as a container for the milk but was not a part of the sale, in the absence of any proof of a defect either in the jug or its contents, the supermarket owner could not be held liable for injuries sustained by the purchaser of the milk as a consequence of the explosion of the jug. McKone v. Ralph's Wonder Mkt., Inc., 27 Mass. App. Dec. 159 (1963).

8. —Effect of efforts at repair or mitigation.

In action by buyer of new Toyota pickup truck against seller for breach of implied warranty, under UCC § 2-314(2)(c), of merchantability and fitness of truck for ordinary purposes for which such a truck is used and breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-315 of truck's fitness for particular purpose (operation at sustained freeway speeds), (1) directed verdict for seller was error with respect to engine's defective performance during first six months of operation, since vehicle's low mileage at such time and testimony that design defect generally existed in that particular engine model removed inference of causation between design defect and defective performance of plaintiff's engine from realm of speculation; (2) directed verdict for seller was proper with respect to subsequent engine repairs that followed repairs made in first six months of engine's operation, since making of earlier repairs and vehicle's advanced mileage rendered speculative plaintiff's claim that design defect, without proof of its existence in plaintiff's engine or elimination of other causes of engine's defective performance, caused engine's difficulties; and (3) directed verdict for seller was error with respect to defects in vehicle's paint, shift lever, and oil system, since plaintiff sustained burden of proof as to causation on these matters. Nelson v. Wilkins Dodge, Inc., 256 N.W.2d 472 (Minn. 1977).

Although the seller is unable to discover the defect in goods sold or cure the damage if it could be ascertained, he cannot avoid the consequences imposed by this section upon the seller of commercially inferior goods. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

9. Persons protected.

The legislature has provided for a specific implied warranty, extending from the manufacturer to third party beneficiaries including any natural person who is in the family or household of the buyer or who is a guest in the buyer's home if it is reasonable to expect that such person may use or be affected by the goods and who is injured by breach of warranty. Finocchiaro v. Ward Baking Co., 104 R.I. 5, 241 A.2d 619 (1968).

10. —Employees; workmen.

Employee of dry-cleaning plant, who was injured when his clothing caught fire after being saturated with cleaning solvent and who, with respect to use of such solvent, was covered by warranties of fitness for purpose and merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314, § 2-315, and § 2-318, could not recover from manufacturers and distributors of solvent on theory of strict liability in tort for defective manufacture and failure to warn plaintiff of its flammability since legislature, by adopting Uniform Commercial Code, preempted field of tort liability in direct sale relationships, so as to prevent court from applying strict liability doctrine. Wilhelm v. Globe Solvent Co., 373 A.2d 218 (Del. Super. 1977) but see Wilhelm v. Globe Solvent Co., 411 A.2d 611 (Del. 1979).

Workmen who suffered injuries when flash fire occurred in oil and gas well which was in process of being abandoned by owner could not invoke UCC provision relating to implied warranty to fitness to recover from defendant which had delivered and pumped some cement down casting, where cement was intended only to stabilize casing, and not to seal off gas, and workmen were not within objects of sale. Garner v. Halliburton Co., 474 F.2d 290 (10th Cir. Okla. 1973).

Defendant's machine exploded spewing oil flames on workman working in close proximity; held, workman was entitled to benefit of any warranty of fitness on machine and entitled to recover for any breach thereof even though there was no contractual privity. Murray v. Bullard Co., 110 N.H. 220, 265 A.2d 309 (1970).

Where employee's complaint alleged that safety work shoes "supplied" to him by his employer caused dermatitis entitling him to recover damages from the shoe manufacturer for breach of warranty, it could not be said in view of the many connotations of the word "supplied" that the employee was, as a matter of fact, excluded from the class of persons to whom the warranties extended under this section applied. Nederostek v. Endicott-Johnson Shoe Co., 415 Pa. 136, 202 A.2d 72 (1964).

11. Services distinguished.

UCC § 2-314(1), dealing with implied warranty of merchantability, and § 2-315, dealing with implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, were inapplicable to action against truck-maintenance company for its failure to maintain properly brakes on truck that struck plaintiff's decedent, since such sections relate to a seller of goods. Lee v. C & P Serv. Corp., 363 So. 2d 586 (Fla. App. 1978), cert. denied, 372 So. 2d 469 (Fla. 1979).

In suit by buyer of modular home against seller for breach of warranty, wherein seller filed third-party complaint against testing laboratory, which had allowed its seal of "approval for use and occupancy" to be placed on home, for breach of implied warranties allegedly arising from seal's placement, implied warranties created by UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 were inapplicable because (1) UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 apply only to transactions in goods, and (2) in present case, any implied warranty of testing laboratory would concern quality of its inspection services, rather than quality of goods inspected. Jones v. Clark, 36 N.C. App. 327, 244 S.E.2d 183 (1978).

Implied warranties do not attach to the performance of a service. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

12. —Medical services.

Where complaint showed that furnishing of allegedly unsafe drug to decedent was incidental feature of professional services rendered by defendant physicians, no sale of such drug occurred within meaning of Uniform Commercial Code that could give rise to cause of action for breach of any express or implied warranties under UCC § 2-313(1), § 2-314(1), and § 2-315. Osborn v. Kelley, 61 A.D.2d 367 (3d Dep't 1978).

Under Tennessee addition to UCC § 2-316, implied warranties of merchantability and fitness were not applicable to transfusions of blood. Sawyer v. Methodist Hosp., 522 F.2d 1102 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1975).

Even if transfer of donor blood by non-commercial supplier to hospital for service fee was sale under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315, so as to give rise to implied warranty, supplier was not liable to hospital patient who contracted serum hepatitis, since there were no methods available at time in question by which hepatitis virus could effectively be excluded from blood or presence of virus determined and, therefore, blood, to extent it may have contained hepatitis virus, was unavoidably unsafe and for that reason was not unreasonably dangerous and did not fail to be fit within terms of warranties provided for in UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. McMichael v. American Red Cross, 532 S.W.2d 7 (Ky. 1975).

13. —Construction.

Fact issue whether contract for construction of glass screen walls concerned a predominantly labor-intensive endeavor precluded summary judgment for glass contractor on building owner's claim for implied warranty of fitness. Schulman Inv. Co. v. Olin Corp., 477 F. Supp. 623 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

In action by warehouse tenants against general contractor which built warehouse and subcontractor which designed and installed sprinkler system therein for water damage to textiles stored in warehouse as result of bursting of defective pipe that connected building's sprinkler system to city water main, plaintiffs' theory that defendants were liable for breach of implied warranty of fitness of pipe for particular purpose, which warranty allegedly attached under UCC § 2-315 to defective pipe supplied by subcontractor, could not be sustained because transaction entered into by defendants was not primarily for sale of goods, but was predominantly service-oriented and called for workmanlike performance of construction service. Milau Assocs. v. North Ave. Dev. Corp., 42 N.Y.2d 482, 368 N.E.2d 1247 (1977).

Insofar as applicability of implied warranty provisions of Uniform Commercial Code to sale of product under hybrid sales-service contract is concerned, if service aspect of such contract is predominant and transfer of personal property is merely incidental feature of transaction, exacting warranty standards in Uniform Commercial Code for imposing liability without proof of fault will not be imported from law of sales to render liable those who perform trade or professional services, such as building services under construction contract. Those who hire experts for predominant purpose of rendering services and who rely on their special skills cannot expect infallibility. Therefore, unless the parties have contractually bound themselves to a higher standard of performance, reasonable care and competence owed generally by practitioners in the particular trade or profession define the limits of an injured party's justifiable demands (also stating that since express warranty provisions of UCC § 2-313(1)(a) apply only to contracts for sale of goods, that section would be no more applicable to contract for rendition of services than the code's implied warranty provisions). Milau Assocs. v. North Ave. Dev. Corp., 42 N.Y.2d 482, 368 N.E.2d 1247 (1977).

In action against supplier of concrete used in allegedly defective floors, defendant's third party complaint for indemnity against installing contractor, alleging that contractor warranted fitness and merchantability of materials, did not state a cause of action because the warranties created by UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 only have significance if made by a seller. ICI Am., Inc. v. Martin-Marietta Corp., 368 F. Supp. 1148 (D. Del. 1974).

In cross-petition for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 arising when silo built by plaintiff fell during windstorm, court properly submitted issue of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose to jury where record disclosed that fact issue was created as to breach of warranty. Madison Silos v. Wassom, 215 N.W.2d 494 (Iowa 1974).

14. —Installment of goods and fixtures.

Where vinyl liner of swimming pool developed wrinkle, seller agreed to reseal liner but failed to do so and hole developed which resulted in total destruction of pool, seller breached implied warranties under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 through his failure to install pool in workmanlike manner using suitable materials. Riffe v. Black, 548 S.W.2d 175 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

An oral agreement between property owners and a handyman whereby the handyman agreed to purchase a heating unit for owners and install it in the owners' building did not create between the parties a relationship of buyer and seller, so as to entitle the owners to a recovery against the handyman on the ground of a breach of implied warranty of merchantability and of fitness for the purpose. Victor v. Barzaleski, 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 698 (1959).

15. Leases and bailments distinguished; statute applicable.

UCC § 2-314, implied warranty of merchantability, and UCC § 2-315, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, would be extended to lease transaction under which equipment company leased three motor scraper units to construction company since same considerations which give rise to creation of implied warranties in sales transaction were present: lessor was merchant specializing in sale and leasing of heavy construction equipment and lessee claimed it relied on lessor's expertise; lessor placed product into stream of commerce and sought to reap economic benefits from lease of product; and, finally, lessor was in better position to control antecedent factors which affect condition of product. Furthermore, UCC § 2-316, which allows seller to disclaim implied warranties and provides specific means for such disclaimer, would be extended to lease in question by analogy. Glenn Dick Equip. Co. v. Galey Constr., Inc., 97 Idaho 216, 541 P.2d 1184 (1975).

16. —Statute inapplicable.

The provisions for implied warranties in contracts for the sale of goods set forth in §§ 75-2-314(1) and 75-2-315 are not applicable to 3-party lease transactions where the evidence clearly shows that the lessor is an independent financing lessor, not the functional equivalent of a seller or an agent thereof. David Nutt & Assocs. v. First Continental Leasing Corp., 599 So. 2d 576 (Miss. 1992).

Contract for installation and maintenance by defendant of burglar alarm system on plaintiff's premises, which provided that equipment installed should remain property of defendant, did not constitute sale of equipment so as to be basis of cause of action for breach of either express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1) or implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and UCC § 2-315 (also stating that implied warranties do not attach to performance of a service). Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

Warranty provisions of UCC §§ 2-313 and 2-315 are clearly limited to sales of goods; thus, by enacting UCC, legislature did not preempt field as to bailments and leases, and court was free, notwithstanding UCC, to apply doctrine of strict tort liability to bailment-lease situations. Martin v. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc., 353 A.2d 581 (Del. 1976).

Contract was lease arrangement and was not covered by Uniform Commercial Code provisions relating to warranties where one party agreed to lease certain hens, known as "Parent Stock," and eggs therefrom, known as "Hatching Eggs," to other party for purpose of producing offspring, where contract provided that first party retained title to "Parent Stock" and "Hatching Eggs" and other party was precluded from selling or otherwise disposing of same without express written consent of first party, and where contract additionally provided for termination by either party on written notice at least 30 days in advance. DeKalb Agresearch, Inc. v. Abbott, 391 F. Supp. 152 (N.D. Ala. 1974), aff'd, 511 F.2d 1162 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

C. Reliance on Seller's Skill and Judgment.

17. In general.

Complaint which alleged (1) that defendant had manufactured drug complained of (pitocin) and sold it to codefendant hospital, (2) that defendant had impliedly warranted that drug was of merchantable quality and fit for use in certain obstetrical deliveries, (3) that plaintiff had relied on such warranties and on defendant's skill and judgment in purchasing drug, (4) that treating physician had ordered intravenous administration of drug to plaintiff's mother while fetus was in high station, (5) that defendant had breached its warranties of merchantability and fitness of drug for particular purpose by inadequate packaging and labeling, and by failure of drug to conform to defendant's affirmations of fact, and (6) that plaintiff had been proximately injured as a result of such breaches, was sufficient to state cause of action for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 (stating that Uniform Commercial Code intended to create statutory cause of action for breach of implied warranty on behalf of consumers who are injured by product deficiencies, and that such cause of action is in addition to that existing in strict tort liability). Woodill v. Parke Davis & Co., 58 Ill. App. 3d 349, 374 N.E.2d 683 (1st Dist. 1978), aff'd and remanded, 79 Ill. 2d 26, 37 Ill. Dec. 304, 402 N.E.2d 194 (1980).

In order for a buyer to recover on an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose (see UCC § 2-315), three elements are necessary: (1) the seller must have reason to know the buyer's particular purpose; (2) the seller must have reason to know that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to furnish appropriate goods; and (3) the buyer must rely on the seller's skill or judgment. World Wide Lease, Inc. v. Grobschmit, 21 Wash. App. 537, 586 P.2d 889 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1023 (1979).

In action by seller for purchase price of coal, buyer's counterclaim based on seller's alleged breach of express warranty and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness of coal for particular purpose could not be sustained where (1) evidence did not show that seller had created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) by showing buyer samples and analyses of coal's quality, but revealed instead that such samples and analyses were shown to buyer solely for his information; (2) coal delivered by seller was fit for ordinary purpose for which it was used, was burned as fuel by buyer's customers, and thus complied with seller's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1); (3) implied warranty of fitness of coal for particular purpose did not arise under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not rely on seller's skill and judgment in furnishing coal suitable for buyer's customers; and (4) even assuming that seller had breached such express and implied warranties as buyer contended, buyer still could not recover on counterclaim because he did not give seller adequate notice of alleged breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and such breach also was not proximate cause of damages buyer allegedly sustained. Kopper Glo Fuel, Inc. v. Island Lake Coal Co., 436 F. Supp. 91 (E.D. Tenn. 1977).

Where parents purchased vault for casket of son, relying on funeral home's judgment to furnish suitable goods, and where vault was too small and parents had to return next day for another service and burial, parents were not barred from bringing action for breach of contract; implied warranty of fitness of UCC § 2-315 was neither excluded nor modified in any way by funeral home and parents would be entitled to incidental and consequential damages resulting from breach pursuant to UCC § 2-715. Caldwell v. Brown Serv. Funeral Home, 345 So. 2d 1341 (Ala. 1977).

Employee of construction company, who was injured by collapse of boom of truck crane that construction company had leased from defendant trust company, could not recover damages under UCC § 2-314 for defendant's alleged breach of implied warranty of merchantability of crane where evidence showed (1) that person who was president and sole stockholder of construction company also was sole stockholder, trustee, and beneficiary of defendant trust company, and (2) that trust company did not deal in cranes or any other type of goods, had no employees, and had been formed solely as tax-saving device. Defendant also was not liable to plaintiff under UCC § 2-315 for breach of implied warranty of fitness of crane for particular purpose, since defendant lessor possessed no skill or judgment on which lessee (construction company) had relied; for purposes of Uniform Commercial Code, lessor and lessee of crane constituted single entity in person of sole stockholder of both companies. Brescia v. Great Rd. Realty Trust, 117 N.H. 154, 373 A.2d 1310 (1977).

In absence of express provision guaranteeing results of well drilling contract there was no implied warranty on part of driller as to either quantity or quality of water to be obtained; when driller undertook to drill irrigation well, in absence of any express warranty, only implied warranty on his part as to drilling was that he would perform work in workmenlike manner, with such skill as might ordinarily be expected from those who undertake this work; however, when he undertook to equip well, and he as seller at time of contracting for sale of equipment had reason to know particular purpose for which equipment was required and that buyer was relying on his skill or judgment to select and furnish suitable equipment, there was implied warranty that equipment would be fit for such purpose. Franklin v. Northwest Drilling Co., 215 Kan. 304, 524 P.2d 1194 (1974).

Buyer's reliance on seller's skill or judgment must be shown before implied warranty of fitness of purpose can arise. Klipfel v. Neill, 30 Colo. App. 428, 494 P.2d 115 (1972).

Where a buyer, being ignorant of the fitness of the article offered by the seller, justifiably relied on the superior skill, information, and judgment of the seller and not on his own knowledge or judgment, he could properly claim an implied warranty of fitness. Catania v. Brown, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 344, 231 A.2d 668 (1967).

18. Knowledge of particular purpose.

In order for a buyer to recover on an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose (see UCC § 2-315), three elements are necessary: (1) the seller must have reason to know the buyer's particular purpose; (2) the seller must have reason to know that the buyer is relying on the seller's skill or judgment to furnish appropriate goods; and (3) the buyer must rely on the seller's skill or judgment. World Wide Lease, Inc. v. Grobschmit, 21 Wash. App. 537, 586 P.2d 889 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1023 (1979).

A warranty of fitness for a particular purpose arises under UCC § 2-315, regardless of the seller's intent, whenever the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods and the seller, at the time of contracting, has reason to know the buyer's purpose and the fact that he is relying on the seller's skill and judgment. A warranty of fitness for a particular purpose may arise, for example, when a businessman buys goods that must be specially selected, manufactured, and assembled for his business. Controltek, Inc. v. Kwikkee Enters., Inc., 284 Or. 123, 585 P.2d 670 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-315 and Official Comment 1, whether warranty of fitness for particular purpose arises in any individual case is basically a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances of the contracting. Under this section, buyer need not bring home to seller actual knowledge of either particular purpose for which goods are intended or buyer's reliance on seller's skill and judgment if circumstances are such that seller has reason to realize purpose intended or existence of buyer's reliance. However, the buyer must actually rely on the seller. El Fredo Pizza, Inc. v. Roto-Flex Oven Co., 199 Neb. 697, 261 N.W.2d 358 (1978).

In action under UCC § 2-315 for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, buyer must show (1) that seller must have had reason to know buyer's particular purpose, (2) that seller must have had reason to believe buyer was relying on seller's skill and judgment, and (3) that buyer in fact had relied on seller's skill and judgment. Christensen v. Eastern Neb. Equip. Co., 199 Neb. 741, 261 N.W.2d 367 (1978).

Where buyer of castings made known intended purpose and that choice of metal to be used was left to discretion of seller, seller had "reason to know" that buyer was relying on its judgment, and where buyer did so rely, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 existed. Valley Iron & Steel Co. v. Thorin, 278 Or. 103, 562 P.2d 1212 (1977).

In action by retailer and manufacturer of swing set against manufacturer and supplier of chain used in swing set for breach of implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315, evidence that chain supplier knew that chains would be used in swing sets, that supplier was swing set manufacturer's exclusive supplier of chains, that it sold manufacturer other types of swing equipment, and that swing set manufacturer ordered specified type of chain because of independent laboratory report furnished by chain supplier which indicated that chain was proper, was sufficient to establish that manufacturer was relying on supplier to use its skill and judgment in selecting proper chains. Gellenbeck v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 59 Mich. App. 339, 229 N.W.2d 443 (1975).

Even though seller's agent knew buyers' "particular purpose" in buying rolls of carpet was for general resale, that purpose was not "particular purpose" within meaning of UCC § 2-315, which requires seller to have reason to know of particular purpose for which goods are required in order to find implied warranty of fitness on part of seller. Bruce v. Calhoun First Nat'l Bank, 134 Ga. App. 790, 216 S.E.2d 622, 83 A.L.R.3d 663 (1975).

Where buyer of sheetrock did not inform seller of particular purpose intended for sheetrock, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose did not arise. Tracor, Inc. v. Austin Supply & Drywall Co., 484 S.W.2d 446 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), ref. n.r.e (Jan. 31, 1973).

Evidence adequately supported finding that there was breach of UCC § 2-315 warranty of fitness for particular purpose, where seller had reason to know particular purpose for which electrified flooring was required, and where seller had reason to know that buyer was relying on seller's skill and judgment in furnishing a suitable flooring which in collapsed state could be used for flooring and sides of mobile trailer. Aluminum Co. of Am. v. Electro Flo Corp., 451 F.2d 1115 (10th Cir. Utah 1971).

Warranty was created by knowledge of wine manufacturer that wine was to be used by buyer for particular purpose. Regina Grape Prods. Co. v. Supreme Wine Co., 357 Mass. 631, 260 N.E.2d 219 (1970).

A warranty of fitness for a particular purpose arises only if the seller has reason to know of the purpose. Simpson v. Powered Prods. of Mich., Inc., 24 Conn. Supp. 409, 192 A.2d 555 (1963).

19. —Building materials.

In action by homeowner against seller of bricks to recover damages for breach of warranty, (1) implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose attached to sale of bricks under UCC § 2-315, where intended purpose for which they were to be utilized was expressly made known to defendant's salesman, where plaintiff and his brick layer agent relied on judgment of defendant's salesman in selecting suitable brick for stated purposes, and where salesman had reason to know that there was such reliance, (2) warranty was not excluded by usage of trade under UCC § 2-316(3)(c), and (3) since bricks clearly were not fit for use to which they were put and since plaintiff's loss was proximate result thereof, he was clearly entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(b). Cohen v. Bratt & Doxey Supply Co., 51 A.D.2d 719 (2d Dep't 1976), appeal denied, 39 N.Y.2d 706 (1976).

In action by roofing contractor against supplier of roofing materials to recover damages sustained when contractor was required to reroof buildings due to defective roofing materials supplied by defendant, supplier gave and breached implied warranty of fitness for particular use under UCC § 2-315 where, inter alia, particular use envisioned by contractor was that supplier's materials, when used in built-up roofing system, would produce 20 year bonded roof, where supplier's agents knew of particular use contemplated by contractor, and where materials supplied by defendant were inherently insufficient to produce 20 year bonded roof. Certain-Teed Prods. Corp. v. Goslee Roofing & Sheet Metal, Inc., 26 Md. App. 452, 339 A.2d 302 (1975).

20. —Fixtures or the like.

An implied warranty of fitness for the purpose intended was made in the sale of a furnace, where the seller knew that the particular purpose for which the buyers wanted the furnace was to heat their whole house, and the buyers relied upon the seller's judgment. Holland Furnace Co. v. Jackson, 106 Pitts. Legal J. 341 (Pa. 1958).

21. —Farm supplies and fixtures.

In action against feed company for damages to plaintiff's dairy cattle resulting from use of feed additive, evidence that plaintiff relied on defendant's salesman's judgment in selecting feed additive, and that salesman knew particular purpose product was required for supported jury finding of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose. Boehm v. Fox, 473 F.2d 445 (10th Cir. Kan. 1973).

Hog feed was proper subject of implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose where buyer relied on knowledge, skill and experience of feed manufacturer. Ralston Purina Co. v. Howell, 254 So. 2d 911 (Miss. 1971).

22. —Machinery and tools.

An implied warranty of fitness for the purpose intended was made in a sale of gray iron castings to be used in manufacturing sausage stuffing machines, where the seller was fully apprised of the buyer's needs and of the purpose for which the castings were intended. John E. Smith's Sons Co. v. Lattimer Foundry & Mach. Co., 19 F.R.D. 379 (M.D. Pa. 1956), aff'd, 239 F.2d 815 (3d Cir. Pa. 1956).

23. —Motor vehicles and related equipment.

In action by buyer for breach of warranties attaching to sale of used truck, (1) when defendant dealer sold used truck, represented to have completely rebuilt engine, to plaintiff, an appropriate implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) was created; (2) since plaintiff had relied on defendant's skill and judgment to furnish truck suitable for plaintiff's purposes, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose arose by operation of law under UCC § 2-315 at time of sale and delivery of truck to plaintiff; and (3) no compelling reason existed to disturb trial court's finding that failure of truck's engine had not resulted from plaintiff's failure to keep engine properly oiled. Roupp v. Acor, 253 Pa. Super. 46, 384 A.2d 968 (1978).

In action against car dealer and manufacturer brought by buyer when engine failed to perform properly, statement by manufacturer warranting car to be free from defects in material and workmanship under normal use and service constituted express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and exclusion of, inter alia, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose was ineffective where exclusions were not at any time called to buyer's attention and were not sufficiently conspicuous under UCC § 1-201(10); while implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 may both attend sale of automobile, where neither dealer nor manufacturer knew that buyer intended to use car for occasional drag racing prior to or at time of original sale, no issue was created as to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, either in connection with original car purchase or subsequent motor replacement. Jacobson v. Benson Motors, Inc., 216 N.W.2d 396 (Iowa 1974).

There was no breach of an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose where an automobile parts supplier with 20 years' experience used a micrometer, trade journals, and the identification numbers on the old main bearing in ordering a replacement part for an engine, where it appeared that the part ordered did not work properly because at some prior time the original jet lubrication system of the engine had been replaced by a full pressure lubrication system which required a main bearing that had grooved walls. Mennella v. Schork, 49 Misc. 2d 449 (1966).

24. Course of dealing or custom of trade.

In action arising out of sale of livestock feed, implied warranty under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 of fitness for purpose of feeding hogs was inherent in transaction, since inference that seller knew purpose to which feed was being put by buyer, a hog farmer, must follow from their course of dealing for two years. Utah Coop. Ass'n v. Egbert-Haderlie Hog Farms, Inc., 550 P.2d 196 (Utah. 1976).

In action arising out of sale of bull, seller's answer, which alleged, inter alia, that by custom of trade in breeding animals there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose in sale of bull, was sufficient under UCC § 1-205(6) to put buyers on notice of defense of exclusion under UCC § 2-316 of implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315. Torstenson v. Melcher, 195 Neb. 764, 241 N.W.2d 103 (1976).

25. Representations and affirmations.

Buyer of pipes stated claims, under Mississippi law, for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, by alleging that seller represented to buyer that pipes would be sealed and tested to withstand 15 pounds of pressure per square inch and that pipes failed to withstand such pressure. IHP Indus., Inc. v. PermAlert, Esp., 947 F. Supp. 257 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

In action by water corporation's contractor (buyer) against seller of filter tanks, failure of distributor heads of filter tanks did not constitute breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, breach of warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, or breach of any express warranty under UCC § 2-313, where distributor heads failed under excessive water pressure in water system due to defect in water corporation's plans and specifications, contractor bought tanks in reliance upon contract specifications without reliance upon any warranty, affirmation or representation by seller as to merchantability or fitness for intended use, and seller's statement to buyer that tanks "should" be able to remove iron and manganese from water did not amount to affirmation of fact affecting bargain between contractor and seller. Hobson Constr. Co. v. Hajoca Corp., 28 N.C. App. 684, 222 S.E.2d 709 (1976).

In action by dairy farmer to recover damages from feed manufacturer for loss of milk production and injury to dairy cows allegedly caused by use of feed supplement, evidence was sufficient to establish breach of both express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where there was express representation that use of feed supplement would increase milk production and where there was decrease in milk production resulting from wrong instructions about proper way to use feed supplement. However, farmer was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2): (1) Considering that there were many factors which could affect production of milk, to permit use of difference between total milk production figures for whole of year during which feed supplement was used for approximately 2 months, and total production figures for whole of preceding year, as measure of damages, would constitute rankest form of speculation and conjecture; (2) with respect to damages for decrease in market value of cows affected by feed, it could not reasonably be determined how much of decline in valuation of cattle between date of injury and day on which they were sold was attributable to injury and how much to changes, if any, in market value between those dates. Shotkoski v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 195 Neb. 22, 237 N.W.2d 92 (1975).

Distributor of weed killer was liable in damages to truck gardener purchaser whose crop of squash was substantially destroyed when he applied it under adverse weather conditions on the representation of distributor's agent that the chemical was suitable for immediate use. However the manufacturer was not liable, though the labels on its containers contained no warnings whatsoever as to use under adverse conditions. Wilson v. E-Z Flo Chem. Co., 281 N.C. 506, 189 S.E.2d 221 (1972).

A petition alleging that Zoysia lawn grass was warranted by the seller to survive winter weather, and that the grass subsequently died of the cold, states a cause of action, for the decisive test, in determining whether language used is a mere expression of opinion or a warranty, is whether it purports to state a fact upon which it may fairly be presumed the seller expects the buyer to rely, and upon which the buyer would ordinarily rely, and no particular form of words is necessary to constitute a warranty. Bell v. Menzies, 110 Ga. App. 436, 138 S.E.2d 731 (1964).

26. —Sample or demonstration.

Buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-714(2), and to incidental damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(1), for seller's breach of express and implied warranties of fitness for particular purpose, and also express warranty by sample attaching to wrap coats purchased by buyer, where (1) samples of such coats were made part of basis of bargain and created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) that all goods would conform to such samples, (2) seller knew that buyer was relying on seller to furnish goods that would be fit for buyer's particular purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-315, and (3) seller delivered over 3,700 nonconforming coats that were not fit for buyer's resale purposes. Alafoss v. Premium Corp. of Am., Inc., 448 F. Supp. 95 (D. Minn. 1978), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 599 F.2d 232 (8th Cir. Minn. 1979).

Evidence of demonstrations and assurances that soil compaction substance would meet customer's needs supported finding that manufacturer of substance and its area dealer made express and implied warranties which were breached by manufacturer and dealer when application of substance to customer's premises proved ineffective. Larutan Corp. v. Magnolia Homes Mfg. Co., 190 Neb. 425, 209 N.W.2d 177 (1973).

Where the buyer, at the time of or just prior to contracting for the purchase of a carload of pipe, delivered to the seller a sample of the pipe he desired, and where the seller had reason to know that the pipe was being used in the manufacture of harrow attachments, and where the buyer was relying on the seller to furnish a pipe suitable for this purpose, seller breached warranty of fitness by furnishing thinner pipe than sample, where thinness rendered pipe unable to withstand external stress. Northern Plumbing Supply, Inc. v. Gates, 196 N.W.2d 70 (N.D. 1972).

Where the seller, prior to the sale of a number of storm windows, submitted a sample to the buyer, there was not only an express warranty that the windows would conform to the sample but an implied warranty that they were fit for the purpose intended. Loomis Bros. Corp. v. Queen, 17 Pa. D. & C.2d 482, 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 107 (1958) (holding that where there was some doubt about the sufficiency of the windows to keep out the wind and rain, it was for the jury to determine whether they were fit for the purpose intended).

27. Advice and recommendation.

A herbicide retailer, who answered farmers' question as to use of particular herbicide to meet particular needs, was held liable for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose when crop losses were sustained by farmers due to suggested application of herbicide. Dobias v. Western Farmers Ass'n, 6 Wash. App. 194, 491 P.2d 1346 (1971).

Where paint company representatives examined plans and specifications of a construction contract and recommended a particular paint for use by the painting subcontractor, and as the work progressed the paint company became acquainted with the problems encountered and unsatisfactory nature of the paint's performance while continuing to supply paint along with suggestions as to how it might be made to give a satisfactory result; a jury question was presented as to whether the paint company had breached its contract for the sale of paint and a directed verdict for the paint company was reversed and the cause remanded. Parks v. Glidden Co., 433 S.W.2d 445 (Tex. Civ. App. 1968), ref. n.r.e. (Jan. 22, 1969).

Upon evidence that a marine engine sold by defendant distributor to plaintiff boat owner gave off excessive quantities or heavy black smoke when running, and that defendant was unable to cure the defect after persistent efforts, and where it could have been found that the defendant knew of plaintiff's purpose in buying the engine and that plaintiff relied on defendant to guide him in its selection, a finding was warranted that there were breaches both of the warranty of merchantability and of the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose under §§ 2-314 and 2-315. Hunt v. Perkins Mach. Co., 352 Mass. 535, 226 N.E.2d 228 (1967).

An implied warranty of fitness existed as a matter of law where the seller knew purposes for which a helicopter was purchased by the buyer and the seller had itself stimulated and suggested some of the purposes, and it was uncontradicted that the buyer had relied on the seller's skill and judgment, it appearing that buyer's officers had no previous experience or knowledge relating to the operation or performance of helicopters. Boeing Airplane Co. v. O'Malley, 329 F.2d 585 (8th Cir. Minn. 1964).

28. Knowledgeable buyer.

Under Mississippi law, as predicted by district court, plaintiff cannot pursue remedy under theory of negligence or strict liability against product manufacturer in which damages that are solely economic are sought. Lee v. GMC, 950 F. Supp. 170 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

No warranty of fitness for a particular purpose arises under UCC § 2-315 when goods are manufactured in accordance with specifications provided by the buyer. In such case, the buyer does not rely on the seller's skill or judgment (holding that since buyer of electronic control units for operating automatic steps on motor homes had no expertise in electronics and had not given manufacturer any specifications for manufacturing such units, buyer was justified in relying on manufacturer's skill and judgment, and also holding that buyer's inspection and acceptance of units without making any complaint to manufacturer did not constitute waiver under UCC § 2-316(3)(b) of buyer's claim for breach of implied warranty of fitness of units for particular purpose, since design of units was such as to prevent buyer's discovery of any defects therein).

Controltek, Inc. v. Kwikkee Enters., Inc., 284 Or. 123, 585 P.2d 670 (1978).

No implied warranties under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 applied to sale of used caterpillar tractor, where (1) buyer had previously owned and used the same tractor; (2) buyer knew much more about tractor's quality and condition than did seller who had been persuaded by buyer to purchase tractor from buyer; (3) buyer subsequently purchased tractor from seller after seller repaired it; and (4) buyer in choosing tractor did not rely on seller's skill or judgment. Trax, Inc. v. Tidmore, 331 So. 2d 275 (Ala. 1976).

Seller of concrete pump made no implied warranty of fitness where buyers relied upon their own skill and judgment in selection of pump to be used in construction of tunnel. Concrete Equip. Co. v. William A. Smith Contracting Co., 358 F. Supp. 1137 (E.D. Wis. 1973).

29. —Selection by buyer.

Fact that buyer of oven for baking pizzas acted on advice of buyer's partner in purchasing oven manufactured by defendant, because of partner's success in commercial baking of pizzas with similar oven manufactured by defendant, underscored fact that buyer was relying on defendant, within meaning of UCC § 2-315, to furnish suitable oven for buyer's business. El Fredo Pizza, Inc. v. Roto-Flex Oven Co., 199 Neb. 697, 261 N.W.2d 358 (1978).

There was no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose in connection with sale of race horse where buyer did not rely on seller's skill or judgment to select or furnish suitable goods but rather buyer relied on his agent to select horse and seller did no more than sell horse that buyer's agent had selected. Sessa v. Riegle, 427 F. Supp. 760 (E.D. Pa. 1977), aff'd, 568 F.2d 770 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

Sale of used multi-rip saw did not come within terms of UCC § 2-314 where seller was engaged in sawmill business, not business of selling sawmill equipment, and sale was isolated transaction; furthermore, UCC § 2-315 did not apply to transaction where uncontroverted facts established that buyer had decided to purchase particular brand of saw purchased from seller prior to his initial contact with seller, thus mitigating any reliance upon seller's skill and knowledge. Siemen v. Alden, 34 Ill. App. 3d 961, 341 N.E.2d 713 (2d Dist. 1975).

In action to recover for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose arising from installation and sale by defendant of dump bed on plaintiff's truck, there was sufficient evidence to support finding of non-reliance by plaintiff on skill or judgment of defendant where plaintiff was experienced truck driver, plaintiff had been told by truck salesman five days before he signed defendant's purchase order that he needed bed of 15 to 15 ½ feet for proper functioning on wheelbase of this particular truck, and that 14 foot bed would be too short, where defendant's employee testified that he and defendant talked to plaintiff about length problem and discussed options available, and where defendant specifically stated that he did not recommend putting 14 foot bed on 126 inch cab to axle and that it would not work. Turnbough v. Schien, 26 Ill. App. 3d 88, 325 N.E.2d 5 (4th Dist. 1975).

No implied warranty of fitness arose as to specially manufactured machinery, where evidence established no reliance upon seller but rather that buyers relied upon their own judgment and skill in selecting machinery which they concluded would produce their product, and where conspicuous, written contract provision expressly excluded warranty of fitness. U.S. Fibres, Inc. v. Proctor & Schwartz, Inc., 358 F. Supp. 449 (E.D. Mich. 1972), aff'd, 509 F.2d 1043 (6th Cir. Mich. 1975).

In action by buyer of cattle which had brucellosis when purchased and could not be used for breeding as buyer planned, finding that there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose was supported by evidence showing that buyer relied on his own judgment in selecting cattle to be purchased and did not inform sellers of his plans for cattle. Fear Ranches, Inc. v. Berry, 470 F.2d 905 (10th Cir. N.M. 1972).

30. —Brand name purchases.

The warranty of fitness for a particular purpose is implied in every sale of goods where the seller, at the time of contracting, has reason to know the particular purpose for which the goods are required and where the buyer is relying on the seller's skill and judgment to select or furnish suitable goods (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-315); where a photocopying machine was purchased for its trade name and for ordinary office purposes, the warranty for fitness for a particular purpose does not arise. United States Leasing Corp. v. Comerlald Assocs., 101 Misc. 2d 773 (1979).

Implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose does not apply where (1) plaintiff-buyer relied principally upon reputation and advertisements of tractor manufacturer and did not particularly rely upon any judgment of defendant-seller who had recently entered tractor business and had no special skill or knowledge about trailers, and (2) purposes for which tractor was purchased were general and not particular. Ford Motor Co. v. Taylor, 60 Tenn. App. 271, 446 S.W.2d 521 (1969).

A purchaser of a product under a trade or patent name receives no implied warranty of fitness of use for any particular purpose, but does receive an implied warranty that the goods are of merchantable quality. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. McKesson & Robbins, Inc., 55 Misc. 2d 529 (1967).

A sale of a specified chattel under its tradename tends to negative an implied warranty of fitness. McMeekin v. Gimbel Bros., 223 F. Supp. 896 (W.D. Pa. 1963).

There was no implied warranty of fitness where a buyer purchased, under its tradename, a rotary-type lawn-mower for the general purpose of cutting grass, and did not rely on the seller's skill and judgment in selecting the mower. McMeekin v. Gimbel Bros., 223 F. Supp. 896 (W.D. Pa. 1963).

31. Conformity to order or specification.

Buyer of pipes stated claims, under Mississippi law, for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, by alleging that seller represented to buyer that pipes would be sealed and tested to withstand 15 pounds of pressure per square inch and that pipes failed to withstand such pressure. IHP Indus., Inc. v. PermAlert, Esp., 947 F. Supp. 257 (S.D. Miss. 1996).

No warranty of fitness for a particular purpose arises under UCC § 2-315 when goods are manufactured in accordance with specifications provided by the buyer. In such case, the buyer does not rely on the seller's skill or judgment (holding that since buyer of electronic control units for operating automatic steps on motor homes had no expertise in electronics and had not given manufacturer any specifications for manufacturing such units, buyer was justified in relying on manufacturer's skill and judgment, and also holding that buyer's inspection and acceptance of units without making any complaint to manufacturer did not constitute waiver under UCC § 2-316(3)(b) of buyer's claim for breach of implied warranty of fitness of units for particular purpose, since design of units was such as to prevent buyer's discovery of any defects therein). Controltek, Inc. v. Kwiikee Enters., Inc., 284 Or. 123, 585 P.2d 670 (1978).

In action by distributor of wig accessories against plastic manufacturer for breach of warranty arising out of allegedly defective handle housings in plastic wiglet cases manufactured by plastic manufacturer, it could not be said that distributor's knowledge of goods or manufacturing process was so inferior or his reliance on manufacturer's skill so great as to give rise to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 where distributor had many years of experience with wig cases and other plastic products of his own design, where distributor was familiar with both blow-molding and injection-molding and chose process by which wiglet case was to be manufactured, and where distributor insisted that wiglet case conform to shape of larger wig case and rejected suggestions made by manufacturer that would have increased strength of handle housing. Blockhead, Inc. v. Plastic Forming Co., 402 F. Supp. 1017 (D. Conn. 1975).

Where specially manufactured floor drain grating was ordered and item as delivered fit description called for by buyer, there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose. Consolidated Supply Co. v. Babbitt, 96 Idaho 636, 534 P.2d 466 (1975).

Where defendant seller contracted with plaintiff buyer to supply sleeve bearings impregnated with specified oil in accord with government specifications for use in manufacture of bomb fuses, but instead supplied bearings coated with non-conforming oil, and where, although bearings coated with non-conforming oil were visibly different from conforming bearings, buyer used non-conforming bearings to manufacture two lots of bomb fuses which were discovered to be defective as result of use of such bearings, under UCC §§ 2-313-2-314, and 2-315, seller was liable to buyer for breach of its express warranty to supply bearings meeting applicable specifications and its implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose. General Instrument Corp., F.W. Sickles Div. v. Pennsylvania Pressed Metals, Inc., 366 F. Supp. 139 (M.D. Pa. 1973), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1051 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1052 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974).

A seller who has substantially complied with buyer's specifications will not be held to have extended a warranty of fitness for a particular purpose to the buyer, or be held responsible for the consequences of a deficiency in the specifications. Klipfel v. Neill, 30 Colo. App. 428, 494 P.2d 115 (1972).

No implied warranty of fitness for purpose arises when the seller manufactures goods following the specifications given by the buyer and acts upon his advice as to design and materials, for in such case it is obvious that the buyer is not relying on any skill or judgment of the seller. Safe-Carry Paper Prods. Co. v. Concrete Eng'g Co., 64 Lack. Jur. 53 (Pa. 1962).

D. Remedies and Procedure.

32. In general.

To recover for the breach of an implied warranty (see UCC §§ 2-314(1) and 2-315), the plaintiff must establish that the defect that caused the damage was present when the product left the defendant's control. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

In suit for damages to farmers' alfalfa seed crop allegedly caused by sprayers' application of insecticide to control green bugs, where one farmer had been told by sprayer that insecticide had been used with satisfactory results and farmers then agreed to have defendants spray alfalfa fields, trial court erred in refusing to submit claim of breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-315 to jury. Fulwider v. Flynn, 90 S.D. 527, 243 N.W.2d 170 (1976).

Where used car as to which no express warranties were made was totally destroyed by fire during normal operation 3 hours following purchase, it could be reasonably inferred that dealer breached implied warranties of merchantability and fitness, notwithstanding purchaser's failure to allege and prove defect. Rose v. Epley Motor Sales, 288 N.C. 53, 215 S.E.2d 573 (1975).

In action for damages for breach of implied warranties of fitness and merchantability arising out of sale of diseased cattle, evidence was sufficient to support conclusion that animals were diseased prior to risk of loss passing to buyer, notwithstanding buyer's expert witness, a veterinarian, could not scientifically identify seller's ranch as source of infection, where inference could be drawn from his testimony that infection had to occur prior to shipment of calves from seller's ranch. Martineau v. Walker, 97 Idaho 246, 542 P.2d 1165 (1975).

33. Rescission.

Contract for sale of mobile trailer, specifically excluding all warranties except those written in the contract, excluded implied warranty of fitness, and buyer of trailer accepted it where he kept trailer and equipment for over two years without giving notice of rejection or desire to rescind contract. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Burns, 527 P.2d 655 (Utah 1974).

34. Damages.

In action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose of trailer that was dangerously unroadworthy, (1) trailer's condition demonstrated that implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 were breached, (2) buyer accepted trailer by offering to pay balance of contract price on assumption that trailer could be repaired, (3) under UCC § 2-608(1)(a), buyer was entitled to revoke acceptance on discovering structural defects in trailer's welding and design that he could not have known about without aid of an expert, (4) buyer's revocation of acceptance was timely under UCC § 2-608(2), and (5) under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was not required to prove that damages were inadequate remedy before obtaining right to rescind contract. McCormick v. Ornstein, 119 Ariz. 352, 580 P.2d 1206 (Ct. App. 1978).

Where parents purchased vault for casket of son, relying on funeral home's judgment to furnish suitable goods, and where vault was too small and parents had to return next day for another service and burial, parents were not barred from bringing action for breach of contract; implied warranty of fitness of UCC § 2-315 was neither excluded nor modified in any way by funeral home and parents would be entitled to incidental and consequential damages resulting from breach pursuant to UCC § 2-715. Caldwell v. Brown Serv. Funeral Home, 345 So. 2d 1341 (Ala. 1977).

Where buyer of materials for needle point rug discovered that yarn incorporated into background varied in color, seller was liable for breach of express and implied warranties for difference in value of rug as warranted and value as made. Barrows v. Mazaltov's, Inc., 312 Minn. 586, 252 N.W.2d 130 (1977).

In action by dairy farmer to recover damages from feed manufacturer for loss of milk production and injury to dairy cows allegedly caused by use of feed supplement, evidence was sufficient to establish breach of both express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where there was express representation that use of feed supplement would increase milk production and where there was decrease in milk production resulting from wrong instructions about proper way to use feed supplement. However, farmer was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2): (1) Considering that there were many factors which could affect production of milk, to permit use of difference between total milk production figures for whole of year during which feed supplement was used for approximately 2 months, and total production figures for whole of preceding year, as measure of damages, would constitute rankest form of speculation and conjecture; (2) with respect to damages for decrease in market value of cows affected by feed, it could not reasonably be determined how much of decline in valuation of cattle between date of injury and day on which they were sold was attributable to injury and how much to changes, if any, in market value between those dates. Shotkoski v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 195 Neb. 22, 237 N.W.2d 92 (1975).

35. Notice of breach.

In action by lessor of ice-vending machine against lessee for overdue lease payments, in which lessee cross-complained against machine's seller alleging breach of seller's implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, where evidence showed (1) that seller had sold machine to lessor in order to facilitate leasing it to lessee, (2) that both seller and lessor had advised lessee not to accept machine until he was satisfied with its performance, and (3) that both machine's acceptance notice and lease itself expressly declared that lessee understood that lessor made no warranties, express or implied, concerning machine, court held (1) that since lease agreement between lessor and lessee was merely a financing tool whereby lessee acquired use of machine after seller sold it to lessor, lessor thus was lessee's agent in purchasing machine from seller, (2) that as a result, seller's implied warranty of fitness of machine for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 extended to lessee, (3) that seller breached such warranty when machine proved to be only 80 percent effective when used, (4) that lessee, by signing acceptance notice wherein he acknowledged that machine was operative and had no defects, accepted it under UCC § 2-606(1) in an "as is" condition and thus released seller from its implied warranty, and (5) that lessee's use of machine for 22 months with full knowledge of its limitations was unreasonable and prevented him from revoking his acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2). World Wide Lease, Inc. v. Grobschmit, 21 Wash. App. 537, 586 P.2d 889 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1023 (1979).

In action by seller for purchase price of coal, buyer's counterclaim based on seller's alleged breach of express warranty and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness of coal for particular purpose could not be sustained where (1) evidence did not show that seller had created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) by showing buyer samples and analyses of coal's quality, but revealed instead that such samples and analyses were shown to buyer solely for his information; (2) coal delivered by seller was fit for ordinary purpose for which it was used, was burned as fuel by buyer's customers, and thus complied with seller's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1); (3) implied warranty of fitness of coal for particular purpose did not arise under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not rely on seller's skill and judgment in furnishing coal suitable for buyer's customers; and (4) even assuming that seller had breached such express and implied warranties as buyer contended, buyer still could not recover on counterclaim because he did not give seller adequate notice of alleged breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and such breach also was not proximate cause of damages buyer allegedly sustained. Kopper Glo Fuel, Inc. v. Island Lake Coal Co., 436 F. Supp. 91 (E.D. Tenn. 1977).

In action by seller of cattle against buyer to recover purchase price of cattle, proffered amendment to seller's answer was insufficient to raise defense of breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 where buyer failed to plead ultimate facts which would bring sale within provisions of statute, i.e., that cattle were being purchased for particular purpose and that buyer was relying on seller's skill and judgment to select suitable cattle; proffered pleading was also deficient in that it failed to allege that buyer gave seller timely notice of breach as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a). Timmerman v. Hertz, 195 Neb. 237, 238 N.W.2d 220 (1976).

A minor third party beneficiary as to a manufacturer's express and implied warranties injured while a guest in the home of the ultimate purchaser of a bicycle, as a consequence of its defective condition, has a cause of action against the manufacturer and no notice is required to be given the manufacturer by such third party beneficiary. Tomczuk v. Town of Cheshire, 26 Conn. Supp. 219, 217 A.2d 71 (1965).

36. Parties and standing.

Class action was not maintainable for alleged breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, since each of necessary elements may be established only by testimony from each purchaser as to what his intended purpose was, whether he relied on defendant's skill and judgment, whether defendant had reason to know of his particular purpose and his reliance. Metowski v. Traid Corp., 28 Cal. App. 3d 332 (3d Dist. 1972).

37. Remote manufacturer or seller; privity required.

No cause of action for breach of express or implied warranty existed, in insurer's action as subrogee against company supplying defective filtration plant equipment to subcontracting company insured by plaintiff, where (1) no seller-buyer relationship or sale contract existed under UCC § 2-314 and § 2-315 between subcontracting company and defendant supplier and (2) plaintiff insurer was neither "natural person" nor "injured in person" within meaning of UCC § 2-318. Potsdam Welding & Mach. Co. v. Neptune Microfloc, Inc., 57 A.D.2d 993 (3d Dep't 1977).

In action by milk case manufacturer against manufacturer of polyethylene used for milk case bottoms, fact that polyethylene manufacturer invoiced plastics to, and received payment from, company that performed actual molding of polyethylene for milk case manufacturer was not conclusive on issue whether there was necessary privity between milk case manufacturer and polyethylene manufacturer to support action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315. Cumberland Corp. v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 383 F. Supp. 595 (E.D. Tenn. 1973).

For liability to be imposed because of a breach of the warranty of UCC § 2-315, privity must exist between the plaintiff and a defendant charged with the breach. Walker v. Decora, Inc., 225 Tenn. 504, 471 S.W.2d 778 (1971).

In the absence of privity of contract between ultimate buyer and seller, this section has no application. Henry v. John W. Eshelman & Sons, 99 R.I. 518, 209 A.2d 46 (1965).

38. —Privity not required.

In action by lessor of ice-vending machine against lessee for overdue lease payments, in which lessee cross-complained against machine's seller alleging breach of seller's implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, where evidence showed (1) that seller had sold machine to lessor in order to facilitate leasing it to lessee, (2) that both seller and lessor had advised lessee not to accept machine until he was satisfied with its performance, and (3) that both machine's acceptance notice and lease itself expressly declared that lessee understood that lessor made no warranties, express or implied, concerning machine, court held (1) that since lease agreement between lessor and lessee was merely a financing tool whereby lessee acquired use of machine after seller sold it to lessor, lessor thus was lessee's agent in purchasing machine from seller, (2) that as a result, seller's implied warranty of fitness of machine for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 extended to lessee, (3) that seller breached such warranty when machine proved to be only 80 percent effective when used, (4) that lessee, by signing acceptance notice wherein he acknowledged that machine was operative and had no defects, accepted it under UCC § 2-606(1) in an "as is" condition and thus released seller from its implied warranty, and (5) that lessee's use of machine for 22 months with full knowledge of its limitations was unreasonable and prevented him from revoking his acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2). World Wide Lease, Inc. v. Grobschmit, 21 Wash. App. 537, 586 P.2d 889 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1023 (1979).

Manufacturer of defective mobile home could be held liable for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315, without regard to privity of contract between manufacturer and consumer, and this liability embraced not only personal injuries and property damage, but also economic loss. Morrow v. New Moon Homes, Inc., 548 P.2d 279 (Alaska 1976).

Manufacturer of automobile was liable to purchaser of automobile for personal injuries and property damage sustained in collision caused by failure of automobile's carburetor return spring, notwithstanding purchaser bought vehicle as used automobile from private party; (1) under UCC § 2-315, failure of carburetor return spring constituted breach of implied warranty where automobile had been used for less than one year and was driven approximately 18,000 miles, (2) plaintiff was "buyer" of automobile and manufacturer was "seller" within meaning of § 2-315, and (3) there was no requirement of privity under UCC § 2-315. Karczewski v. Ford Motor Co., 382 F. Supp. 1346 (N.D. Ind. 1974), aff'd, 515 F.2d 511 (7th Cir. Ind. 1975).

In products liability and implied warranty action for supplying feed supplement not suitably and reasonably fit to cause cattle to gain desired weight, privity between cattle feedlot operator and manufacturer of supplement was not required. Texsun Feedyards, Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 311 F. Supp. 644 (N.D. Tex. 1970), rev'd on other grounds, 447 F.2d 660 (5th Cir. Tex. 1971).

Under Rhode Island provision of Code § 2-315 extending implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose as to food-stuffs or drinks sold for human consumption in sealed container, from seller to manufacturer or packer of such goods to those described in Code § 2-318 (family, household, guest, etc. of purchaser), privity was abolished as to all injured persons who previously had recourse to immediate seller, including purchaser himself. Finocchiaro v. Ward Baking Co., 104 R.I. 5, 241 A.2d 619 (1968).

The implied warranty of fitness imposed by law on a manufacturer may be enforced directly against the manufacturer by a third party user where the manufacturer was aware of the purpose for which the product was to be put, and knew of the user's reliance that the product would be fit for the purpose intended, and it is not necessary that a contractual relationship exist between the user and the manufacturer. Rhodes Pharmacal Co. v. Continental Can Co., 72 Ill. App. 2d 362, 219 N.E.2d 726 (1st Dist. 1966).

Manufacturer of cosmetics could maintain an action for damages resulting from leaking aerosol cans in which certain of its products were packaged against can manufacturer on theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness, although no privity of contract existed between can manufacturer and the user. Rhodes Pharmacal Co. v. Continental Can Co., 72 Ill. App. 2d 362, 219 N.E.2d 726 (1st Dist. 1966).

Plaintiff in a products liability case may proceed in an action of tort based upon the theory of implied warranty, notwithstanding there is no contractual relationship between plaintiff and defendant. Lonzrick v. Republic Steel Corp., 6 Ohio St. 2d 227, 218 N.E.2d 185 (1966).

The purchaser of a chicken pie could maintain an action based on the breach of an implied warranty of fitness for consumption against the manufacturer to recover for injuries resulting from a chicken bone lodging in purchaser's throat as he was eating the pie. The court pointing out that, because the question had not been raised, it was not called upon to decide whether the manufacturer's implied warranty extended to the instant purchaser, who was apparently a remote consumer and not a purchaser from the manufacturer. De Graff v. Myers Foods, Inc., 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 19, 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 110 (1958).

39. Proximate cause.

In action by buyer against paint manufacturer for damages for breach of warranty in sale of red barn paint, where evidence showed (1) that plaintiff was professional barn painter, (2) that he had not followed defendant's instructions when adding linseed oil to paint purchased, (3) that paint on customers' barns painted by plaintiff had faded within one to four months after its application, (4) that plaintiff had had many complaints, and (5) that defendant had admitted that a "fade problem" existed with respect to paint purchased by plaintiff, which was of "bottom-of-the-line" quality, court held, on affirming judgment for plaintiff, (1) that although plaintiff's proof of causation was not direct, jury could still infer from fact that fading of paint was quite uniform that presence or absence of linseed oil had had no effect on paint's fading; (2) that since defendant had admitted that paint had a "fade problem" which was to be expected with that brand of paint, jury could therefore infer that paint was not "good barn paint" and that it violated defendant's express warranty made under UCC § 2-313(1)(a); (3) that jury could also infer that paint was not of merchantable quality in violation of implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); (4) that, moreover, it was not fit for plaintiff's particular purpose in violation of implied warranty of fitness contained in UCC § 2-315; and (5) that trial court correctly instructed jury that it could consider whether plaintiff had complied with defendant's directions in determining whether plaintiff had been negligent, and whether such negligence had been a cause of his consequential damages (declining, since issue was first presented on appeal, to consider whether plaintiff's consequential damages should have reduced by 15 per cent to reflect proportion of fault that jury attributed to plaintiff's negligence, and stating that Minnesota courts had not determined whether comparative-fault principle should be applied in breach-of-warranty actions, although its application seemed equitable and appropriate under UCC § 2-715(2)(b)). Chatfield v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 266 N.W.2d 171 (Minn. 1978).

In action by owner of heavy-duty construction equipment for damage to equipment's engines that resulted from use of defective antifreeze that owner purchased to winterize such engines, where evidence showed that antifreeze purchased contained chloride, that chloride could corrode internal-combustion engines because it was a salt-water solution, that equipment owner had purchased the antifreeze from defendant retailer, that retailer had previously purchased it from a wholesale supplier (against whom retailer filed third-party action), and that the wholesale supplier had originally purchased it from manufacturer (against whom supplier filed fourth-party action), (1) retailer was liable to equipment owner, under UCC §§ 2-313(1)(a), 2-314(1), and 2-315, for breach of express warranty that antifreeze was suitable for use in engines of owner's construction equipment and for breach of implied warranties of merchantability of such antifreeze and fitness thereof for particular purpose; (2) wholesale supplier was liable, under theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability of antifreeze under UCC § 2-314(1), to retailer for same damages for which retailer was liable to equipment owner; and (3) manufacturer was liable to wholesale supplier on theory of strict liability in tort. R. Clinton Constr. Co. v. Bryant & Reaves, Inc., 442 F. Supp. 838 (N.D. Miss. 1977).

In an action brought under the UCC § 2-315 warranty, the plaintiff, to establish the right to recover for a breach thereof, need prove only that the food or beverage was purchased in a sealed container and was so contaminated or adulterated as to be unfit for human consumption and, of course, that there was a causal relationship between his consumption of the unfit product and his injury; consequently the defenses ordinarily available in an action brought to recover for injuries resulting from consumption of the contaminated food on the ground of the negligence of the processor or packager, such as contributory negligence or assumption of risk, are not available in an action brought for breach of the statutory warranty set out in UCC § 2-315. Young v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 109 R.I. 458, 287 A.2d 345 (1972) but see Fiske v. MacGregor, 464 A.2d 719 (R.I. 1983).

When proceeding under Code-imposed implied warranty, plaintiff has burden of proving that injury resulted from unmerchantability or unsuitability of product; mere fact of application of shampoo and permanent wave followed by temporary hair loss is not enough to justify this conclusion. Elliott v. Lachance, 109 N.H. 481, 256 A.2d 153 (1969).

40. Pleading.

To plead properly cause of action for breach of warranty under Uniform Commercial Code, complaint should at least allege the following: (1) facts respecting sale of the goods; (2) identification of warranty created as being express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1), implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1), or implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; (3) facts respecting creation of such warranty; (4) facts respecting its breach; (5) giving to seller of notice of breach required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (6) injuries sustained by buyer as result of breach (holding that third-party complaint failed to state cause of action because it did not comply with above list of essential allegations). Dunham-Bush, Inc. v. Thermo-Air Serv., Inc., 351 So. 2d 351 (Fla. App. 1977).

Allegations that plaintiff purchased burglar alarm system from defendant, that the system was to remain the property of the defendant, that plaintiff was told that defendant was reliable firm, had an excellent staff, that the system was foolproof, and that the system was a substantial deterrent to burglaries, that plaintiff's premises were burglarized, and that defendant had breached an express warranty and an implied warranty, and had been guilty of gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and intentional tort did not state a claim upon which relief could be granted where it contained no allegations of facts stating in what respect any warranty was breached or that any breach was a proximate cause of the burglary. Craig v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 91 Misc. 2d 1063 (1977).

Beauty salon patron stated cause of action against operators of beauty salon for breach of implied warranties of fitness and merchantability under UCC where patron alleged that she was injured as result of application of defective hair product during course of permanent wave given by employee of beauty salon. Ellibee v. Dye, 64 Pa. D. & C.2d 158 (1973).

Petition which alleges that the defendant manufactured certain steel roof joists and impliedly warranted that they were fit for the ordinary purposes for which such steel joists were used, that such joists were defective and not fit for the ordinary purposes for which they were to be used, and as a direct and proximate result of being so defective they collapsed and fell upon plaintiff and injured him while he was working in a place where his presence was reasonably to be anticipated, states a good cause of action in tort based on theory of breach of implied warranty. Lonzrick v. Republic Steel Corp., 6 Ohio St. 2d 227, 218 N.E.2d 185 (1966).

41. Evidence and burden of proof.

To recover for the breach of an implied warranty (see UCC §§ 2-314(1) and 2-315), the plaintiff must establish that the defect that caused the damage was present when the product left the defendant's control. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

To recover for the breach of an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, the buyer must show by a preponderance of the evidence (1) that the seller at the time of entering into the contract had reason to know the particular purpose for which the goods were required, (2) the buyer's reliance on the skill or judgment of the seller to select suitable goods, and (3) that the goods were unfit for the particular purpose (construing Miss law; where seller made no attempt to exclude or modify implied warranty of fitness (UCC § 2-315) of antifreeze for particular purpose for which it was to be used). R. Clinton Constr. Co. v. Bryant & Reaves, Inc., 442 F. Supp. 838 (N.D. Miss. 1977).

Failure of plaintiff to meet its burden of showing that contract with defendant electric company, under which defendant was to design, manufacture, and install electrical distribution system in plaintiff's building, involved sale of goods under UCC Art 2 precluded any recovery under UCC § 2-314(1) for defendant's alleged breach of implied warranty of merchantability of equipment installed or any recovery under UCC § 2-315 for defendant's alleged breach of implied warranty of fitness of equipment for particular purpose (observing that not every contract to install electrical system is automatically outside scope of UCC Art 2). Air Heaters, Inc. v. Johnson Elec., Inc., 258 N.W.2d 649, 5 A.L.R.4th 489 (N.D. 1977).

It is clear that plaintiff has not met his burden of proof of proving a cause of action under UCC § 2-313 (Express Warranty), UCC § 2-314 (Implied Warranty of Merchantability), and UCC § 2-315 (Implied Warranty of Fitness for a Particular Purpose), where no evidence was submitted by the plaintiff on the existence of such warranties or on any defect in the chemical at issue, and none is apparent from the testimony. Toppi v. United States, 332 F. Supp. 513 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

A statutory shift in the burden of proof from the purchaser to the seller in a breach of warranty action does not change the substantive character of the action, but is merely a change in evidentiary procedure. Lewis v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., John Bean Div., 245 F. Supp. 195 (W.D. Mich. 1965).

The buyer has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that there was an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose and that such warranty was breached. Safe-Carry Paper Prods. Co. v. Concrete Eng'g Co., 64 Lack. Jur. 53 (Pa. 1962).

The general rule is that the burden is upon the party asserting a breach of warranty to show that the cause of the failure or injury was one for which the warrantor was liable under the warranty. Whiting Corp. v. Process Eng'g, Inc., 273 F.2d 742 (1st Cir. Mass. 1960).

42. —Knowledge of particular purpose.

In action by buyer of new automobile against seller based on breach of warranty, trial court did not err in dismissing complaint since evidence was sufficient to support conclusion that implied warranty of fitness did not arise within meaning of UCC § 2-315 where buyer had cultivated specific interest in automobile purchased at time of initial contact with seller and discussions between buyer and seller were primarily negotiations concerning lowest price, where it was unclear whether seller had reason to know of any particular purpose for buyer's acquisition, and where buyer only indicated that he wanted to purchase a quiet, dependable and comfortable automobile suitable for long distance trips on interstate highways. Falcon Equip. Corp. v. Courtesy Lincoln Mercury, Inc., 536 F.2d 806 (8th Cir. Iowa 1976).

In action by buyer against seller of studs to be used in construction of building, evidence was sufficient to sustain trial court's conclusions that seller breached implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where seller's salesman knew purpose for which studs were to be used, viewed the building site and surveyed the list of goods to be used in the construction of the development, was experienced lumber dealer and had greater skill and judgment than buyer's representative regarding suitability of types of lumber for specific projects, and where seller's expertise was relied upon by buyer. Jetero Constr. Co. v. South Memphis Lumber Co., 531 F.2d 1348 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1976).

43. —Reliance on seller's skill and judgment.

Although buyer informed seller of polystyrene beads of its needs and that it had screw type injection machine into which beads would be fed, in absence of evidence that seller knew more about machine than did buyer and in view of evidence that seller made no representation that bead material would work in buyer's machine and that buyer conducted its own tests from admittedly inadequate sample, there was no proof that buyer relied on any representation by seller that beads would work in its machine and, thus, no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315. Plasco, Inc. v. Free-Flow Packaging Corp., 547 F.2d 86 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977).

In action by purchaser of soybean holding surge tank against seller for damages resulting from collapse of tank, evidence supported findings that seller breached its implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose where, at time of contracting, seller, through its agents, knew tank was to hold full load of soybeans, and where there was testimony by purchaser's engineers that purchaser relied on seller's skill and judgment in design, erection and fabrication of steel tanks. Gorbett Bros. Steel Co. v. Anderson, Clayton & Co., 533 S.W.2d 413 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Sale of repossessed boat by bank did not give rise to implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 where there was no evidence that bank was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), there being no evidence that bank dealt in kind of goods involved in transaction—boats—or that it held itself as having knowledge or skill peculiar to such goods, but rather record indicated sale of boat was no more than isolated transaction by bank; nor did sale give rise to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose within UCC § 2-315, although buyer told bank officer he "was thinking about buying a boat to put into charter service" where there was no evidence that buyer relied upon bank's skill or judgment, or that bank possessed such skill or judgment, that boat was fit for particular purpose of charter service use. Donald v. City Nat'l Bank, 295 Ala. 320, 329 So. 2d 92 (1976).

In action by retailer and manufacturer of swing set against manufacturer and supplier of chain used in swing set for breach of implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315, evidence that chain supplier knew that chains would be used in swing sets, that supplier was swing set manufacturer's exclusive supplier of chains, that it sold manufacturer other types of swing equipment, and that swing set manufacturer ordered specified type of chain because of independent laboratory report furnished by chain supplier which indicated that chain was proper, was sufficient to establish that manufacturer was relying on supplier to use its skill and judgment in selecting proper chains. Gellenbeck v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 59 Mich. App. 339, 229 N.W.2d 443 (1975).

In action by plaintiff against defendant under UCC § 2-315 for damages due to alleged breach of implied warranty of fitness of purpose in supplying and installing sprinklerheads in sprinkler system of plaintiff's building, plaintiff was entitled to directed verdict on uncontradicted evidence that defendant had knowledge of particular purpose for which sprinklerheads were required, that plaintiff relied completely and entirely upon skill and judgment of defendant to select suitable sprinklerheads, and that sprinklerhead malfunctioned within 3 months after installation, although there was no direct evidence as to specific cause of malfunction but overwhelming circumstantial evidence that it was caused by defect within sprinklerhead. Jones, Inc. v. W.A. Wiedebusch Plumbing & Heating Co., 157 W. Va. 257, 201 S.E.2d 248 (1973).

Where a buyer, being ignorant of the fitness of the article offered by the seller, justifiably relied on the superior skill, information, and judgment of the seller and not on his own knowledge or judgment, he could properly claim an implied warranty of fitness. Catania v. Brown, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 344, 231 A.2d 668 (1967).

44. —Defect as constituting breach.

To recover for the breach of an implied warranty (see UCC §§ 2-314(1) and 2-315), the plaintiff must establish that the defect that caused the damage was present when the product left the defendant's control. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

In action against manufacturer of oral contraceptive for stroke allegedly caused by using contraceptive, plaintiff was not entitled to proceed on theory of breach of either implied warranty of merchantability (UCC § 2-314(1)) or implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose (UCC § 2-315) where there was no evidence to show that such contraceptive had contained any foreign ingredients or impurities that rendered it inherently dangerous for human consumption, and where evidence revealed that plaintiff was suffering from hypertension when her doctor prescribed the contraceptive. Chambers v. G.D. Searle & Co., 441 F. Supp. 377 (D. Md. 1975), aff'd, 567 F.2d 269 (4th Cir. Md. 1977).

In action by egg producer against feed manufacturer for breach of warranties based on claim that feed supplied contained improper nutritional balance, resulting in obesity and "fatty liver syndrome" in producer's laying hens, thereby reducing egg production and requiring producer to purchase eggs in open market in order to supply its various supermarket customers, evidence was sufficient to permit jury to draw inference that manufacturer's feed caused excess obesity, and hence low egg production, in all of producer's flocks where there was competent evidence that flocks fed with manufacturer's feed were obese and suffered from fatty liver syndrome and low egg production, whereas control flock, which was fed on another manufacturer's feed, were normal. Vermont Food Indus., Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 514 F.2d 456 (2d Cir. Vt. 1975).

Special implied warranty of fitness protected electronic components sold to operator of cable television system, but operator could not recover for breach of warranty absent evidence that capacitors in question were defective. Multivision N.W., Inc. v. Jerrold Elecs. Corp., 356 F. Supp. 207 (N.D. Ga. 1972).

Where evidence made it clear that cattle food contained stilbestrol, and that the food had not been purchased for beef cattle, the tainted food constituted a clear breach of the implied warranty of merchantability and of the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. Kassab v. Central Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

45. Defenses.

In actions for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 to recover damages for injuries resulting from the use of a product, there is generally no liability on the part of the seller if the buyer was unusually susceptible to injury from the product. A manufacturer cannot be required, under a theory of breach of implied warranty, to insure against the susceptibility of a particular individual to the manufacturer's product. The manufacturer's duty is to guard against probabilities, not possibilities. Chambers v. G.D. Searle & Co., 441 F. Supp. 377 (D. Md. 1975), aff'd, 567 F.2d 269 (4th Cir. Md. 1977).

In lessor's action to recover balance due under automobile lease, lessee who claimed benefits of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC 2-314 and implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 could not escape liability by contending that its duty to make payments was conditioned on vehicle's remaining merchantable and repairable and that lessor had breached implied warranties relied on, since assuming that such warranties applied to transaction, neither warranty encompassed commitment that leased vehicle would remain serviceable during term of lease. A-Leet Leasing Corp. v. Kingshead Corp., 150 N.J. Super. 384, 375 A.2d 1208 (App. Div. 1977), certification denied, 75 N.J. 528, 384 A.2d 508 (1977).

Recovery for breach of warranty of fitness for a particular purpose shall not be barred by user's contributory negligence in taking second sip from Coca-Cola bottle, where evidence of contributory negligence fell short of showing that user had partaken of Coke with actual knowledge of potentially dangerous condition thereof. Young v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 109 R.I. 458, 287 A.2d 345 (1972) but see Fiske v. MacGregor, 464 A.2d 719 (R.I. 1983).

46. —Limitations and laches.

Where buyer brought suit in 1973 on defective sewage system installed in 1968, and thus limitation period was a controlling issue, trial court should have made findings of fact as to duration of express warranty, whether breach occurred during warranty period, and whether buyer commenced action within 4 years of discovering breach. Daughtry v. Jet Aeration Co., 91 Wash. 2d 704, 592 P.2d 631 (1979).

47. —Failure to follow instructions.

In action for eye injury following application of false eyelashes by manufacturer's representative, (1) where representative had warned plaintiff of possible irritation if adhesive glue supplied with eyelashes came into contact with skin or eyes, lashes that were applied properly to one eye had caused no injury, and adhesive glue was inadvertently introduced into plaintiff's damaged eye; and (2) where plaintiff's sole theory of action was breach by defendant of implied warranty of fitness of eyelashes for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 and breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, summary judgment for defendant was proper, since (1) plaintiff's testimony that eyelashes, when properly applied to one eye, had caused her no injury contradicted her claim of breach of warranty, and (2) such warranties did not apply to use of defendant's product in other than normal manner. Caldwell v. Lord & Taylor, Inc., 142 Ga. App. 137, 235 S.E.2d 546 (1977).

In breach of warranty action by developer of subdivision against seller-manufacturer of coating product used on plywood exterior of certain of developer's houses following delamination and checking of surfaces painted with seller's product, finding that seller neither breached implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 nor implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was proper where there was evidence that coating material was free from defects and was proper material for use intended, and that delamination and checking occurred as result of combination of improper preparation of plywood surface and incompetent application of coating material. Shore Line Properties, Inc. v. Deer-O-Paints & Chems., Ltd, 24 Ariz. App. 331, 538 P.2d 760 (1975).

Where well driller entered into contract with federal government to construct injection well in accord with plans and specifications supplied by government, including specifications for well casing which were furnished by government after consultation with well casing supplier, and casing collapsed during construction of well while it was being used in manner not intended by supplier or specified by government, and there was no question as to quality of casing or compliance with specifications by supplier and no proof of defect, well driller could not recover from supplier for breach of warranty since collapse was occasioned either by driller's failure to follow specifications during construction of well or by government's failure to specify casing of sufficient thickness and strength. Layne-Atlantic Co. v. Koppers Co., 214 Va. 467, 201 S.E.2d 609 (1974).

In action by husband and wife against manufacturer of household cleaner to recover damages for injuries sustained by wife, allegedly resulting from use of cleaner to remove wax from floor, evidence that wife did not use dilutions recommended on label but instead used concentrations greatly exceeding those given in directions, manufacturer was not liable for breach of express or implied warranties, if any, where article was not used in normal manner or, as here, according to directions on label. Evershine Prods., Inc. v. Schmitt, 130 Ga. App. 34, 202 S.E.2d 228 (1973).

48. Instructions to jury.

In action by trucker against truck manufacturer for breach of implied warranty, trial court committed reversible error by instructing jury that contributory negligence on trucker's part would defeat his right to recover damages due to manufacturer's alleged breach of implied warranty. Gregory v. White Truck & Equip. Co., 163 Ind. App. 240, 323 N.E.2d 280 (1975).

In an action by the buyer against the seller of day-old chicks for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness, an instruction that if the jury concludes that chickens had leukosis when delivered to the plaintiff jury should find for the plaintiff and proceed to the question of damages is not erroneous on the ground that it constitutes a charge of absolute liability. Vlases v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 377 F.2d 846 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

E. Specific Goods as Fit for Particular Purpose.

49. In general.

In action by lessor of ice-vending machine against lessee for overdue lease payments, in which lessee cross-complained against machine's seller alleging breach of seller's implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, where evidence showed (1) that seller had sold machine to lessor in order to facilitate leasing it to lessee, (2) that both seller and lessor had advised lessee not to accept machine until he was satisfied with its performance, and (3) that both machine's acceptance notice and lease itself expressly declared that lessee understood that lessor made no warranties, express or implied, concerning machine, court held (1) that since lease agreement between lessor and lessee was merely a financing tool whereby lessee acquired use of machine after seller sold it to lessor, lessor thus was lessee's agent in purchasing machine from seller, (2) that as a result, seller's implied warranty of fitness of machine for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 extended to lessee, (3) that seller breached such warranty when machine proved to be only 80 percent effective when used, (4) that lessee, by signing acceptance notice wherein he acknowledged that machine was operative and had no defects, accepted it under UCC § 2-606(1) in an "as is" condition and thus released seller from its implied warranty, and (5) that lessee's use of machine for 22 months with full knowledge of its limitations was unreasonable and prevented him from revoking his acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2). World Wide Lease, Inc. v. Grobschmit, 21 Wash. App. 537, 586 P.2d 889 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1023 (1979).

The implied warranties under the Uniform Commercial Code apply to the sale of used goods. Natale v. Martin Volkswagen, Inc., 92 Misc. 2d 1046 (1978).

Sale of used goods, such as sauna heater, may carry with it implied warranty of fitness when elements prescribed in UCC § 2-315 are fulfilled. Centennial Ins. Co. v. Vic Tanny Int'l of Toledo, Inc., 46 Ohio App. 2d 137, 346 N.E.2d 330 (1975).

Absent evidence that plaintiff ordered tank for use other than underground storage of gasoline, implied warranty of fitness ran with sale of 10,000-gallon capacity tank ordered by operator of gasoline station. Larrance Tank Corp. v. Burroughs, 476 P.2d 346 (Okla. 1970).

Contract did not specify that each leather skin had to be fit for the cutting of a jacket, but only that the entire shipment would be, and even the pieces too small for an entire jacket could be used for pockets, flaps and hangers; held, although seller did know purpose for which leather was ordered, it could be found that leather supplied was fit for such purpose according to trade custom. Wakerman Leather Co. v. Irvin B. Foster Sportswear Co., 34 A.D.2d 594 (3d Dep't 1970), appeal denied, 26 N.Y.2d 614 (1970).

Evidence was insufficient to show breach of warranty of fitness for particular purpose in sale of centennial coins which were found not violative of federal currency laws as alleged. Anchorage Centennial Dev. Co. v. Van Wormer & Rodrigues, Inc., 443 P.2d 596 (Alaska 1968).

In connection with a contract for the sale of an elevator, there was an implied warranty of fitness of the elevator for its use for that purpose, unless excluded under provisions of UCC § 2-316. Little Rock Land Co. v. Raper, 245 Ark. 641, 433 S.W.2d 836 (1968).

50. Food and drink.

In action for injury to tooth sustained when plaintiff bit into "nuttled cheese" sandwich which contained large, hard walnut shell, presence of shell could not be reasonably anticipated to be in food as served, and restaurant owner was liable for breach of implied warranty of fitness.

Stark v. Chock Full O'Nuts, 77 Misc. 2d 553 (1974).

In action against manufacturer of birth control pills and association from whom pills were purchased arising when plaintiff suffered stroke, lack of privity between plaintiff and manufacturer under UCC § 2-318 was of no consequence and 4 year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725 governed; birth control association which gave advice and dispensed birth control pills was engaged in sale of goods as required by Code and plaintiff's failure to allege that pills did not prevent contraception would not bar recovery on theory of breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; however, under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), plaintiff was required to notify association of alleged breach of implied warranty. Berry v. G.D. Searle & Co., 56 Ill. 2d 548, 309 N.E.2d 550, 70 A.L.R.3d 304 (1974).

The sale of a salami for human consumption in which a piece of metal was embedded, was a breach of an implied warranty of fitness for which the seller was liable to the buyer for all injury or damage proximately resulting from the buyer's attempted consumption of the salami. Primak v. Star Mkt. Co., 38 Mass. App. Dec. 218 (1967).

Evidence established that a crusty roll sold by cart vendor to a customer was of such hardness that it was not reasonably fit for human consumption and entitled the customer to recover on ground of breach of implied warranty for damages sustained when his tooth broke off as he bit into roll. The fact that the customer's tooth might have been weak was no defense, since a vendor took the customer as he found him. Neither was the vendor relieved from liability by the fact that he might be classified as a restaurant keeper. Scanlon v. Food Crafts, Inc., 2 Conn. Cir. Ct. 3, 193 A.2d 610 (1963).

51. Drugs and medicine.

In action against pharmacist and physician to recover damages for stroke allegedly suffered as result of oral contraceptive drug available only by prescription, implied warranties of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and of fitness under UCC § 2-315 were not applicable to transaction with pharmacist, since pharmacist filled prescription as issued by physician. Furthermore, Physician issuing was not "seller" within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1) by virtue of issuing prescription for oral contraceptive drug and, thus, he was not subject to liability on theory of breach of implied warranties of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and of fitness under UCC § 2-315. Batiste v. American Home Prods. Corp., 32 N.C. App. 1, 231 S.E.2d 269 (1977), cert. denied, 292 N.C. 466, 233 S.E.2d 921 (1977).

52. Household products and chemicals.

In action by husband and wife against manufacturer of household cleaner to recover damages for injuries sustained by wife, allegedly resulting from use of cleaner to remove wax from floor, evidence that wife did not use dilutions recommended on label but instead used concentrations greatly exceeding those given in directions, manufacturer was not liable for breach of express or implied warranties, if any, where article was not used in normal manner or, as here, according to directions on label. Evershine Prods., Inc. v. Schmitt, 130 Ga. App. 34, 202 S.E.2d 228 (1973).

53. Packaging materials and containers.

Where manufacturer of gift or holiday boxes intended to be used as containers for individual bottles of purchaser's whiskey did not know the size of the shipping cases into which the packages were to be inserted and was never asked or expected to conform the packages to such size and form as would fit purchaser's standard cases, the fact that it was difficult if not impossible to fit the packages into the cases without damage did not constitute a breach of warranty under this section. Standard Packaging Corp. v. Continental Distilling Corp., 259 F. Supp. 919 (E.D. Pa. 1966), aff'd, 378 F.2d 505 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

54. Fixtures or the like.

Although, in proper case, implied warranty provisions of UCC might apply to "sale of goods" aspect of hybrid sales-service contract, where record was devoid of any evidence that pipe installed by subcontractor was unfit for its intended purpose and where entire thrust of plaintiffs' proof was that pipe was installed in negligent manner, trial court properly refused to charge jury with respect to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315. Milau Assocs. v. North Ave. Dev. Corp., 56 A.D.2d 587 (2d Dep't 1977), aff'd, 42 N.Y.2d 482, 398 N.Y.S.2d 882, 368 N.E.2d 1247 (1977).

55. —Carpeting.

In action arising when hotel refused to pay for specially manufactured carpeting because of excessive shading, there was no breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 where carpet conformed precisely to both description of goods contained in purchase order and to sample which had been approved by buyer; neither were implied warranties of merchantability and fitness breached under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315 where buyer relied on his own judgment to select goods and manufacturer was not at liberty to alter detailed specifications. Mohasco Indus., Inc. v. Anderson Halverson Corp., 90 Nev. 114, 520 P.2d 234 (1974).

56. —Sewage or waste treatment facility.

Where buyer brought suit in 1973 on defective sewage system installed in 1968, and thus limitation period was a controlling issue, trial court should have made findings of fact as to duration of express warranty, whether breach occurred during warranty period, and whether buyer commenced action within four years of discovering breach. Daughtry v. Jet Aeration Co., 91 Wash. 2d 704, 592 P.2d 631 (1979).

Packinghouse waste processing plant was constructed subject to implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 and to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, where seller knew particular purpose for which processing plant was required, buyer relied on seller's skill and judgment to furnish suitable plant, and these warranties were not excluded pursuant to UCC § 2-316. Omaha Pollution Control Corp. v. Carver-Greenfield Corp., 413 F. Supp. 1069 (D. Neb. 1976).

57. Building materials.

In action by roofing contractor against supplier of roofing materials to recover damages sustained when contractor was required to reroof buildings due to defective roofing materials supplied by defendant, supplier gave and breached implied warranty of fitness for particular use under UCC § 2-315 where, inter alia, particular use envisioned by contractor was that supplier's materials, when used in built-up roofing system, would produce 20 year bonded roof, where supplier's agents knew of particular use contemplated by contractor, and where materials supplied by defendant were inherently insufficient to produce 20 year bonded roof. Certain-Teed Prods. Corp. v. Goslee Roofing & Sheet Metal, Inc., 26 Md. App. 452, 339 A.2d 302 (1975).

58. —Paint or the like.

In action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose (UCC § 2-315) of industrial paint manufactured by defendant for application in electrodeposition process on plaintiff's products, court held (1) that express warranty (which defendant also had made with respect to its paint, but concerning which no issue was submitted to jury) and implied warranty of fitness were not mutually exclusive, (2) that plaintiff therefore had cause of action for defendant's breach of its implied warranty of fitness, and (3) that evidence sufficiently showed that defendant's paint had caused blotches and streaks on plaintiff's products. Singer Co. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 579 F.2d 433 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

In breach of warranty action by developer of subdivision against seller-manufacturer of coating product used on plywood exterior of certain of developer's houses following delamination and checking of surfaces painted with seller's product, finding that seller neither breached implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 nor implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was proper where there was evidence that coating material was free from defects and was proper material for use intended, and that delamination and checking occurred as result of combination of improper preparation of plywood surface and incompetent application of coating material. Shore Line Properties, Inc. v. Deer-O-Paints & Chems., Ltd, 24 Ariz. App. 331, 538 P.2d 760 (1975).

59. —Concrete.

The fact that concrete mixed with the vendor's patented equipment and according to its formula did not meet the standard required of it gave rise to no breach of an implied warranty of fitness where the contractor's use of the same did not depend upon its reliance on the vendor's skill and judgment, but was upon the contractor's own judgment and that of city engineers following initial tests. Vacuum Concrete Corp. of Am. v. Berlanti Constr. Co., 206 Pa. Super. 548, 214 A.2d 729 (1965).

60. Machinery and tools.

UCC § 2-314, implied warranty of merchantability, and UCC § 2-315, implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, would be extended to lease transaction under which equipment company leased three motor scraper units to construction company since same considerations which give rise to creation of implied warranties in sales transaction were present: lessor was merchant specializing in sale and leasing of heavy construction equipment and lessee claimed it relied on lessor's expertise; lessor placed product into stream of commerce and sought to reap economic benefits from lease of product; and, finally, lessor was in better position to control antecedent factors which affect condition of product. Furthermore, UCC § 2-316, which allows seller to disclaim implied warranties and provides specific means for such disclaimer, would be extended to lease in question by analogy. Glenn Dick Equip. Co. v. Galey Constr., Inc., 97 Idaho 216, 541 P.2d 1184 (1975).

61. —Pipe, tubing, or the like.

In action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose which arose when tests of water pipeline disclosed numerous leaks and in which there was conflicting evidence as to whether buyer notified seller that cement would not bond joints, buyer was precluded under UCC § 2-316 from claiming existence of implied warranty; buyer's confirmation that supplier's invoices showed that correct product had been ordered was not reasonable basis for continuing to construct with cement that was not satisfactory to experienced workmen making use of it and was not performing tasks for which it was purchased. Davis v. Pumpco, Inc., 519 P.2d 557 (Okla. Ct. App. 1974).

62. —Expansion joints.

In action for breach of express and implied warranties in sale of bellows-expansion joints purchased for use in buyer's steam utility system, (1) seller's recommendation in letter to buyer that joints be made of Monel metal, rather than stainless steel, did not amount to implied warranty of fitness of joints for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not inform seller that buyer was relying on seller to select metal that would satisfy buyer's need for an extremely anticorrosive substance; (2) buyer did not establish breach of implied warranty of merchantability of joints under UCC § 2-314(1), since joints furnished by seller met all quality standards prescribed by UCC § 2-314(2); (3) statement in seller's letter that seller would guarantee "operation of the application as well as the recommended expansion joints" if joints were installed according to seller's recommendations was not express warranty (see UCC § 2-313(1)(a)) that each joint would work, but was only guarantee that seller's application scheme for placement of joints would adequately absorb expansion and contraction of buyer's steam pipes; and (4) purchase-order warranty that joints would comply with all specifications and would be free of defects in workmanship and materials was not breached, since buyer (a) did not furnish any specifications as to required service longevity of joints or degree of their resistance to corrosion, and (b) alleged design defects of joints, with regard to seller's failure to anneal joints, liner design of joints, and thickness of bellow walls of joints, were not shown to have caused failure of joints after their installation in buyer's utility system. Wisconsin Elec. Power Co. v. Zallea Bros., 443 F. Supp. 946 (E.D. Wis. 1978), aff'd, 606 F.2d 697 (7th Cir. Wis. 1979).

In action by buyer of four oil tankers against shipbuilder-seller for consequential damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2) for losses incurred when tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures, in which shipbuilder filed third-party complaint against manufacturer of defective cargo pumps and manufacturer of pumps filed fourth-party complaint against manufacturer of defective expansion joints, (1) shipbuilder-seller breached express warranty to buyer under UCC § 2-313(1) that tankers would be built to operate efficiently and also implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 of merchantability and fitness of tankers for particular purpose (transportation of aviation fuels); (2) buyer of tankers was entitled only to consequential damages caused by defects in design and was not entitled to damages caused by defects in materials or workmanship; (3) shipbuilder-seller's foreseeable liability to buyer was $500,000, which was amount of adjusted revenues lost by buyer when two of its tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures due to defective design; (4) manufacturer of defective cargo pumps breached its express and implied warranties to shipbuilder and was liable, in amount of $2,000,000, for losses sustained by shipbuilder as result of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures in tankers sold to buyer (including shipbuilder's liability to buyer for lost revenues during period tankers were inoperative), but was not liable to shipbuilder for cost of installing separate stripping on each tanker; and (5) manufacturer of defective expansion joints, which were used in connection, with cargo pumps, breached its express and implied warranties concerning such joints and was liable to manufacturer of pumps for costs of replacing all defective joints. Falcon Tankers, Inc. v. Litton Sys., 380 A.2d 569 (Del. Super. 1977).

63. —Heaters and furnaces.

Since the heat pump manufacturer should have known when selling a heat pump that if it failed to properly heat, the buyers would seek alternative sources of heat, the buyers could recover for consequential damages suffered. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

Where plumbing and heating subcontractor selected, purchased and installed floor furnace in plaintiff's home, and where it was claimed that installation of furnace was faulty, installation of furnace by subcontractor was covered by implied warranties of UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315. O'Laughlin v. Minnesota Natural Gas Co., 253 N.W.2d 826 (Minn. 1977).

An implied warranty of fitness for the purpose intended was made in the sale of a furnace, where the seller knew that the particular purpose for which the buyers wanted the furnace was to heat their whole house, and the buyers relied upon the seller's judgment. Holland Furnace Co. v. Jackson, 106 Pitts. Legal J. 341 (Pa. 1958).

No implied warranty of fitness for the purpose intended arose out of a sale of a furnace, where at the time of the execution of the sales agreement it was contemplated by the parties that the unit installed might not satisfactorily heat the buyer's premises. Howard W. Frantz & Sons v. Moses, 54 Schuyl. L. Rec. 39 (Pa. 1958).

64. —Lawnmowers.

Implied warranty of fitness as to rotary power mower means implied warranty that mower was fit to cut grass safely when used in normal manner, not that plaintiff would not be injured when he fell on slope and his foot slipped under mower. Myers v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 253 Md. 282, 252 A.2d 855 (1969), but see Hartford Ins. Co. v. Manor Inn, 335 Md. 135, 642 A.2d 219 (1994).

65. —Gas cylinders.

An action for damages against the manufacturer of a valve attached to a cylinder of gas, predicated upon a breach of the implied warranty of fitness, was barred by the 4-year statute of limitations set out in § 2-725, where the cylinder and valve were purchased in March of 1956, the explosion causing injuries occurred in December of 1957 and suit was not filed until July of 1960. Rufo v. Bastian-Blessing Co., 417 Pa. 107, 207 A.2d 823 (1965).

No implied warranty of fitness for the purpose intended arose out of a sale of a pressurized cylinder of oxygen gas intended to be used in welding work where there was nothing to show that the oxygen failed in its purpose to increase the heat of a welding flame, and this section has no application to a personal injury action for damage resulting from a fire, particularly where the cylinder did not explode but was intact even after the fire had occurred. Delta Oxygen Co. v. Scott, 238 Ark. 534, 383 S.W.2d 885 (1964).

66. Motor vehicles and related equipment.

In breach-of-warranty action for damages by buyer of allegedly defective dump trailers against manufacturer-seller, court held (1) that buyer and its ultimate Mexican customers were “merchants” within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); (2) that seller was “merchant” within meaning of both UCC § 2-104(1) and § 2-314(1); (3) that telephoned order for 20 additional trailers was not enforceable under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) because it did not come within exceptions to such statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3); (4) that “specially manufactured goods” exception in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) applies only when seller, rather than buyer, seeks to escape statute-of-fraud defense; (5) that since three trailers purchased under valid written contract were put to improper use by buyer’s Mexican customers, rather than being used for their “ordinary purposes,” no breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) occurred; (6) that use of trailers for improper purposes, rather than for their stated “particular purpose,” prevented recovery under implied warranty of fitness in UCC § 2-315; (7) that buyer could not recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) because it failed to prove that it had relied on statements in manufacturer-seller’s brochure either prior to or contemporaneously with making of parties’ contract; and (8) that since buyer had no right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject two unused and undamaged trailers, manufacturer-seller was not required to retake them or to refund their purchase price to buyer. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

In an action for damages arising out of an alleged breach of implied and express warranties on a used automobile purchased by the plaintiff, no breach of any implied warranty of merchantability existed as a matter of law where the vehicle had been driven for over two years and 26,649 miles before the plaintiff experienced any difficulty with it; neither was there any breach of an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose where the vehicle had been purchased for a very ordinary purpose. Ford Motor Co. v. Fairley, 398 So. 2d 216 (Miss. 1981).

Under UCC § 2-315 and 2-316, there were no implied warranties in connection with sale of automobile since they were excluded by express “as is” in bill of sale. Lancaster v. Eberhardt, 141 Ga. App. 534, 233 S.E.2d 880 (1977).

Declaration alleging that negligent design of automobile enhanced injuries suffered by passenger when vehicle rolled over stated causes of action against manufacturer in negligence and for breach of warranty and stated a cause of action against dealer for breach of warranty. Frericks v. GMC, 274 Md. 288, 336 A.2d 118 (1975).

Language of automobile warranty disclaimer referred only to subject of express warranties, which warranties then expressly excluded radio and certain other equipment, so that there remained implied warranties that radio was fit for particular purpose for which it was supplied as standard equipment and was of merchantable quality. Mintz v. Daimler-Benz of N. Am., Inc., 73 Misc. 2d 212 (1973).

Where there was nothing to show that use of trucks on milk route would differ from use of ordinary trucks in general or that seller had any special skills relative to trucks on which buyer had relied, it was not against manifest weight of evidence for jury to have found that no warranty of fitness for a particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 existed. Janssen v. Hook, 1 Ill. App. 3d 318, 272 N.E.2d 385 (2d Dist. 1971).

Where the purchaser never intended to buy anything other than a 7-year-old secondhand automobile, the defendant never purported to sell anything other than such an automobile, the automobile was reasonably fit for the general purpose for which it was sold, and the purchaser did not rely solely upon any special judgment of the defendant, in the complete absence of any special warranties no rescission or recovery could be had of the seller. Basta v. Riviello, 66 Lack. Jur. 77 (Pa. 1964).

Where one could detect vibrations and whine in an automobile, when listening carefully, but the defect was a minor one which could be repaired, and in any event would disappear after the break-in period, this did not constitute a breach of an implied warranty that the automobile was fit for the ordinary purposes for which it was used, and the buyer was not justified in revoking his acceptance. Gruccella v. GMC, 10 Pa. D. & C.2d 65 (1957).

67. —Tires.

In action arising out of automobile accident which was allegedly caused by latent defect in recapped tire, driver of automobile was entitled to protection under UCC § 2-318 despite lack of privity of contract where she was member of purchaser's family; nor did lack of privity bar relief sought by innocent third party bystander; cause of action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was not stated where tires were purchased for general use upon ordinary highways; but cause of action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 was stated where sale of recapped tires by service station operator was not isolated sale and retailer qualified as merchant with respect to goods sold. McHugh v. Carlton, 369 F. Supp. 1271 (D.C.S.C. 1974).

Sale of retread tire carried with it implied warranty of fitness for particular auto on which it was installed. Van Winkle v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 117 Ill. App. 2d 324, 253 N.E.2d 588 (3d Dist. 1969).

68. Mobile homes.

In action by buyer of mobile home under UCC § 2-315 against seller for breach of implied warranty of fitness of home for particular purpose, breach of warranty was established by evidence which showed that at time buyer purchased home, it was infested with "confused flour beetles"; that presence of such insects in numbers described by plaintiff and his wife rendered home unfit for use as residence; and that defendant was responsible for home's defective condition. Sauers v. Tibbs, 48 Ill. App. 3d 805, 363 N.E.2d 444 (4th Dist. 1977).

69. Boats and watercraft.

Defendant seller breached implied warranty of fitness contained in UCC § 2-315, where plaintiff purchased houseboat, immediately had difficulty with engines attached thereon, sought advice of officer of defendant corporation as to what type of engines to install, and after following this advice, experienced 12 failures with power train package; plaintiff was entitled to rely upon representations of defendant that engines purchased would properly propel his houseboat. Chrysler Corp. v. Miller, 310 So. 2d 356 (Fla. App. 1975).

70. Aircraft.

An implied warranty of fitness existed as a matter of law where the seller knew purposes for which a helicopter was purchased by the buyer and the seller had itself stimulated and suggested some of the purposes, and it was uncontradicted that the buyer had relied on the seller's skill and judgment, it appearing that buyer's officers had no previous experience or knowledge relating to the operation or performance of helicopters. Boeing Airplane Co. v. O'Malley, 329 F.2d 585 (8th Cir. Minn. 1964).

71. Farm goods.

Where prior to using artificial insemination rancher got 95 percent calf crop via natural service, and obtained 70 percent calf crop during first year of artificial insemination, but obtained only 7 percent calf crop during second year using semen from same bull under almost identical conditions, only logical inference was that something was wrong with semen purchased in second year and that express warranties made by breeding service company to rancher were not met, nor were implied warranties of merchantability and fitness met. Waddell v. American Breeders Serv., Inc., 161 Mont. 221, 505 P.2d 417, 61 A.L.R.3d 801 (1973).

72. —Fixtures or the like.

A seller of farm machinery breached its new equipment warranty and the implied warranty of merchantability found in § 75-2-314(2)(c) where neither a new grain drill nor a used combine sold to the purchaser were fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods were to be used; the seller also breached the implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose found in § 75-2-315 where the evidence established that the purchaser relied upon the skill of the seller's salesman who had explained to the purchaser all that he knew about farming and had assisted the purchaser in selecting the equipment that he would need in his initial farming operation. A new agricultural equipment warranty which warrants new agricultural equipment to be free of defects in material and workmanship at the time of delivery to the first retail purchaser encompasses the proposition that the equipment will be in "field ready" condition; "field ready" condition simply means that the equipment is ready to be used in the field and is consistent with the warranty that the machinery is free of defects in material and workmanship at the time of delivery. The seller's attempt to avoid any warranty, express or implied, in relation to used equipment sold to the purchaser was prohibited by § 75-2-719(14). Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Evans, 406 So. 2d 15 (Miss. 1981).

Evidence in buyer's suit against manufacturer and seller of farm sprinkler irrigation system for breach of warranties made in connection with sale of system supported trial court's findings (1) that both manufacturer and seller had made and breached express warranties under UCC § 2-313 concerning system's operation and durability; (2) that both defendants had breached implied warranty of merchantability attaching to system under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); and (3) that both defendants had also breached implied warranty under UCC § 2-315 that system was fit for particular purpose for which buyer had purchased it. Moreover, since such express and implied warranties were made before date on which contract of sale was made, disclaimer of warranties contained in manufacturer's erection manual, which buyer received after entering into contract, did not negate such warranties (noting also that even if buyer had received manufacturer's erection manual before entering into contract, general warranty disclaimer contained in manual would not have destroyed specific express warranties that were made orally by seller and were set forth in writing in manufacturer's advertising brochure). Whitaker v. Farmhand, Inc., 173 Mont. 345, 567 P.2d 916 (1977).

73. —Livestock.

In action arising out of sale of bull, seller's answer, which alleged, inter alia, that by custom of trade in breeding animals there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose in sale of bull, was sufficient under UCC § 1-205(6) to put buyers on notice of defense of exclusion under UCC § 2-316 of implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315. Torstenson v. Melcher, 195 Neb. 764, 241 N.W.2d 103 (1976).

Where seller sold piglets for purpose of breeding and raising pigs and improving quality of herd, knowing buyer's requirements and knowing that buyer relied in seller to select and furnish suitable animals, implied warranty of fitness for specific purpose arose under UCC § 2-315 and seller was liable for breach of implied warranty of fitness where piglets were infected with disease which caused smaller litters and longer time to bring piglets to market condition; and such liability was not affected by fact that seller was unaware of existence of disease at time of sale and delivery of animals. Ruskamp v. Hog Bldrs., Inc., 192 Neb. 168, 219 N.W.2d 750 (1974).

In action by buyer of cattle which had brucellosis when purchased and could not be used for breeding as buyer planned, finding that there was no implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose was supported by evidence showing that buyer relied on his own judgment in selecting cattle to be purchased and did not inform sellers of his plans for cattle. Fear Ranches, Inc. v. Berry, 470 F.2d 905 (10th Cir. N.M. 1972).

74. —Feed.

In action by dairy farmer to recover damages from feed manufacturer for loss of milk production and injury to dairy cows allegedly caused by use of feed supplement, evidence was sufficient to establish breach of both express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where there was express representation that use of feed supplement would increase milk production and where there was decrease in milk production resulting from wrong instructions about proper way to use feed supplement. However, farmer was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2): (1) considering that there were many factors which could affect production of milk, to permit use of difference between total milk production figures for whole of year during which feed supplement was used for approximately 2 months, and total production figures for whole of preceding year, as measure of damages, would constitute rankest form of speculation and conjecture; (2) with respect to damages for decrease in market value of cows affected by feed, it could not reasonably be determined how much of decline in valuation of cattle between date of injury and day on which they were sold was attributable to injury and how much to changes, if any, in market value between those dates. Shotkoski v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 195 Neb. 22, 237 N.W.2d 92 (1975).

Where evidence made it clear that cattle food contained stilbestrol, and that the food had not been purchased for beef cattle, the tainted food constituted a clear breach of the implied warranty of merchantability and of the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose. Kassab v. Central Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

75. —Seed.

Seller of okra seed was liable to buyer for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, notwithstanding seller's claim that buyer neither informed seller of any particular purpose in ordering seed nor told seller about resale of seed to agricultural cooperative, where seller knew at time of contracting that buyer intended to resell seed, where seller in past knew that its seed was used to produce commercial crops, where buyer had no time to check quality of seed because its customer requested delivery of seed in one month, and where seller falsely labeled seed as "C/S okra" even though it was off variety. Agricultural Servs. Ass'n v. Ferry-Morse Seed Co., 551 F.2d 1057 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1977).

76. —Fertilizer and soil conditioners.

In action brought by buyer of fertilizer against seller for damages resulting when use of fertilizer on tobacco plants, represented by sellers to be appropriate and safe for tobacco, caused plants to wither and die, buyer's pleading stated cause of action under UCC § 2-313 for breach of express warranty rather than breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-315. Potter v. Tyndall, 22 N.C. App. 129, 205 S.E.2d 808 (1974), cert. denied, 285 N.C. 661, 207 S.E.2d 762 (1974).

77. —Pesticides and herbicides.

Distributor of weed killer was liable in damages to truck gardener purchaser whose crop of squash was substantially destroyed when he applied it under adverse weather conditions on the representation of distributor's agent that the chemical was suitable for immediate use. However the manufacturer was not liable, though the labels on its containers contained no warnings whatsoever as to use under adverse conditions. Wilson v. E-Z Flo Chem. Co., 281 N.C. 506, 189 S.E.2d 221 (1972).

A herbicide retailer, who answered farmers' question as to use of particular herbicide to meet particular needs, was held liable for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose when crop losses were sustained by farmers due to suggested application of herbicide. Dobias v. Western Farmers Ass'n, 6 Wash. App. 194, 491 P.2d 1346 (1971).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

The Mississippi Department of Information Technology Services deals in computer hardware, software, and computer services and has knowledge or skill peculiar to such transactions and so is clearly a “merchant” within the meaning of the statute. Litchliter, May 29, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0288.

Merchants can limit or disclaim implied warranties in offering computer hardware and computer software to the Mississippi Department of Information Technology Services (ITS) or other state agencies through ITS; however, ITS can make it a condition of any bid process or request for proposals or other offer to purchase that the computer hardware and software solicited carry the implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose or, indeed, any other standard it deems necessary and advisable. Litchliter, May 29, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0288.

§ 75-2-315.1. Limitation of exclusion or modification of warranties to consumers.

(1) Any oral or written language used by a seller of consumer goods and services, which attempts to exclude or modify any implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose or to exclude or modify the consumer's remedies for breach of those warranties, is unenforceable. However, the seller may recover from the manufacturer any damages resulting from breach of the implied warranty of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose.

(2) Any oral or written language used by a manufacturer of consumer goods, which attempts to limit or modify a consumer's remedies for breach of the manufacturer's express warranties, is unenforceable.

(3)(a) The provisions of this section do not apply to a motor vehicle:

(i) Required to be titled under the state law;

(ii) That is over six (6) model years old or that has been driven more than seventy-five thousand (75,000) miles; and

(iii) If, at the time of the sale of the motor vehicle, the seller gives the purchaser notice of the inapplicability of this section on the form prescribed by the State Attorney General.

(b)(i) An exclusion or modification of an implied warranty of merchantability, or any part of a warranty under this subsection shall be in writing, mention merchantability, and be conspicuous.

(ii) An exclusion or modification of the implied warranty of fitness shall be in writing and conspicuous.

(iii) Any exclusion or modification of either warranty shall be separately acknowledged by the signature of the buyer.

Nothing in this section shall prohibit the express disclaimer or express modification of any implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose or any express limitation of remedies for breach of such warranties concerning computer hardware, computer software, and services performed on computer hardware and computer software which are sold between merchants.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. Applicability.

The statute did not apply in an action arising from the installation of a roof on a manufacturing plant because (1) the owner of the plant hired a roofing consulting firm to monitor the roof installation and, therefore, the expertise of the roofing firm was imputed to it and it was a “merchant,” and (2) the roof was not “consumer goods.” Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Tarmac Roofing Sys., 276 F.3d 704 (5th Cir. 2002).

§ 75-2-317. Cumulation and conflict of warranties express or implied.

Warranties whether express or implied shall be construed as consistent with each other and as cumulative, but if such construction is unreasonable the intention of the parties shall determine which warranty is dominant. In ascertaining that intention the following rules apply:

(a) Exact or technical specifications displace an inconsistent sample or model or general language of description.

(b) A sample from an existing bulk displaces inconsistent general language of description.

(c) Express warranties displace inconsistent implied warranties other than an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Unless the implied warranty of fitness is specifically and conspicuously excluded, courts, often relying on UCC § 2-317 (providing that whenever it is reasonable, warranties, whether express or implied, shall be construed to be consistent with each other and cumulative), have found that it and an express warranty can be cumulative and coexist within the same agreement. Singer Co. v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 579 F.2d 433 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

In action by buyers of air conditioner against seller for breach of seller's implied warranty of merchantability, trial court erred in concluding that seller's implied warranty was not effective until after manufacturer's express warranty had expired; there was no language in contract of sale or express warranty which excluded or modified implied warranty of merchantability arising out of sale, and seller's implied warranty was not so inconsistent with manufacturer's express warranty that both could not exist under UCC § 2-317. Lee v. Air Care, Inc., 325 A.2d 598 (D.C. 1974).

In an action brought by buyer against seller of paint for breach of implied warranties of fitness under UCC § 2-315 when paint, purchased as primer for structural steel, failed to adhere and prevent rusting, defendant-seller's contention that specifications for paint disclosed intent that express specifications should supersede any implied warranty under UCC § 2-317 was rejected where understanding that suitable paint to provide primer coat for steel was needed was inherent in all dealings between parties and specifications were not exact or technical specifications, and even if specifications could be construed as express warranty, express warranty cannot displace implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose. Geo. C. Christopher & Son v. Kansas Paint & Color Co., 215 Kan. 185, 523 P.2d 709 (1974), modified on denial of reh'g, 215 Kan. 510, 525 P.2d 626 (1974).

Where seller sold piglets for purpose of breeding and raising pigs and improving quality of herd, knowing buyer's requirements and knowing that buyer relied on seller to select and furnish suitable animals, implied warranty of fitness for specific purpose arose under UCC § 2-315 and seller was liable for breach of implied warranty of fitness where piglets were infected with disease which caused smaller litters and longer time to bring piglets to market condition; and seller's purchase order and guarantee form containing express warranties that animals were vaccinated for certain diseases did not operate to displace any implied warranties of fitness under UCC 2-317. Ruskamp v. Hog Bldrs., Inc., 192 Neb. 168, 219 N.W.2d 750 (1974).

In a case decided under former law the defense of implied warranty of fitness, although it should have been pleaded as an affirmative defense, was nevertheless an issue in the trial for breach of contract by farmer against canner who refused tomatoes because their condition and quality was unacceptable and the verdict for the farmer was properly set aside as compromise. Robusto v. Furber, 34 A.D.2d 1093 (4th Dep't 1970).

The express written warranty of merchantability contained in a contract of sale of a number of drink pouring devices could not exclude or modify the warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, since these warranties are not inconsistent and the warranty of fitness is expressly saved from such exclusion by subsection (c) of this section of the Commercial Code. L. & N. Sales Co. v. Stuski, 188 Pa. Super. 117, 146 A.2d 154 (1958).

A. In General.

1. Generally.

The fact that the plaintiff brought and lost an action for breach of warranty does not bar him from bringing a second action based on negligence of the vendor-manufacturer; the first action does not in any way bar the second because the remedies are consistent [The court rejected as dicta numerous statements in the cases which would suggest that the plaintiff had to make an election of remedies by the time of the trial, and also rejected the view that the plaintiff was barred by principles of res judicata or estoppel]. Silverman v. Oil City Glass Bottle Co., 203 Pa. Super. 400, 199 A.2d 509 (1964).

2. Comparison with other laws.

See Greenberg v. Lorenz, 9 N.Y.2d 195, 173 N.E.2d 773 (1961), following the rule of § 2-318 prior to the adoption of the Code in New York, permitting minor child of buyer to sue retail food seller.

Under the Sales Act, which has been superseded by the Uniform Commercial Code, an action for breach of warranty could be brought only by the one to whom the warranty was given, but under § 2-318 of the Uniform Commercial Code the warranty would cover "any natural person who is in the family or household" of the buyer. Sullivan v. H.P. Hood & Sons, 341 Mass. 216, 168 N.E.2d 80 (1960).

3. Retroactive application.

In suit by person suffering from degenerative osteoarthritis against manufacturer of artificial hip prosthesis for breach of implied warranty of fitness and merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314, where evidence showed that device manufactured by defendant was implanted in plaintiff's hip in September, 1971, that device failed to function properly in May, 1974, and that plaintiff suffered pain as result, judgment for plaintiff under 1973 amendment of Massachusetts version of UCC § 2-318, which eliminated requirement of privity with respect to third-party beneficiaries of express or implied warranties, was proper because (1) plaintiff's injury occurred after effective date of such amendment; and (2) since amendment's elimination of privity requirement had as its purpose deemphasizing sale transaction and emphasizing harm that may result from defects contained in items in commerce that cause injury to class of persons specified in amendment, fact that defendant's device was sold before enactment of amendment did not bar plaintiff's recovery on ground that amendment would thus be applied retroactively.

Hoffman v. Howmedica, Inc., 373 Mass. 32, 364 N.E.2d 1215 (1977).

In action arising when aluminum step-ladder which had been loaned to plaintiff collapsed, plaintiff could not recover for breach of implied warranty where application of code to "transactions in goods" under UCC § 2-102 was not extended to loan of goods which were sold before UCC became law and question of whether plaintiff was foreseeable user of goods under UCC § 2-318 was moot. Harvey v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 315 A.2d 599 (Del. Super. 1973).

4. Conflict of laws.

In action by employees under third-party-beneficiary-of-warranty provisions in Alabama version of UCC § 2-318 for breach of warranties made in connection with sale of sandblasting hoods and respirators, evidence that such items were sold to Alabama company for resale in Alabama, that items were to be used in Alabama, and that warranties made in connection with items were to be performed in Alabama was sufficient to establish appropriate relationship necessary under UCC § 1-105(1) to apply Alabama law to controversy. Simmons v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 433 F. Supp. 747 (S.D. Ala. 1976), aff'd sub nom. Love v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 560 F.2d 1021 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977), aff'd, 560 F.2d 1022 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977).

In action by employees under third-party-beneficiary-of-warranty provisions in Alabama version of UCC § 2-318 for silicosis injuries allegedly sustained as result of breach of warranties made in connection with sale of sandblasting hoods and respirators used by plaintiffs in their work, four-year statute of limitations prescribed by Alabama version of UCC § 2-725(1) applied and began to run from time of plaintiffs' injury. Accordingly, (1) since under Alabama law silicosis is deemed to be continuing injury time of which is determined by last date of exposure, and (2) since last date of exposure is deemed to be last date of employment in work causing such injury, statute of limitations in present case began to run on last date plaintiffs used the defective hoods and respirators in their employment. Simmons v. American Mut. Liab.

Ins. Co., 433 F. Supp. 747 (S.D. Ala. 1976), aff'd sub nom. Love v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 560 F.2d 1021 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977), aff'd, 560 F.2d 1022 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977).

5. Tort liability distinguished.

Under the traditional doctrine of strict liability in tort, a manufacturer who places a defective product on the market may be held liable for damages incurred by virtue of the product if it was placed on the market in the regular course of business, the rule applying in New York to those responsible for placing the defective product in the market place including manufacturers, distributors, retailers, processors and makers of component parts; the doctrine of strict products liability is not applicable to providers of services, including repairmen; however, in a proper case, a hybrid service-sale transaction where the defendant is both a repairer and seller can give rise to a cause of action for breach of warranty (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-318) or strict products liability if the sales aspect of the transaction predominates and the service aspect is merely incidental; accordingly, since defendant only repaired a forklift which exploded causing injuries to plaintiff and no sale was involved, no cause of action for strict products liability in tort lies. Nickel v. Hyster Co., 97 Misc. 2d 770 (1978).

Employee of dry-cleaning plant, who was injured when his clothing caught fire after being saturated with cleaning solvent and who, with respect to use of such solvent, was covered by warranties of fitness for purpose and merchantability contained in UCC § 2-314, § 2-315, and § 2-318, could not recover from manufacturers and distributors of solvent on theory of strict liability in tort for defective manufacture and failure to warn plaintiff of its flammability since legislature, by adopting Uniform Commercial Code, preempted field of tort liability in direct sale relationships, so as to prevent court from applying strict liability doctrine. Wilhelm v. Globe Solvent Co., 373 A.2d 218 (Del. Super. 1977) but see Wilhelm v. Globe Solvent Co., 411 A.2d 611 (Del. 1979).

Legislative adoption of UCC warranties without privity provision does not preclude judicial adoption of theory of strict liability in tort, and warranties provided by UCC are not exclusive means of recovery without showing of negligence or fault. Larson v. Clark Equip. Co., 33 Colo. App. 277, 518 P.2d 308 (1974).

Whether the defendant manufacturer warranted the product is immaterial when he is sued in trespass for negligence in its manufacture. Grove v. York County Gas Co., 25 Pa. D. & C.2d 522 (1962).

6. Services distinguished.

There is no "sale" to a beauty parlor customer of materials used in giving her treatments, for the materials used in the performance of such services are patently incidental to the treatment itself and do not constitute a purchase of an article by the customer. Epstein v. Giannattasio, 25 Conn. Supp. 109, 197 A.2d 342 (1963).

A former section of the Connecticut Sales Act extended the warranty of fitness of food or drink "to the purchaser and to all persons for whom such food or drink is intended" whereas § 2-315 extends an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, if the seller has reason to know of that purpose, and § 2-318 extends an express or implied warranty to any person in the family or household of the buyer, or who is a guest in his home. Thus, it would seem that the Uniform Commercial Code represents an expansion of the old law to include any article, and a contraction from "all persons for whom...[it] is intended." Simpson v. Powered Prods. of Mich., Inc., 24 Conn. Supp. 409, 192 A.2d 555 (1963).

B. Scope of Protection.

7. In general.

Regardless of privity, merchant who sold shotgun to father of decedent might be held liable as third-party defendant in action by mother of decedent against minor who shot decedent. Shell v. Watts, 125 Ga. App. 542, 188 S.E.2d 269 (1972), rev'd on other grounds, 229 Ga. 474, 192 S.E.2d 265 (1972), on remand, 127 Ga. App. 378, 193 S.E.2d 566 (1972).

Pennsylvania has joined the fast growing list of jurisdictions that have eliminated the privity requirement in assumpsit suits by purchasers against remote manufacturers for breach of implied warranty. Kassab v. Central Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

There is no rational basis for distinguishing, as respects person in whose favor warranties run, in terms of the nature of the product. Simpson v. Powered Prods. of Mich., Inc., 24 Conn. Supp. 409, 192 A.2d 555 (1963).

Plaintiff, made ill by a hot dog purchased for her by a boyfriend in defendant's restaurant was not a third party beneficiary under the provisions of this section and could not recover against defendant, for she was not a member of buyer's family or household, or a guest in his house at the time she ate the offending food. Galanek v. Howard Johnson, Inc., 24 Mass. App. Dec. 134 (1962).

This section was intended to have application only when a person, not the buyer, seeks his remedy against the buyer's immediate seller. Kaczmarkiewicz v. J.A. Williams Co., 13 Pa. D. & C.2d 14 (1958).

8. Reasonable expectation of use.

Automobile manufacturer was not liable for injury to child which occurred when child, who was riding his bicycle, collided with automobile and impact of collision broke parking light on automobile, causing tendon in child's knee to be severed, although child was within class of persons who might reasonably be expected to be affected by such automobile under UCC § 2-318, where vehicle in question was fit for ordinary purposes for which such vehicle is used under UCC § 2-314; part of car involved was essential item on car, and not mere ornamentation; of necessity lens had to be made of transparent or translucent material and, in general, such materials are fragile; light did not shatter under normal usage, but shattered under impact with metal; and breakage resulted from external force and injury did not occur to user of vehicle. Nacci v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 325 A.2d 617 (Del. Super. 1974).

Elimination of lack of privity as a defense in any action brought against the manufacturer or seller of goods for breach of warranty, if the plaintiff was a person whom the manufacturer or seller might reasonably have expected to use, consume or be affected by the goods, was applicable to economic or commercial losses and was not restricted to cases involving injury or damage to persons or property. Mack Trucks of Ark., Inc. v. Jet Asphalt & Rock Co., 246 Ark. 101, 437 S.W.2d 459 (1969), but see, Cavette v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 260 Ark. 874, 545 S.W.2d 612 (1977).

The legislature has provided for a specific implied warranty, extending from the manufacturer to third party beneficiaries including any natural person who is in the family or household of the buyer or who is a guest in the buyer's home if it is reasonable to expect that such person may use or be affected by the goods and who is injured by breach of warranty. Finocchiaro v. Ward Baking Co., 104 R.I. 5, 241 A.2d 619 (1968).

9. Particular persons or classes.

Airplane passenger could maintain action for personal injuries against airplane manufacturer, based on breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-715, notwithstanding passenger was not in privity with manufacturer. Roberts v. General Dynamics, Convair Corp., 425 F. Supp. 688 (S.D. Tex. 1977).

Breach of warranty action based on personal injuries to purchaser who is natural person is cognizable under UCC § 2-318 and therefore is not prohibited from being maintained in conjunction with action based on strict tort liability. Cerrato v. R.H. Crown Co., 58 A.D.2d 721 (3d Dep't 1977).

No cause of action for breach of express or implied warranty existed, in insurer's action as subrogee against company supplying defective filtration plant equipment to subcontracting company insured by plaintiff, where (1) no seller-buyer relationship or sale contract existed under UCC § 2-314 and § 2-315 between subcontracting company and defendant supplier and (2) plaintiff insurer was neither "natural person" nor "injured in person" within meaning of UCC § 2-318. Potsdam Welding & Mach. Co. v. Neptune Microfloc, Inc., 57 A.D.2d 993 (3d Dep't 1977).

Where there was no exclusion or modification by manufacturer of any warranties in sale of printing press to distributor-retailer, implied warranty of merchantability was created under South Dakota UCC § 2-314(1) which extended under South Dakota UCC § 2-318 to print-shop operator who bought press from distributor. Drier v. Perfection, Inc., 259 N.W.2d 496 (S.D. 1977).

Although Georgia formerly followed traditional view requiring privity in contract actions based on warranties, Georgia UCC § 2-318 has extended vertical privity under contract only to original purchaser and horizontal privity to any natural person who is in original purchaser's family or household, or who is guest in his home, if certain stated conditions are met. However, privity is not extended to purchaser's employee. Beam v. Omark Indus., Inc., 143 Ga. App. 142, 237 S.E.2d 607 (1977).

In action by husband and wife, who were customers of purchaser, against manufacturer of plastic container for damages resulting when container fell from shelf and contents spilled onto wife's body, UCC § 2-725 statute of limitations for breach of warranty actions was inapplicable because under UCC § 2-318, plaintiffs were beyond scope of statutory warranty protection and action was governed by two-year statute of limitations for actions for injuries to rights of another. Moss v. Polyco, Inc., 522 P.2d 622 (Okla. 1974).

UCC § 2-318 does not limit the claims of persons who can sue for breach of contract to those persons enumerated in that Section. Dippel v. Sciano, 37 Wis. 2d 443, 155 N.W.2d 55 (1967).

A sale of goods in Pennsylvania extends warranties to the buyer, members of the buyer's family or household, or to any natural person who is a guest in the buyer's home. Wilson v. American Chain & Cable Co., 216 F. Supp. 32 (E.D. Pa. 1963).

10. —Family or household member.

In action against dealer, who assembled truck and camper unit sold to plaintiffs, for injuries sustained by plaintiffs and their niece when truck's rear tire blew out and caused truck to go out of control, (1) evidence showed that blowout was caused by combination of vehicle overloading and rear tire's underinflation, (2) adequate warnings were not contained in operator's manual furnished with truck by manufacturer, or by "rating plate" affixed by manufacturer to truck's door which listed recommended maximum gross vehicle weight rating, (3) plaintiffs' niece was member of class of persons who under UCC § 2-318 are third-party beneficiaries of express and implied warranties, and (4) since warnings furnished by truck's manufacturer were inadequate to prevent danger of blowout when truck and camper unit were used by ordinary user for purposes for which such goods are ordinarily used, and since a product is unmerchantable if it is sold without a suitable warning, dealer's sale breached warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c). Sorensen v. Travelers Indem. Co., 1978 Adv. Sheets 550 (Mass. App. Div. 1978).

Although wife purchased automobile from dealer, husband was proper party to bring action for breach of warranty where, inter alia, husband filled out credit application, signed note and was making payments from joint efforts of husband and wife. Black v. Littleton, 532 P.2d 486 (Okla. Ct. App. 1975).

Both seller and manufacturer of new car with defective tie-rod assembly were liable for injuries sustained by owner's son under breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Langford v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 373 F. Supp. 1251 (E.D.N.Y. 1974), aff'd, 513 F.2d 1121 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1975).

Seven-year-old child was entitled to benefit of express warranty that product was "non-toxic," even though child was unable to read the label. Tirino v. Kenner Prods. Co., 72 Misc. 2d 1094 (1973).

Infant nephew of buyer, living in house next door to buyer's, was in her family within the meaning of this section, and when he was scalded to death by vaporizer-humidifier purchased by buyer, his personal representative could maintain an action in assumpsit under "survival" statute against retail seller of device. Miller v. Preitz, 422 Pa. 383, 221 A.2d 320 (1966), but see, Kassb v. Central Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

A married stepdaughter of the purchaser of an automobile was held to be a member of his family within the meaning of this section. Johnson v. Fore River Motors, Inc., 26 Mass. App. Dec. 184 (1963).

Where nine-year-old son of purchaser of bottled beer was injured by a defect in the bottle when opening the beer at his father's direction he was entitled to sue the seller under § 2-318. Harris v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 23 Mass. App. Dec. 169 (1962).

Under the Sales Act, which has been superseded by the Uniform Commercial Code, an action for breach of warranty could be brought only by the one to whom the warranty was given, but under § 2-318 of the Uniform Commercial Code the warranty would cover "any natural person who is in the family or household" of the buyer. Sullivan v. H.P. Hood & Sons, 341 Mass. 216, 168 N.E.2d 80 (1960).

This section extends the benefit of warranties, express or implied, to any natural person in the family or household of the buyer, under some circumstances. Jacquot v. Wm. Filene's Sons Co., 337 Mass. 312, 149 N.E.2d 635 (1958).

11. —Guests.

A minor third party beneficiary as to a manufacturer's express and implied warranties injured while a guest in the home of the ultimate purchaser of a bicycle, as a consequence of its defective condition, has a cause of action against the manufacturer and no notice is required to be given the manufacturer by such third party beneficiary. Tomczuk v. Town of Cheshire, 26 Conn. Supp. 219, 217 A.2d 71 (1965).

A minor guest in the home of the ultimate purchaser of a child's bicycle who was caused to be thrown from it and injured, due to certain alleged defects in the bicycle charged to have resulted from a breach of the manufacturer's warranty, has a cause of action against the manufacturer. Tomczuk v. Town of Cheshire, 26 Conn. Supp. 219, 217 A.2d 71 (1965).

12. —Automobile guests distinguished.

In breach of warranty action against automobile manufacturer by one who had borrowed automobile from its owner, plaintiff was not entitled to take advantage of any warranties implied by UCC, since evidence showed that she was not member of family or household or guest in home of buyer so as to escape privity requirement. Williams v. GMC, 19 N.C.

App. 337, 198 S.E.2d 766 (1973), cert. denied, 284 N.C. 258, 200 S.E.2d 659 (1973).

Plaintiff-auto passenger was not purchaser of automobile and could not obtain benefit of any warranties extended by automobile manufacturer to purchaser under Pennsylvania law which has eliminated only vertical and not horizontal privity. Dyson v. GMC, 298 F. Supp. 1064 (E.D. Pa. 1969).

The "guest in his home" provision of this section cannot be extended to include "guest in his automobile," and an automobile guest passenger who was injured when a new tire purchased by the automobile owner blew out cannot maintain an action in assumpsit against the seller of the tire on the theory that he had breached express and implied warranties of the tire's merchantability and fitness. Marcus v. Spada Bros. Auto Serv., 41 Pa. D. & C.2d 794 (1967).

13. —Lessees and lessors.

Manufacturer of common, household drain cleaner that contained highly caustic concentration of sodium hydroxide, breached its implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(2)(c) by marketing product that was inherently and unnecessarily dangerous, and therefore not "fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods are used." Furthermore, under UCC § 2-318 such warranty inured to benefit of child whose mother was tenant in purchaser's boarding house and who was injured by drain cleaner. Drayton v. Jiffie Chem. Corp., 1 Ohio Op. 3d 325, 395 F. Supp. 1081 (N.D. Ohio 1975), motion denied, 413 F. Supp. 834 (N.D. Ohio 1976), modified, 12 Ohio Op. 3d 135, 591 F.2d 352 (N.D. Ohio 1978).

Although lessee of machine does not directly receive benefit of warranties made by seller to lessor-buyer, lessee under UCC § 2-318 may be third-party beneficiary of such warranties who could reasonably be expected to use, consume, or be affected by the goods. Lease Fin., Inc. v. Burger, 40 Colo. App. 107, 575 P.2d 857 (1977).

Lessee of real estate did not come within class of persons under UCC § 2-318 to whom seller's express or implied warranty extended where sale of hot water heater was made to owner of real estate. Neofes v. Robertshaw Controls Co., 409 F. Supp. 1376 (S.D. Ind. 1976).

Corporate landlord, whose premises were damaged as result of alleged defect in chemicals purchased by tenant, was not entitled under UCC § 2-318 to assert breach of warranty claim against seller of chemical. Monsanto Co. v. Alden Leeds, Inc., 130 N.J. Super. 245, 326 A.2d 90 (1974).

In third-party action by lessees of printing equipment against manufacturer of equipment for breach of warranty, after lessee had refused to make further payments on lease and lessor repossessed equipment, sold it and brought action against lessees for balance due on lease under their separate guarantee of lease: (1) although privity of contract was requisite to action for breach of warranty, not involving personal injury, manufacturer was estopped from denying lessees benefits of express warranty in present case where equipment was delivered to lessees and was serviced by manufacturer, manufacturer's machine warranty was delivered to lessee, and numerous service calls were made without charge as result of manufacturer's having voluntarily extended 30-day guarantee period because machinery would not stay in adjustment; (2) measure of damages provided in UCC § 2-714(2) was not only recovery possible, lessees were entitled to keep goods and seek incidental and consequential damages as well, provided manufacturer was given, as it was, reasonable notice of defect as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and, hence, lessees were entitled to recover pursuant to UCC § 2-715, as consequential damage, amount they were forced to pay lessor under guaranty. Addressograph-Multigraph Corp. v. Zink, 273 Md. 277, 329 A.2d 28 (1974).

Where an automobile is leased, an action cannot be brought against the lessor for breach of an implied warranty of fitness by a third person injured as privity is lacking between him and the lessor. Debbis v. Hertz Corp., 269 F. Supp. 671 (D. Md. 1967). But see Farwell v. Un, 902 F.2d 282 (4th Cir. Md. 1990).

14. —Employees and repairmen; protected.

Where automobile body repairman was injured as result of using defective body alignment clamp manufactured by defendant and sold to repairman's employer, repairman's breach of warranty claim as third party beneficiary of warranties under UCC § 2-318, was not barred by his failure to notify seller of breach prior to filing suit, notwithstanding repairman dealt directly with defendant's salesman and requested his employer to buy clamps. Mattos, Inc. v. Hash, 279 Md. 371, 368 A.2d 993 (1977).

Defense of lack of privity was not available to manufacturer of industrial drain cleaner where personal injury action by purchaser's employee was based on strict statutory tort liability, not on contract. Center Chem. Co. v. Parzini, 234 Ga. 868, 218 S.E.2d 580 (1975), on remand, 136 Ga. App. 396, 221 S.E.2d 475 (1975).

Employee of purchaser of steam boiler, who was injured when boiler exploded, was not barred from bringing action for breach of warranty against manufacturer of boiler, though he was not within class of persons enumerated in UCC § 2-318 and lacked "horizontal" privity. Salvador v. Atlantic Steel Boiler Co., 457 Pa. 24, 319 A.2d 903 (1974).

Injured employee of purchaser of steam boiler which exploded was entitled to sue seller in assumpsit for breach of implied warranty despite lack of contractual privity between injured party and seller and despite Code § 2-318 extending seller's warranty to "any natural person who is in the family or household of his buyer or who is a guest in his home." Salvador v. I.H. English of Phila., Inc., 224 Pa. Super. 377, 307 A.2d 398 (1973), aff'd, 457 Pa. 24, 319 A.2d 903 (1974).

Plaintiff who alleged that he was injured when he was struck in head by piece of wood expelled from orifice in side of wood chipping machine manufactured by defendant and sold to plaintiff's employer, while such machine was being used for its intended purpose, stated claim for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-318; in light of fundamental policy of § 2-318, plaintiff, by virtue of being employee of last purchaser of wood chipper and who in course of his employment duties was required to be in contact with, or close proximity to, that machine, was beneficiary of warranties given to his employer; plaintiff's employer would want plaintiff, as "donee-beneficiary," to be protected by warranties, expressed or implied, relating to fitness and safety of wood chipper when used for purposes for which it was intended, and plaintiff, as employee of corporate "buyer," may be regarded as member of such "family" as corporation may reasonably be said to have. McNally v. Nicholson Mfg. Co., 313 A.2d 913 (Me. 1973).

Since a hotel manager who, on behalf of his employer, personally purchased from a state liquor store champagne which was intended for the use and consumption by guests of the hotel was a buyer within the meaning of § 2-103 and definitely in the distributive chain, the manager could maintain an action against the wine producer and bottler, predicated on alleged breach of implied warranty, for injury sustained when a cap from one of the bottles suddenly ejected, propelled through the air and hit the manager in the eye. Yentzer v. Taylor Wine Co., 414 Pa. 272, 199 A.2d 463, 2 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 151 (1964).

The court stating that the rigid construction placed on a seller's warranty in Hochgertel v. Canada Dry Corp., 409 Pa. 610, 187 A.2d 575, 1 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 130 (1963), should not be extended to the instant situation. Yentzer v. Taylor Wine Co., 414 Pa. 272, 199 A.2d 463, 2 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 151 (1964).

15. —Employees and repairmen; not protected.

UCC § 2-318 does not extend coverage of implied warranty of merchantability to employees of purchaser; thus, plaintiff who was injured while using cleaning compound purchased by his employer was barred from recovering against manufacturer of cleaning compound on theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Hester v. Purex Corp., 534 P.2d 1306 (Okla. 1975).

Truck driver who obtained gasoline for his employer's truck and charged gasoline to his employer was not in privity with service station that sold gasoline and, thus, could not maintain action for breach of warranty against service station for injuries sustained when his truck became disabled and was struck by another vehicle allegedly as result of water in gasoline; under UCC § 2-103(1)(a) truck driver was not "buyer" of gasoline, but mere agent of buyer to whom UCC sales warranties did not extend; under UCC § 2-314 employee of buyer was not in privity with seller. Weaver v. Ralston Motor Hotel, Inc., 135 Ga. App. 536, 218 S.E.2d 260 (1975).

In action against seller of garage door, maid employed by buyer at time of injury sustained when folding panels of door amputated her finger was not within category of persons benefiting from implied warranty extending "to any natural person who is in the family or household of his buyer or who is a guest in his home." Verddier v. Neal Blun Co., 128 Ga. App. 321, 196 S.E.2d 469 (1973).

Statute abolishing requirement of privity in all actions for personal injury, whether brought under theory of tort, negligence or warranty was substantive change in law and could not be applied retrospectively to action for damages resulting from injuries sustained by plaintiff in fall from defective ladder which plaintiff's employer had purchased from defendant manufacturer. Anderson v. Watling Ladder Co., 472 F.2d 576 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1973).

Privity requirement bars breach of warranty action brought by employee against employer's vendor. Tucker v. Capitol Mach., Inc., 307 F. Supp. 291 (M.D. Pa. 1969).

Where plaintiff-electrician was injured when fuse exploded during repair, plaintiff was beyond scope of statutory warranty protection where he had not purchased fuse from defendant; count in plaintiff's complaint alleging breach of statutory express and implied warranties dismissed. Klimas v. ITT, 297 F. Supp. 937 (D.R.I. 1969).

The employee of the buyer cannot sue the seller or the manufacturer for breach of warranty as such action is barred by the absence of privity. Haley v. Allied Chem. Corp., 353 Mass. 325, 231 N.E.2d 549 (1967).

A wholesale dealer of a stepladder was not liable under this section for breach of warranty, in an action brought by an employee of one who purchased the stepladder from a retail dealer, for injuries sustained by the employee when the stepladder collapsed, because even if the employee were considered a member of the buyer's household, she could proceed only against the retail seller, with whom the buyer was in privity, and not against the remote vendor. Kaczmarkiewicz v. J.A. Williams Co., 13 Pa. D. & C.2d 14 (1958).

16. —Military personnel.

Member of armed forces injured by product purchased by Federal government did not fall within ambit of UCC § 2-318 which extends seller's warranty to third party beneficiary of contract only if he is in family or household of buyer or guest in his house. Miles v. Bell Helicopter Co., 385 F. Supp. 1029 (N.D. Ga. 1974).

Enlisted man could not sue manufacturer of grenade or grenade fuse for breach of warranty because of lack of privity. Whitaker v. Harvell-Kilgore Corp., 418 F.2d 1010, 38 A.L.R.3d 1229 (5th Cir. Ga. 1969), reh'g denied, 424 F.2d 549, 38 A.L.R.3d 1244 (5th Cir. Ga. 1970).

17. —Subpurchasers.

Plaintiff, the subpurchaser of a defective used crane, may not recover its economic loss resulting from the inability to make use of the defective crane from defendant, the manufacturer of the crane, under the theory of breach of warranty since there is no contractual relationship between the parties and therefore no warranty either express or implied under the Uniform Commercial Code; the extended protection of warranty to persons who may reasonably be expected to use, consume or be affected by goods, is afforded only to natural persons who suffer personal injuries (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-318) or to subpurchasers who justifiably relied upon representations made by the manufacturer to the public through advertising and in labels tagged to the goods themselves (see Randy Knitwear v. American Cyanamid Co., 11 NY2d 5) and plaintiff, which purchased the crane "as is", assumed risks based on the prior use of the crane and cannot show justifiable reliance and, in any event, since the crane was delivered to the initial purchaser in 1970, the action based on breach of warranty is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Steckmar Nat'l Realty & Inv. Corp. v. JI Case Co., 99 Misc. 2d 212 (1979).

Auto manufacturer sold auto in defective condition so as to be unreasonably dangerous; held, manufacturer was subject to liability for harm caused by auto to innocent bystander or to his property. Wasik v. Borg, 423 F.2d 44 (2d Cir. Vt. 1970).

The employee of a subpurchaser cannot sue the remote manufacturer for breach of implied warranty. Carney v. Barnett, 278 F. Supp. 572 (E.D. Pa. 1967).

The extension of warranties to the third party beneficiaries listed in this section is not intended to exclude others, and is not intended to enlarge or restrict the developing case law on whether the seller's warranties, given to his buyer who resells, extend to other persons in the distributive chain. Rhodes Pharmacal Co. v. Continental Can Co., 72 Ill. App. 2d 362, 219 N.E.2d 726 (1st Dist. 1966).

The exception to the privity requirement that a sub-purchaser is entitled to recover from a manufacturer of an automobile part that is inherently dangerous or defectively manufactured is not superseded nor modified by the provisions of this section. Suvada v. White Motor Co., 51 Ill. App. 2d 318, 201 N.E.2d 313 (1st Dist. 1964), aff'd, 32 Ill. 2d 612, 210 N.E.2d 182 (1965).

Where subpurchaser had purchased water heater from the former owner of a dwelling to which it was fixed, and the former owner had brought the water heater from a dealer who in turn had purchased the appliance from the manufacturer, an action, predicated on breach of express or implied warranties, could not be maintained against the manufacturer for injuries resulting in the death of the subpurchaser when the water heater exploded in her cellar. Under Massachusetts law lack of privity is an absolute defense to an action for breach of an express or implied warranty. Barnard v. Pennsylvania Range Boiler Co., 216 F. Supp. 560 (E.D. Pa. 1963).

Although it would appear that the plaintiffs were correct in their contention that under Pennsylvania law lack of privity is not a defense to suit by subpurchaser or members of his family against the manufacturer on breach of warranty principles, the court could not strike the privity defense in an action against the manufacturer to recover for injuries sustained by the son of a subpurchaser where no showing had been made as to whether the warranty involved was express or implied, and there was no showing that the manufacturer either by means of national advertising, labels, manuals, or legend upon the container intended either an express or implied warranty to flow through the conduit of the contractual chain to the subpurchaser and his family. Wilson v. American Chain & Cable Co., 216 F. Supp. 32 (E.D. Pa. 1963).

18. —Bystanders or the like.

Under UCC § 2-318, no warranty extended from seller of truck to decedent who was killed in vehicular collision, where decedent was driver of vehicle which crashed into truck which ceased to function in rush hour traffic due to defect in the truck's alternator. GMC v. Davis, 141 Ga. App. 495, 233 S.E.2d 825, 5 A.L.R.4th 654 (1977).

In action arising out of automobile accident which was allegedly caused by latent defect in recapped tire, driver of automobile was entitled to protection under UCC § 2-318 despite lack of privity of contract where she was member of purchaser's family; nor did lack of privity bar relief sought by innocent third party bystander; cause of action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 was not stated where tires were purchased for general use upon ordinary highways; but cause of action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314 was stated where sale of recapped tires by service station operator was not isolated sale and retailer qualified as merchant with respect to goods sold. McHugh v. Carlton, 369 F. Supp. 1271 (D.C.S.C. 1974).

UCC § 2-318 has left door open to courts to extend protection of warranty to greater number of plaintiffs, and it is both reasonable and just to extend to bystanders protection against defective manufactured article. Ciampichini v. Ring Bros., 40 A.D.2d 289 (4th Dep't 1973).

19. —Corporations.

Where Iowa corporation contracted with Michigan corporation to purchase electro-hydraulic drop forging hammers which were to be manufactured by German manufacturer, where Iowa corporation's purchase agreement was directly with, and signed by, Michigan corporation only, and where Michigan corporation was not subsidiary or commission agent of German corporation, but rather bought and resold products of German manufacturer and other firms, any implied warranties accompanying sale of drop forging hammers by German corporation to Michigan corporation extended to Iowa corporation even though it did not purchase directly from, and therefore was not in privity with, German corporation. Midland Forge, Inc. v. Letts Indus., Inc., 395 F. Supp. 506 (N.D. Iowa 1975).

UCC § 2-318 does not represent an exclusive extension of warranty benefits. See UCC § 2-318, Comment 3, for rationale allowing court to extend warranty benefits to corporation which did not acquire allegedly defective machinery in sale and purchase and which was not in privity with machine's manufacturer-defendant. Fashion Novelty Corp. v. Cocker Mach. & Foundry Co., 331 F. Supp. 960 (D.N.J. 1971).

20. —Municipalities.

Although city was not party to contract for sale of packinghouse waste processing plant, it was third-party beneficiary of seller's warranties under UCC § 2-318, notwithstanding that city was not "natural person," where city was in "vertical" privity with seller. Omaha Pollution Control Corp. v. Carver-Greenfield Corp., 413 F. Supp. 1069 (D. Neb. 1976).

21. Losses contemplated; personal injury or property damage.

Defendant car manufacturer is liable for property damage sustained by plaintiff as the result of an accident caused by a defective steering mechanism under the theory of strict liability in tort since plaintiff excluded all other causes of the accident not attributable to the accident; since there is no claim for personal injuries, there is no liability for breach of implied warranties (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-318). Maure v. Fordham Motor Sales, Inc., 98 Misc. 2d 979 (1979).

Where plaintiff's daughter paid extra cash for Christmas tree in reliance on representation that tree had been fire-proofed and tree subsequently caught fire causing property damage to plaintiff's home, plaintiff was entitled to recover for property damage: (1) UCC § 2-318 was not intended to restrict development of Minnesota common law relating to third-party beneficiaries of warranties and (2) destruction of home and physical damage to personal property is no less an injury to one who sustains them than bodily injury. Milbank Mut. Ins. Co. v. Proksch, 309 Minn. 106, 244 N.W.2d 105 (1976).

Liability of seller of refrigerator to tenant-in-common and mother of buyer is limited to injuries to person of tenant-in-common; although tenant-in-common might recover for fire damage to house allegedly caused by defective refrigerator wiring in count based on negligence, she could not recover from seller of refrigerator for such property damage with respect to any claim for breach of warranty. Kenney v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 355 Mass. 604, 246 N.E.2d 649 (1969).

22. —Economic or commercial loss.

Ultimate purchaser of clothes dryer parts may not recover for economic loss on theory of implied warranty in action against manufacturer, where parts were purchased through intermediate seller. Hupp Corp. v. Metered Washer Serv., 256 Or. 245, 472 P.2d 816 (1970).

Elimination of lack of privity as a defense in any action brought against the manufacturer or seller of goods for breach of warranty, if the plaintiff was a person whom the manufacturer or seller might reasonably have expected to use, consume or be affected by the goods, was applicable to economic or commercial losses and was not restricted to cases involving injury or damage to persons or property. Mack Trucks of Ark., Inc. v. Jet Asphalt & Rock Co., 246 Ark. 101, 437 S.W.2d 459 (1969), but see, Cavette v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 260 Ark. 874, 545 S.W.2d 612 (1977).

23. Injury to person.

Action for breach of contract of sale, to which four-year period of limitations prescribed by New York UCC § 2-725(1) applies, includes action for personal injuries arising from breach of warranty in view of provisions of (1) New York UCC § 2-318, which explicitly states that seller's warranty, whether express or implied, extends to any natural person who is injured in person by breach of the warranty, (2) New York UCC § 2-715(2)(b), which states that consequential damages resulting from seller's breach include injury to person or property proximately resulting from any breach of warranty, and (3) New York UCC § 2-719(3), which makes a limitation of consequential damages for injury to the person caused by consumer goods prima facie unconscionable. McCarthy v. Bristol Labs., 61 A.D.2d 196 (2d Dep't 1978).

Automobile manufacturer was not liable for injury to child which occurred when child, who was riding his bicycle, collided with automobile and impact of collision broke parking light on automobile, causing tendon in child's knee to be severed, although child was within class of persons who might reasonably be expected to be affected by such automobile under UCC § 2-318, where vehicle in question was fit for ordinary purposes for which such vehicle is used under UCC § 2-314; part of car involved was essential item on car, and not mere ornamentation; of necessity lens had to be made of transparent or translucent material and, in general, such materials are fragile; light did not shatter under normal usage, but shattered under impact with metal; and breakage resulted from external force and injury did not occur to user of vehicle. Nacci v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 325 A.2d 617 (Del. Super. 1974).

24. —Mental distress or the like.

Under UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(2)(b), consequential damages are properly awarded for manufacturer's breach of express warranty in sale of casket, which on disinterment of decedent three months after his burial was found to contain water as against manufacturer's express warranty that casket would not leak, since no violence is done in such case to word "person" in UCC § 2-715(2)(b) to hold that that which brings on grief does damage to the person. Furthermore, under UCC § 2-318, consequential damages are properly awarded for such breach of warranty to members of decedent's family other than member who purchased casket from defendant. Hirst v. Elgin Metal Casket Co., 438 F. Supp. 906 (D. Mont. 1977).

C. Remedies and Procedure.

25. In general; remedies.

In third-party action by lessees of printing equipment against manufacturer of equipment for breach of warranty, after lessee had refused to make further payments on lease and lessor repossessed equipment, sold it and brought action against lessees for balance due on lease under their separate guarantee of lease, although privity of contract was requisite to action for breach of warranty, not involving personal injury, manufacturer was estopped from denying lessees benefits of express warranty in present case where equipment was delivered to lessees and was serviced by manufacturer, manufacturer's machine warranty was delivered to lessee, and numerous service calls were made without charge as result of manufacturer's having voluntarily extended 30-day guarantee period because machinery would not stay in adjustment. Addressograph-Multigraph Corp. v. Zink, 273 Md. 277, 329 A.2d 28 (1974).

27. Privity.

Although prior to September 1, 1975, under section 2-318 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which provided that a "seller's warranty whether express or implied extends to any natural person who is in the family or household of his buyer or who is a guest in his home if it is reasonable to expect that such person may use, consume or be affected by the goods and who is injured in person by breach of the warranty", it was possible to hold a seller liable for a breach of an expressed or implied warranty resulting in an injury to a person for whom the seller never intended his product or by whom he would not have expected his product to be used or consumed, as, for example, where the person was in the purchaser's family, under the amended statute, which deletes the phrase "who is in the family or household of his buyer or who is a guest in his home", the removal of the designated beneficiaries removes the possibility of such an unintended statutory application, while not totally dissolving privity; the amendment is thus both contractive, in its deletion of the absolute waiver of privity barriers for certain designated persons, and expansive, in its redefinition of the extension of those within privity to the purchaser. Accordingly, the purchaser and ultimate consumer of an allegedly offending product has a cause of action against a defendant who is engaged in the distribution and sale of the product upon a theory of breach of an implied or express warranty of merchantability, although she did not purchase the product from the defendant; while privity has not been abandoned in New York, neither has the Court of Appeals reconstructed privity to only those instances of direct contact between purchaser and seller in Martin v. Dierck Equip. Co. (43 NY2d 583), which, rather, delineated the appropriateness of contract warranty and tortious strict products liability. Martin v. Drackett Prods. Co., 100 Misc. 2d 728 (1979).

Manufacturer of automobile can be held responsible without regard to privity of contract for economic loss that results to buyer, who brought vehicle from dealer, from manufacturer's breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Ford Motor Co. v. Tidwell, 563 S.W.2d 831 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

The Massachusetts version of the Uniform Commercial Code makes it clear that the Massachusetts legislature has transformed warranty liability into a remedy that is intended to be fully as comprehensive as the strict liability theory of recovery that obtains in many other jurisdictions. By amending UCC § 2-318, the Massachusetts legislature abolished the requirement of privity, which previously had been deemed essential to recovery, and also sanctioned, in a proper case, the judicial extension of warranty liability to nonsales transactions, such as commercial leases. Under the Massachusetts version of UCC § 2-318, suppliers of goods may not exclude or limit the operation of that section by contract, nor may merchants disclaim the implied warranty of merchantability. All of these features of the Massachusetts law on warranty liability clearly indicate that the duty that a plaintiff sues to enforce in a "warranty" action for personal injuries is one that is imposed by law as a matter of social policy, and not necessarily one that the defendant has acquired by contract. (stating that Massachusetts law of warranty is congruent in nearly all respects with principles expressed in Restatement of Torts (2d ed.) § 402A). Back v. Wickes Corp., 375 Mass. 633, 378 N.E.2d 964 (1978).

Although UCC § 2-318 dispenses with requirement of privity in suits brought under Article 2 of UCC, this provision does not alter rule demanding privity of contract in warranty actions against architects. Gravely v. Providence Partnership, 549 F.2d 958 (4th Cir. Va. 1977).

Owner of pistol was not entitled to bring action for breach of express and implied warranty of merchantability and fitness against manufacturer of pistol where owner was not within class of persons enumerated in UCC § 2-318 (Alternative A) and, thus, not in privity with manufacturer. Smith v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., 524 F.2d 776 (9th Cir. Alaska 1975).

Statute abolishing requirement of privity in all actions for personal injury, whether brought under theory of tort, negligence or warranty was substantive change in law and could not be applied retrospectively to action for damages resulting from injuries sustained by plaintiff in fall from defective ladder which plaintiff's employer had purchased from defendant manufacturer. Anderson v. Watling Ladder Co., 472 F.2d 576 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1973).

The drafters of the Code never intended § 2-318 to set any limits on vertical privity, nor did they intend all changes in the law to come only from the legislature. Kassab v. Central Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

The Code does not abolish the requirement of privity as is seen by the limiting terms of UCC § 2-318 and the continued requirement of notice of the defect by the buyer to the seller. Dippel v. Sciano, 37 Wis. 2d 443, 155 N.W.2d 55 (1967).

The fact that the Code has taken a neutral position with respect to the question of privity except as expressly affected by the instant section is not to be regarded as showing any policy to limit the cases in which privity is not required to those which come within the scope of that section. Drew v. John Deere Co. of Syracuse, Inc., 19 A.D.2d 308 (4th Dep't 1963).

28. —Required.

Where an automobile is leased, an action cannot be brought against the lessor for breach of an implied warranty of fitness by a third person injured as privity is lacking between him and the lessor. Debbis v. Hertz Corp., 269 F. Supp. 671 (D. Md. 1967). But see Farwell v. Un, 902 F.2d 282 (4th Cir. Md. 1990).

In action against sellers of used automobile and repairman to recover for personal injuries suffered by plaintiffs when they were struck by automobile while it was being driven by buyer, plaintiffs could not recover from sellers on theory that there was express warranty from sellers to buyer that automobile was free from defects, including defects from repair of automobile, since plaintiffs had no contract relation with sellers and were not within scope of UCC § 2-318; nor did they come within judicial exception to privity requirement inasmuch as sellers were neither merchants within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1), nor engaged in business of selling automobiles. Similarly, plaintiffs could not recover against repairman on breach of warranty theory, there being no privity of contract between plaintiff and repairman, and any warranties, express or implied, that repairman might have given sellers did not extend to plaintiffs. Lemley v. J & B Tire Co., 426 F. Supp. 1376 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

In action by town for breach of warranty with respect to defective roofing materials supplied by defendants which were installed in new school building, where evidence showed that such materials were first sold by defendants to subcontractor who thereafter sold materials to plaintiff, summary judgment should have been granted to defendants because Massachusetts version of UCC § 2-318 in force at time defective materials were installed required that privity of contract exist between injured party and seller in order to charge seller with breach of warranty, and such privity did not exist between plaintiff and defendants. Town of Mansfield v. GAF Corp., 5 Mass. App. Ct. 551, 364 N.E.2d 1292 (1977).

UCC § 2-318 being neutral on the requirement of privity, and privity being an essential element in an action based on either express or implied warranty, there is no reason for changing this requirement, and weed control buyer cannot recover from manufacturer where there is no privity. Nobility Homes of Tex., Inc. v. Shivers, 557 S.W.2d 77 (Tex. 1977).

Manufacturer of defective mobile home could be held liable for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, under UCC §§ 2-314 and 2-315, without regard to privity of contract between manufacturer and consumer, and this liability embraced not only personal injuries and property damage, but also economic loss. Morrow v. New Moon Homes, Inc., 548 P.2d 279 (Alaska 1976).

Testimony of plaintiff that he purchased defective low-water cutoff directly from defendant corporation rather than from its agent or distributor was sufficient to warrant finding of privity as required by UCC § 2-318. Slater v. Burnham Corp., 4 Mass. App. Ct. 791, 343 N.E.2d 885 (1976).

A schoolgirl injured in the eye as a result of a rock being thrown through a classroom window by a rotary power lawnmower could not avail herself as a third party beneficiary of any warranties, express or implied, made by the manufacturer or distributor of the lawnmower to the purchasing school. Stovall & Co. v. Tate, 124 Ga. App. 605, 184 S.E.2d 834 (1971), overruled on other grounds, Lairsey v. Advance Abrasives Co., 542 F.2d 928 (5th Cir. Ga. 1976).

In action by tire store employees against truck manufacturer, manufacturer of truck wheel and rim, and truck dealer, for injuries received while they were changing tires on truck: (1) employees failed to establish breach of warranty against dealer since there was no sale when dealer delivered truck to plaintiffs' employer for purpose of having tires changed; (2) plaintiffs also failed to state cause of action for breach of warranty against truck manufacturer or manufacturer of wheel and rim since there was no privity between plaintiffs and manufacturers. Favors v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 309 So. 2d 69 (Fla. App. 1975).

Privity is required in actions based on breach of express or implied warranties except as provided in UCC § 2-318. Stewart v. Gainesville Glass Co., 233 Ga. 578, 212 S.E.2d 377 (1975).

In action by drug user seeking to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from blood clot that allegedly developed as result of plaintiff's use of defendant's oral contraceptive, plaintiff failed to state cause of action against manufacturer under UCC § 2-715 for breach of warranty; since defendant gave allegedly defective product to plaintiff's physician as free sample and there was no payment by physician to defendant, (1) there was no sale which would form basis of cause of action, and, furthermore, (2) there was no privity between the parties. Allen v. Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp., 387 F. Supp. 364 (S.D. Tex. 1974).

In action between owner of used automobile and manufacturer arising when automobile caught fire while being driven, absence of privity of contract under UCC § 2-318 precluded owner's right of action for property damage on implied warranty of merchantability or fitness for use. Wear v. Chenault Motor Co., 52 Ala. App. 382, 293 So. 2d 298 (Civ. App. 1974), writ denied, 292 Ala. 756, 293 So. 2d 301 (1974).

Absence of privity of contract between helicopter manufacturer and plaintiff injured by helicopter prevented plaintiff from maintaining claim for breach of warranty. Anderson v. Fairchild Hiller Corp., 358 F. Supp. 976 (D. Alaska 1973).

In products liability action arising out of purchase and consumption of allegedly unwholesome bottle of carbonated beverage manufacturer was shielded from liability by lack of privity under Code § 2-316, but supermarket-seller was in privity with buyer and could be held liable to buyer's mother under Code § 2-318. Chaffin v. Atlanta Coca Cola Bottling Co., 127 Ga. App. 619, 194 S.E.2d 513 (1972).

There could be no recovery by purchaser of used car from auto manufacturer for breach of implied warranty because of lack of privity between purchaser and manufacturer, i.e. since neither manufacturer nor its authorized dealer sold car to ultimate secondhand purchaser, latter is not a party to whom an implied warranty is extended by terms of UCC § 2-318 (recognizing rule; implied warranties disclaimed by express warranty). GMC v. Halco Instruments, Inc., 124 Ga. App. 630, 185 S.E.2d 619 (1971).

Since neither General Motors nor its authorized dealer sold the car in question to purchaser, purchaser is not a party to whom an implied warranty is extended by terms of UCC § 2-318. GMC v. Halco Instruments, Inc., 124 Ga. App. 630, 185 S.E.2d 619 (1971).

Enlisted man could not sue manufacturer of grenade or grenade fuse for breach of warranty because of lack of privity. Whitaker v. Harvell-Kilgore Corp., 418 F.2d 1010, 38 A.L.R.3d 1229 (5th Cir. Ga. 1969), reh'g denied, 424 F.2d 549, 38 A.L.R.3d 1244 (5th Cir. Ga. 1970).

In the absence of privity of contract between ultimate buyer and seller, this section has no application. Henry v. John W. Eshelman & Sons, 99 R.I. 518, 209 A.2d 46 (1965).

Although it would appear that the plaintiffs were correct in their contention that under Pennsylvania law lack of privity is not a defense to suit by subpurchaser or members of his family against the manufacturer on breach of warranty principles, the court could not strike the privity defense in an action against the manufacturer to recover for injuries sustained by the son of a subpurchaser where no showing had been made as to whether the warranty involved was express or implied, and there was no showing that the manufacturer either by means of national advertising, labels, manuals, or legend upon the container intended either an express or implied warranty to flow through the conduit of the contractual chain to the subpurchaser and his family. Wilson v. American Chain & Cable Co., 216 F. Supp. 32 (E.D. Pa. 1963).

29. —Not required.

Airplane passenger could maintain action for personal injuries against airplane manufacturer, based on breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-715, notwithstanding passenger was not in privity with manufacturer. Roberts v. General Dynamics, Convair Corp., 425 F. Supp. 688 (S.D. Tex. 1977).

Privity was not a requirement in mobile home buyer's implied warranty action against manufacturer for economic loss. Nobility Homes of Tex., Inc. v. Shivers, 557 S.W.2d 77 (Tex. 1977).

UCC § 2-318 is neutral on requirement of vertical privity and lack of privity between buyer and manufacturer did not preclude action against manufacturer for recovery of economic losses caused by breach of warranties. Hiles Co. v. Johnston Pump Co., 93 Nev. 73, 560 P.2d 154 (1977).

Requirement of privity of contract in action for breach of express or implied warranty is abolished. Dawson v. Canteen Corp., 158 W. Va. 516, 212 S.E.2d 82 (1975).

In action against manufacturer of birth control pills and association from whom pills were purchased arising when plaintiff suffered stroke, lack of privity between plaintiff and manufacturer under UCC § 2-318 was of no consequence and 4 year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725 governed; birth control association which gave advice and dispensed birth-control pills was engaged in sale of goods as required by Code and plaintiff's failure to allege that pills did not prevent contraception would not bar recovery on theory of breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; however, under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), plaintiff was required to notify association of alleged breach of implied warranty. Berry v. G.D. Searle & Co., 56 Ill. 2d 548, 309 N.E.2d 550, 70 A.L.R.3d 304 (1974).

UCC § 2-318 freeing third party beneficiaries from any technical privity rules says nothing whatsoever about what limitations period governs an action for the breach of a manufacturer's obligations to a third party beneficiary. Kelly v. Ford Motor Co., 110 R.I. 83, 290 A.2d 607 (1972).

Elimination of lack of privity as a defense in any action brought against the manufacturer or seller of goods for breach of warranty, if the plaintiff was a person whom the manufacturer or seller might reasonably have expected to use, consume or be affected by the goods, was applicable to economic or commercial losses and was not restricted to cases involving injury or damage to persons or property. Mack Trucks of Ark., Inc. v. Jet Asphalt & Rock Co., 246 Ark. 101, 437 S.W.2d 459 (1969), but see, Cavette v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 260 Ark. 874, 545 S.W.2d 612 (1977).

Seller of tomato seed might reasonably expect commercial grower of tomatoes to "use, consume, or be affected by" seeds distributed and sold on market by seller; defense or shield of lack of privity cannot be invoked by seller of seed in action by buyer to recover damages for alleged breach of warranty. L.A. Green Seed Co. v. Williams, 246 Ark. 463, 438 S.W.2d 717 (1969).

Pennsylvania joins the fast growing list of jurisdictions that have eliminated the privity requirement in assumpsit suits by purchasers against remote manufacturers for breach of implied warranty. Kassab v. Central Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

Privity is not required where an action is brought for breach of an implied warranty. Bustamante v. Carborundum Co., 375 F.2d 688 (7th Cir. Ill. 1967).

The Code does not abolish the requirement of privity as is seen by the limiting terms of UCC § 2-318 and the continued requirement of notice of the defect by the buyer to the seller. Dippel v. Sciano, 37 Wis. 2d 443, 155 N.W.2d 55 (1967).

The Code does not apply to liability predicated upon strict tort and therefore "privity" limitations of the Code do not apply. Dippel v. Sciano, 37 Wis. 2d 443, 155 N.W.2d 55 (1967).

A minor third party beneficiary as to a manufacturer's express and implied warranties injured while a guest in the home of the ultimate purchaser of a bicycle, as a consequence of its defective condition, has a cause of action against the manufacturer and no notice is required to be given the manufacturer by such third party beneficiary. Tomczuk v. Town of Cheshire, 26 Conn. Supp. 219, 217 A.2d 71 (1965).

The exception to the privity requirement that a sub-purchaser is entitled to recover from a manufacturer of an automobile part that is inherently dangerous or defectively manufactured is not superseded nor modified by the provisions of this section. Suvada v. White Motor Co., 51 Ill. App. 2d 318, 201 N.E.2d 313 (1st Dist. 1964), aff'd, 32 Ill. 2d 612, 210 N.E.2d 182 (1965).

Sound public policy requires that a manufacturer be held strictly accountable to a plaintiff who, using his product in a way it was intended, is injured as a result of a defect in manufacture of which the plaintiff was not aware, and this section negatives the former doctrine of privity of contract. Chairaluce v. Stanley Warner Mgt. Corp., 236 F. Supp. 385 (D. Conn. 1964).

This section abolishes the rule of privity of contract insofar as the persons therein named are concerned. Delta Oxygen Co. v. Scott, 238 Ark. 534, 383 S.W.2d 885 (1964).

Privity is not required when the manufacturer advertises nationally to consumers. Rufo v. Bastian-Blessing Co., 405 Pa. 12, 173 A.2d 123 (1961).

Third party beneficiaries of warranties are not required to give the notice which the original buyer is required to provide under § 2-607 of this section. Menard v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 22 Mass. App. Dec. 170 (1961).

30. Limitations and laches.

Plaintiff, the subpurchaser of a defective used crane, may not recover its economic loss resulting from the inability to make use of the defective crane from defendant, the manufacturer of the crane, under the theory of breach of warranty since there is no contractual relationship between the parties and therefore no warranty either express or implied under the Uniform Commercial Code; the extended protection of warranty to persons who may reasonably be expected to use, consume or be affected by goods, is afforded only to natural persons who suffer personal injuries (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-318) or to subpurchasers who justifiably relied upon representations made by the manufacturer to the public through advertising and in labels tagged to the goods themselves (see Randy Knitwear v. American Cyanamid Co., 11 NY2d 5) and plaintiff, which purchased the crane “as is”, assumed risks based on the prior use of the crane and cannot show justifiable reliance and, in any event, since the crane was delivered to the initial purchaser in 1970, the action based on breach of warranty is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Steckmar Nat'l Realty & Inv. Corp. v. JI Case Co., 99 Misc. 2d 212 (1979).

§ 75-2-319. F.O.B. and F.A.S. terms.

(1) Unless otherwise agreed the term F.O.B. (which means “free on board”) at a named place, even though used only in connection with the stated price, is a delivery term under which

(a) when the term is F.O.B. the place of shipment, the seller must at that place ship the goods in the manner provided in this chapter (Section 2-504) [Section 75-2-504] and bear the expense and risk of putting them into the possession of the carrier; or

(b) when the term is F.O.B. the place of destination, the seller must at his own expense and risk transport the goods to that place and there tender delivery of them in the manner provided in this chapter (Section 2-503) [Section 75-2-503];

(c) when under either (a) or (b) the term is also F.O.B. vessel, car or other vehicle, the seller must in addition at his own expense and risk load the goods on board. If the term is F.O.B. vessel the buyer must name the vessel and in an appropriate case the seller must comply with the provisions of this chapter on the form of bill of lading (Section 2-323) [Section 75-2-323].

(2) Unless otherwise agreed the term F.A.S. vessel (which means “free alongside”) at a named port, even though used only in connection with the stated price, is a delivery term under which the seller must

(a) at his own expense and risk deliver the goods alongside the vessel in the manner usual in that port or on a dock designated and provided by the buyer; and

(b) obtain and tender a receipt for the goods in exchange for which the carrier is under a duty to issue a bill of lading.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed in any case falling within subsection (1)(a) or (c) or subsection (2) the buyer must seasonably give any needed instructions for making delivery, including when the term is F.A.S. or F.O.B. the loading berth of the vessel and in an appropriate case its name and sailing date. The seller may treat the failure of needed instructions as a failure of cooperation under this chapter (Section 2-311) [Section 75-2-311]. He may also at his option move the goods in any reasonable manner preparatory to delivery or shipment.

(4) Under the term F.O.B. vessel or F.A.S. unless otherwise agreed the buyer must make payment against tender of the required documents and the seller may not tender nor the buyer demand delivery of the goods in substitution for the documents.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Under UCC § 2-319(1)(a), shipment of boat by Florida seller to Louisiana buyer "FOB Florida" simply meant that title to boat and risk of its loss passed to buyer in Florida, and that buyer bore cost of shipping boat from Florida to Louisiana. Charia v. Cigarette Racing Team, Inc., 583 F.2d 184 (5th Cir. La. 1978).

In action by account-assignee to recover money due on account receivable covering table-hockey games sold by assignor-seller to defendant buyer, where (1) in connection with purchase orders placed by defendant with assignor-seller, defendant and assignor-seller agreed in writing that defendant would be allowed $22,000 to advertise goods purchased and that such sum could be deducted from any of seller's invoices, (2) defendant received goods worth $28,517 that were covered by three invoices, but goods worth $10,053 that were covered by two other invoices were stolen, (3) defendant expended virtually all of its advertising allowance to promote sale of goods, (4) defendant, although not paying for any of the goods, reshipped some goods at assignor-seller's direction to third party, who paid seller $7,300 therefor, and (5) defendant also reshipped some goods to another third party after assignor-seller went out of business, and neither plaintiff account-assignee nor defendant were paid therefor, court held (1) that since assignor-seller had complied with requirements of UCC § 2-319(1)(a), dealing with shipment of goods F.O.B. place of shipment, and UCC § 2-504, dealing with shipment of goods under "shipment" contract, plaintiff account-assignee was entitled to recover from defendant buyer invoice value of goods which were stolen, (2) defendant was also liable for value of unpaid-for goods that it shipped to third party after assignor had gone out of business, and (3) defendant was entitled to deduct from its total liability its $22,000 advertising allowance (applying Mo Law; entering judgment for plaintiff for $9,270, which represented award of $31,270 for goods sold and delivered, less the $22,000 advertising allowance). United Nat'l Indus., Inc. v. Pool Mart, Inc., 449 F. Supp. 583 (E.D. Mo. 1978).

Ordinarily, under contracts for sale of goods contemplating transportation by a carrier, the seller is not obligated to deliver at a named destination unless he has specifically agreed to do so or the commercial understanding of the terms used by the parties contemplates such delivery (see UCC § 2-503, Official Comment 5). Such an agreement is called a "destination contract," under which the seller's duty is to deliver conforming goods to the buyer at the named destination. On the other hand, the manner of delivery may be designated under what is called a "shipment contract." Under such a contract, the seller is required or authorized to ship the goods to the buyer, but is not required to deliver them at a particular destination (See UCC § 2-504, Official Comment 1). Both of these types of contracts usually employ mercantile terms or trade symbols that specify the requirements for delivery, such as "F.O.B. the place of shipment" (see UCC § 2-319(1)(a)) or "F.O.B. the place of destination" (See UCC § 2-319(1)(b)). Where no such term is employed and there has been no specific agreement to the contrary, a contract for the transportation of goods by carrier will be presumed to be a "shipment contract." Droukas v. Divers Training Academy, Inc., 375 Mass. 149, 376 N.E.2d 548 (1978).

Shippers' failure to notify consignee of grain shipments before they were loaded, thus preventing consignee from exercising its right under contracts of purchase and UCC § 2-319 to name vessels by which grain moved, was immaterial with respect to consignee's liability for demurrage charges where consignee's export manager testified that barges were never delayed at consignee's elevator merely because they belonged to one barge company rather than another and where consignee waived any objections by accepting delivery of grain on other barges. Shaver Transp. Co. v. Louis Dreyfus Corp., 414 F. Supp. 1040 (D. Or. 1976).

Under UCC § 2-319(1), term "F.O.B. PLANT," within purchase order form wherein buyer typed instructions "Pick Up from your Plant" after words "Ship via" and typed words "F.O.B. PLANT PER LB. $1.35" in price column, was delivery term, even though it was used only in connection with stated price. A.M. Knitwear Corp. v. All Am. Export-Import Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 14, 359 N.E.2d 342 (1976).

In action on note whose figures indicated amount payable was $19,896.01, but whose words stated amount due was "Nineteen hundred eight hundred ninety-six _____ and 01/100 Dollars": (1) under UCC § 3-118, words were ambiguous and were therefore controlled by figures; and (2) under UCC § 3-119, loan application form showing principal of loan to be $19,896.01 was properly received as evidence of true nature of transaction. Wall v. East Tex. Teachers Credit Union, 526 S.W.2d 148 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), rev'd, 533 S.W.2d 918 (Tex. 1976).

Contract for purchase of one million pounds of grain at $2.50 per hundred, F.O.B. Levelland, Texas, was contract in writing to perform obligation, i.e., delivery of grain, in Hockley County, expressly naming a definite place therein by such writing, within meaning of venue statute. Kiser v. Lemco Indus., Inc., 521 S.W.2d 142 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Under contract for sale of scrap metal which required delivery "FAS Steamer your berth Port Elizabeth, New Jersey," where delivery was made according to these terms, and barge was at buyer's berth at least 3 days before it capsized and was for at least 2 days alongside vessel which was to receive scrap metal, title to scrap metal passed to buyer, and buyer was liable to seller for purchase price, in absence of any evidence that loss of cargo resulted from seller's negligence in selecting carrier or any evidence of improper loading of cargo. Luria Bros. & Co. v. Associated Metals & Minerals Corp., 73 Misc. 2d 937 (1972).

Scrap metal dealer was entitled to recover from buyer the cost of scrap metal lost when shipper's barge capsized at buyer's docks to which scrap was shipped fas, and buyer was in turn entitled to recover from shipper, where unexplained capsizing of barge in calm waters at a sheltered berth with no shipping activity created presumption of unseaworthiness in addition to affirmative evidence of unseaworthiness, there was no proof of buyer's negligence, and shipper was negligent in failing to properly inspect barge. Luria Bros. & Co. v. Associated Metals & Minerals Corp., 73 Misc. 2d 937 (1972).

A shipment of merchandise made "FAS Vessel, Mobile, Alabama" required the seller at its own expense and risk to deliver the goods alongside the vessel, with title not passing until such delivery was made. Southern Ry. Sys. v. Leyden Shipping Corp., 290 F. Supp. 742 (S.D.N.Y. 1968).

Under a shipment contract providing "F.O.B. point-job site", the delivery of a truckload of lumber was completed and possession of the lumber relinquished when the truck was stopped at the job site. Bituminous Cas. Corp. v. Horn Lumber Co., 283 F. Supp. 365 (W.D. Ark. 1968).

A contract calling for shipment FOB the seller's city passes title and risk of loss when the goods are placed with the carrier and this conclusion is not altered by the fact that the address is specified "ship to" buyer as this does not overcome the presumption in favor of a shipment contract rather than a destination contract. Electric Regulator Corp. v. Sterling Extruder Corp., 280 F. Supp. 550 (D. Conn. 1968).

Directions in a contract for the sale of lamb pelts "F.O.B. Toronto", that the goods were to be shipped via the Pennsylvania Railroad, destination Philadelphia, were merely shipping directions which the buyer could have changed to any other destination in the world, and hence when the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States government issued such strict regulations on the importation of lamb pelts into the United States as to prevent further shipments from the seller in Toronto to the buyer in Philadelphia, the buyer was not excused from performing by reason of a provision in the contract that neither party was to be liable for "orders or acts of any government or governmental agency." Swift Canadian Co. v. Banet, 224 F.2d 36 (3d Cir. Pa. 1955).

§ 75-2-320. C.I.F. and C. & F. terms.

(1) The term C.I.F. means that the price includes in a lump sum the cost of the goods and the insurance and freight to the named destination. The term C. & F. or C.F. means that the price so includes cost and freight to the named destination.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed and even though used only in connection with the stated price and destination, the term C.I.F. destination or its equivalent requires the seller at his own expense and risk to

(a) put the goods into the possession of a carrier at the port for shipment and obtain a negotiable bill or bills of lading covering the entire transportation to the named destination; and

(b) load the goods and obtain a receipt from the carrier (which may be contained in the bill of lading) showing that the freight has been paid or provided for; and

(c) obtain a policy or certificate of insurance, including any war risk insurance, of a kind and on terms then current at the port of shipment in the usual amount, in the currency of the contract, shown to cover the same goods covered by the bill of lading and providing for payment of loss to the order of the buyer or for the account of whom it may concern; but the seller may add to the price the amount of the premium for any such war risk insurance; and

(d) prepare an invoice of the goods and procure any other documents required to effect shipment or to comply with the contract; and

(e) forward and tender with commercial promptness all the documents in due form and with any indorsement necessary to perfect the buyer's rights.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed the term C. & F. or its equivalent has the same effect and imposes upon the seller the same obligations and risks as a C.I.F. term except the obligation as to insurance.

(4) Under the term C.I.F. or C. & F. unless otherwise agreed the buyer must make payment against tender of the required documents and the seller may not tender nor the buyer demand delivery of the goods in substitution for the documents.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Under UCC § 2-320(1), "C.I.F." means that the price includes the cost of the goods and also the insurance and freight charges to the named destination. Capitol Cake Co. v. Lloyd's Underwriters, 453 F. Supp. 1156 (D. Md. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-320(2)(c), an essential term of a C.I.F. contract is the seller's obligation to obtain a policy of insurance that is of a kind and on terms then current at the port of shipment. Capitol Cake Co. v. Lloyd's Underwriters, 453 F. Supp. 1156 (D. Md. 1978).

Buyer breached contract for sale of steel by improperly and prematurely rejecting shipment, although contract called for shipment date of September-October, 1974 and steel was not shipped until November 14, 1974, where steel in question did arrive at destination on November 29, 1974, and where, under recognized trade usage, shipment term of September-October implied delivery by October-November and, thus, any delay in shipment was cured by timely delivery; contract in question included "C.I.F." shipping term, which rendered contract shipment as opposed to destination contract under UCC § 2-320. Harlow & Jones, Inc. v. Advance Steel Co., 424 F. Supp. 770 (E.D. Mich. 1976).

In action by seller of low sulphur fuel oil, for unpaid balance of purchase price, commercially reasonable variation in contract as to date of payment was not allowed to impair existence of true CIF contract under UCC § 2-320. Petroleo Brasileiro, S.A., Petrobras v. Ameropan Oil Corp., 372 F. Supp. 503 (E.D.N.Y. 1974).

In action by seller of low sulphur fuel oil, for unpaid balance of purchase price, commercially reasonable variation in contract as to date of payment was not allowed to impair existence of true CIF contract under UCC § 2-320; in addition to action for price under UCC § 2-709, seller was also allowed to recover "incidental damages" under UCC §§ 2-709 and

2-710, but "consequential damages" were not recoverable under Code. Petroleo Brasileiro, S.A., Petrobras v. Ameropan

Oil Corp., 372 F. Supp. 503 (E.D.N.Y. 1974).

§ 75-2-321. C.I.F. or C. & F.: "net landed weights;" "payment on arrival;" warranty of condition on arrival.

Under a contract containing a term C.I.F. or C. & F.

(1) Where the price is based on or is to be adjusted according to "net landed weights," "delivered weights," "out turn" quantity or quality or the like, unless otherwise agreed the seller must reasonably estimate the price. The payment due on tender of the documents called for by the contract is the amount so estimated, but after final adjustment of the price a settlement must be made with commercial promptness.

(2) An agreement described in subsection (1) or any warranty of quality or condition of the goods on arrival places upon the seller the risk of ordinary deterioration, shrinkage and the like in transportation but has no effect on the place or time of identification to the contract for sale or delivery or on the passing of the risk of loss.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed where the contract provides for payment on or after arrival of the goods the seller must before payment allow such preliminary inspection as is feasible; but if the goods are lost delivery of the documents and payment are due when the goods should have arrived.

§ 75-2-322. Delivery “ex-ship”.

(1) Unless otherwise agreed a term for delivery of goods “ex-ship” (which means from the carrying vessel) or in equivalent language is not restricted to a particular ship and requires delivery from a ship which has reached a place at the named port of destination where goods of the kind are usually discharged.

(2) Under such a term unless otherwise agreed

(a) the seller must discharge all liens arising out of the carriage and furnish the buyer with a direction which puts the carrier under a duty to deliver the goods; and

(b) the risk of loss does not pass to the buyer until the goods leave the ship’s tackle or are otherwise properly unloaded.

(1) Where the contract contemplates overseas shipment and contains a term C.I.F. or C. & F. or F.O.B. vessel, the seller unless otherwise agreed must obtain a negotiable bill of lading stating that the goods have been loaded on board or, in the case of a term C.I.F. or C. & F., received for shipment.

(2) Where in a case within subsection (1) a bill of lading has been issued in a set of parts, unless otherwise agreed if the documents are not to be sent from abroad the buyer may demand tender of the full set; otherwise only one part of the bill of lading need be tendered. Even if the agreement expressly requires a full set

(a) due tender of a single part is acceptable within the provisions of this chapter on cure of improper delivery (subsection (1) of Section 2-508) [Section 75-2-508]; and

(b) even though the full set is demanded, if the documents are sent from abroad the person tendering an incomplete set may nevertheless require payment upon furnishing an indemnity which the buyer in good faith deems adequate.

(3) A shipment by water or by air or a contract contemplating such shipment is "overseas" insofar as by usage of trade or agreement it is subject to the commercial, financing or shipping practices characteristic of international deep water commerce.

Under a term "no arrival, no sale" or terms of like meaning, unless otherwise agreed,

(a) the seller must properly ship conforming goods and if they arrive by any means he must tender them on arrival but he assumes no obligation that the goods will arrive unless he has caused the nonarrival; and

(b) where without fault of the seller the goods are in part lost or have so deteriorated as no longer to conform to the contract or arrive after the contract time, the buyer may proceed as if there had been casualty to identified goods (Section 2-613) [§ 75-2-613].

(1) Failure of the buyer seasonably to furnish an agreed letter of credit is a breach of the contract for sale.

(2) The delivery to seller of a proper letter of credit suspends the buyer’s obligation to pay. If the letter of credit is dishonored, the seller may on seasonable notification to the buyer require payment directly from him.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed the term “letter of credit” or “banker’s credit” in a contract for sale means an irrevocable credit issued by a financing agency of good repute and, where the shipment is overseas, of good international repute. The term “confirmed credit” means that the credit must also carry the direct obligation of such an agency which does business in the seller’s financial market.

(b) A "sale or return" if the goods are delivered primarily for resale.

The Business Sign Statute (§ 15-3-7) does not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and was not repealed by implication in § 75-10-103, but was virtually continued by express direction in § 75-2-326(3)(a); furniture and office equipment "used or acquired" in the business was subject to execution and sale under the statute. Date Shoe, Inc. v. Nichols, 642 F.2d 146 (5th Cir. Miss. 1981), reh'g denied, 647 F.2d 1121 (5th Cir. 1981).

In action involving seller's petition to reclaim furniture sold to insolvent buyer, where (1) seller sold furniture to buyer which buyer accepted, (2) at time of delivery, seller did not know that buyer was insolvent, (3) two days after learning of buyer's insolvency, seller sent telegram to buyer demanding rescission under UCC § 2-702 and, after receiver was appointed for buyer, filed petition to reclaim goods, (4) bankruptcy court denied petition on ground that bankruptcy trustee was entitled to goods under § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act and that UCC § 2-702 conflicted with §§ 64 and 67(c) of Bankruptcy Act, and (5) district court affirmed bankruptcy court's ruling, court held (1) that issue was whether seller could reclaim under UCC § 2-702(2) when seller's demand followed filing of bankruptcy petition, (2) that under § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act, bankruptcy trustee acquired rights of hypothetical lien creditor, (3) that buyer was insolvent when it received goods from seller, (4) that seller had discovered such fact and made demand for reclamation within ten days after buyer received goods, as required by UCC § 2-702(2), (5) that state law controlled rights of bankruptcy trustee as hypothetical lien creditor, (6) that reference in UCC § 2-702(3) to rights of lien creditors directs that those rights be found exclusively in UCC Article 2 or in articles to which Article 2 refers, (7) that lien creditor was not "purchaser for value" under UCC § 2-403 and that bankruptcy trustee acquired no rights under UCC § 2-403 as against reclaiming seller, (8) that under facts of case, bankruptcy trustee also acquired no rights under UCC §§ 2-326 or 9-301, and no lien creditor could cut off seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702(2), (9) that by same token, § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act did not give trustee right to cut off seller's right to reclaim, (10) that UCC § 2-702(2) created something other than a security interest, (11) that UCC § 2-702(2) was not an unlawful priority that conflicted with § 64 of Bankruptcy Act, (12) that UCC § 2-702(2) was not lien subject to invalidation as statutory lien under § 67(c) of Bankruptcy Act, and (13) that reclamation under UCC § 2-702(2) in instant case did not constitute invalid preferential transfer under § 60 of Bankruptcy Act. Bassett Furn. Indus., Inc. v. Wear, 583 F.2d 992 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

UCC § 2-326 did not apply in garnishment proceeding where subject of garnishment was funds of judgment debtor on deposit in bank checking account, where judgment creditor did not undertake to attach goods possessed by debtor and where seller did not claim entitlement to goods in debtor's possession, only money. Stewart v. Brown, 546 S.W.2d 204 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

As a result of the definition of "security interest" in UCC § 1-201(37) and the provisions of UCC § 9-102(2), only those consignments intended as security are directly subject to the provisions of UCC Art 9 concerning secured transactions, but all consignments, whether intended as security or not, are subject to the requirements of UCC § 2-326, which is in UCC Art 2 dealing with sales. GECC v. Town & Country Mobile Homes, Inc., 117 Ariz. 562, 574 P.2d 50 (Ct. App. 1977).

An undisclosed oral agreement between manufacturer and retailer cannot be used to defeat secured creditor's priority in view of UCC § 2-326(2). Modular Hous., Inc. v. G.A.C. Trans-World Acceptance Corp., 288 Ala. 77, 257 So. 2d 326 (1972).

UCC § 2-326 operates for protection of secured, as well as general, creditors. American Nat'l Bank v. Christensen, 28 Colo. App. 501, 476 P.2d 281 (1970); American Nat'l Bank v. Tina Marie Homes, Inc., 28 Colo. App. 477, 476 P.2d 573, 8 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 281 (1970); 145 A.L.R. Fed. 335.

This section was intended to cover a situation where the possession and offering for sale of another's merchandise presumably led to extensions of credit in the belief that the merchandise was owned by the possessor. In re Mincow Bag Co., 53 Misc. 2d 599 (1967), aff'd, 29 A.D.2d 400, 288 N.Y.S.2d 364 (1st Dep't 1968), aff'd, 24 N.Y.2d 776, 300 N.Y.S.2d 115, 248 N.E.2d 26 (1969).

The purpose of subsec (3) is to protect the creditors of the person in possession of goods who would have the right to assume the goods were the property of the person in possession. Guardian Dist. Co. v. Settles, 114 Ga. App. 418, 151 S.E.2d 530 (1966).

In General Electric Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co. (1964) 347 Mass 631, 199 NE2d 326, 2 UCCRS 184, it was conceded that if a delivery of goods to a person was a sale or return of the goods under the instant section the rights of the creditors of the person could be established by an assignee for the benefit of the person's creditors. GE Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co., 347 Mass. 631, 199 N.E.2d 326 (1964).

Where certain lamps were delivered to a person on consignment under a contract by which the person was authorized to sell the lamps directly to some customers, as well as to make deliveries on sales negotiated by the consignor and to distribute the lamps to some subagents of the consignor, a finding was warranted that the lamps were delivered to the person "for sale" within the meaning of the first sentence of subsection (3) of the instant section, and this result is not prevented by subsection (1)(b) of the instant section which defines a sale or return but which does not exclude a consignment of the type here involved. GE Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co., 347 Mass. 631, 199 N.E.2d 326 (1964).

2. Sale on approval.

Transaction in which plaintiff purchased gems from company and received contemporaneous oral promise that he could return gems for complete refund at offices of company's New York City franchisee is "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326 since gems were delivered to plaintiff "primarily for use" and therefore, UCC § 2-201 is applicable to transaction. Kristinus v. H. Stern Com. E Ind. S.A., 466 F. Supp. 903 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

Type of "sale on approval," "on trial," or "on satisfaction" that is dealt with in UCC § 2-326 involves, as noted in Official Comment 1, contract under which seller undertakes particular business risk to satisfy prospective buyer with appearance or performance of goods in question. Such goods are delivered to proposed purchaser, but they remain property of seller until buyer accepts them. Their price has already been agreed on, and buyer's willingness to receive and test goods is consideration for seller's engagement to deliver and sell. In contrast, type of "sale or return" that UCC § 2-326 involves is sale to merchant whose unwillingness to buy is overcome only by seller's engagement to take back goods in lieu of payment if goods are not resold. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

In buyer's action for seller's breach of written and oral warranties in sale of marine diesel engine, (1) where terms of sale contract were contained in seller's letter to buyer, buyer's written purchase order, and manufacturer's written warranty which accompanied sale of engine; (2) where seller also orally warranted to buyer that engine would deliver specified standard of performance, that if it did not do so it could be removed from buyer's boat at seller's expense, and that it would be delivered in time to meet requirements of builder of buyer's boat; (3) where such oral warranties were breached and buyer, within six-months period provided in written engine warranty for manufacturer's repair or replacement of defective parts, refused to allow manufacturer's mechanic to inspect defective engine; (4) where buyer, more than six months after date engine was put into operation, notified seller that he had removed engine from his boat, tendered engine back to seller, and demanded return of purchase price; and (5) where such tender and demand were refused by seller, (1) trial court properly found that all terms of sale contract had not been reduced to writing; (2) admission in evidence of oral warranties as part of sale contract did not violate parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202; (3) such oral warranties did not constitute "sale or return" provision in contract under UCC § 2-326(1)(b), but were analogous to "sale on approval" provision under UCC § 2-326(1)(a) and thus were not required by UCC § 2-326(4) to be in writing; (4) buyer's failure to allow seller to exercise right under UCC § 2-508(1) to inspect and repair engine negated warranty provisions of sale contract; (5) buyer accepted engine under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) by not seasonably notifying seller of buyer's election to return engine; and (6) buyer's delay of nearly six months in informing seller of buyer's intention to revoke acceptance of engine was insufficient compliance with buyer's good faith obligation under UCC § 1-203 and did not revoke such acceptance under UCC § 2-608. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC

§ 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

Where seller issues invoices, delivers goods into purchaser's possession and allows them to remain there for a considerable period of time, title passes to purchaser and seller cannot thereafter contend that goods were delivered "on approval." Gantman v. Paul, 203 Pa. Super. 158, 199 A.2d 519 (1964).

3. Sale or return.

Type of "sale on approval," "on trial," or "on satisfaction" that is dealt with in UCC § 2-326 involves, as noted in Official Comment 1, contract under which seller undertakes particular business risk to satisfy prospective buyer with appearance or performance of goods in question. Such goods are delivered to proposed purchaser, but they remain property of seller until buyer accepts them. Their price has already been agreed on, and buyer's willingness to receive and test goods is consideration for seller's engagement to deliver and sell. In contrast, type of "sale or return" that UCC § 2-326 involves is sale to merchant whose unwillingness to buy is overcome only by seller's engagement to take back goods in lieu of payment if goods are not resold. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-326(4), sales contract that contains a "sale or return" provision must be in writing. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

In buyer's action for seller's breach of written and oral warranties in sale of marine diesel engine, (1) where terms of sale contract were contained in seller's letter to buyer, buyer's written purchase order, and manufacturer's written warranty which accompanied sale of engine; (2) where seller also orally warranted to buyer that engine would deliver specified standard of performance, that if it did not do so it could be removed from buyer's boat at seller's expense, and that it would be delivered in time to meet requirements of builder of buyer's boat; (3) where such oral warranties were breached and buyer, within six-months period provided in written engine warranty for manufacturer's repair or replacement of defective parts, refused to allow manufacturer's mechanic to inspect defective engine; (4) where buyer, more than six months after date engine was put into operation, notified seller that he had removed engine from his boat, tendered engine back to seller, and demanded return of purchase price; and (5) where such tender and demand were refused by seller, (1) trial court properly found that all terms of sale contract had not been reduced to writing; (2) admission in evidence of oral warranties as part of sale contract did not violate parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202; (3) such oral warranties did not constitute "sale or return" provision in contract under UCC § 2-326(1)(b), but were analogous to "sale on approval" provision under UCC § 2-326(1)(a) and thus were not required by UCC § 2-326(4) to be in writing; (4) buyer's failure to allow seller to exercise right under UCC § 2-508(1) to inspect and repair engine negated warranty provisions of sale contract; (5) buyer accepted engine under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) by not seasonably notifying seller of buyer's election to return engine; and (6) buyer's delay of nearly six months in informing seller of buyer's intention to revoke acceptance of engine was insufficient compliance with buyer's good faith obligation under UCC § 1-203 and did not revoke such acceptance under UCC § 2-608. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

Where (1) buyer bought 132 jackets on representation by seller's agent, which agent did not have actual authority to make, that jackets could be returned if they were not sold, (2) buyer at time of entering into contract believed that agent had actual authority to make such representation because of statements by agent which indicated that he owned interest in seller's business, and (3) there was conflicting evidence as to whether salesmen in clothing business were customarily authorized to make sale-or-return contracts, trial court's finding on competent evidence that such authority was not customarily possessed by clothing salesmen would not be disturbed on appeal, and reviewing court would affirm trial court's ruling (1) that buyer could not treat transaction as sale-or-return transaction within scope of UCC § 2-326(1)(b), and (2) that buyer was liable for cost of all merchandise purchased, except 40 jackets which were non-conforming goods. Anglo-American Clothing Corp. v. Marjorie's of Tiburon, Inc., 571 P.2d 427 (Okla. 1977).

Even in sale-or-return contract as defined by UCC § 2-326(1)(b), terms on which return of goods must be accepted by seller may be agreed on by parties, so that seller is not legally obligated to accept return of all or part of goods which are subject of contract on contract's termination unless goods meet standards agreed on by parties (holding that seller of dishwashers to be used in mobile homes was not obligated under sale-or-return contract to accept return of 1305 dishwashers from buyer, since dishwashers were not readily marketable to mobile-home industry because of changes in local building and residential codes in some areas of United States and would require expensive design changes to make them marketable). Intertherm, Inc. v. Coronet Imperial Corp., 558 S.W.2d 344 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Where (1) plaintiff jewelry company delivered certain jewelry to jewelry merchant under invoice stating that if goods were not purchased or returned within five days after their receipt, goods might be "automatically invoiced" to merchant's account, (2) judgment creditor of merchant subsequently levied execution on such jewelry, and (3) plaintiff in suit against judgment creditor alleged that it owned jewelry because goods had been delivered to merchant on consignment, jewelry would be held to have been delivered to merchant for "sale or return" under UCC § 2-326(1), and under UCC § 2-326(2) plaintiff had neither title to jewelry nor right to its possession. Although term "consignment" was admittedly used in dealings between plaintiff and merchant, merchant nevertheless maintained place of business for purpose of selling jewelry generally, had authority to sell jewelry in suit, and plaintiff did not seek return of such jewelry. Bufkor, Inc. v. Star Jewelry Co., 552 S.W.2d 522 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 5, 1977).

In action by inventory financier to recover damages from manufacturer for conversion of ten mobile homes sold by manufacturer on consignment basis to dealer, as to which homes inventory financier claimed perfected security interest, (1) manufacturer's claim that inventory financier's lien never attached to homes, which claim was based on "after-acquired property" nature of financier's lien and financier's alleged failure to advance funds to dealer with specific reference to such homes, could not be sustained, since under UCC § 9-204(3), validity of after-acquired property clauses in security agreements was no longer open to question; (2) in present case, first two requirements of UCC § 9-204(1)-namely, that there must be agreement that security interest attach and secured party must give value-were clearly met by dealer's signing security agreement in favor of inventory financier and financier's advancing substantial funds pursuant to such agreement; (3) third requirement of UCC § 9-204(1)-namely, that debtor must acquire rights in collateral-was satisfied when dealer obtained possession of homes pursuant to consignment agreement between dealer and manufacturer; (4) under UCC § 2-326(2), dealing with goods held on sale or return, homes were subject to claims of dealer's creditors while in dealer's possession; and (5) under UCC § 9-303(1), inventory financier's security interest, which had been properly filed, became perfected when it attached to homes at time dealer obtained possession thereof. GECC v. Town & Country Mobile Homes, Inc., 117 Ariz. 562, 574 P.2d 50 (Ct. App. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-326 sale or return business arrangement, where seller wrongfully refused to accept return of fertilizer, buyer was justified under UCC § 2-604 in storing it at buyer's expense and later selling fertilizer at best price obtainable, but expenses of caring for and selling fertilizer could not include storage of other stock in rented warehouse due to fact that fertilizer took up other storage space needed for other stock. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Rice & Agric. Co-op, Inc., 536 S.W.2d 236 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 29, 1976).

Where first automobile dealer frequently allowed cars which had been acquired from second automobile dealer to remain on second dealer's lots to be sold on commission by second dealer, such cars, although owned by first dealer, were in possession of second dealer under circumstances deemed to be "sale or return" under UCC § 2-326 and since first dealer did not post signs, comply with filing provisions of Article 9, or establish that second dealer was "generally known by his creditors to be substantially engaged in selling the goods of others," such cars were subject to claims of second dealer's creditors. Weidinger Chevrolet, Inc. v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 501 F.2d 459 (8th Cir. Mo. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1033, 95 S. Ct. 516, 42 L. Ed. 2d 309 (1974).

Where owner of tires delivered them to person who was engaged in business of selling tires in his own name and left them with him for a period of time "to sell if they would fit in his program," arrangement was "sale or return" under UCC § 2-326(3) and under UCC § 2-326(2) tires were subject to execution levied on behalf of judgment creditor of dealer since owner did not file any financing statement or have any security agreement, and there were no notices posted on premises indicating that tires were held either on consignment or any other type of agreement whereby dealer had no title to them. Nassar v. Smith, 21 Ill. App. 3d 462, 315 N.E.2d 692 (4th Dist. 1974).

Where parties had long standing business relationship whereby plaintiff would deliver jewels to defendant who would in turn sell jewels to retail customers and pay plaintiff agreed price, or if unable to sell jewels, defendant would return them to plaintiff, transaction was "sale or return" as defined by Code § 2-326, and was governed by UCC. Harold Klein & Co. v.

Delivery of used auto by auto dealer to trailer dealer as incident to sales promotion, which would return $950 to auto dealer if and when auto was sold with any amount above $950 to be divided between auto and trailer dealers, is not sale of auto by auto dealer to trailer dealer within "sale or return" provision. Security Ins. Co. v. Alliance Mut. Ins. Cos., 408 F.2d 878 (10th Cir. N.M. 1969).

Supply arrangement designed to protect accounts receivable and to prevent insolvency or bankruptcy proceeding, and not result of arms length bargaining was "sale or return" within Code § 2-326(1). Vonins, Inc. v. Raff, 101 N.J. Super. 172, 243 A.2d 836 (App. Div. 1968).

An agency for sale is not a sale and return. Therefore when the owner of an automobile left it with a dealer to obtain an offer of purchase and the owner would then be required to approve in order to effect a sale, there was no "sale or return" and creditors of the dealer could therefore not execute upon the automobile. Allgeier v. Campisi, 117 Ga. App. 105, 159 S.E.2d 458 (1968).

Subsection (3) of the instant section is by its terms concerned with certain transactions which, although they may not be sales within the meaning of § 2-106(1) of the instant chapter, are nevertheless deemed to be on sale or return with respect to claims of creditors and the subsection is specifically stated to be applicable even though the "agreement purports to reserve title to the person making delivery until payment or resale or uses such words as 'on consignment' or 'on memorandum'". GE Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co., 347 Mass. 631, 199 N.E.2d 326 (1964).

A "return" provision cannot be added to a written sales transaction by an alleged contemporaneous oral agreement. Wolcov v. Russell, 46 Del. Co. 202 (1959).

4. Sale on "consignment" or "on memorandum".

Requirement that consignor seeking to protect ownership interest must give same notice to secured party of debtor that he would have to give if his transaction with consignee was in form of secu-city transaction applies only where consignor attempts to protect his interest by filing, and not where he has given public notice by posting business sign or where he establishes that creditors have general knowledge that debtor is consignee. In re Sullivan, 103 B.R. 792 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1989).

Placement of signs on poles upholding canopy above gasoline pumps, indicating consignor's ownership of property, was sufficient notice to third parties of consignor's ownership interest in gasoline dispensing equipment, thereby perfecting consignor's interest as against debtor consignee's bankruptcy estate. In re Sullivan, 103 B.R. 792 (Bankr. N.D. Miss. 1989).

In action for conversion of food products, UCC § 2-326(3), dealing with delivery of goods to person under name other than name of person making delivery, did not apply where goods in suit were supplied to defendant under consignor's name. American Kitchen Foods, Inc. v. Hersch Cold Storage Co., 449 F. Supp. 34 (W.D. Pa. 1978).

Transactions which once might have been regarded as consignments are now regarded as sales by the Uniform Commercial Code, as indicated by language of UCC § 2-326. The purpose of this change is to permit people to deal with a debtor on the assumption that all property in his possession is unencumbered, unless the contrary is indicated by their own knowledge or by public records. The intention of the parties is no longer determinative of the question whether a transaction is a sale or a consignment. Bufkor, Inc. v. Star Jewelry Co., 552 S.W.2d 522 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 5, 1977).

Consignment bears some resemblance to both "sale or return" and "sale on approval" (UCC § 2-326(1)). In case of a consignment, as in case of a sale or return, goods are delivered for purpose of resale. Furthermore, unsold goods delivered on consignment, like unsold goods delivered under a sale on approval, are expected to be returned to consignor. International Looms, Inc. v. Jono Textile Co., 34 Conn. Supp. 599, 379 A.2d 3 (1977).

Contention of manufacturer, who sold ten mobile homes to dealer on consignment basis, that even if inventory financer's security interest in such homes had attached under UCC § 9-303(1) while homes were in dealer's possession, such interest became unenforceable when manufacturer regained possession of homes from dealer, which contention was based on UCC § 2-326(2) which subjects consigned "sale-or-return" goods to claims of buyer's creditors while goods are in buyer's possession, could not be sustained, since UCC § 2-326(2) merely limits creditors whose claims may attach to those who have claims during period of buyer's possession and cannot be interpreted to defeat security interest that has attached during this possessory period. GECC v. Town & Country Mobile Homes, Inc., 117 Ariz. 562, 574 P.2d 50 (Ct. App. 1977).

In action by wholesaler against retailer for recovery of purchase price of two motorcycles, under UCC §§ 1-205, 2-202 and 2-326(4) trial court properly denied admissibility to defendant's proposed parol evidence that agreement was actually consignment sale agreement under "sale or return" arrangement, where written sales agreement between parties was not ambiguous. Recreatives, Inc. v. Travel-On Motorcycles Co., 29 N.C. App. 727, 225 S.E.2d 637 (1976).

Trial court's finding that consignor of construction equipment had not established that consignee was generally known by its creditors to be substantially engaged in selling goods of others was not clearly erroneous and bank's security interest in machines, having attached while they were in consignee's possession, was not affected by subsequent transfer of possession of machines from consignee to consignor. American Nat'l Bank v. Quad Constr., Inc., 31 Colo. App. 373, 504 P.2d 1113 (1972).

Where dealer had machines on consignment from owner at time it gave bank security interest in its inventory including consigned machines, bank's security interest in machines was superior to interests of owner and was not affected by subsequent transfer of possession of machines from dealer to owner, so that bank was entitled to recover possession of machines from owner or to recover value of machines if return could not be had. American Nat'l Bank v. Quad Constr., Inc., 31 Colo. App. 373, 504 P.2d 1113 (1972).

Repairs to tractor made by equipment dealer were incidental to sale which was dominant purpose of delivery; held, dealer was consignee and his secured creditor had interest in tractor superior to that of owner. American Nat'l Bank v. Etter, 28 Colo. App. 511, 476 P.2d 287 (1970).

Gas station operator used his name and word "dealer" over door to premises; oil company required operator to execute retail dealer consignment agreement for gasoline delivered to assure payment out of proceeds of sale of gasoline; held, operator was not doing business under name of his supplier, any more than any other gasoline dealer who sells branded gasolines on his own account at stations identified as those at which particular brand of gas is sold; hence, treating assignment as "true" consignment, it follows that as against claim of operator's other creditors, supplier may not rely on its purported reservation of title to gasoline. Mann v. Clark Oil & Ref. Corp., 302 F. Supp. 1376 (E.D. Mo. 1969), aff'd, 425 F.2d 736 (8th Cir. Mo. 1970).

Where, in action by supplier of merchandise to dealer on consignment against trustee of creditor of such dealer, who holds valid security agreement which includes after-acquired property, supplier depends for his right to maintain such action upon code provision relating to consignment sales and rights of creditors, and it is incumbent upon supplier to show that dealer's creditors knew that such dealers would subsequently engage in selling goods of others. Sussen Rubber Co. v. Hertz, 19 Ohio App. 2d 1, 249 N.E.2d 65 (1969).

Where the consignee of ladies' accessories entered an agreement with a manufacturer of ladies' gloves, whereby the manufacturer would deliver gloves on consignment directly to stores with title to the gloves remaining in the manufacturer and the consignee receiving a commission for having arranged the retail sales, and the goods were never delivered to the consignee's place of business; the assignee of creditors of the consignee had no right to merchandise remaining in possession of the manufacturer previously consigned nor to any proceeds received by the manufacturer from the sale of merchandise previously consigned. In re Mincow Bag Co., 29 A.D.2d 400 (1st Dep't 1968), aff'd, 24 N.Y.2d 776, 300 N.Y.S.2d 115, 248 N.E.2d 26 (1969).

Where goods which were sold on consignment were delivered by the seller not to the consignee but to chain and department stores in many parts of the country the underlying basis for UCC § 2-326 of the danger of third persons being misled by the apparent ownership of goods in the possession of the consignee is lacking and the assignee for the benefit of the creditors of the consignee is not entitled to the proceeds from the sale or such merchandise. In re Mincow Bag Co., 53 Misc. 2d 599 (1967), aff'd, 29 A.D.2d 400, 288 N.Y.S.2d 364 (1st Dep't 1968), aff'd, 24 N.Y.2d 776, 300 N.Y.S.2d 115, 248 N.E.2d 26 (1969).

The first sentence of subsection (3) of the instant section is applicable to transactions which might not ordinarily be characterized as sales, such as a delivery on consignment, and the applicability of the subsection to such transactions is not affected by the second sentence thereof which gives examples of transactions to which the subsection applies but which does not limit the plain meaning of the first sentence thereof, and indeed the second sentence gives a consignment as one of the examples of transactions to which the subsection is applicable. GE Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co., 347 Mass. 631, 199 N.E.2d 326 (1964).

Where a person who did business under its own name was a wholesaler buying and selling electrical, hardware and housewares merchandise and 25 per cent of which business was in the sale and distribution of certain large lamps which were delivered to the person on consignment, the fact that some of the lamps were distributed by the person as serving agent for the consignor did not prevent a finding that the person maintained a place of business in which it dealt in goods of the kind involved, under a name other than the name of the consignor, within the meaning of subsection (3) of the instant section. GE Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co., 347 Mass. 631, 199 N.E.2d 326 (1964).

A person receiving goods for sale on consignment has the power to transfer title as against the transferor to a buyer in the ordinary course of business (recognizing principle but refusing to apply it in a non-Code state). United States v. Menier Hdwe. No. 1, Inc., 219 F. Supp. 448 (W.D. Tex. 1963).

The power given by UCC § 2-326(3) to a consignee to pass title to a buyer in ordinary course is contrary to the non-Code law of Texas under which the consignee is merely a bailee. United States v. Menier Hdwe. No. 1, Inc., 219 F. Supp. 448 (W.D. Tex. 1963).

5. Maintaining place of business, etc.

Where the consigned goods were delivered to chain and department stores throughout the country and the sales thereof were not made by the consignee or from any places of business maintained by it, the assignee for benefit of consignee's creditors was not entitled to retain the goods or the proceeds of its sales, for no extensions of credit to the consignee could reasonably be presumed to have resulted from such a transaction. In re Mincow Bag Co., 53 Misc. 2d 599 (1967), aff'd, 29 A.D.2d 400, 288 N.Y.S.2d 364 (1st Dep't 1968), aff'd, 24 N.Y.2d 776, 300 N.Y.S.2d 115, 248 N.E.2d 26 (1969).

Where a person who did business under its own name was a wholesaler buying and selling electrical, hardware and housewares merchandise and 25 per cent of which business was in the sale and distribution of certain large lamps which were delivered to the person on consignment, the fact that some of the lamps were distributed by the person as serving agent for the consignor did not prevent a finding that the person maintained a place of business in which it dealt in goods of the kind involved, under a name other than the name of the consignor, within the meaning of subsection (3) of the instant section. GE Co. v. Pettingell Supply Co., 347 Mass. 631, 199 N.E.2d 326 (1964).

6. Substantially engaged in selling goods of others.

Evidence of isolated sales for one creditor, or of what the dealer knows of his own business, or even what the supplier of the goods knows about the merchandise delivered to such dealer by him, is not sufficient to show that the dealer's creditors generally know he is substantially engaged in selling the goods of others as provided in subdiv. (b) of subsec. (3). Guardian Dist. Co. v. Settles, 114 Ga. App. 418, 151 S.E.2d 530 (1966).

Where evidence adduced by defendant, owner of four automobiles he had delivered to a dealer, failed to establish that dealer was generally known by his creditors to be substantially engaged in selling the goods of others, Georgia had no sign law of which the owner could avail himself, and owner had neither taken nor perfected a security interest, the delivery to the dealer constituted a "sale and return," and plaintiff who had advanced money to dealer and obtained from him bills of sale and trust receipts for the automobiles obtained title sufficient to support an action for trover against defendant. Guardian Dist. Co. v. Settles, 114 Ga. App. 418, 151 S.E.2d 530 (1966).

7. Sale under security agreement.

Where automobile dealer financed his used car inventory through floor plan arrangement with finance company and, under side arrangement with second automobile dealer, satisfied his obligations to finance company by assigning used cars to second dealer, who would then issue its note to finance company in release of first dealer's note, but such cars were frequently left on first dealer's lot and sold by him on commission basis, and where first automobile dealer then entered into agreement with credit corporation to finance his new car inventory and executed security agreement in favor of credit corporation covering his inventory, including, inter alia, his used car inventory: (1) Credit corporation acquired perfected security interest in first dealer's used car inventory; (2) security interest was not waived by clause in security agreement providing that private sale of chattel to dealer in such types of chattels for amount originally paid by dealer for such chattel or at lesser fair price would be "commercially reasonable disposition thereof," nor was it waived by fact that credit corporation treated dealer's used car business as completely separate from his new car business which credit corporation was financing; (3) sales of used cars to second dealer, made at arm's length, without fraud and at fair price, were sales in ordinary course of business, and, hence, second dealer acquired title to such cars free of security interest. Weidinger Chevrolet, Inc. v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 501 F.2d 459 (8th Cir. Mo. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1033, 95 S. Ct. 516, 42 L. Ed. 2d 309 (1974).

Bankrupt filling station operator acquired gasoline under unperfected security agreement, and not under true consignment; bankrupt was dealt with while operating under his own name and not that of petroleum company; held, gasoline was subject to claims of creditors. Mann v. Clark Oil & Ref. Corp., 425 F.2d 736 (8th Cir. Mo. 1970).

When the transaction is between the secured seller and the debtor-buyer, the interest of the secured party is protected and it is immaterial whether the steps were taken which would be necessary to perfect the interest of the secured party as against innocent third persons. Rottman v. Wallace, 52 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 187 (Pa. 1962).

§ 75-2-327. Special incidents of sale on approval and sale or return.

(1) Under a sale on approval unless otherwise agreed

(a) although the goods are identified to the contract the risk of loss and the title do not pass to the buyer until acceptance; and

(b) use of the goods consistent with the purpose of trial is not acceptance but failure seasonably to notify the seller of election to return the goods is acceptance, and if the goods conform to the contract acceptance of any part is acceptance of the whole; and

(c) after due notification of election to return, the return is at the seller's risk and expense but a merchant buyer must follow any reasonable instructions.

(2) Under a sale or return unless otherwise agreed

(a) the option to return extends to the whole or any commercial unit of the goods while in substantially their original condition, but must be exercised seasonably and

(b) the return is at the buyer's risk and expense.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In buyer's action for seller's breach of written and oral warranties in sale of marine diesel engine, (1) where terms of sale contract were contained in seller's letter to buyer, buyer's written purchase order, and manufacturer's written warranty which accompanied sale of engine; (2) where seller also orally warranted to buyer that engine would deliver specified standard of performance, that if it did not do so it could be removed from buyer's boat at seller's expense, and that it would be delivered in time to meet requirements of builder of buyer's boat; (3) where such oral warranties were breached and buyer, within six-months period provided in written engine warranty for manufacturer's repair or replacement of defective parts, refused to allow manufacturer's mechanic to inspect defective engine; (4) where buyer, more than six months after date engine was put into operation, notified seller that he had removed engine from his boat, tendered engine back to seller, and demanded return of purchase price; and (5) where such tender and demand were refused by seller, (1) trial court properly found that all terms of sale contract had not been reduced to writing; (2) admission in evidence of oral warranties as part of sale contract did not violate parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202; (3) such oral warranties did not constitute "sale or return" provision in contract under UCC § 2-326(1)(b), but were analogous to "sale on approval" provision under UCC § 2-326(1)(a) and thus were not required by UCC § 2-326(4) to be in writing; (4) buyer's failure to allow seller to exercise right under UCC § 2-508(1) to inspect and repair engine negated warranty provisions of sale contract; (5) buyer accepted engine under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) by not seasonably notifying seller of buyer's election to return engine; and (6) buyer's delay of nearly six months in informing seller of buyer's intention to revoke acceptance of engine was insufficient compliance with buyer's good faith obligation under UCC § 1-203 and did not revoke such acceptance under UCC § 2-608. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-327(1)(b), goods delivered under sale-on-approval transaction are deemed to have been accepted if buyer fails seasonably to notify seller of buyer's election to return goods. If this principle is applied to a consignment, consignee's failure at end of consignment period seasonably to return goods or to notify consignor of consignee's election to return them will permit consignor to treat transaction as completed sale (holding that consignee's failure to return goods or to notify consignor of election to return them for more than four years after goods were delivered to consignee was unreasonable and converted transaction from a consignment into a sale at election of consignor). International Looms, Inc. v. Jono Textile Co., 34 Conn. Supp. 599, 379 A.2d 3 (1977).

Sale on approval did not relieve buyer of liability for purchase of truck under UCC § 2-327 where buyer used truck beyond approval period without complaining and without offering to return truck. Delaware Valley Equip. Co. v. Granahan, 409 F. Supp. 1011 (E.D. Pa. 1976).

Where buyers purchased home furnishings from seller and furnishings were delivered to buyers' home "on approval," and where, inter alia, draperies and carpeting had been tailored to and installed in house, and over 2 months had elapsed without buyers notifying seller of disapproval, there was "failure seasonably to notify the seller of election to return the goods" under UCC § 2-327 and, hence, there was "acceptance" of home furnishings by buyers. Valley Bank & Trust Co. v. Gerber, 526 P.2d 1121 (Utah 1974).

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

Where approximately 10 days after defendant received diamonds as part of "sale or return" transaction, diamonds were stolen from his jewelry store, plaintiff was entitled to contract price of diamonds, regardless of binding effect of memorandum which accompanied shipment of diamonds and provided that jewels were delivered at defendant's risk from all hazards regardless of negligence. Harold Klein & Co. v. Lopardo, 113 N.H. 400, 308 A.2d 538, 66 A.L.R.3d 187 (1973).

§ 75-2-328. Sale by auction.

(1) In a sale by auction if goods are put up in lots each lot is the subject of a separate sale.

(2) A sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer so announces by the fall of the hammer or in other customary manner. Where a bid is made while the hammer is falling in acceptance of a prior bid the auctioneer may in his discretion reopen the bidding or declare the goods sold under the bid on which the hammer was falling.

(3) Such a sale is with reserve unless the goods are in explicit terms put up without reserve. In an auction with reserve the auctioneer may withdraw the goods at any time until he announces completion of the sale. In an auction without reserve, after the auctioneer calls for bids on an article or lot, that article or lot cannot be withdrawn unless no bid is made within a reasonable time. In either case a bidder may retract his bid until the auctioneer's announcement of completion of the sale, but a bidder's retraction does not revive any previous bid.

(4) If the auctioneer knowingly receives a bid on the seller's behalf or the seller makes or procures such a bid, and notice has not been given that liberty for such bidding is reserved, the buyer may at his option avoid the sale or take the goods at the price of the last good faith bid prior to the completion of the sale. This subsection shall not apply to any bid at a forced sale.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action for specific performance of contract for sale of well-drilling equipment, where such equipment was "struck off" at auction sale to buyer, sale under UCC § 2-328(2) was complete, as a matter of law, at fall of auctioneer's hammer. Bullock v. Joe Bailey Auction Co., 580 P.2d 225 (Utah 1978).

Nothing in the Uniform Commercial Code (see UCC §§ 2-328(1) and 2-307) gives an auctioneer the right to condition delivery of one lot of goods sold at an auction sale on the payment of all lots purchased at such sale where the sale is made in the ordinary course of business. Dulman v. Martin Fein & Co., 66 A.D.2d 809 (2d Dep't 1978).

Condition of auction sale imposed by paragraph in instrument stating terms of such sale, which provided that sale was subject to "confirmation of the assignee or attorney and the secured party," was reasonable and was not precluded by UCC § 2-328(2) (holding that Uniform Commercial Code mandates liberal construction of UCC § 2-328(2)). Dulman v. Martin Fein & Co., 66 A.D.2d 809 (2d Dep't 1978).

Notwithstanding announcement was made at auction that some items were subject to owner's reservation of right to reject bid, seller of tractor who reserved right to reject bid on tractor could not, under UCC § 2-328, reject bid accepted by auctioneer where tractor was not identified in printed sale bill or by announcement before bidding as specifically being subject to reservation and most items being auctioned were not subject to reservation. Coleman v. Duncan, 540 S.W.2d 935 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

Municipal ordinance requiring auctioneer to refund in full purchase price when demand is made within 72 hours after purchase, provided purchaser returns article or merchandise to place of purchase in same condition as when purchased did not conflict with UCC § 2-328 which was intended to resolve finality of auction sale question, as between parties involved, when bid is made while hammer is falling. B. Jeselsohn, Inc. v. Atlantic City, 70 N.J. 238, 358 A.2d 797 (1976).

UCC § 2-328(2) is inapplicable to a sale of land by auction, since Article 2 of the UCC is applicable only to goods. Hoffman v. Horton, 212 Va. 565, 186 S.E.2d 79 (1972).

A seller could withdraw a horse from an auction sale even after the fall of the hammer, but only before the horse was taken from the sale ring; when this horse was taken from the ring after being sold, all title and interest passed to the purchaser, regardless of the delivery or non-delivery of papers providing evidence of ownership. Bradshaw v. Thompson, 454 F.2d 75 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 878, 93 S. Ct. 130, 34 L. Ed. 2d 131 (1972).

UCC § 2-328 defining sale by auction does not mean that one cannot enter sales contract or agreement of sale by way of auction; or that where all other incidents of auction are present, transaction is not auction if title is not transferred upon hammer's fall. Hawaii Jewelers Ass'n v. Fine Arts Gallery, Inc., 51 Haw. 502, 463 P.2d 914 (1970).

The Code continues the prior law under which title to property sold at an auction sale passes to the bidder and the sale is complete when the property is knocked down to the bidder. Diefenbach v. Gorney, 93 Ill. App. 2d 51, 234 N.E.2d 813 (3d Dist. 1968).

In an auction sale, particularly of farm crops, a tender of delivery of the goods is not a condition precedent to the obligation to pay. Diefenbach v. Gorney, 93 Ill. App. 2d 51, 234 N.E.2d 813 (3d Dist. 1968).

The auctioneer is merely the agent of the parties and is not the buyer with respect to the original seller, nor the seller with respect to the ultimate buyer. Tulsa Auto Dealers Auction v. North Side State Bank, 431 P.2d 408 (Okla. 1966).

The fact that the auctioneer has the right to commissions in the sale made by him does not give him any proprietary interest in the goods themselves so as to give him a standing superior to a creditor who has a security interest in the goods. Tulsa Auto Dealers Auction v. North Side State Bank, 431 P.2d 408 (Okla. 1966).

An auction with reserve is the normal procedure. Drew v. John Deere Co. of Syracuse, Inc., 19 A.D.2d 308 (4th Dep't 1963).

A statement that the goods would be sold to the highest bidder is not the equivalent of a sale without reserve, and is nothing more than an announcement that a person will sell his property at an auction at which bids will be received. Drew v. John Deere Co. of Syracuse, Inc., 19 A.D.2d 308 (4th Dep't 1963).

If an auction sale is with reserve the seller may purchase and hence the person making the next highest bid cannot contend that the seller is disqualified and such disqualification makes him the highest bidder whose bid must be accepted. Drew v. John Deere Co. of Syracuse, Inc., 19 A.D.2d 308 (4th Dep't 1963).

This section contains approximately the same language as that found in the Pennsylvania Sales Act provision governing auction sales, which provided that a sale by auction was complete when the auctioneer announced its completion by the fall of the hammer, or another customary manner. Guaranty Trust Co. v. Williamsport Wire Rope Co., 222 F.2d 416 (3d Cir. Pa. 1955).

TITLE, CREDITORS AND GOOD FAITH PURCHASERS.

SEC.

- 75-2-401. Passing of title; reservation for security; limited application of this section.
- 75-2-402. Rights of seller's creditors against sold goods.
- 75-2-403. Power to transfer; good faith purchase of goods; "entrusting".

§ 75-2-401. Passing of title; reservation for security; limited application of this section.

Each provision of this chapter with regard to the rights, obligations and remedies of the seller, the buyer, purchasers or other third parties applies irrespective of title to the goods except where the provision refers to such title. Insofar as situations are not covered by the other provisions of this chapter and matters concerning title become material the following rules apply:

(1) Title to goods cannot pass under a contract for sale prior to their identification to the contract (Section 2-501) [Section 75-2-501], and unless otherwise explicitly agreed the buyer acquires by their identification a special property as limited by this code. Any retention or reservation by the seller of the title (property) in goods shipped or delivered to the buyer is limited in effect to a reservation of a security interest. Subject to these provisions and to the provisions of the chapter on Secured Transactions (Chapter 9), title to goods passes from the seller to the buyer in any manner and on any conditions explicitly agreed on by the parties.

(2) Unless otherwise explicitly agreed title passes to the buyer at the time and place at which the seller completes his performance with reference to the physical delivery of the goods, despite any reservation of a security interest and even though a document of title is to be delivered at a different time or place; and in particular and despite any reservation of a security interest by the bill of lading

(a) if the contract requires or authorizes the seller to send the goods to the buyer but does not require him to deliver them at destination, title passes to the buyer at the time and place of shipment; but

(b) if the contract requires delivery at destination, title passes on tender there.

(3) Unless otherwise explicitly agreed where delivery is to be made without moving the goods,

(a) if the seller is to deliver a document of title, title passes at the time when and the place where he delivers such documents; or

(b) if the goods are at the time of contracting already identified and no documents are to be delivered, title passes at the time and place of contracting.

(4) A rejection or other refusal by the buyer to receive or retain the goods, whether or not justified, or a justified revocation of acceptance reverts title to the goods in the seller. Such reversioning occurs by operation of law and is not a "sale."

Lease agreement leasing automobile for period of 24 months, though it placed burden of repairs, taxes, insurance, etc. upon lessee, was not sale as defined by UCC § 2-106, and provisions of UCC § 2-316 governing exclusion or modification of warranties did not apply; thus, provisions of lease agreement that eliminated any implied warranty of law and the right to recover particular damages claimed against owner-lessor or assignee were effective, notwithstanding lease agreement did meet requirements of UCC § 2-316. Mays v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 132 Ga. App. 602, 208 S.E.2d 614 (1974).

Transfer of title for consideration is legal act which can be accomplished without property ever entering state. Sullivan v. United States, 395 U.S. 169, 89 S. Ct. 1648, 23 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1969).

Under this section it is obvious that unpaid seller may reserve a right of possession or property, or a security interest when goods are shipped. Chase Manhattan Bank v. Nissho Pac. Corp., 22 A.D.2d 215 (1st Dep't 1964), aff'd, 16 N.Y.2d 999, 265 N.Y.S.2d 660, 212 N.E.2d 897 (1965).

The "passage of title" concepts of the Uniform Commercial Code have no application to zoning regulations, in determining whether a building is a warehouse or a store for retail sales on the premises. Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Power, 390 Pa. 206, 134 A.2d 659 (1957).

In an action in which the purchaser of a truck alleged that the seller had represented a used truck as a new one in violation of Mississippi's Consumer Protection Act (§§ 75-24-1 et seq.) and the Mississippi Motor Vehicle Commission

Law (§§ 63-17-51 et seq.), the trial court did not err in failing to consider § 75-2-401(2), which pertains to passing of title, since the issue was whether the truck was new or used when it was purchased and this question could be answered without exceeding the confines of the Motor Vehicle Commission Law and the Motor Vehicle Title Law (§§ 63-21-1 et seq.). Hernandez v. Vickery Chevrolet-Oldsmobile Co., 652 So. 2d 179 (Miss. 1995).

UCC applies to sales of natural gas, and therefore governs sales contract between oil company and royalty owners in certain Mississippi oil and gas leases; in action by royalty owners seeking unrecovered payments from oil company under leases, gas underground is future goods pursuant to § 75-2-105, and thus no particular gas is sold until it is identified or brought to surface; accordingly, under § 75-2-107(1), contracts are contracts to sell and only become effective as sales when gas is severed from land; where sales contract itself provides that title to gas passes when gas is delivered, gas was not sold until it was produced, and accordingly, basis of royalty should be market value at well at time of production and delivery. Piney Woods Country Life Sch. v. Shell Oil Co., 726 F.2d 225 (5th Cir. 1984), reh'g denied, 750 F.2d 69 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1005, 105 S. Ct. 1868, 85 L. Ed. 2d 161 (1985).

Where (1) five shipments of nylon yarn shipped from the Netherlands were delivered to and accepted by buyer in South Carolina on or before August 23, 1976, (2) buyer, after failing to pay major part of purchase price, filed petition in bankruptcy on August 31, 1976, and seller in adversary proceeding against bankruptcy trustee sought to reclaim goods or recover balance due thereon, (3) contract between seller and buyer provided that notwithstanding delivery of goods, title thereto remained in seller until full payment by buyer, that all disputes arising out of the contract were to be governed by English law, and that buyer accepted jurisdiction of any courts in England or elsewhere that seller might designate, (4) seller claimed (a) that under UCC § 2-401(1), such title-retention clause created security interest in seller's favor that must be deemed to have been perfected with regard to either the Netherlands or England because law of such countries did not provide for perfecting security interests by notice filing, (b) that as a result, seller had benefit of four-month-continuation-of-perfection provision set forth in UCC § 9-103(3), and (c) that because yarn had arrived at buyer's plant in South Carolina within four months of August 31, 1976 (date on which buyer's bankruptcy petition was filed and bankruptcy trustee's lien arose), seller's perfected security interest was superior to trustee's lien, court held (1) that because seller relied on UCC § 2-401(1) to validate its security interest, court would conclude that seller had security interest in goods, (2) that under the Uniform Commercial Code, a consensual security interest that arises by virtue of UCC § 2-401(1) is subject to perfection and priority provisions of Article 9, as provided by UCC § 9-113, as long as the debtor lawfully has possession of goods, (3) that since buyer in present case had possession of goods, seller should have filed financing statement to perfect its security interest and thus render it superior to bankruptcy trustee's lien, and (4) that since no such financing statement was filed, either before delivery of goods or before August 31, 1976, seller's security interest had never been perfected and could not prevail over trustee's lien under UCC § 9-301(1)(b), which provides that unperfected security interest is subordinate to rights of person who becomes lien creditor without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected. In re Duplan Corp., 1978, 455 F. Supp. 926

Where (1) leasing company on November 29, 1974 sold automobile to buyer who paid cash and received possession of vehicle and also bill of sale which correctly described vehicle and identified it by its identification number, (2) buyer, who did not receive certificate of title to vehicle until January, 1975, applied for new certificate of title and title was recorded by Division of Motor Vehicles on January 27, 1975, (3) buyer later learned that certificate of title sent to him by lessor-seller was for another vehicle similar to one buyer had purchased, (4) lessor-seller, on January 27, 1975, entered into security agreement with bank in connection with loan and gave bank security interest in certain items of collateral which included vehicle sold to buyer, (5) bank filed financing statement covering buyer's vehicle and also sent vehicle's real certificate of title to Division of Motor Vehicles for recording of bank's interest, and (6) bank, on lessor-seller's default on loan, sought to liquidate collateral, including vehicle sold to buyer, but buyer refused to relinquish possession of such vehicle, bank's alleged security interest in buyer's vehicle was unenforceable (1) because of uncertainty with which Wisconsin motor vehicle statutes purported to establish time of transfer of title to a motor vehicle, (2) express legislative intent that a certificate of title constituted only prima facie evidence of ownership (3) necessity under UCC § 9-203(1)(c) that debtor (lessor-seller of vehicle in suit) have rights in buyer's vehicle that could be encumbered and (4) fact that lessor-seller, after sale of vehicle in suit, had no rights therein that could be encumbered, since title to vehicle had already passed to buyer under UCC § 2-401(2) when vehicle was delivered to buyer. National Exch. Bank v. Mann, 81 Wis. 2d 352, 260 N.W.2d 716 (1978).

Where (1) buyer, under oral agreement to pay cash, bought used trencher and trailer from seller and accepted machinery on its delivery by seller, (2) seller listed buyer on seller's books as debtor but did not have buyer execute any document, (3) bank made loan to buyer, and buyer executed security agreement and financing statement giving bank security interest in machinery bought from seller, (4) bank perfected its security interest in machinery, (5) on buyer's default, seller reclaimed machinery with buyer's consent, but without bank's consent or knowledge, and (6) bank sued seller for possession of machinery or value thereof, trial court properly held that seller's interest in machinery was subordinate to interest of bank, since under UCC § 2-401(1) and § 1-201(37), seller's reservation of title to machinery was limited in effect to reservation of security interest, and bank had perfected its security interest by filing financing statement, but seller had not filed such a statement. Peerless Equip.

Co. v. Azle State Bank, 559 S.W.2d 114 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

In action by lender to establish security interest in mobile homes "floor-planned" for dealer, (1) where lender pursuant to written agreement advanced money to dealer in Arizona for inventory financing, agreement gave lender security interest in all of dealer's present and after-acquired inventory, and lender filed financing statement with Arizona Secretary of State; (2) where Alabama manufacturer thereafter orally sold 16 mobile homes to dealer but was not paid therefor, invoice accompanying such homes stated that title thereto could be transferred only through manufacturer's certificate of origin, and manufacturer retained all such certificates; (3) where manufacturer did not file financing statement evidencing its interest in such homes with Arizona Secretary of State; and (4) where Arizona motor-vehicle registration code, at time of sale of homes to dealer, exempted them from registration requirement while they were still owned by dealer or manufacturer, plaintiff lender (1) was not required to file financing statement and certificates of title to homes with Arizona motor-vehicle division in order that lender's lien could be indorsed on such certificates and lender's security interest in dealer's inventory could be perfected; (2) lender's security interest in homes was perfected merely by filing financing statement with Arizona Secretary of State pursuant to UCC § 9-302(1) and UCC § 9-401; (3) manufacturer, by retaining title to homes, merely reserved unperfected purchase-money security interest therein under UCC § 2-401; and (4) lender's perfected security interest in homes has priority over manufacturer's unperfected security interest therein under UCC § 9-301. GECC v. Tidwell Indus., Inc., 115 Ariz. 362, 565 P.2d 868 (1977).

Provisions of Code § 2-401 are not applicable to dispute involving sale of structure to be removed from appropriated land, since such dispute is within purview of Code § 2-107 relating to goods to be severed from realty. Jonus v. Taddio, 61 Misc. 2d 176 (1969).

3. Identification.

Although UCC has substituted flexible contractual approach for more rigid concept of title to which Uniform Sales Act adhered, UCC § 2-401(1) provides that title to goods does pass when goods are identified to contract. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

Under § 2-401 title cannot pass before identification of goods; but while § 2-501 does provide that identification may be made at any time and in any manner explicitly agreed to by parties, this does not mean that parties may delay passage of title by simple expedient of agreeing that goods are not yet identified to contract when, in fact, they have already been delivered to buyer. First Nat'l Bank v. Smoker, 153 Ind. App. 71, 286 N.E.2d 203 (1972), reh'g denied, 153 Ind. App. 89, 287 N.E.2d 788 (1972).

Agreement that auto leasing agency, in return for loan, would annually supply creditor with automobile does not create interest of creditor in any particular automobile until auto is delivered to him for use, i. e. is "Identified to the contract". First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Smithloff, 119 Ga. App. 284, 167 S.E.2d 190 (1969).

Although this section provides that title cannot pass prior to identification, it does not provide that title must pass once the goods are identified. Silver v. Sloop Silver Cloud, 259 F. Supp. 187 (S.D.N.Y. 1966).

4. Retention or reservation by seller.

Where (1) five shipments of nylon yarn shipped from the Netherlands were delivered to and accepted by buyer in South Carolina on or before August 23, 1976, (2) buyer, after failing to pay major part of purchase price, filed petition in bankruptcy on August 31, 1976, and seller in adversary proceeding against bankruptcy trustee sought to reclaim goods or recover balance due thereon, (3) contract between seller and buyer provided that notwithstanding delivery of goods, title thereto remained in seller until full payment by buyer, that all disputes arising out of the contract were to be governed by English law, and that buyer accepted jurisdiction of any courts in England or elsewhere that seller might designate, (4) seller claimed (a) that under UCC § 2-401(1), such title-retention clause created security interest in seller's favor that must be deemed to have been perfected with regard to either the Netherlands or England because law of such countries did not provide for perfecting security interests by notice filing, (b) that as a result, seller had benefit of four-month-continuation-of-perfection provision set forth in UCC § 9-103(3), and (c) that because yarn had arrived at buyer's plant in South Carolina within four months of August 31, 1976 (date on which buyer's bankruptcy petition was filed and bankruptcy trustee's lien arose), seller's perfected security interest was superior to trustee's lien, court held (1) that because seller relied on UCC § 2-401(1) to validate its security interest, court would conclude that seller had security interest in goods, (2) that under the Uniform Commercial Code, a consensual security interest that arises by virtue of UCC § 2-401(1) is subject to perfection and priority provisions of Article 9, as provided by UCC § 9-113, as long as the debtor lawfully has possession of goods, (3) that since buyer in present case had possession of goods, seller should have filed financing statement to perfect its security interest and thus render it superior to bankruptcy trustee's lien, and (4) that since no such financing statement was filed, either before delivery of goods or before August 31, 1976, seller's security interest had never been perfected and could not prevail over trustee's lien under UCC § 9-301(1)(b), which provides that unperfected security interest is subordinate to rights of person who becomes lien creditor without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected. In re Duplan Corp., 455 F. Supp. 926 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Devices whereby title is reserved in the seller-creditor for a period of time following possession by the debtor are treated under UCC Article 9 as though title had been transferred to the debtor and the seller-creditor had retained only a security interest in the goods. O'Dell v. Kunkel's, Inc., 581 P.2d 878 (Okla. 1978).

Title to goods sold is of little relative consequence under the Uniform Commercial Code, since drafters of code intentionally attempted to avoid defining rights of parties to goods in terms of who has title thereto, as is evidence by UCC § 2-401(1), which provides that any retention or reservation by seller of title to goods shipped or delivered to buyer is limited in effect to reservation of security interest. Morton Booth Co. v. Tiara Furn., Inc., 564 P.2d 210 (Okla. 1977).

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

Reservation of title clause in installment sales contract between purchasers and seller of organ was ineffective as anything other than reservation of security interest; thus, purchasers had title to organ when they sold it, though they had not completed paying for it under contract, and sale of organ to third party could not have constituted "fraudulent conversion." Commonwealth v. Jett, 230 Pa. Super. 373, 326 A.2d 508 (1974).

Absent reservation of security interest in agreement for sale of tractor, title to machine vested in buyer; but title revested in seller when buyer executed repossession authorization. Olson v. Penrod, 493 S.W.2d 673 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973).

Any agreement concerning passage of title, whether oral or written, is subject to provision in § 2-401 limiting retention of title by seller in goods delivered to buyer to reservation of security interest. First Nat'l Bank v. Smoker, 153 Ind. App. 71, 286 N.E.2d 203, 287 N.E.2d 788 (3d Dist. 1972).

Although parties agreed to reserve title in seller upon delivery of goods to buyer, statutory language of § 2-401(1) clearly subjects parties' title agreement to mandate that seller may only retain security interest after delivery to buyer. Meinhard-Commercial Corp. v. Hargo Woolen Mills, 112 N.H. 500, 300 A.2d 321 (1972).

Second sentence of UCC § 2-401(1) stating that retention or reservation by seller of title in goods shipped or delivered is limited in effect to reservation of security interest, cannot be varied by private agreement between parties. Herington Livestock Auction Co. v. Verschoor, 179 N.W.2d 491 (Iowa 1970).

Retention of title clause in condition sales agreement is mere retention of lien to secure payment of price; such clause cannot be construed as explicit agreement that title is to remain in seller. In re Russell, 300 F. Supp. 6 (E.D. Tenn. 1969).

Under this section it is obvious that unpaid seller may reserve a right of possession or property, or a security interest when goods are shipped. Chase Manhattan Bank v. Nissho Pac. Corp., 22 A.D.2d 215 (1st Dep't 1964), aff'd, 16 N.Y.2d 999, 265 N.Y.S.2d 660, 212 N.E.2d 897 (1965).

An automobile manufacturer who delivered automobiles to its authorized dealer with reservation of title until actual payment therefor has the status of a holder of a security interest, and, where it failed to perfect such security interest, its interest is subordinate to the receiver of the dealer, who, as a lien creditor, is without notice of such unperfected security interest. Girard Trust Corn Exch. Bank v. Warren Lepley Ford, Inc., 12 Pa. D. & C.2d 351 (1957).

5. When title passes.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, title to goods passes at delivery, with only the reservation of a security interest by the seller permitted (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-401, subd [1]); rules on chattel mortgages and conditional sales are now governed by article 9 of the code, and are considered as a single security device and, while under section 9-306 a security interest continues in any identifiable proceeds of collateral covered by the security agreement and a third party may be liable in conversion for paying those proceeds without satisfying the secured party's interest, there is no justification for extending the statute to include a cause of action within the meaning of identifiable proceeds. Accordingly in a negligence action by plaintiff bank against defendant driver of a borrowed car in which the bank had a security interest, which car was destroyed in an accident, allegedly because of defendant's negligence, defendant was granted summary judgment since plaintiff failed to state a cause of action. Bank of N.Y. v. Margiotta, 99 Misc. 2d 423 (1979).

Where buyer acquired metal from seller by placing order with seller directing it to deliver metal to third party, seller would ship metal and send buyer invoices reading "sold to" buyer and "shipped to" third party, terms of sale being "net 30 days," where seller kept running account of buyer's indebtedness and billed buyer on monthly basis for all unpaid balances, including service charge for past due invoices, where third party fabricated metal into cookware and stored finished pieces until buyer requested delivery, but where there was no explicit agreement between buyer and seller respecting passing of title nor any reservation of a security interest, under UCC § 2-402(1) title to metal passed on delivery to third party; oral agreement between parties respecting payment of unit sum upon delivery of finished goods from third party to buyer was no more than agreement as to how buyer's indebtedness to seller would be reduced and had no relation to passage of title nor did it make third party agent of seller to hold possession for it. Thermo-Sentinel Corp. v. Clad Metals, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 1179 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

Ships are "goods" within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1); thus, UCC § 2-401 governed passage of title in connection with sale of tugboat and barge where tugboat and barge were to be delivered at boatyard where they were moored and title passed under UCC § 2-401(3)(b) at time when contract for sale was made. Puamier v. Barge BT 1793, 395 F. Supp. 1019 (E.D. Va. 1974).

Ownership of gravel stockpile was in contractor and not in purchaser under UCC § 2-401, although contractor had agreed to furnish purchaser 12,000 cubic yards of crushed gravel to be purchased and used over three years at approximately 4,000 cubic yards each year, where, inter alia, contractor could fulfill its obligation by providing 4,000 cubic yards of gravel each year for three years from any place within fifteen mile radius, where nothing indicated that gravel was to be provided each year, or that full 12,000 cubic yards were required to be in stockpile at time of execution of contract or awarding of bid, and where it further appeared that purchaser intended to purchase 4,000 cubic yards each year and not 12,000 with payment spread over three years. S. De Lia Constr. Corp. v. Green Island Contracting Corp., 46 A.D.2d 970 (3d Dep't 1974), appeal denied, 36 N.Y.2d 648 (1975).

One who delivers goods cannot retain title; at most he may retain a security interest or obtain a lien. Providence Elec. Co. v. Sutton Place, Inc., 161 Conn. 242, 287 A.2d 379 (1971).

Whether seller's instruction to defendant-bank to "notify security on arrival" was part of delivery process by seller or instruction to deliver coins to third party, and whether defendant-bank exercised degree of care required of bailee, must be determined by evidence; sustaining of demurrer to petition and rendering judgment for defendant was reversible error. Sandlin v. First Nat'l Bank, 20 Ohio App. 2d 200, 253 N.E.2d 313 (1969).

Under the Code, title ordinarily passes when the goods are delivered, unless otherwise explicitly decreed. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

If passage of title is dependent upon the performance of some condition subsequent, one in possession of an article has a voidable title which can be transferred to a bona fide purchaser for value even if the transferor was deceived as to the identity of the purchaser, the delivery was in exchange for a check later dishonored, or procured through a fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

Former holding that a seller could retain title to goods until the purchase price was paid has been abolished by adoption of the UCC. Evans Prods. Co. v. Jorgensen, 245 Or. 362, 421 P.2d 978 (1966).

Unless otherwise explicitly agreed, title passes to the buyer at the time and place at which the seller completes his performance with respect to the physical delivery of the goods. Commonwealth v. Kayfield, 40 Pa. D. & C.2d 689 (1965).

6. —Agreement of parties.

Where (1) five shipments of nylon yarn shipped from the Netherlands were delivered to and accepted by buyer in South Carolina on or before August 23, 1976, (2) buyer, after failing to pay major part of purchase price, filed petition in bankruptcy on August 31, 1976, and seller in adversary proceeding against bankruptcy trustee sought to reclaim goods or recover balance due thereon, (3) contract between seller and buyer provided that notwithstanding delivery of goods, title thereto remained in seller until full payment by buyer, that all disputes arising out of the contract were to be governed by English law, and that buyer accepted jurisdiction of any courts in England or elsewhere that seller might designate, (4) seller claimed (a) that under UCC § 2-401(1), such title-retention clause created security interest in seller's favor that must be deemed to have been perfected with regard to either the Netherlands or England because law of such countries did not provide for perfecting security interests by notice filing, (b) that as a result, seller had benefit of four-month-continuation-of-perfection provision set forth in UCC § 9-103(3), and (c) that because yarn had arrived at buyer's plant in South Carolina within four months of August 31, 1976 (date on which buyer's bankruptcy petition was filed and bankruptcy trustee's lien arose), seller's perfected security interest was superior to trustee's lien, court held (1) that because seller relied on UCC § 2-401(1) to validate its security interest, court would conclude that seller had security interest in goods, (2) that under the Uniform Commercial Code, a consensual security interest that arises by virtue of UCC § 2-401(1) is subject to perfection and priority provisions of Article 9, as provided by UCC § 9-113, as long as the debtor lawfully has possession of goods, (3) that since buyer in present case had possession of goods, seller should have filed financing statement to perfect its security interest and thus render it superior to bankruptcy trustee's lien, and (4) that since no such financing statement was filed, either before delivery of goods or before August 31, 1976, seller's security interest had never been perfected and could not prevail over trustee's lien under UCC § 9-301(1)(b), which provides that unperfected security interest is subordinate to rights of person who becomes lien creditor without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected. In re Duplan Corp., 455 F. Supp. 926 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Where buyer contended, in action for conversion of goods allegedly belonging to savings association, that goods had been purchased by association on buyer's behalf and association did not contradict such contention, buyer on receiving possession of goods also received title thereto under UCC § 2-401(2). Lindsey v. Security Sav. Ass'n, 556 S.W.2d 570 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Although parties agreed to reserve title in seller upon delivery of goods to buyer, statutory language of § 2-401(1) clearly subjects parties' title agreement to mandate that seller may only retain security interest after delivery to buyer. Meinhard-Commercial Corp. v. Hargo Woolen Mills, 112 N.H. 500, 300 A.2d 321 (1972).

Sales contract providing that "Title to the goods is vested in the Seller and shall not pass to Buyer...until the time balance shall have been fully paid", "explicitly agreed" that title to goods vested in seller until full payment was made. Harney v. Spellman, 113 Ill. App. 2d 463, 251 N.E.2d 265 (4th Dist. 1969).

Provision in contract for construction of a boat to effect that title would not pass until entire purchase price and any extra or additional charges have been paid fulfills the requirement of this section that an explicit statement can alter the title passing provision with respect to the tender of the property at its destination. Silver v. Sloop Silver Cloud, 259 F. Supp. 187 (S.D.N.Y. 1966).

Where by agreement the seller was to deliver the property to the buyer's representative, the transaction is governed by subsection (2) of the instant section, subsection (3) is inapplicable, and title to the property does not pass until delivery.

Newhall v. Second Church & Soc., 349 Mass. 493, 209 N.E.2d 296 (1965).

7. —Agreement; custom or usage.

Where under existing trade practice, buyers of ready-mixed concrete understood that concrete belonged to them when it was placed by seller in seller's trucks for delivery to customers, title to concrete in suit passed to buyer under UCC § 2-401(2)(b) at time concrete was placed in seller's trucks, even though seller was obligated to deliver concrete to job site specified by buyer. Kurtz Concrete, Inc. v. Spradling, 560 S.W.2d 858 (Mo. 1978).

Where tractor which was to be traded in as part of purchase price to be paid for new tractor was damaged in accident while it was being driven to tractor dealer's premises by employee of company which was trading in tractor, and dealer had damaged tractor repaired at its own expense, paid lien balance owed on trade-in vehicle in accordance with contract terms, and did not seek any adjustment to contract for purchase of new tractor because of damage to trade-in vehicle, dealer by its own course of conduct placed its mark of approval on meaning of agreement of parties by completing its performance in manner consistent with transfer of ownership to it prior to accident in question. Home Indem. Co. v. Twin City Fire Ins. Co., 474 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir. Ind. 1973).

Provisions of sales chapter of UCC dealing with custom and usage in trade and course of dealings between parties do not specifically refer to title and so cannot be construed as covering such situations when title becomes material, and in present case in which title was material it was necessary to examine § 2-401 to determine applicable rule for specific situation. First Nat'l Bank v. Smoker, 153 Ind. App. 71, 286 N.E.2d 203, 287 N.E.2d 788 (3d Dist. 1972).

Implicit understanding between parties based on custom and usage of trade was insufficient to meet demands of Code provision that title pass to buyer at time of delivery unless otherwise explicitly agreed upon. First Nat'l Bank v. Smoker, 153 Ind. App. 71, 286 N.E.2d 203 (1972), reh'g denied, 153 Ind. App. 89, 287 N.E.2d 788 (1972).

8. —Delivery to carrier.

Where firm which accepted orders on behalf of manufacturer of goods had goods shipped by common carrier FOB manufacturer's factory directly to purchaser's place of business, title to goods, under UCC § 2-401(2)(a), passed to buyer at time and place of shipment. Rice Mach., Inc. v. Norberg, 120 R.I. 542, 391 A.2d 66, 2 A.L.R.4th 1110 (1978).

In action to recover for quantity of polyester yarn sold and delivered, summary judgment for defendant was entered where there was neither physical delivery of trailer which contained yarn to carrier in compliance with purchase agreement, nor delivery within meaning of UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-509(1)(a), and therefore, title to and responsibility for yarn remained with plaintiff. A.M. Knitwear Corp. v. All Am. Export-Import Corp., 50 A.D.2d 558 (2d Dep't 1975), aff'd, 41 N.Y.2d 14, 390 N.Y.S.2d 832, 359 N.E.2d 342 (1976).

Ohio buyer was subject to jurisdiction of Illinois courts where, under UCC §§ 2-401(2)(a) and 2-509(1)(a), seller's obligation, title, and risk of loss in goods at issue ceased on delivery to carrier in Illinois. Colony Press, Inc. v. Fleeman, 17 Ill. App. 3d 14, 308 N.E.2d 78 (1st Dist. 1974).

Where a driver was employed by a dairy to pick up milk from various farmers and deliver it to the dairy, title to the milk passed to the dairy when the milk was picked up, for delivery to the driver was equivalent to delivery to the dairy for the purpose of passage of title, and the fact that the dairy had a right of rejection of substandard milk strengthened this conclusion since, under ¶(4) of this section rejection of substandard milk served to revest title in the seller. Underwood v. Commonwealth, 390 S.W.2d 635 (Ky. 1965).

Title to lawnmowers passed to the insolvent debtors at the time of delivery to carrier, and language in purchase order signed by debtors directing that the lawnmowers be shipped to a certain address did not connote a reservation of title in the sellers until delivery to a particular place, so as to change the result. Metropolitan Distribs. v. Eastern Supply Co., 21 Pa. D. & C.2d 128 (1959).

Sale of machines was consummated in Ohio, where the sales contract therefor was negotiated, acknowledged and accepted in Ohio by defendant's sales agents, the machines were manufactured at defendant's plant in that state, and shipped to purchaser in Michigan, f. o. b. city of manufacture. Welding Eng'rs, Inc. v. Aetna-Standard Eng'g Co., 84 Ohio Law Abs. 283, 169 F. Supp. 146, 119 U.S.P.Q. 489 (W.D. Pa. 1958).

9. —Delivery to buyer.

Where (1) service of meals on airline engaged in interstate commerce was not included in price of tickets purchased by passengers in Alabama, (2) airline was not obligated to serve any meals while plane was in flight, (3) airline only served meals on some flights and then only when plane was outside Alabama airspace, and (4) failure to serve meals gave passengers no right to refund, trial court properly concluded that under Alabama UCC § 2-401(2), alleged "sale" of meals on airline occurred at time of physical delivery of meals to passengers while plane was outside Alabama airspace, with result that such meals were not subject to Alabama sales tax (holding that imposition of Alabama sales tax in such circumstances would amount to unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce). State v. Delta Air Lines, 356 So. 2d 1205 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978), cert. denied, 356 So. 2d 1208 (Ala. 1978).

In seller's action in Texas court to enforce California default judgment against Texas buyer, seller's contention that buyer had owned personal property in California, because title to goods purchased passed to buyer when seller delivered goods to carrier in California, could not be sustained where (1) trial judge was entitled to conclude, from inclusive evidence presented on matter, that seller was responsible for delivery of goods at buyer's destination in Texas, and (2) that under UCC § 2-401(2), buyer therefore did not own goods while they were in California. Shelby Intern., Inc. v. Wiener, 563 S.W.2d 324 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-401(2), title can pass at either of two times. If the seller is only required to ship the goods, title passes at the time and place of shipment. However, if the seller must deliver the goods to the buyer's destination, his performance is not complete, and title does not pass, until delivery is actually made. Shelby Intern., Inc. v. Wiener, 563 S.W.2d 324 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

To be buyer in ordinary course of business, so as to take free of security interest created by seller, there must be a sale which under UCC § 2-106(1) consists in passing of title from seller to buyer for a price. Moreover, under UCC § 2-401, title passes at time of physical delivery of goods to buyer, unless it is otherwise explicitly agreed. Integrity Ins. Co. v. Marine Midland Bank-Western, 90 Misc. 2d 868 (1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

Under UCC § 2-401, title to wheat passed at time and place of contract, where wheat was placed by sellers in buyer's elevator for storage before signing of sales contracts, wheat was identified, and no additional documents were required to be delivered. Desbien v. Penokee Farmers Union Coop. Ass'n, 220 Kan. 358, 552 P.2d 917 (1976).

Despite wording of consignment contract between executors of estate of expressionist painter and art dealer, to effect that title would pass when paintings were invoiced to customer by art dealer, sales of paintings took place upon delivery of paintings to purchasers, not on execution of sales invoices, and court injunction against sale of paintings was thus violated when delivery of paintings took place after injunction became effective, even though invoices were executed before such date. In re Estate of Rothko, 84 Misc. 2d 830 (1975), modified, 56 A.D.2d 499, 392

N.Y.S.2d 870 (1st Dep't 1977), aff'd, 43 N.Y.2d 305, 401 N.Y.S.2d 449, 372 N.E.2d 291 (1977), on remand, 95 Misc. 2d 492, 407 N.Y.S.2d 954 (1978).

In action by vendors against defaulting purchasers seeking to reform real estate contract to include personalty and to forfeit all properties, and against escrow company and its employee for damages for negligent preparation of documents and unauthorized and negligent delivery to purchasers of bill of sale covering personalty, (1) real estate contract would not be reformed to include personalty, since parties had not explicitly agreed as to time of passage of title and, under UCC § 2-401, title passed to purchasers when personal property was delivered, and (2) since title to personalty passed upon delivery of personalty, delivery of bill of sale was inconsequential and could not be said to have proximately caused damage to vendors. Hecomovich v. Nielsen, 10 Wash. App. 563, 518 P.2d 1081 (1974), review denied, 83 Wash. 2d 1012 (1974).

Time of payment was not determinative of question of when sale of bottled soft drinks in self-service store takes place, and sale took place when buyer took drinks into his possession with intention of paying for them at cashier's counter, despite fact that he was entitled to return goods to shelf without liability if he changes his mind about purchase before reaching check-out counter. Gillispie v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 14 N.C. App. 1, 187 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

Title passed to defendant-buyer upon physical delivery of house trailer to defendant. Rockwin Corp. v. Kincaid, 124 Ga. App. 570, 184 S.E.2d 509 (1971).

Title to aircraft passed to buyer when aircraft was delivered, under Code § 2-401(2), even though document or title was to be delivered at different time. American Aviation, Inc. v. Aviation Ins. Managers, Inc., 244 Ark. 829, 427 S.W.2d 544 (1968).

Shrimp, chicken, and loin ribs offered for sale and sold in buckets but fried or otherwise cooked after a customer places an order and after such frying or other cooking packaged or wrapped in the bucket container fall within the terms of subd 5 of § 193 of the Agriculture and Markets Law since according to the terms of the Uniform Commercial Code § 2-106, subd 1, a sale consists in the passing of title from the seller to the buyer for a price and according to the terms of subd 2 of the above statute unless otherwise explicitly agreed title passes to the buyer at the time at which the seller completes his performance with reference to the physical delivery of the goods. Wickham v. Levine, 47 Misc. 2d 1 (1965), aff'd, 24 A.D.2d 1035, 264 N.Y.S.2d 785 (3 Dep't 1965), aff'd, 23 N.Y.2d 923, 298 N.Y.S.2d 507, 246 N.E.2d 357 (1969).

Where seller issues invoices, delivers goods into purchaser's possession and allows them to remain there for a considerable period of time title passes to purchaser and seller cannot thereafter contend that goods were delivered "on approval." Gantman v. Paul, 203 Pa. Super. 158, 199 A.2d 519 (1964).

Title to chairs, game sets and a rug passed to the buyer, even though the seller had asserted a delivery on approval, where the seller had issued invoices and delivered the furniture and had not asserted a lien. Gantman v. Paul, 203 Pa. Super. 158, 199 A.2d 519 (1964).

10. —Delivery to buyer; motor vehicles.

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, title to goods passes at delivery, with only the reservation of a security interest by the seller permitted (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-401, subd [1]); rules on chattel mortgages and conditional sales are now governed by article 9 of the code, and are considered as a single security device and, while under section 9-306 a security interest continues in any identifiable proceeds of collateral covered by the security agreement and a third party may be liable in conversion for paying those proceeds without satisfying the secured party's interest, there is no justification for extending the statute to include a cause of action within the meaning of identifiable proceeds. Accordingly, in a negligence action by plaintiff bank against defendant driver of a borrowed car in which the bank had a security interest, which car was destroyed in an accident, allegedly because of defendant's negligence, defendant was granted summary judgment since plaintiff failed to state a cause of action. Bank of N.Y. v. Margiotta, 99 Misc. 2d 423 (1979).

Where automobile dealer entered into arrangement with motorists association under which association would obtain new cars for its customers at fleet discount prices, dealer would deliver cars to association's customers, customers on receiving cars would execute promissory note and security agreement in favor of association, pay association for car, and give association security interest therein, and where such notes and security agreements were assigned to bank which paid association by depositing funds into association's checking account with bank, (1) cars were validly sold under the Uniform Commercial Code to association's customers, since title to each car passed under UCC § 2-401(2) to customer on dealer's delivery of car to customer; (2) dealer's retention of manufacturer's statement of origin did not evidence clear agreement that title to cars was to remain in dealer until payment in full of dealer's invoice; and (3) since title to cars passed to customers on delivery, customers could grant security interest in cars to association that could be assigned by association to bank. Wood Chevrolet Co. v. Bank of S.E., 352 So. 2d 1350 (Ala. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-401(2), where ownership of automobile passed from seller to buyer as part of consideration for purchase of real property, fact that buyer did not register title in his name did not divest him of ownership. A.M. Knitwear Corp. v. All Am. Export-Import Corp., 50 A.D.2d 558 (2d Dep't 1975), aff'd, 41 N.Y.2d 14, 390 N.Y.S.2d 832, 359 N.E.2d 342 (1976).

Delivery of automobiles was sufficient to pass title to buyer in spite of seller's failure to provide certificates of title to automobiles. Guy Martin Buick, Inc. v. Colorado Springs Nat'l Bank, 32 Colo. App. 235, 511 P.2d 912 (1973), aff'd, 184 Colo. 166, 519 P.2d 354 (1974).

Although certificate of title was not transferred to buyer of automobile, but was retained by seller as security for balance of purchase price, delivery of possession of car to buyer constituted transfer of its ownership to him. Waggoner v. Wilson, 31 Colo. App. 518, 507 P.2d 482 (1972).

Sale of truck took place when buyer took possession of truck from seller, and title effectively passed to buyer, even though buyer did not have possession of certificate of title. Bunch v. Signal Oil & Gas Co., 505 P.2d 41 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Time of passage of title is matter of intention between the parties; trier of fact may consider UCC § 2-401 along with other evidence in case in making this determination; here, transfer of ownership of auto took place on day plaintiff paid for auto and took delivery of it by driving it off; presumption of ownership of auto arising from registration may be rebutted by proof of transfer, as here. Pugh v. Hartford Ins. Group, 68 Misc. 2d 1014 (1972).

Title to auto passed at time and place of delivery by seller to buyer, regardless of fact that title papers had not yet been delivered. Hicks v. Kentucky Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 455 S.W.2d 52 (Ky. 1970).

In absence of express agreement between corporate auto dealer and purchaser re title, title passed to purchaser no later than time when unrestricted possession of auto was given to buyer. Gross v. Powell, 288 Minn. 386, 181 N.W.2d 113 (1970).

Title to auto cannot pass pursuant to UCC § 2-401 where there has not been compliance with pre-existing motor vehicle regulations and transfer statutes. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hayes, 276 N.C. 620, 174 S.E.2d 511 (1970).

Auto sold to dealer; held, title to auto passed when seller's agent delivered auto to dealer. Marshall v. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp., 121 Ga. App. 751, 175 S.E.2d 84 (1970).

Where buyer and automobile dealer had agreed on a "trade" buyer had turned over his old car to the dealer and had in turn received absolute and unconditional possession of the new vehicle, and nothing remained except for the title papers to be processed and the delivery to seller of a check for the cash payment, title to the new car passed to buyer at time of its delivery; and when the car was wrecked on the night the trade was made, buyer's rather than seller's insurer was liable. Motors Ins. Corp. v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Am., 412 S.W.2d 584 (Ky. 1967).

It is a question of fact for the jury to determine whether an automobile belongs to a particular automobile salesman or to the dealer where no type of certificate was issued to the salesman but a car was supplied to him as a demonstrator, he paid for it monthly, he was authorized to resell the car and keep any profit and bore any loss arising on resale, he procured insurance on the car although he drove it with the dealer's tags and if the car was still owned by the dealer it was covered by the latter's floor plan insurance. Knotts v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Am., 78 N.M. 395, 432 P.2d 106 (1967).

Irrespective of the various provisions of the Motor Vehicle Law requiring certificates of title to be issued under certain circumstances, the rights of the buyer and seller of a motor vehicle under the Uniform Commercial Code do not depend upon title. Park County Implement Co. v. Craig, 397 P.2d 800 (Wyo. 1964).

Title passed to automobile where the owner, after some negotiation, agreed to sell the vehicle to the buyer and sometime later took the automobile to the buyer's place of employment at a time when the buyer was there, the buyer paid the owner the remainder of the purchase price, and the owner surrendered the keys to the car to the buyer. This constituted physical delivery which would pass title under subsection (2). The fact that the owner did not take an affidavit to the assignment of a title certificate as required by the Pennsylvania Vehicle Code did not prevent the actual transfer of the vehicle. Semple v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 215 F. Supp. 645 (E.D. Pa. 1963).

11. —Delivery to buyer; building materials.

Under UCC § 2-401, title to ceiling tiles passed on delivery at job site, even though tiles were not yet installed. Owens-Corning Fiberglas Co. v. Holland Tile Co., 38 Mich. App. 690, 197 N.W.2d 80 (1972).

A contractor had the right to refuse to return to plaintiff-seller a quantity of ceiling tile delivered to job site for which subcontractor had refused to pay plaintiff where subcontractor failed to complete job, the title issue being resolved in favor of contractor in seller's claim and delivery action against contractor and subcontractor.

Owens-Corning Fiberglas Co. v. Holland Tile Co., 38 Mich. App. 690, 197 N.W.2d 80 (1972).

Title passed to subcontractor on delivery of goods to him, and supplier of goods cannot look, after delivery, to contractor for payment. Apex Glass & Sash, Inc. v. City of Seattle, 5 Wash. App. 794, 490 P.2d 885 (1971).

Where materials were sold and title passed to subcontractor, as evidenced by judgment against him, seller of materials could not get judgment against prime contractor for some materials. Apex Glass & Sash, Inc. v. City of Seattle, 5 Wash. App. 794, 490 P.2d 885 (1971).

12. —Delivery without moving goods.

Seller's delivery of registered titles to antique cars was sufficient to pass title to buyer, although document of title to vehicles had not been formally transferred into buyer's name, and physical location of vehicles had not changed after transfer. Crawford v. Welch, 8 Wash. App. 663, 508 P.2d 1039 (1973), review denied, 82 Wash. 2d 1009 (1973).

Where defendant, purchaser of a boat, trailer, and motor, delivered a check in full payment to the seller and received in exchange a bill of sale for the articles, both parties then informed the person with whom the boat and trailer were stored of the sale, and the purchaser arranged to pick up the articles on the following day, title had passed to the purchaser under subsec. (3)(a), and the purchaser could not avoid the sale when he found that the trailer had disappeared when he went to move it. Whately v. Tetrault, 29 Mass. App. Dec. 112 (1964).

13. —Documents of title.

Automobile certificates of title generally have not been accorded the legal status of documents of title, as that term is used in the Uniform Commercial Code, because vehicle certification statutes based on the Uniform Motor Vehicle Certificate of Title and Anti-Theft Act do not recognize a pledge of the certificate as effective to perfect a security interest. Since the Wisconsin vehicle certification statutes conform to this doctrine, unless otherwise agreed or required by law, title to property which is the subject of a sale within the scope of the Uniform Commercial Code passes, under UCC § 2-401(2), to the buyer at the time physical possession of the property is transferred. National Exch. Bank v. Mann, 81 Wis. 2d 352, 260 N.W.2d 716 (1978).

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of Ferrari sports car of limited availability ordered for buyer from another dealer, where order form and bill of sale identified car by name, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number, and stated that car was "used" car and that buyer had made $15,000 deposit on purchase price of $17,500; where half of such deposit was paid by buyer's personal check (on which was written name of car, year of manufacture, and serial number) and other half by cashier's check issued by bank making loan to buyer, which check was made payable to joint order of both buyer and seller and which contained restrictive indorsement requiring "payee" to record first lien on car in bank's favor; where car, when received by seller from other dealer, proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself; and where seller informed buyer that he would try to locate another Ferrari for him, sale was governed by UCC Art 2 and buyer was entitled to maintain replevin action, despite seller's contention that since car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered, since (1) under UCC § 2-209, parties had modified their prior oral agreement concerning sale of "used" car by entering into written agreement, evidenced by purchase order and bill of sale prepared by seller, which identified said car by make, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number; (2) parties' modification of prior oral agreement also was evidenced by seller's acceptance of buyer's personal check and by negotiation by both seller and buyer of bank cashier's check bearing restrictive indorsement; (3) under UCC § 2-106(2), car delivered to seller conformed to modified contract; (4) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(b) and § 2-606(1)(a) to accept car that did not conform to purchase order, had delivery been tendered by seller; and (5) since car was identified to contract by purchase order and bill of sale which were in buyer's possession, title to car passed to buyer under UCC § 2-401(3)(a), even though seller retained vehicle. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

Despite wording of consignment contract between executors of estate of expressionist painter and art dealer, to effect that title would pass when paintings were invoiced to customer by art dealer, sales of paintings took place upon delivery of paintings to purchasers, not on execution of sales invoices, and court injunction against sale of paintings was thus violated when delivery of paintings took place after injunction became effective, even though invoices were executed before such date. In re Estate of Rothko, 84 Misc. 2d 830 (1975), modified, 56 A.D.2d 499, 392 N.Y.S.2d 870 (1st Dep't 1977), aff'd, 43 N.Y.2d 305, 401 N.Y.S.2d 449, 372 N.E.2d 291 (1977), on remand, 95 Misc. 2d 492, 407 N.Y.S.2d 954 (1978).

In action by manufacturer of mobile home against dealer and purchaser of unit arising when dealer failed to pay manufacturer purchase price, mobile home fell within definition of "goods" under UCC § 2-105 and purchaser was entitled to protection from manufacturer's claim under UCC § 9-307(a) where purchaser, who took title from merchant entrusted with goods under UCC §§ 2-401 and 2-403, qualified as buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9), notwithstanding purchaser's failure to request certificate of title of purchase. Apeco Corp. v. Bishop Mobile Homes, Inc., 506 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 12, 1974).

Where truck dealer ordered two trucks from manufacturer, trucks were delivered under "floor plan" arrangement with manufacturer whereby dealer executed note and security agreement covering trucks which was assigned to credit company, where purchaser executed two security agreements and notes for purchase of trucks which were assigned by dealer to purchaser's finance company, but where delivery of trucks to purchaser was delayed and, in fact, purchaser never made cash down payment and never actually took possession of trucks there was, nonetheless, sale of trucks when purchaser executed security agreements and notes; thus, security interest obtained by purchaser's lender took priority over security interest in trucks held by dealers credit company. International Harvester Credit Corp. v. Associates Fin. Servs. Co., 133 Ga. App. 488, 211 S.E.2d 430 (1974).

14. —Execution of contract.

UCC § 2-401 governed passage of title in connection with sale of tugboat and barge were to be delivered at boatyard where they were moored and title passed under UCC § 2-401(3)(b) at time when contract for sale was made. Puamier v. Barge BT 1793, 395 F. Supp. 1019 (E.D. Va. 1974).

Title to a roadside diner, regarded by the parties as personal property rather than a part of the leased realty upon which it was situated, passed to the buyer when the conditional sales contract was executed, subject to security interest in the seller, and thereafter the risk of loss was on the buyer. The subsequent total destruction of the diner by fire did not relieve the buyer of his obligations under the contract. Conte v. Styli, 26 Mass. App. Dec. 73 (1963).

15. Conflicts of law; where title passes.

Where (1) five shipments of nylon yarn shipped from the Netherlands were delivered to and accepted by buyer in South Carolina on or before August 23, 1976, (2) buyer, after failing to pay major part of purchase price, filed petition in bankruptcy on August 31, 1976, and seller in adversary proceeding against bankruptcy trustee sought to reclaim goods or recover balance due thereon, (3) contract between seller and buyer provided that notwithstanding delivery of goods, title thereto remained in seller until full payment by buyer, that all disputes arising out of the contract were to be governed by English law, and that buyer accepted jurisdiction of any courts in England or elsewhere that seller might designate, (4) seller claimed (a) that under UCC § 2-401(1), such title-retention clause created security interest in seller's favor that must be deemed to have been perfected with regard to either the Netherlands or England because law of such countries did not provide for perfecting security interests by notice filing, (b) that as a result, seller had benefit of four-month-continuation-of-perfection provision set forth in UCC § 9-103(3), and (c) that because yarn had arrived at buyer's plant in South Carolina within four months of August 31, 1976 (date on which buyer's bankruptcy petition was filed and bankruptcy trustee's lien arose), seller's perfected security interest was superior to trustee's lien, court held (1) that because seller relied on UCC § 2-401(1) to validate its security interest, court would conclude that seller had security interest in goods, (2) that under the Uniform Commercial Code, a consensual security interest that arises by virtue of UCC § 2-401(1) is subject to perfection and priority provisions of Article 9, as provided by UCC § 9-113, as long as the debtor lawfully has possession of goods, (3) that since buyer in present case had possession of goods, seller should have filed financing statement to perfect its security interest and thus render it superior to bankruptcy trustee's lien, and (4) that since no such financing statement was filed, either before delivery of goods or before August 31, 1976, seller's security interest had never been perfected and could not prevail over trustee's lien under UCC § 9-301(1)(b), which provides that unperfected security interest is subordinate to rights of person who becomes lien creditor without knowledge of the security interest and before it is perfected. In re Duplan Corp., 1978, 455 F. Supp. 926 In re Duplan Corp., 455 F. Supp. 926 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Transfer of title to fuel oil occurred at time it was delivered to towboats, so that where delivery of the fuel oil was on the Missouri side of the main channel of the Mississippi River, the sale was in Missouri; where the delivery was on the Illinois side of the main channel, the sale was in Illinois. Sinclair Ref. Co. v. Department of Revenue, 50 Ill. 2d 201, 277 N.E.2d 858 (1971).

An Illinois florist who receives interstate telegraphic orders for retail sales of flowers in Illinois is a seller, his sales are present sales made in the state whether the contract is unilateral or bilateral, and title to the flowers passes in Illinois, and the sale is not one for resale which would be true if the seller were the out-of-state florist who telegraphs the order, and the Illinois florist is subject to that state's retailers' occupational tax on such sales. O'Brien v. Isaacs, 32 Ill. 2d 105, 203 N.E.2d 890 (1965).

16. Rejection or revocation by buyer.

Where buyer revoked acceptance of non-conforming goods by letter to seller requesting credit for defective goods, buyer's revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-401(4) revested title to goods in seller and did not constitute a "sale" of the goods. Shelby Intern., Inc. v. Wiener, 563 S.W.2d 324 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

Where a contractor declared its subcontractor in default and terminated its contract and treated materials fabricated by the subcontractor as the subcontractor's property, it thereby rejected such material and title was revested in the subcontractor by operation of law. John H. Knox, Inc. v. Continental Cas. Co., 32 A.D.2d 607 (4th Dep't 1969).

The burden of proof is upon the buyer to show that his revocation of an acceptance is justified. Tennessee-Virginia Constr. Co. v. Willingham, 117 Ga. App. 290, 160 S.E.2d 444 (1968).

Evidence that the goods were "unsatisfactory" is not sufficient to justify revocation of acceptance because this may refer to "anything from color to performance." Tennessee-Virginia Constr. Co. v. Willingham, 117 Ga. App. 290, 160 S.E.2d 444 (1968).

The seller improperly breaches his obligation to sell on credit by shipping the goods and then presenting bills of lading with sight drafts attached and insisting that the sight drafts be paid before the bills of lading will be surrendered. The buyer in such case may reject the shipment and exercise his rights for the breach of the contract, including rescission of the contract and proceeding to cover. United States ex rel. Industrial Instrument Corp. v. Paul Hardeman, Inc., 202 F. Supp. 124 (N.D. Tex. 1962), aff'd, 320 F.2d 115 (5th Cir. Tex. 1963).

17. Revesting.

In action by common carrier of crude oil against bankrupt buyer of crude oil, title to oil revested in oil producing sellers under UCC § 2-401(4) when buyer refused to accept tender of crude oil from pipeline company conditioned upon buyer's payment of common carrier lien; notice given by seller, prior to buyer's refusal of tender, to stop delivery to buyer based on previous dishonor of buyer's checks for insufficient funds was timely exercise of seller's rights of stoppage under UCC §§ 2-702(1), (2) and 2-705(1) and sellers could reclaim oil upon demand and notice as given. Amoco Pipeline Co. v. Admiral Crude Oil Corp., 490 F.2d 114 (10th Cir. N.M. 1974).

Absent reservation of security interest in agreement for sale of tractor, title to machine vested in buyer; but title revested in seller when buyer executed repossession authorization. Olson v. Penrod, 493 S.W.2d 673 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973).

"Title" is with purchaser of goods from self-service shelves when he removes goods with intent to pay for them, even though he still has right to return them if he changes his mind; it is only when this right to return is exercised by replacing item on shelf that "title" revests in seller. Gillispie v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 14 N.C. App. 1, 187 S.E.2d 441 (1972).

Where plaintiff declared subcontractor in default and terminated contract with subcontractor, thereafter treating materials fabricated by subcontractor as property of subcontractor, plaintiff thereby rejected such materials and title thereto was thereupon revested in subcontractor by operation of law. John H. Knox, Inc. v. Continental Cas. Co., 32 A.D.2d 607 (4th Dep't 1969).

The buyer revests title in the seller by a rejection of the goods upon delivery, whether or not the rejection was justified, or by a subsequent revocation of acceptance provided it is justified. Tennessee-Virginia Constr. Co. v. Willingham, 117 Ga. App. 290, 160 S.E.2d 444 (1968).

Where contract for sale of future goods was executed before effective date of sales tax statute, but where goods were delivered after that effective date, sales tax was properly imposed; for purposes of sales tax statute, sale of future goods takes place when title passes and, unless otherwise explicitly agreed upon, title passes at time and place at which seller completes his performance with respect to physical delivery of goods. *Crown Iron Works Co. v. 19. Risk of loss; insurance consequences.

Where vehicle was modified to suit prospective purchaser's desires, retail sales order was signed, trade-in and down payment was made, and possession of vehicle was given to prospective purchaser, prospective purchaser did not constitute permissive user of vehicle within meaning of automobile dealer's liability insurance policy, notwithstanding purchaser failed to make payments due on vehicle and dealer subsequently reacquired possession of vehicle. Sentry Ins. v. Longacre, 403 F. Supp. 1264 (W.D. Okla. 1975).

Where written memorandum of contract of sale for business and contents of building authorized buyer to take possession of business and contents and where buyer agreed to carry contents insurance acceptable to seller, contract resulted in change of ownership of property, reserving in seller security interest only, even though contract contained a provision to effect that title and ownership of property did not pass from seller to buyer until note given in consideration therefore was paid. Fidelity & Cas. Co. v. Jefferies, 545 S.W.2d 881 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), writ ref'd n.r.e., (May 18, 1977).

§ 75-2-402. Rights of seller's creditors against sold goods.

(1) Except as provided in subsections (2) and (3), rights of unsecured creditors of the seller with respect to goods which have been identified to a contract for sale are subject to the buyer's rights to recover the goods under this chapter (Sections 2-502 and 2-716) [Sections 75-2-502 and 75-2-716].

(2) A creditor of the seller may treat a sale or an identification of goods to a contract for sale as void if as against him a retention of possession by the seller is fraudulent under any rule of law of the state where the goods are situated, except that retention of possession in good faith and current course of trade by a merchant-seller for a commercially reasonable time after a sale or identification is not fraudulent.

(3) Nothing in this chapter shall be deemed to impair the rights of creditors of the seller

(a) under the provisions of the chapter on Secured Transactions (Chapter 9); or

(b) where identification to the contract or delivery is made not in current course of trade but in satisfaction of or as security for a preexisting claim for money, security or the like and is made under circumstances which under any rule of law of the state where the goods are situated would apart from this chapter constitute the transaction a fraudulent transfer or voidable preference.

Where cotton farmer entered into contract with cotton merchants to sell cotton crop to be produced on 800 acres, where farmer was obligated by terms of lease to pay one-fourth of his cotton crop as rent, and where as result of flood conditions farmer was only able to plant 717 acres rather than expected 1066 acres, cotton merchants were entitled to whole crop and lessor's remedies, if any, were against lessee; when read together UCC §§ 2-102, 2-105 and 2-107 indicated that forward contracts for sale of yet to be grown cotton fell within § 2-402(1) which subordinates rights of seller's unsecured creditors in subject matter to those of buyer. Ralli-Coney, Inc. v. Gates, 528 F.2d 572 (5th Cir. 1976).

It was not necessary to record sale of citrus fruit in order to provide constructive notice to others of nature of buyer's interest in crop; sale constituted constructive severance of crops from land, and creditor was not entitled to position of secured creditor as against buyer where he did not rely on public records in extending credit to seller. *Exchange Nat'l Bank v. UCC § 2-402 relating to rights of seller's creditors against sold goods specifically leaves the validity of sales where the seller retains possession of goods sold to determination under existing state laws, except in cases involving retention by a merchant seller in the course of trade. *Blumenstein v. § 75-2-403. Power to transfer; good faith purchase of goods; "entrusting".

(1) A purchaser of goods acquires all title which his transferor had or had power to transfer except that a purchaser of a limited interest acquires rights only to the extent of the interest purchased. A person with voidable title has power to transfer a good title to a good faith purchaser for value. When goods have been delivered under a transaction of purchase the purchaser has such power even though

- (a) the transferor was deceived as to the identity of the purchaser, or
 - (b) the delivery was in exchange for a check which is later dishonored,
- or
- (c) it was agreed that the transaction was to be a "cash sale," or
 - (d) the delivery was procured through fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law.

(2) Any entrusting of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in ordinary course of business.

(3) "Entrusting" includes any delivery and any acquiescence in retention of possession regardless of any condition expressed between the parties to the delivery or acquiescence and regardless of whether the procurement of the entrusting or the possessor's disposition of the goods have been such as to be larcenous under the criminal law.

(4) The rights of other purchasers of goods and of lien creditors are governed by the chapters on Secured Transactions (Chapter 9), Bulk Transfers (Chapter 6) and Documents of Title (Chapter 7).

1. In general.

Under § 75-2-403, neither a trespasser nor one engaged by him to cut, convert, and steal timber had no power to transfer title in and to this timber to a third party; accordingly, the true owner of the timber had a right to recover the timber or its value from the third party. Bay Springs Forest Prods., Inc. v. Wade, 435 So. 2d 690 (Miss. 1983).

UCC § 2-403 was intended to determine the priorities between two innocent parties, namely, the original owner, who parted with his goods through the fraudulent conduct of another, and an innocent third party who gave value for the goods to the perpetrator of the fraud without knowledge thereof. By favoring the innocent third party, the Uniform Commercial Code endeavors to promote the flow of commerce by placing the burden of ascertaining and preventing fraudulent transactions on the one in the best position to prevent them, namely, the original seller.

2. Construction with other laws.

Entrustment statute did not take precedence over title statute where owner and holder of certificate of title of truck never entrusted to merchant within § 75-2-403(2) and purchaser of truck did not acquire truck from merchant. Hicks v. Thomas, 516 So. 2d 1344 (Miss. 1987).

It was not necessary for a purchaser to receive the certificate of origin at the time of delivery of a vehicle before title could pass to him, and thus the sale was complete upon delivery, since § 75-2-403(2), providing that the entrusting of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in the ordinary course of business, would prevail over § 63-21-31, providing that transfer of a vehicle is not effective unless at the time of the delivery of the vehicle the owner executes an assignment and warranty of title to the transferee. Atwood Chevrolet-Olds., Inc. v. Aberdeen Mun. Sch. Dist., 431 So. 2d 926 (Miss. 1983).

One who acquires a mobile home in the ordinary course of business from a merchant entrusted with the mobile home receives title to the motor home under UCC § 2-403(2), notwithstanding that there was no receipt of certificate of title under Motor Vehicle Certification of Title Act which includes mobile homes within its provisions. *Rockwin Corp. v. Rejecting the contention of a buyer of an automobile from a dealer without notice of a prior security interest that UCC § 2-403(1) provided an escape from the prior security interest, the court held that UCC § 9-306(2) which provides for the continuation of the security interest except when "this Article" provides otherwise limited any exceptions to those contained in Article 9. The court also noted that UCC § 2-403 provided the rights of "lien creditors are governed by the Articles on Secured Transactions." National Shawmut Bank v. Jones, 108 N.H. 386, 236 A.2d 484 (1967).

Since, under Pennsylvania law, the seller's right of rescission is not an absolute right but is subject to the right of a lien creditor who extended credit subsequent to the sale, and by virtue of § 70, sub c of the Bankruptcy Act, the trustee in bankruptcy has rights of lien creditor, the trustee in bankruptcy has superior rights to the proceeds from the sale of seller's goods, even if the sale of goods on credit has been induced by positive misrepresentation by the bankrupts, and the seller had attempted to rescind the sale. 3. Persons protected.

Under UCC § 2-403(1)(d), good-faith purchaser of automobile for value took good title from one who had procured the vehicle by a fraudulent purchase. Paschal v. Hamilton, 363 So. 2d 1360 (Miss. 1978).

This section, if it were applicable, would seem to require a holding that a finance company repossessing an automobile was liable in conversion to one who had purchased it from a dealer on whose lot it was placed after repossession from a former purchaser who had defaulted, where the second purchaser had not defaulted, and the finance company through a course of conduct had cloaked the dealer with authority to sell the car, as far as the public was concerned, even though the conditional sale agreement with the first purchaser had been recorded. Budget Plan, Inc. v. Savoy, 336 Mass. 322, 145 N.E.2d 710 (1957).

4. —Good faith purchaser.

In action by unpaid credit seller of oil supplies to debtor against bank, which held perfected security interest in debtor's oil inventory, for lack of good faith in disposing of part of such inventory, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-702(3), plaintiff's right to reclaim oil supplies sold to debtor was subject to bank's right to dispose of such supplies, which were collateral for bank's loan to debtor, as good-faith purchaser for value under UCC § 2-403(1); (2) that under UCC § 1-201(44)(b), bank had given value for debtor's oil inventory which bank obtained under after-acquired property clause in debtor's security agreement; (3) that UCC definition of good-faith purchaser did not, expressly or impliedly, include as element of such definition lack of knowledge of third-party claims, since good faith is merely defined in UCC § 1-201(19) as "honesty in fact in transaction concerned"; and (4) that under circumstances of case, bank's knowledge that plaintiff was unpaid credit seller to debtor did not impair bank's good faith in disposing of debtor's oil inventory (collateral) to satisfy debtor's obligation to bank. Shell Oil Co. v. Mills Oil Co., 717 F.2d 208 (5th Cir. 1983).

In interpleader action by bailee of zinc, where evidence showed (1) that bailor, who had stored 300 tons of zinc with bailee, ordered bailee to release all of it to bailor's purchaser, (2) that bailor's purchaser then sold such zinc to alleged bona-fide subpurchaser and ordered bailee to release zinc to subpurchaser, (3) that after bailee had delivered 40 tons to subpurchaser, bailor learned of original purchaser's insolvency and ordered bailee to stop delivery to original purchaser, and (4) that on the same day, subpurchaser also ordered bailee to deliver remainder of such zinc (260 tons) to it, district court denied bailor's motion for summary judgment on its alleged right under UCC §§ 7-504(4) and § 2-705(1) and (2) to stop delivery of zinc, since (1) bailor failed to show, within meaning of UCC § 2-705(2)(b), that bailee had not acknowledged that it was holding the zinc for the subpurchaser, and (2) bailor also had failed to show, within meaning of UCC § 2-705(2)(d), that there had been no negotiation to subpurchaser of any negotiable document of title covering the zinc (applying Ill UCC; also holding that subpurchaser's claim of bonafide purchase was not available to it under UCC § 2-702(3) or § 2-403(1)). Ceres Inc. v. ACLI Metal & Ore Co., 451 F. Supp. 921 (N.D. Ill. 1978).

Where (1) lessor entered into oral lease-purchase agreement with lessee for lease of truck scales under which lessee had option, at end of lease period, to purchase scales for one dollar, (2) lessee, after obtaining possession of scales, sold them to one of the defendants who, in turn, resold them two days later to his codefendant, (3) both defendants, before buying scales, made check of county records which showed no lien or other encumbrance on scales, and (4) both defendants were not aware that lessee did not own scales, court held (1) that "transaction of purchase" within meaning of UCC § 2-403(1) occurred when lessee sold scales to first defendant, and (2) under circumstances of case, both defendants were good-faith purchasers for value and thus acquired, as against lessor, good title to scales under UCC § 2-403(1), dealing with power of person with voidable title (lessee) to transfer good title to good-faith purchaser for value. United Rd. Mach. Co. v. Jasper, 568 S.W.2d 242 (Ky Ct. App. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-403(1)(d), where title to property is obtained by fraud from a deceived owner, in a case where the deceived owner actually intended to transfer possession of the property to the one who committed the fraud, and the one who committed the fraud later sells the property to a third party who has no notice, either actual or constructive, of the true owner's interest in the property, the title of the innocent third party, and of those who purchased from him, is paramount to the title of the true owner. Arena Auto Auction v. Schmerler Ford, Inc., 60 Ill. App. 3d 484, 377 N.E.2d 43 (1st Dist. 1978).

In action for seller's breach of warranty of good title to motor home purchased by plaintiff, where (1) original owner of home rented it for 13 days to thief who "drove off into the sunset" and was never again seen by owner, (2) thief thereafter obtained Alabama registration for home, and also Nebraska and Indiana certificates of title therefor, before trading it in to defendant dealer in Indiana as part payment for truck and trailer, (3) plaintiff purchased home from defendants, who gave plaintiff certificate of title thereto, (4) Indiana state police seized home from plaintiff and surrendered it to original owner's insurer, (5) home's serial number proved to have been stolen and (6) such false identification number appeared on all documents respecting home that thief had obtained in Alabama, Nebraska, and Indiana, court held (1) that rental transaction between original owner and thief constituted a "purchase" under UCC §§ 2-403(1) and § 1-201(32), since thief had acquired possessory interest in home by renting it, (2) thief did not transfer good title to defendant, as good-faith purchaser for value, since thief's title to home was void and not voidable under UCC § 2-403(1); (4) since defendant had no good title to convey to plaintiff, defendant breached its warranty of title under UCC § 2-31 and (5) evidence supported damages awarded plaintiff under UCC § 2-714(2) and (3). McDonald's Chevrolet, Inc. v. Johnson, 176 Ind. App. 399, 376 N.E.2d 106 (1978).

Although seller of automobile, who was ostensibly individual in automobile business and who sold automobile to good faith purchaser, had facially valid Mississippi title, ultimately based upon Alabama tag receipt issued pursuant to forged bill of sale, seller did not have "voidable title" such that he could transfer good title to good faith purchaser under UCC § 2-403(1); title remained in insurance company that obtained valid title subsequent to paying Florida dealer's loss. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Estes, 345 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1977).

Defendant was properly convicted of receiving stolen goods, notwithstanding defendant's claim that third party, who acquired television set by fraud, passed valid title to him as good faith purchaser for value under UCC § 2-403(1), where there was evidence that defendant had conspired with third party to defraud merchant in acquiring television set and, thus, defendant was not good faith purchaser. Sacks v. State, 172 Ind. App. 185, 360 N.E.2d 21 (1977), reh'g denied, 172 Ind. App. 185, 361 N.E.2d 190 (1977).

At common law, if sale of goods was on credit, all incidents of ownership passed to buyer, and seller merely had claim for purchase price against buyer but no rights to goods sold. However, if sale was for cash, title to goods did not pass until purchase price was paid, and since buyer did not have title until goods were paid for, he could not pass title to third party, and lienholder or attaching creditor obtained no interest in goods. The Uniform Commercial Code in UCC § 2-403(1), has changed this rule by favoring good-faith purchaser over aggrieved seller, and defaulting buyer under UCC § 2-507(2) has power to transfer title to good-faith purchaser, even though buyer lacks right to do so. GECC v. Tidwell Indus., Inc., 115 Ariz. 362, 565 P.2d 868 (1977).

Notwithstanding subsequent purchaser did not know that intermediate seller's title was voidable due to intermediate seller's obtaining truck on basis of check which was dishonored, subsequent purchaser did not have good title against original seller by status of "good faith purchaser for value" under UCC §§ 1-201(19), 1-201(44) and 2-403, where subsequent purchaser knew that intermediate seller was sophisticated about value of automotive equipment, subsequent purchaser had just received three dishonored checks from intermediate seller, subsequent purchaser had no reason to believe that intermediate seller would give equipment worth $13,500 or more to settle debt of $9,100, and subsequent purchaser let intermediate seller retain possession of truck. Graves Motors, Inc. v. Docar Sales, Inc., 414 F. Supp. 717 (E.D. La. 1976).

In action by seller to recover possession of racing vehicle from third party after seller delivered vehicle to buyer and bank refused to honor "certified draft" which seller received from buyer as payment for vehicle, although buyer had power to transfer vehicle to "good faith purchaser for value" under UCC § 2-403, third party had burden of proving that he was such purchaser and trial court erred in granting summary judgment where there was issued of fact as to third party's status as "good faith purchaser for value." Landrum v. Armbruster, 28 N.C. App. 250, 220 S.E.2d 842 (1976).

Judgment debtor, who, prior to levy of execution, sold mobile home to mobile home dealer, who in turn sold to bona fide purchaser for value who had financed purchase through a Federal Credit Union, held at least "voidable title", and thus under UCC § 2-403, purchaser received title which was immune from attack by later levy. Flemming v. Thompson, 343 A.2d 599 (Del. 1975).

In determining whether art objects held on consignment by art gallery were part of the gallery's "stock-in-trade" subject to personal property tax, fact that gallery could pass legal title to consigned items sold could not be regarded as incident of ownership since, as one entrusted with goods, it must of necessity pass legal title to good faith purchasers under UCC § 2-403(2). District of Columbia v. Powers Gallery, Inc., 335 A.2d 244 (D.C. 1975).

Under UCC § 9-105(1)(i), a secured party under Article 9 is a "purchaser" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(33); thus, where credit corporation had prior valid security interest in automobile dealer's inventory, where automobile wholesaler sold and delivered used cars and trucks to dealer with unencumbered certificates of title, but where dealer's checks in payment for vehicles were dishonored, under UCC § 2-403, dealer could transfer good title to "good faith purchaser for value," despite fact dealer tendered, for purchase of vehicles, checks which were subsequently dishonored, and, hence, credit corporations' security interest in automobiles delivered to dealer was superior to wholesaler's interest. Swets Motor Sales, Inc. v. Praisner, 236 N.W.2d 299 (Iowa 1975).

Where at time contract for purchase and sale of airplane was executed, buyer received bill of sale executed by plaintiff, plaintiff placed buyer in position where he could pass title to good faith purchaser, even though bill of sale was to be used by buyer to obtain money or credit to release another plane from lien of security agreement. J.C. Equip., Inc. v. Sky Aviation, Inc., 498 S.W.2d 73 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973).

Consignor who had entrusted mobile home to mobile home seller converted mobile home when he repossessed home which consignee had sold to good faith purchaser in ordinary course of business. Williams v. Western Sur. Co., 6 Wash. App. 300, 492 P.2d 596 (1972), review denied, 80 Wash. 2d 1007 (1972).

A buyer who acquires property from one who has avoidable title must show that he was a "good faith purchaser for value", which requires "honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

A licensed automobile wrecker and junk dealer who purchased a two-year-old station wagon from a thief for $900 by placing $300 down, and who sold the vehicle for $1200 that same day, although he never obtained a bill of sale or registration certificate, was liable to the two owners, since the car had not been entrusted to a merchant who dealt in used cars and the defendant had not demonstrated that he was a "buyer in ordinary course of business" or that he was a "good faith purchaser for value". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

Where the owner of a truck delivered it to a used car dealer to be sold and the dealer sold it to a bona fide purchaser for value and converted the purchase price, the owner is not entitled, to recover either the vehicle or its value from the purchaser, notwithstanding the latter never received license plates or a certificate of title, since under the circumstances he gave the dealer the power to transfer all of his rights to a buyer in the ordinary course of business within the purview of § 2-403, subsections (2) and (3) of the Uniform Commercial Code. Gricar v. Bairhalter, 11 Pa. D. & C.2d 723 (1958).

5. —Good faith purchaser: factors considered.

In an action by the owners of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of statutory estoppel (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-403, subd [2], which provides that any entrusting of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in the ordinary course of business) is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner of the painting and had no authority from the owner to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it, since the art dealer was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business, defined as a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-201, subd [9]), inasmuch as the person from whom the dealer bought the painting was not an art dealer and never held himself out to be one and the dealer was not a person in good faith because he made no effort to verify whether the seller was the owner or authorized by the owner to sell the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

In an action by the owner of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of equitable estoppel, which provides that an owner may be estopped from setting up his own title and the lack of title in the vendor as against a bona fide purchaser for value where the owner has clothed the vendor with possession and other indicia of title, is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner and had no authority to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it pursuant to an agreement with the true owner since the owner had consigned the painting for display only and conferred no other indicia of ownership; moreover, the owner's conduct did not in any way contribute to the deception practiced on the purchaser, and the purchaser was not a purchaser in good faith since he made no inquiry or investigation as to the true ownership of the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

Purchaser who bought manufacturing equipment from lessee could not invoke protections of UCC § 2-403(2) in action by owner to recover possession or reasonable value of machinery, although purchaser acted in good faith in that he purchased equipment only after reasonable assurances of title and in belief that lessee owned equipment, where seller, by reason of this isolated transaction, did not meet standards of "merchant dealing in goods of this kind," and where purchaser's failure to request additional proof of ownership was not "commercially reasonable" approach to transaction (holding, however, that owner was estopped under common law to assert his title). Tumber v. Automation Design & Mfg. Corp., 130 N.J. Super. 5, 324 A.2d 602 (L. Div. 1974).

Where automobile dealer obtained automobiles from auctioneer in exchange for two uncollectible checks issued by auctioneer to dealer, dealer was "purchaser for value" in exchanging previously issued check for cars in question, but had not acted in "good faith" and was not entitled, as against auctioneer's transferor, to retain possession of cars, since dealer knew or should have known that auctioneer was not true owner of automobiles in question. National Car Rental v. Fox, 18 Ariz. App. 160, 500 P.2d 1148 (1972).

Purchaser did not buy boat in good faith within UCC § 2-403 where he paid very low price therefor and where seller had nothing to indicate that he was owner of boat, where purchaser did not know seller and made no attempt to verify that he was owner. Lane v. Honeycutt, 14 N.C. App. 436, 188 S.E.2d 604 (1972), cert. denied, 281 N.C. 622, 190 S.E.2d 466 (1972).

A person can get good title from one with voidable title only if former is "good faith purchaser" under UCC § 2-403, and evidence was sufficient to support finding that buyer was not acting in good faith when he "bought" boat with awareness that party with voidable title had signed name of purported owner on transfer of ownership papers. Lane v. Honeycutt, 14 N.C. App. 436, 188 S.E.2d 604 (1972), cert. denied, 281 N.C. 622, 190 S.E.2d 466 (1972).

Under "shelter principle" of Code § 2-403(1), good title of transferor rebounds to purchaser regardless of latter's good faith. Linwood Harvestore, Inc. v. Cannon, 427 Pa. 434, 235 A.2d 377 (1967).

Where the person purchasing goods with a bad check resells to third persons, the original vendor may prove that the transferee did not purchase in good faith as is evidenced by the fact that the goods thus resold appeared to be new but were sold at one half the regular price and the buyer making such resale did not have a bill of sale. Hollis v. Chamberlin, 243 Ark. 201, 419 S.W.2d 116 (1967).

A purchaser is not a buyer in good faith where he purchases camping equipment knowing it to be new and worth at least $1,000 for a price of $500, the purchase was made from strangers, the stranger had no bill of sale although he gave the purchaser a bill of sale and the purchaser did not ask any questions. Hollis v. Chamberlin, 243 Ark. 201, 419 S.W.2d 116 (1967).

One who employed another to purchase a car for him and who was present during the negotiations between the latter and a used car dealer for a certain automobile was not an innocent purchaser in good faith of the car from the person whom he had employed, where the latter had no paper title to the car and the purchaser made no inquiry as to whom the title belonged, and hence the purchaser's rights were no greater than those of his immediate transferor. Kovatch v. Hyde, 47 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 13 (Pa. 1957).

6. —Buyer in ordinary course.

In an action by the owners of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of statutory estoppel (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-403, subd [2], which provides that any entrusting of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in the ordinary course of business) is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner of the painting and had no authority from the owner to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it, since the art dealer was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business, defined as a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-201, subd [9]), inasmuch as the person from whom the dealer bought the painting was not an art dealer and never held himself out to be one and the dealer was not a person in good faith because he made no effort to verify whether the seller was the owner or authorized by the owner to sell the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

In action involving seller's petition to reclaim furniture sold to insolvent buyer, where (1) seller sold furniture to buyer which buyer accepted, (2) at time of delivery, seller did not know that buyer was insolvent, (3) two days after learning of buyer's insolvency, seller sent telegram to buyer demanding rescission under UCC § 2-702 and, after receiver was appointed for buyer, filed petition to reclaim goods, (4) bankruptcy court denied petition on ground that bankruptcy trustee was entitled to goods under § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act and that UCC § 2-702 conflicted with §§ 64 and 67(c) of Bankruptcy Act, and (5) district court affirmed bankruptcy court's ruling, court held (1) that issue was whether seller could reclaim under UCC § 2-702(2) when seller's demand followed filing of bankruptcy petition, (2) that under § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act, bankruptcy trustee acquired rights of hypothetical lien creditor, (3) that buyer was insolvent when it received goods from seller, (4) that seller had discovered such fact and made demand for reclamation within ten days after buyer received goods, as required by UCC § 2-702(2), (5) that state law controlled rights of bankruptcy trustee as hypothetical lien creditor, (6) that reference in UCC § 2-702(3) to rights of lien creditors directs that those rights be found exclusively in UCC Article 2 or in articles to which Article 2 refers, (7) that lien creditor was not "purchaser for value" under UCC § 2-403 and that bankruptcy trustee acquired no rights under UCC § 2-403 as against reclaiming seller, (8) that under facts of case, bankruptcy trustee also acquired no rights under UCC §§ 2-326 or 9-301, and no lien creditor could cut off seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702(2), (9) that by same token, § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act did not give trustee right to cut off seller's right to reclaim, (10) that UCC § 2-702(2) created something other than a security interest, (11) that UCC § 2-702(2) was not an unlawful priority that conflicted with § 64 of Bankruptcy Act, (12) that UCC § 2-702(2) was not lien subject to invalidation as statutory lien under § 67(c) of Bankruptcy Act, and (13) that reclamation under UCC § 2-702(2) in instant case did not constitute invalid preferential transfer under § 60 of Bankruptcy Act. Bassett Furn. Indus., Inc. v. Wear, 583 F.2d 992 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

Where dealer assigned title to used car to salesman who used title as collateral to obtain bank loan; where bank perfected security interest in car by timely filing, but such lien, not being required by state law to be recorded on certificate of title in order to be perfected, was not so recorded; and where car was thereafter sold for cash to buyer who took possession of vehicle, in bank's replevin action to obtain possession of car, (1) buyer's claim that bank's perfected security interest was cut off by UCC § 2-403(2) could not be sustained, since bank was not owner of car and thus could not be its "entruster" under UCC § 2-403(2); but (2) since nothing in comments to UCC Art 9 requires "created by his seller" limitation in UCC § 9-307(1) to be insurmountable barrier to good faith acquisition of preencumbered property from dealer who was instrumental in creating encumbrance on, and conflict of rights to, such property, buyer's right to possession of car was protected by "created by his seller" provision in UCC § 9-307(1), on theory that same entity (dealer) both created security interest in car and later sold car to "buyer in ordinary course of business," and bank's security interest in car therefore terminated on its sale to buyer. Adams v. City Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 565 P.2d 26 (Okla. 1977).

Where bank sued automobile dealer to recover on promissory notes given to bank by dealer and sought to impose constructive trust on dealer's assets to secure payment of notes, on theory that dealer had fraudulently obtained loans from bank and used funds therefrom to purchase such assets; where dealer's assets included automobile that dealer had sold to buyer in violation of court order prohibiting sale or transfer of such vehicle or any other assets of dealer; where buyer of automobile, while unaware of such restraining order, sold it to third person and then, after acquiring knowledge of restraining order, bought it back from such person to honor warranty of title to vehicle; and where such automobile was thereafter sold under court order and proceeds of sale were claimed by both bank and buyer, (1) buyer, on buying automobile from dealer, was purchaser in ordinary course of business under UCC § 2-403(2) and UCC § 2-403(3), since dealer at that time was engaged in business of buying and selling automobiles; (2) title to proceeds of court-ordered sale of such vehicle vested in buyer; (3) doctrine of lis pendens did not preclude buyer from asserting interest in such automobile superior to bank's interest therein, since lis pendens doctrine is not exception to Uniform Commercial Code; and (4) buyer's buying automobile back from third person with knowledge of bank's claim to such vehicle did not affect buyer's right to proceeds of court-ordered sale of vehicle, since vehicle was merely reacquired by buyer to make good his warranty of title thereto where such title was in question. Riverside Nat'l Bank v. Law, 564 P.2d 240 (Okla. 1977).

Where manufacturer of modular home, or house trailer, sold home to dealer who, in turn, resold it to defendant buyers, installed it on land owned by buyers, and then absconded with purchase money, and where manufacturer brought suit against buyers claiming that it, as unpaid holder of certificate of title to home, had title to home as against claim of buyers, trial court properly ruled in favor of title claim of buyers since under UCC § 2-403(2), (1) dealer was merchant who dealt in goods of that kind, (2) defendants were buyers in ordinary course of business, and (3) manufacturer's entrusting of home to dealer gave dealer power to transfer all rights of manufacturer to buyers (holding that buyers were entitled to have their ownership interest in home evidenced by certificate of title). Fuqua Homes, Inc. v. Evanston Bldg. & Loan Co., 52 Ohio App. 2d 399, 370 N.E.2d 780 (1977).

First buyer of wrecker truck entrusted truck to dealer under UCC § 2-403 so as to allow dealer to pass title to second buyer who was a "buyer in ordinary course of business" under UCC § 1-201 and who took possession of truck and extracted from dealer a transfer of registration and warranty of title, where first buyer left truck with dealer or dealer's apparent agent after paying for it without taking possession. Simson v. Moon, 137 Ga. App. 82, 222 S.E.2d 873 (1975), cause dismissed, 236 Ga. 786, 225 S.E.2d 314 (1976).

Under UCC §§ 2-403(1) and 2-403(2), where automobile dealer purchased stolen automobile for value from individual who had innocently purchased from thief, dealer did not purchase from dealer in ordinary course of business, did not obtain good title, and was therefore not entitled to recover automobile from police following impoundment; however, dealer could have transferred good title to an innocent bona fide purchaser for value by means of a completed sale. Johnny Dell, Inc. v. New York State Police, 84 Misc. 2d 360 (1975).

In action by manufacturer of mobile home against dealer and purchaser of unit arising when dealer failed to pay manufacturer purchase price, mobile home fell within definition of "goods" under UCC § 2-105 and purchaser was entitled to protection from manufacturer's claim under UCC § 9-307(a) where purchaser, who took title from merchant entrusted with goods under UCC §§ 2-401 and 2-403, qualified as buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9), notwithstanding purchaser's failure to request certificate of title of purchase. Apeco Corp. v. Bishop Mobile Homes, Inc., 506 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 12, 1974).

Evidence established that entruster entrusted possession of copying machine to merchant, now bankrupt, giving him power to transfer all rights of entruster to buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 2-403(2) and (3) and fact that price was not specified was of no consequence under UCC § 2-305(1). First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Olivetti Corp. of Am., 130 Ga. App. 896, 204 S.E.2d 781 (1974).

Where plaintiff purchased trailers from manufacturer, retained title and parked them on dealer's used car and truck lot, under arrangement that whenever dealer found buyer plaintiff was to bring in certificate of origin and indorse it over to buyer, under mistaken impression that dealer could not register title without such certificate, dealer sold trailers to buyers but failed to pay plaintiff, buyers financed purchases with defendant bank and bank foreclosed on its security interest in trailers after buyers defaulted, whether plaintiff could recover against bank for conversion depended on whether consignment of trailers was intended as security; if plaintiff's retention of title was limited to reservation of security interest, he could not prevail against bank since he did not retain possession of collateral nor did debtor sign security agreement describing collateral as required by UCC § 9-203(1); if consignment was not intended as security and if dealer was not "merchant who deals in goods of that kind" or if buyers were not "buyers in ordinary course of business" within meaning of UCC § 2-403(2) plaintiff would prevail against bank since buyers would not have obtained good title and could not have created security interest in bank. Nauman v. First Nat'l Bank, 50 Mich. App. 41, 212 N.W.2d 760 (1973).

Where dealer in new and used cars sold used automobiles to used car dealer but instructed him not to dispose of the cars until the latter's check had cleared the bank, such transaction constituted an entrustment within the meaning of the code and the seller's instructions did not effect the rights of a buyer in the ordinary course of business without knowledge of the limitation. Sherman v. Roger Kresge, Inc., 67 Misc. 2d 178 (1971), aff'd, 40 A.D.2d 766, 336 N.Y.S.2d 1015 (3d Dep't 1972).

When one purchases an auto from auto dealer's inventory in ordinary course of business without notice of trust security agreement between dealer and financial institution, purchaser acquires title free of bank's trust security lien. Correria v. Orlando Bank & Trust Co., 235 So. 2d 20 (Fla. App. 1970).

Where person purchases automobile in good faith and without knowledge of any title defect or security interest of third party from used car dealer who has been entrusted with its possession, he is a "buyer in the ordinary course of business," even though sale was made without transfer of certificate of title. Medico Leasing Co. v. Smith, 457 P.2d 548 (Okla. 1969), but see, Mitchell Coach Mfg. Co. v. Stephens, 19 F. Supp. 2d 1227 (N.D. Okla. 1998).
